"What is the course of the court with reference to the letting of lands, as contrasted with a case in which the inheritor lets land to a tenant? The receiver circulates handbills in the neighbourhood, stating that on a certain day in the Master's office in Dublin, certain lands will be set up to be let. The tenants may come, or send up some one to appear for them; and it is a regular auction; they bid against each other for certain farms, upon such terms as they propose, and the highest bidder carries it; and immediately they are called upon, before they leave the office, to lodge £6 4s. 4d. for the lease and the recognizance, in which there must be two sureties.

"In addition to the lease they have to perfect a recognizance? Yes; they have to perfect a recognizance with two sureties, which I cannot but think is a very mischievous thing. No person will go surety for a tenant but one of themselves; and he either presents men who qualify upon oath, but really have no means, or he draws in one of that class which ought to be regarded with the greatest interest—I mean the solvent and industrious class of persons. I never knew an instance in which money was recovered from the tenant's surety; and I was always glad that it was so, for I felt that it would be a very painful thing to drag down, perhaps, the most useful man on the estate in the ruin of his neighbour; but in nine cases out of ten the sureties are persons who swear themselves to be worth so much, when they really are not; all that is a very expensive operation. This difficulty has been felt by the masters so much that they have agreed that in every case where the rent is not more than £15 they will allow a mere agreement upon a stamp to be received. We find it utterly impossible to induce those poor men to give this large sum of money.

"Do you think that recognizances might be, without the slightest diminution of security, done away with?—With great advantage.

"Of what items is that sum of £6 4s. 4d. compounded which you mentioned as being required to be deposited?—There is £3 14s. for stamp duties, and £2 10s. for fees. The stamp duty on the recognizance is £2 14s.; then on the lease, if it be for the lowest amount—that is, £10 and under—the stamp duty is £1. The Master's Examiner has a fee of £1 13s. 3d. for preparing the recognizance and the two parts of the lease. There is a fee upon the enrolment in the Recognizance-office of 14s. 7d. and there is a house keeper's fee of 2s. 6d. Then, besides that, the Lord Chancellor finding that these recognizances had not been registered under Sir Edward Sugden's register of incumbrances, directed that every lease should be registered; the expense of that is £1 3s. 3d., which is paid to the tenant's own solicitor, which I find works most vexatiously, for they used to feel that having paid this £6 4s. 4d., they had done with it; but now they find that the leases will not be received unless they further go to a solicitor, who will take them to be Register office, for which he demands £1 3s. 4d.

"With the exception of the stamps, are these charges peculiar to causes in Chancery?—Yes; even the stamps are peculiar, so far as they are stamps upon the operations which go through the court.

"What are the stamps upon the lease?—Two stamps of 5s. on the lease, and as much on the counterpart.

"How many of those charges vary with the amount of the stipulated rent?—Only the two sums of 5s. each.

"Then with that exception, a man taking a farm of £10 pays as much as a tenant taking a farm of £150?—He does.

"From your experience both at the bar and as master, do you think that the recognizance, with this heavy charge upon it, affords any valid security for the payment of rent?—I think it perfectly useless, at least in 99 cases out of 100."

Your committee cannot but condemn this vicious practice, the tendency of which is to induce an improvident competition, in a country where the possession of land is regarded as almost one of the necessities of life; and especially where it is attended with an unreasonable amount of cost to the tenant. The various items which constitute the charge, it is to be hoped, will at once be swept away without reserve; for it does not appear why the selection of a tenant and the perfection of a lease might not be accomplished by the court at as moderate a cost as in the case of an ordinary letting under private agency.

On the whole, it seems to your committee, that by the exercise of a reasonable care in the selection of the tenant, and using the means now available for ascertaining the value of the land, and by inserting in the lease sufficient covenants and conditions which should provide for proper cultivation and beneficial expenditure, but prohibit subdivision or exhaustion of the demised property, the present practice of letting might be safely and usefully superseded, to the great advantage of all parties concerned. Nor should any consideration connected with fees or stamp duty be suffered to prevail against the higher exigencies of the general interest of the country.

It might perhaps be provided, that the recovery of rent should generally be enforced by summary process, on the certificate of the master, adjudicating on the amount of rent due. The facility of litigation, where facts are not doubted, enables a fraudulent tenant to postpone his liabilities, and an unprincipled receiver to abuse his powers, by frequent appeals to the law, which occasions the accumulation of unnecessary costs, and is mischievous and demoralizing. Where the question is, whether so much rent is in arrear, the fact is capable of being ascertained without vexatious litigation. Where it is of real consequence by a strict and just policy to cultivate, if not create, habits of punctuality, it would seem to be a suitable opportunity, in regulating the future management of estates under the Courts of Equity, to confer rights and enforce remedies in a manner consistent with justice, and calculated to promote the interests of the property.

Your committee also are of opinion that the want of uniformity in the system of management under the two Courts of Equity in Ireland, and the opportunities for fraud whereby different receivers may be appointed over the same property under their concurrent jurisdiction, have materially aggravated the evils of the general system.

Your committee feel much encouraged by the manner in which these evils have been exposed by all the witnesses who have been examined; affording the assurance that in carrying out prompt and practical remedies, the cordial co-operation of those who best understand the system, and are most desirous for a thorough reform of its abuses, is at the public service.

Although your committee have felt it to be their duty to suggest the foregoing amendments in the existing system of management of estates under the Courts of Equity, they do not express any opinion whether the evils now so justly complained of will be sufficiently remedied by any such alterations. Nor are they to be understood as expressing their opinion that the substitution of a totally new system is not demanded by the exigencies of the case. The late period of the session at which your committee was appointed has prevented them from taking evidence sufficient to enable them to decide on the merits of the plans which have been submitted for consideration. In the Appendix will be found the draft of a bill prepared under the sanction of the Lord Chancellor of Ireland, proposing an official plan of receiverships; another plan has been presented by Mr. Hamilton, in his private capacity; and a third, prepared by Mr. M'Cay, is also to be found in the Appendix, and referred to in the evidence.

It is of obvious importance that, under the pressure of existing circumstances, the primary object to be kept in view should be to effect a gradual reduction in the extent of property under court management, and that any legislative interference should be regulated with this expectation.

The transfer of an estate to the dominion of the court, as it is occasioned by the creditor's proceeding, should not be attended with any delay not absolutely required for the satisfaction of the claim. The startling amount of this class of property now under the court, and every day increasing, exceeding at least one million of the rental of Ireland, is in some degree explained by the peculiar circumstances of the country, and the trying visitation with which it has recently been afflicted. Whether some means might not be devised, by which sales might be encouraged, without peril to the interests of parties whose rights attached on property estimated at a standard of value, which cannot be largely reduced without a sacrifice of these rights, is not, perhaps, within the strict province of your committee to discuss. It is, however, an important object that sales should be facilitated and receivers discharged as speedily as can be effected without injustice.

It appears from the evidence that the practice of the court might be modified so as to further this object.

In the early part of the year 1847 the Master of the Rolls, with the aid of an experienced officer of his court, prepared the draft of a bill, with a copy of which he has favoured the committee, and which is inserted in the Appendix to the evidence. The objects proposed by this draft were to simplify proceedings in Chancery for the sale of incumbered property, to remove the evils in practice which occasioned delay and expense, and to redress such abuses as had been discovered by him in the course of his professional and judicial duties.

Sir Edward Sugden, in his evidence, states that the Court of Chancery in Ireland might be worked with as much expedition in prosecution of suits as any other superior tribunal. He recommends the practice which obtains in England in suits by mortgages, as encompassed with fewer difficulties than that which has been established in Ireland; but, on the other hand, it is stated by the Master of the Rolls, that the course in Ireland is, in its general principles, better adapted to the exigencies of that country and is capable of being simplified and freed from objection by such a measure as that which he has prepared.

It may be anticipated that by the aid of the legislature, with the co-operation of the judges and officers of the courts of equity, an improvement may be gradually accomplished in this department, which must for some time, deal with a large portion of the property of Ireland.

Your committee recommend the repeal of the power of legally assigning judgments hereafter to be acknowledged; they think it also advisable to repeal the right of appointing a receiver on a judgment, where the unsatisfied demand does not exceed £150; to give a year of grace on a judgment, in all cases, before a receiver can be obtained; and to treat the costs of appointing a receiver as part of the debt, to be paid in the same priority only; to give a legislative sanction to such rules as may be considered proper to secure the appointment of competent receivers, and the useful discharge of their duties, in the least expensive manner—to give the court the authority already suggested; to be exercised according to the principles of equity jurisprudence, and the peculiar circumstances of each case, under the restrictions which have been stated.

In conclusion, your committee wish to express their conviction, that the present management of properties under the courts is attended with equal detriment to the agriculture of the country and the condition of the tenantry.

11th July, 1849.

We have received the letter of a Barrister; in much of it we acquiesce, but we cannot, as a rule, insert the communications of anonymous correspondents.

NEW LAW BOOKS.

Lately published by

EDWARD J. MILLIKEN, 1A, COLLEGE GREEN.

Just published, price 2s., by post 2s. 6d.

LAW OF DEBTOR AND CREDITOR IN IRELAND.
The new Act for the abolition of arrest for sums under ten pounds, and for the recovery of the possession of small tenements before Judges of the Peace, with a full Commentary, Index, Notes and Forms, adapted to the professional and trading classes.

By WILLIAM GERNON, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

"The concise and lucid style in which the subject of this work is treated cannot fail to render it clear and intelligible to the most limited capacity. We can confidently recommend it to the perusal of the profession, and the public at large."—Freeman's Journal.

"The value of this Treatise is much enhanced by the forms appended, and the whole is a very good available summary which will be found alike useful to the Lawyer, the Magistrate, the Proprietor of landed property, and the Trader."—Dublin Evening Mail.

12mo. Second Edition, Price 2s. 6d.—by post, 3s.

THE Act to facilitate the Sale of Incumbered Estates in Ireland, with a Copious Index and Direction for proceeding under the provisions of the Act, for the Sale of Lands subject to Incumbrances.

By W. M. McCAY, Esq., Solicitor.

"This book should be in the hands of every one interested in Irish estates, or the securities affecting them."—Dublin Evening Mail.

"It possesses the valuable quality of being intelligible to the non-professional, as well as instructive to the professional reader."—Freeman's Journal.

12mo. price 2s. 6d.—by Post, 3s.

A TREATISE ON THE LAW OF INTERPLEADER, containing all the Reported Cases in this Country and in England; with an Appendix, containing the Act 2 & 10 Vic. c. 64, with Forms of Affidavits, Rules, Orders, and the Record on a Foreign Issue. By JAMES BLACKMAN, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

8vo. price 10s.—free by Post.

A PRACTICAL TREATISE ON PLEADING BY BILL IN THE COURTS OF EQUITY IN IRELAND; adapted to the General Orders. By ALFRED M'FARLAND, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

REPORTS OF PRACTICE AND NISI PRIUS CASES, (including Registry and Civil Bill Appeals,) DECIDED IN THE SUPERIOR COURTS, and at the AFTER SITTINGS; with Index and Table of Cases. By J. BLACKMAN, W. J. DUNDAS, and R. W. OSOBY, Esqrs., Barristers-at-Law. Part IV., completing Vol. I., price 2s.

QUESTIONS FOR LAW STUDENTS on the Second Edition of Mr. Benjamin Stephen's New Commentaries on the Laws of England. By JAMES STEPHEN, Esq. of the Middle Temple, Barrister-at-Law. 1 vol. 8vo. cloth boards, price 10s. 6d.

CONCISE FORMS OF WILLS, with Practical Notes. By W. HAYES and T. JARMAN. 4th Edition, cloth bds. 12s.

THE LAW OF HUSBAND AND WIFE. A Treatise on the Law of Husband and Wife as respects Property, partly founded upon Roper's Treatise, and comprising Jacobs' Notes and Additions thereto. By J. E. WRIGHT, Esq. of the Inner Temple, Barrister-at-Law. 2 vols. royal 8vo. £3 10s. boards.

A TREATISE ON THE LAW OF LEGACIES. By the late R. & DONNISON ROPER, Esq., Barrister-at-Law, of Gray's Inn; and by H. H. WHITE, Esq., Barrister-at-Law, of the Middle Temple. Fourth Edition. 2 vols. royal 8vo. £3 2s. boards.

A TREATISE ON THE LAW OF EVIDENCE, as administered in England and Ireland; with Illustrations from the American and other Foreign Laws. By JOHN FITZ TAYLOR, Esq. of the Middle Temple, Barrister-at-Law. 2 vols. royal 8vo. £3 10s.

A SELECTION OF LEADING CASES IN Various Branches of the Law, with Notes. By JOHN WILLIAMS, Esq. of the Inner Temple, Barrister-at-Law. Third Edition. By H. A. KEATINGE, Esq., and JAMES A. WILLES, Esq., of the Inner Temple, Barristers-at-Law. 2 vols. royal 8vo. £3 12s. 6d.

All communications for the IRISH JURIST are to be left, addressed to the Editor, with the Publisher, E. J. MILLIKEN, 1A, COLLEGE GREEN. Correspondents will please give the Name and Address, as the columns of the paper cannot be occupied with answers to Anonymous Communications; nor will the Editor be accountable for the loss of Manuscripts, &c.

Orders for the IRISH JURIST left with E. J. MILLIKEN, 1A, COLLEGE GREEN, or by letter (post-paid), will ensure its punctual delivery in Dublin, or its being forwarded to the Country, by Post, on the day of publication.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION—(payable in advance):
Yearly, 30s. Half-yearly, 17s. Quarterly, 8s.

Printed by THOMAS ISAAC WHITE, at his Printing Office, No. 4, FLEET-STREET, in the Parish of St. Andrew, and published at 1A, COLLEGE GREEN, in same Parish, by EDWARD J. MILLIKEN, residing at the same place, all being in the County of the City of Dublin. Saturday, July 21, 1849.

THE Irish Jurist

No. 39.—VOL. I.

JULY 28, 1849.

Price {Per Annum, £1 10s.
Single Number, 9d.

The Names of the Gentlemen who favour THE IRISH JURIST with Reports in the several Courts of Law and Equity in Ireland, are as follows:—

Court of Chancery, including Bankruptcy Appeals.....	{ ROBERT LONG, Esq., and JOHN PITT KENNEDY, Esq., Barristers-at-Law.	Court of Exchequer Chamber.....	{ JOHN BLACKHAM, Esq., and A. HICKEY, Esq., Barristers-at-Law.
Rolls Court.....	{ WILLIAM BURKE, Esq., and WILLIAM JOHN DUNDAS, Esq., Barristers-at-Law.	Queen's Bench, including Civil Bill and Registry Appeals.....	{ FLORENCE M'CARTHY, Esq., and SAMUEL V. PRET, Esq., Barristers-at-Law.
Equity Exchequer.....	{ CHARLES HARE HENPHILL, Esq., and WILLIAM HICKSON, Esq., Barristers-at-Law.	Exchequer of Pleas, including Manor Court and Registry Appeals.....	{ CHAS. H. HENPHILL, Esq., and WILLIAM HICKSON, Esq., Barristers-at-Law.
Bankrupt Court.....	{ ROBERT GRIFFIN, Esq. and W.G. CHAMNEY, Esq. Barristers-at-law.	Common Pleas.....	{ ROBERT GRIFFIN, Esq. and W.G. CHAMNEY, Esq. Barristers-at-law.
		Admiralty Court.....	{ ROBERT GRIFFIN, Esq. and W.G. CHAMNEY, Esq. Barristers-at-law.

DUBLIN, JULY 28, 1849.

It would be impossible to predicate what changes the bill to amend the law concerning judgments in Ireland is fated to undergo. As altered by the Committee, it has assumed a very mitigated aspect from that which it wore when it made its first appearance.

As the bill originally stood, no receiver could be appointed on judgments to be obtained after the 31st of December, 1849; it is now proposed to allow the existing law to remain unchanged, save that no receiver can be obtained upon judgments, decrees and orders having the effect of judgments, entered up after the passing of the act, where the amount shall not exceed £150. Neither are such judgments any longer to remain a charge upon land from the time of their being entered up; but by the 3rd section it is enacted "That the sheriff or other officer to whom any writ of elegit, or any precept in pursuance thereof is directed, at the suit of any person, upon any judgment subject to the provisions of this act, recovered in any action in any of her Majesty's superior courts at Dublin, shall make and deliver execution unto the party in that behalf suing, of all such lands, &c., as the person against whom execution is so sued, or any person in trust for him, is seised or possessed of, at the time when such writ of elegit is delivered to the sheriff or other officer, or over which the person against whom execution is so sued out has, at the time when such writ of elegit is delivered as aforesaid, any disposing power which he might, without the assent of any other person, exercise or his own benefit, which lands, &c., shall accordingly be held and enjoyed by the party to whom such execution shall be so made and delivered, subject to such account in the court out of which such execution shall have been sued out, as a party to whom execution is made and delivered under the recited provision of the said act of the 4th year of her Majesty, is made subject to under such provision."

The recited provision was the 19th section of the 3 & 4 Vic., by which the entirety of the debtor's lands, both present and after acquired, could be delivered in execution, and the elegit creditor was made subject to such account in the court out of which such execution should have been sued out, as a tenant by elegit was then subject to in a court of Equity.

The new bill varies from this provision, by leaving out the words "or at any time afterwards," and by rendering the existing, and not the future property liable to be delivered in execution; the mode of accounting is the same. It is observable, that for the last nine years a judgment creditor had the power of obtaining the entire of a debtor's lands under an elegit, subject to an account in a court of Law, and yet there is no reported instance of a creditor ever resorting to such a remedy, when he had the alternative one of a receiver in a court of Equity.

We commend the alteration in the proposed bill, of depriving a judgment creditor for a small sum of the power of appointing a receiver, whilst the present receiver system is allowed to continue; though the better test would probably have been the value of the debtor's lands, and not the amount of the creditor's debt; but we are by no means enamoured of the remedy by elegit.

The 12th Report of the Committee of Enquiry into the courts of justice in Ireland, in giving a history of custodians, and the monstrous abuses to which they led, contains a few observations on some of the defects connected with the law of elegits. Amongst others, the expense of the remedy by ejectment, as sometimes being very great owing to the obstacles interposed by setting up prior leases, by reason of which the creditor was obliged to file a bill in Equity to remove temporary bars. They observe, "It is likewise a hardship incident to the proceedings under the elegit, that the debtor, in every instance where an account is to be enforced, is obliged to have recourse to a suit in Equity; a farther disadvantage arises both to the creditor and debtor from the responsibility of the creditor, on the one hand, in a court of Equity for the full, unascertained value, and his uncontrolled discretion, on the other, in setting any lands extended which become out of lease."

It may be as well to mention what discretion the courts of law exercised in granting or refusing an account. O'Brien v. Gould, (Al. & Nap. 41;) per Curiam.—"Where it appears in the first instance that complex questions are sought to be brought before the officer, the Court will refuse the account."

Holmes, amicus Curie, mentioned to the Court that the Court of Exchequer always refuses such a reference when it appears to involve any complex question.

It was to meet this state of the law that in all probability the words were inserted in the 3 & 4 Vic. c. 105, s. 19, "subject to such account in the court out of which such execution should have been so sued out, as a tenant by elegit was then subject to in a Court of Equity." But the insertion of these words effects little or nothing, as the officer of a court of common law has not the power to take the accounts in the same way that an officer of a court of Equity could; the former cannot examine the parties themselves on oath, the power of personal examination being confined to courts of Equity.

It was not alone when considered with respect to creditor and debtor, that the system of elegit was productive of public mischief and private hardship; the poor working farmer was the sufferer. Powerless as the Court of Chancery has been to allow improvements, it was enabled to attend to his interests better than the elegit creditor; he might, if the lands were out of lease, let at what value he chose, but whilst the rent was reserved by lease, he could not abate, or improve, or do a single act of a landlord, except screw out the rent. Amid the conflict of elegit creditors, extending bit by bit of the debtor's land, the unfortunate tenant knew not to whom he was to pay his rent; and yet those evils are about to be re-introduced, the remedy of the creditor to be confined, and to confine him to a bad one. The question is, no doubt, one of extreme difficulty; it has not been happily solved by the present bill.

Let us take a practical test of some of the injustice likely to spring from the want of uniformity in the same mode of assurance which will be occasioned by the proposed measure.

There is no distinction made between judgments obtained in adverse actions and those by confession. Let us suppose a just debt for which the creditor is obliged to sue; he obtains his verdict and his judgment in Michaelmas Term of the year 1850, brings his ejectment, and, after much difficulty, delivers his writ, and gets possession in Michaelmas, 1851. A judgment for £160 is confessed by the same debtor in Trinity, 1851, which becomes a charge from the date of its entry, and has thereby obtained priority over a judgment which was prior in point of time, and the latter judgment creditor can displace the former.

There is an obvious injustice in this. The cause of the outcry raised against the security by judgments has been not from its intrinsic mischief, but from that of the receiver system, and because of it are we to be forced back to the worse evils of an exploded system? It would have occurred to us more wise on the part of the Legislature to have inquired whether the mode of managing estates under the Court of Chancery was not improvable, to have traced out the cause of the evil and gone to its root, and if it were undiscoverable or irremediable to have explored a fresh remedy, and not through ignorance or forgetfulness to fall back upon a practice which former statesmen condemned.

The Committee of Enquiry, to which we have already referred, suggested the expediency of permitting the elegit debtor by summary petition to obtain an account in a court of Equity, and this was by no means a bad suggestion, confining the question solely between debtor and creditor. For the sake of the tenantry we wish to go further and vest some power in a controlling hand pending the continuance of the elegit.

If we be right in assuming that the alterations in the bill were made with a view to keep small properties from the control of courts of Equity, and to extinguish cognovits, or judgments by confession for trifling sums, we think those purposes would have been fulfilled by prohibiting the appointment of receivers, and there should have been a difference as to classes of judgments, in respect of their being a charge upon lands, in cases where they have been obtained in adverse actions, and when obtained by confession; in the former they should, so long as any judgments are a constituted and fixed lien on land, be so likewise. The Receiver Committee suggested that there should be a year of grace from the entry of the judgment in all cases before a receiver could be appointed; in the amended draft bill we see no such provision; it may, however, have been, ere this, inserted. They further recommend that the costs of appointing a receiver should, as in causes, be paid in the same priority as the demand, and not be the first charge on the fund; we know not whether this provision has been inserted.

Having regard to the lateness of the introduction of the measure, its great metamorphosis since that introduction, and the importance of the subject, we trust sincerely the House of Lords will postpone it until the next session. It has not been prepared with sufficient care or thought, or steadiness of design.

As a matter of legal curiosity we should be glad to learn whether it was ever submitted to the Irish Law Officers, or whether their advice or suggestions were ever asked.

THE case of Molony v. Nugent will be found reported in another part of this journal. An appeal has been lodged from the decision of his Honour, and, by permission of the Chancellor, will be heard on Monday.

On the merits of this particular case, whilst it is still sub judice, we shall offer no opinion. The reasons assigned by his Honour for removing the receiver, raise a question of considerable public importance. It will appear from a perusal of his judgment, that the only ground of disqualification for office on which he relied, was the fact of Mr. Joly having been an attorney. There is no rule of court to prohibit such an appointment—no ground of misconduct brought against him, except general charges of having allowed arrears to accumulate—and the decision must stand or fall on grounds of public policy.

The question is raised rather unfavourably for his Honour, inasmuch as his decision has reference to a past transaction, and not to a future regulation. It is a removal from office for a cause which was not assigned at the date of the receiver's appointment, and on account of which no exception was then taken.

The case is regarded with considerable interest by the profession; the Law Society were desirous that the appeal should be made; and it is expected, whatever may be the decision of the Chancellor on the particular facts, that his judgment will affirm or disaffirm the general principles enunciated by his Honour. A decision falling short of this will be productive of dissatisfaction, and an explicit expression of the eligibility, or the contrary, of a solicitor for the office of a receiver, is, in fact, essential to put an end to the unpleasant differences of opinion, and practice occasioned by that difference, which now prevail amongst the different judges of the court.

The Masters in Chancery have declined to subscribe to the reasoning of the Master of the Rolls, and continue to appoint solicitors receivers, and they are unanimously of opinion, that their discretionary power should not be controlled. It is obvious that nothing can have a greater tendency to bring the administration of justice into disrepute, than that the judges of the same court should differ on points regulating their practice. We shall recur to this important topic next week.

To the Editor of the Irish Jurist.

SIR,

A rumour of the foundation of lectureships for the advancement of legal education by our Irish Benchers of the Queen's Inns, which has been some time gaining ground, but of the fulfilment of which I have been unable to discover any trace, has induced me to address you, in the hope that a revival of discussion on the subject might tend to carry this desirable object into effect.

That great advantages are open to the student if he diligently attend to a well-considered course of lectures upon any branch of jurisprudence is now placed beyond doubt by the unanimous testimony of the several learned persons examined before a Committee of the House of Commons on legal education. By the able pamphlet of a member of our Irish Bar,* in a series of letters on legal education to George A. Hamilton, Esq. M. P., and the writer, if experience can add weight to testimony, recollects with gratitude and pleasure the incalculable benefits he received from the common-law lectures of our University Member† at the Dublin Law Institute, which, if published, would rank with the deservedly admired course on contracts by the late J. W. Smith, Esq.

This is but a return to the opinion of our ancestors learned in the law, and carrying out the object for which the Inns were founded. In the preface to Mr. Sullivan's series of lectures on the Feudal Law, delivered in the University of Dublin, where, after commenting on the many advantages an educated lawyer may confer upon society, either in his professional or social character, and the imperative necessity of his having in either character a competent knowledge of the laws, which magisterially or judicially he may be called upon to administer, says, "that from hence likewise abundantly appears the necessity of proper methods being laid out for the study of the laws, and proper assistance being given to the youth intended for this profession. This was always allowed, and for this purpose were the Inns of Court originally founded; and it must be owned that in ancient times they, in a great measure, answered this end. Their exercises in those days were not mere matter of form, but tests of the student's proficiency. Their leaders laid down in their lectures the principles of particular parts of the law, explained the difficulties, and reconciled their seeming contradictions."

To this I would add the opinion of Lord Brougham, whose continued zeal for the advancement of legal, as well as every other species of education, must necessarily have led him to bestow much consideration on the subject. Speaking of the utility of lectures says: "Although many men learn law very accurately and even profoundly by their own studies, they would learn it better, and at all events they would learn it easier, and save themselves a great deal of fruitless labour in its acquisition, if they had the benefit of a learned and skilful professor, accustomed to teach, and who was versed in the didactic art, which a person may be very ignorant of, and yet be very well acquainted with the art he teaches." And in the pamphlet we have adverted to, the learned author expresses himself, p. 12: "The main object of legal education ought to be to guide the young student through the labyrinth which the law presents to the uninitiated, and to establish legal principles systematically in the mind, to ground him as a lawyer in the knowledge of principles, as distinguished from a mere mechanical collector of cases."

These passages bring forcibly to the mind the present state of legal education in this country as contrasted with that of the English Inns of Court, as described in the quotation first made by my Lord Coke, (pref. to 3rd Rep.); and at the present day they have united for the purpose of fully carrying out this object.

At a conference of the deputations from the Committees of each of the Inns of Court, 3rd June, 1846, the following propositions were agreed upon to be offered for adoption to their respective Inns.

* H. H. Joy, Esq. Q. C.

† Joseph Napier, Esq. A. M., Q. C., M. P.

"That it is expedient to institute rewards, or honours, or both, by way of encouragement to students who may be willing to undergo examinations.

"That for the purpose of preparing the students for such examinations, there should be established four lectureships in addition to that on Civil Law and General Jurisprudence already established by the Middle Temple.

"That the subjects of the additional lectures should be :—

"1. Constitutional Law, Criminal and other Crown law.

"2. The law of real property and conveyancing, devises and bequests.

"3. Those branches of the common law which are not included in the two last heads.

"4. Equitable Jurisprudence as administered in the Court of Chancery.

"That the lectureship for constitutional law, criminal and other crown law, should be maintained at the joint expense of the four societies.

"That the lectureship for civil law and general jurisprudence should be maintained as now, at the sole expense of the Middle Temple.

"And that the other three lectureships should be maintained at the expense of the three other societies respectively,—one for each as shall be hereafter arranged among themselves.

"That no examination should be required of any student as a condition precedent of his call to the Bar.

"That every student should be required, as a condition precedent of his call to the Bar, to produce a certificate of his having attended two of the courses of lectures, the selection to be determined by himself."

These suggestions appear mutatis mutandis, admirably calculated to form the foundation of a plan for the guidance of our law authorities, assisted by the now experience of the English Benchers, who have since brought them into operation. Taking them for the present as such, I propose, Sir, with your permission, in my next letter to consider their propriety, and the manner in which they would be best carried out in detail. But the present season, when every person, public and private, sole and corporate, is seeking out some means of testifying their joy at the expected arrival of our gracious Sovereign, to commemorate that event the present would appear to be auspicious for their creation—that Sovereign herself being remarkable for her patronage of literature, and her skill in the fine arts; her consort read in the laws of England, and a bencher of Lincoln's Inn.

B.

We purpose to give extracts from the evidence given before the Committees of the Houses of Parliament, appointed this session to enquire into the Poor Law, and the system of Receivers under the Courts of Equity in Ireland, so far as such evidence bears upon legal questions, and contemplated changes in the law. We shall commence with those portions of the evidence which bear upon the law of judgments.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

POOR LAW COMMITTEE.

Montfort Longfield, Esq., LL.D.—March 17.

Will you state to the Committee what are the principal obstacles to the transfer of land in Ireland?—I conceive the facility with which land can be encumbered is one great obstacle to its sale and transfer; and there are obstacles in the expenses caused by the sale, and matters of that kind; but the great difficulty is the making out a title, not as regards the land, but as regards all the encumbrancers, who must be satisfied.

Is there any other difference than that which you have alluded to between the laws of England and Ireland, which makes it more difficult to transfer property in Ireland than in England?—The law in Ireland which makes a judgment assignable has that effect also, to a certain extent. A judgment is a very common security for a debt in Ireland, and a judgment affects all the property of which a man is possessed at the time of the judgment, or which he may afterwards become entitled to; so that if a man sells a small portion of his estate he cannot give a title to it, unless he discharges all his judgment debts. The practice is to accompany every mortgage with a bond in double the amount of the mortgage, and a warrant of attorney confessing judgment is annexed to that bond. Where you talk of a bond in Ireland, it almost always means a judgment; a judgment being so much a matter of course.

Mr. Bright.] I understood you to say, that a judgment which was upon the property of an individual extended to the whole of his property, though that property might lie in the four provinces of Ireland?—Yes, it extends to the whole of his property, wherever it lies. I may give an instance of a gentleman who owes 5,000*l.* or 6,000*l.* for judgment debts; if he has bought a house, for perhaps 800*l.*, and wants to sell it, he cannot sell it till he discharges all his judgment debts.

Would you alter the law in that respect, so that each judgment should not extend over more than the property described in it?—I should make the judgment what it originally was, and give the party holding that judgment no right to take execution against any property after it had ceased to be the property of the debtor, just as personal property is situated now.

Mr. Fagan.] And leasehold property also?—The late Act of Parliament has made leasehold property subject to judgments in the same way as freeholds; that is the Act which in Ireland we call Chief Baron Pigot's Act.

Have you any other suggestion to make as to the improvement in the law respecting the transfer of property: what would be the precise condition in which you would say the law should be?—I would have judgments placed in the same position as they were in formerly; that the judgment creditor should have the right of execution against all the property which the debtor had when he took out execution against him, but he should not have the right to disturb the possession of any purchaser of real and personal property from his debtor; and the judgment then would cease to be an encumbrance.

You say you would have judgments placed in the position in which they were formerly; what was that position?—The change was gradual; first The statute of degit, as it is called, which was passed in 13 Edward I., gave the creditor the right to proceed against the land of the debtor, and the judges held that that meant the land which he had at the time of the judgment, or at any time after. That was not productive of much mischief, because the executions originally were only taken out within a year. Afterwards the statute of scire facias enabled parties, by means of the writ called scire facias, to take out execution at any period; and it was held that that incidentally gave the creditor the right, by the doctrine of relation, to take execution against any land which was in the possession of the debtor at any time after the judgment was had against him.

Have you any suggestion to make as to changes in the law, by which the evils arising from the facility of encumbering land in Ireland should be remedied?—I should reduce every mode of encumbering land to one mode of charging it, and I would not permit more than one charge to be on the same denomination of land, and I would not permit any trusts of that charge to affect the owner of the land. Let the trusts of the charge be a matter between the trustees and the cestuique trust, precisely like what happens with regard to the funds now, where the Bank takes no notice of trusts, but will do with the funds whatever the trustees desire.

Then, in point of fact, you would assimilate in that particular real property to the custom now observed with regard to personal and funded property?—Yes; to the law as regards funded property; it is not mere custom, but it is the law.

Have you any other observation to make with regard to the working of this measure? (Encumbered Estates Bill).—No. I think the measure will work very well, but it will be of very little use to Ireland unless accompanied with measures to prevent the making of encumbrances that is now going on. There are some estates freed from encumbrances by sales under the Court of Chancery; but on the other hand, there is a constant system of putting on fresh encumbrances, and unless you check the latter process, you will have Ireland in the same state as before.

Can you suggest any remedy for the present uncertainty of title in Ireland?—I do not think there is any considerable uncertainty of title in Ireland; I think a purchaser in Ireland can be as certain of his title as a purchaser can be in England; there is an expense in making out a title, owing to the number of encumbrances, but there is no uncertainty of title.

Mr. Bright.] Do you know whether that is the opinion of English conveyancers with regard to Irish titles?—I do not; but I am sure that the English conveyancers do not understand the matter; they do not know the law in Ireland, and I do not think they are competent to give an opinion upon the point; I never knew a title in Ireland shaken in the slightest degree, except where there was gross neglect on the part of the purchaser, and where proper searches would have shown that the person was not buying the property of the proper person.

You spoke just now of what was necessary to prevent the accumulation of those difficulties in future: do you conceive that any measures which have already been submitted to Parliament, as far as you have seen them, tend to prevent the recurrence of the evils which are now complained of?—None whatever.

At this moment that we are inquiring is the evil going on and accumulating throughout Ireland?—It is going on, but not accumulating, for there is a double process; at one end selling estates to pay encumbrances, and at the other end putting new encumbrances upon estates by other people; you may for some years have one process going on a little more rapidly than another, but it will come to its average again.

As the process is going on at both ends, can you see a prospect of the country being restored from the condition in which it is now placed by those evils?—No, no prospect whatever, except that arising from a hope and wish that the country may amend.

Will you give the Committee your opinion as to what is necessary to be done to check the growth of those evils?—To alter the law, so that a man who wants money beyond what his income will yield him may find it cheaper to sell a portion of his estate than to encumber it; he will be pulled up much sooner when he sees the estate going from him than when he merely signs a few extra deeds, of which perhaps he does not understand the full effect. Then I would have each encumbrance expressed in a particular form, specifying the land on which it is placed, like passing personal property; and I would permit an encumbrance to be only upon one denomination of land. My idea, then, is this, that a man who wanted money would mortgage, or rather charge, (because I would put an end to mortgage)—would charge the Blackacre with it, and let the rest of his property remain untouched; and if afterwards he wanted more money he would charge another portion with that, or he would increase the charge upon the first property, still having only one charge upon it; if he wanted to sell any portion of his property he might sell that portion, because there would be only one charge upon it, and he would not be obliged to discharge all the encumbrances by which he was affected.

When you speak of increasing the charge, do you mean that you would not allow a man, having borrowed a thousand pounds from A on a certain property, to borrow another thousand pounds from B on the same property?—I would not allow it; let him go to A and increase his charge upon that property, or go and charge some other portion of his property to B, or sell another portion of land.

I collected from you that you traced the evils of Ireland, not exclusively to registration, but to registration combined with the law of judgment creditors?—The law relating to judgment creditors I think also a bad one, and that it contributes to increase the encumbrances.

Your great principle, as I collect it, is that the owner of a real estate should exercise the largest possible power over it while he lives and enjoys it?—Yes.

Is not this jealousy of yours with respect to charging inconsistent with the exercise of the largest power, during life, by the owner?—I do not think it is, for it relates merely to his power as between two innocent parties, as between a purchaser and the encumbrancer. I would let him charge it as against himself, but I would not let him charge it as against a purchaser from himself.

Why are you jealous of his exercising a minor power, namely, of charging within the full extent of the value?—Because I see the evils to which the exercise of that power leads, and because I see that it is a power which is naturally liable to abuse.

You have admitted that it is a restraint upon the right of property during the life of the owner, which restraint you think must be imposed for the public good?—It may be called a restraint during the life of the owner, but I do not think it is; it is merely limiting or pointing out the manner in which he can raise money on his property; he ceases to be the owner when he encumbers it. I merely say that he shall sell it instead of giving the party a charge on it.

As I understand you, you would have no portion of his land, whether it be a field or a township, subjected to more than one charge?—Yes, subject only to one charge.

I collect that whatever may be done with regard to arrears of poor-rate, whatever may be done with respect to marriage settlements, or even with respect to primogeniture, still you think the danger of accumulating incumbrances in Ireland would be left untouched, while assignable judgments with registration continues?—I think so.

What would be the effect of placing the law of debtor and creditor in Ireland, quoad judgments, exactly on the same footing as that upon which it stands in England?—The law in England respecting judgments has been altered within the last few years; and I do not think that you have had yet full experience of the mischief of the alteration.

Has there been an alteration of the law of England assimilating the law, quoad judgments, to the law as it exists in Ireland?—Yes; a judgment in England is now a much more formidable lien on land than it was formerly.

Does it act to the full extent to which you have gone in Ireland?—It has gone to the full extent, except being assignable; it is not assignable in England.

Is that an important difference?—Yes; because it makes a judgment a more convenient security, and therefore tends to produce the habit of accepting a judgment as a security.

And being assignable it supersedes the necessity of holding the deeds?—Yes.

In England no security is considered first-rate without the possession of the deeds?—That was the case; but I think it possible that a contrary habit will grow in England if the law is left unaltered.

There have been two great alterations in the law in Ireland with respect to judgments, have there not?—Yes.

When did they take place?—Those two alterations, to which reference was made yesterday, are hardly to be called alterations at all; they were in the time of George the Third.

Nothing since then?—Nothing since then; they were alterations relating to scire facias.

There has been no alteration in the operation of the law, particularly in Ireland with respect to judgments?—There is the one law, making them assignable.

What is the date of that?—I think ninth Geo. II.

Are you able, as a matter of legal history, to state that that alteration has been found in date simultaneous with the increase of encumbrances in Ireland?—No; I am not able to state that as a matter of history.

Has the net of encumbrances been more widely spread, and more difficult of extrication within the last generation in Ireland?—Within the last two generations; I think so. I have seen many old conveyances, and old searches for title, and certainly they were not attended with the same difficulties that more modern ones have been.

With regard to the operations of judgment, has not the mischief of judgments been very much increased by what is called the Sheriff's or Receiver's Act of 1835?—Very much; and still further increased by what is called Pigot's Act.

Do you think that the difference between the operation of the laws in Scotland and in Ireland might be explainable in this way, that the one rather encouraged the frailties of the people, and that in the other case those frailties did not exist?—I think that that accounts for a great deal of the difference.

Was not the extensive use of judgments in Ireland caused by the inability of the Roman Catholics to grant and receive mortgages?—It has been sometimes attributed to that cause.

Do you attribute it to that cause?—I do partly. Therefore the confusion in our titles has been caused in fact by penal laws?—It has been increased by penal laws.

Isaac Butt, Q.C., March 22, 1849.

Will you state your opinion upon the effect of judgments upon landed property?—I have a very strong opinion that one of the greatest mischiefs to landed property in Ireland, and which is in a great degree the cause of its present embarrassed state, is, that judgments are common assurances in Ireland. The law in England and in Ireland with regard to judgments is exactly the same, with one exception, which may perhaps have caused the difference that exists between the two countries; and that is, that in Ireland the judgment is assignable by law, in England it is not assignable at law. By an Irish statute passed in the reign of Queen Anne, a judgment was made assignable at law; that is, if a party has a judgment against another, by an entry on the records of the court he can assign that judgment to any person. By this entry the assignee becomes the legal owner, and there is no other party upon the records of the court acknowledged as the owner.

And his interest may be sold?—Yes; I am disposed to think that that statute was passed in consequence of what are called the Popery laws—the penal laws against Roman Catholics holding mortgages. It had become the object both of the Protestant landed proprietors, and of Roman Catholics who had money, to get a security upon land that would be in the nature of a mortgage, and evade the law; and very probably the same circumstances have led to this, that now a judgment is a very common way of borrowing money in Ireland by a landed proprietor instead of mortgaging.

Does it not appear a very natural and proper thing that judgments should be as assignable as any other kind of property?—It does; but I think that anything is impolitic that gives a landed proprietor facilities for encumbering his estate; and I think the use which has been made of judgments in that way, has led very much to the encumbering of land. There is this difference between judgments and mortgages which must not be forgotten; a judgment is a charge upon all the lands that a man has, and not only upon all the lands that he has, but upon all the lands that he may hereafter acquire; so that if a man has estates in every county in Ireland in small lots, the judgment is a charge upon them; if he sells one of those estates he must sell it subject to the judgment; and if he purchases another estate in another county, that other estate is also subject to the judgment. There is, I can conceive, nothing more mischievous, and more calculated to embarrass property than the system of judgments in Ireland.

Sir J. Pakington.] Is not the unavoidable effect to charge a judgment upon any species of property that a man has?—There is no provision of the law which enables you to do that.

Mr. Bright.] Is it not usual in mortgages in England for parties to insert a variety of property, far more than is necessary for the real security of the mortgagees, for the purpose of making the security still more secure? Does not the lender very frequently wish to include all the property of the party to whom the money is lent?—I should think not all; in practice it is not so; but very often where mortgage and judgment are collateral, as they generally are in Ireland, you find the judgment affecting a number of estates that are not included in that mortgage.

Has it not the effect of encumbering estates unnecessarily, if adequate security can be given to the mortgagees by encumbering only a portion of the estate, instead of encumbering the whole of the estate?—Yes; and a judgment affects not only the estate which a man may have now, but any estate which he may at any period of his life hereafter acquire.

Sir L. O'Brien.] What would you say if it were limited to the estates a man had at the time of obtaining judgment?—I think that would be an improvement; but having thought a good deal upon that subject, I would be strongly of opinion that the best thing that could be done would be to abolish the law altogether, making judgments a charge upon landed property.

Sir J. Pakington.] From what cause has arisen that practice of granting judgments conjointly with mortgages in Ireland, which is so different from the system of raising money upon landed security in England?—It is a very singular thing, that with the law the same in the two countries, with the exception of the judgment being assignable in Ireland, but not in England, this material difference has arisen; and I trace it to the circumstance of judgments being assignable in Ireland. The practice originated, I think, in the penal laws.

But you would abolish the system of judgment?—I would abolish the law of making judgment a charge upon land, as it now is; I would allow a landed proprietor to borrow money on judgment under the penalty, if he did not repay it, of having his creditor take him in execution, or take his goods in execution, or take his land in execution; but I would not allow a judgment to subeist as an indefinite charge upon his land.

Sir J. Pakington.] Is that system carried to such an extent that an Irish proprietor would find a difficulty in raising money without a conjoint judgment?—I do not think money would be lent him without a conjoint judgment. If I myself were advising a lender, the common practice of the country being that the lender should take the security of a judgment, I should advise him to require that security to be given to him.

Colonel Dunne.] The receivers are appointed under the Pigot and O'Loughlen Acts?—Yes.

Sir J. Graham.] Do I understand the effect of your evidence correctly, when I suppose that the encumbrance of the judgment or judgments is as it were concentrated in the present owner of the land, so that however small the sum for which a judgment may run against him, he cannot part with any portion of his estate without clearing off that judgment debt?—It is so.

Colonel Dunne.] The evil effects of that system are increased by the recent Acts of O'Loughlen and Pigot?—The act introduced by Sir M. O'Loughlen enables a judgment creditor to obtain a receiver on petition over the lands of his debtor; it did not enable him to sell his estate. A judgment creditor could not then sell the estate of his debtor during his life. After the death of the debtor he had the power that any creditor, whether by judgment or otherwise, had of filing a bill to administer the assets of his debtor, and if his personal property were insufficient to pay his debts the land he left would be sold. But an act introduced by the present Chief Baron placed judgments on a totally different footing. It made them actual charges upon the land, equal in operation to a specific charge created by deed. By the operation of that act a judgment creditor can file a bill for the sale of his debtor's estate in right of the charge it gives him upon his land. I think the effect of this act has been to add to the embarrassments of the landed interest; it has multiplied suits and receivers; and I think that these suits, which may be called profligate suits, that is, suits instituted for the sake of the costs, have been in most instances instituted by the operation of this act. Small judgments have been purchased up for the purpose of instituting a suit. Before the act a judgment did not entitle the party owning it to institute such a suit.

Sir J. Graham.] You would revise the whole law of Ireland with respect to judgments?—I have formed a very strong opinion, and I think upon very good grounds, and with sufficient experience to enable me to form a judgment; I would not make a judgment a charge upon land.

And consequently the whole process of appointing receivers under judgments would fall with it?—Yes. And in causes I think the courts in Ireland grant receivers with too much facility. Receivers ought not to be appointed in cases in which the termination ought to be a speedy sale; and I think if some change were made in the Court of Chancery, the effect of which would be to bring causes to a speedy termination, receivers in causes would die away of themselves.

Then you would abolish judgments?—I would; that is, I would not let them be a charge upon land.

Mr. P. Scrope.] Would you allow two mortgages to extend over the same property, or would you prevent that?—That would be exceedingly difficult to do by a legislative enactment. I consider there is a great objection to a legislative enactment interfering with a man's disposition of his property; but I would not give him any facility for encumbering his property; the present Registry Acts do give him a facility. But I am afraid it is so interwoven with the country that it is almost impossible to get rid of it.

Sir J. Graham.] Does your observation apply to any change of the law with respect to judgments?—No.

It is not so interwoven with the country?—No; if the present system were changed, you could not say to a man who now has a judgment, "We will alter your security." But there is not the least difficulty in saying that the judgments hereafter entered up shall not be a charge upon any lands, or that any lands which a man may subsequently acquire shall not be charged by any judgment now entered up.

Therefore you see no difficulty in prospectively cutting off that mode of charge?—No.

And immediately?—Immediately. The Pigot act did what I conceive to be extremely mischievous in relation to judgments; it made them, for the first time, charges upon leasehold interests; there was a large portion of properties held for long leases that were, before that act, free; that act made judgments charges upon all that interest. The question has never come to a judicial decision; but I entertain the opinion that by the recent act of Sir Edward Sugden, the provision of that act has been repealed to this extent, that judgments do not now affect the purchaser of a chattel leasehold, who has not notice of them. But I am afraid that in practice this will be unavailing, and that to guard himself against any risk from the possibility of notice, the purchaser of such an interest will still search for judgments. If he does, of course he has notice of all that appear on the search.

If it has not been repealed, does the Pigot act render property held under long leases liable to be managed by receivers, which it was not liable to before?—The repeal of which I speak, only relates to the case of a purchaser. The judgment has in any case its full force against the property in the hands of the debtor; but Pigot's act very much embarrasses the sale of such property; and I have personally seen the inconvenience of it. Houses in towns are very often held for a long term of years; if you buy a house in Dublin, you have to search for judgments against the person holding the leasehold estate, exactly as you would do if you bought a freehold estate.

Till the Pigot act, leases under colleges and under episcopal bodies could not, in the case of a judgment, render the property liable to have a receiver appointed over it?—No; and it affects the sale of those properties which are liable to be sold in execution by the sheriff. Formerly a leasehold interest could be sold exactly in the same way as the furniture of a house; but now, in consequence of the judgments becoming a charge upon it, this is impeded.

It had the further effect of making it liable to be managed by a receiver, which it was not liable to before?—By a receiver on a judgment; there was another effect of Pigot's act; formerly judgments did not bind the equitable estate; if for instance a landed proprietor had an estate that was let for 99 years, and he sold that estate, a judgment against the landed proprietor could not bind that term; if the purchaser got an assignment of that term without notice of the judgment against the proprietor, he got the estate free from the judgment, because the judgment did not bind the equitable estate unless the purchaser had notice of it. The law has been changed in that respect. In practice, however, I believe the protection of an outstanding term was not relied on in Ireland, owing to the Registry Act.

Seeing the extension which, under various acts of Parliament has taken place of the principle of judgments, with all those evils that you attach to it, you would recommend a prospective and immediate reversal of that state of the law?—I would. I do not think it can be done too soon.

IN CHANCERY, IRELAND.

Robert Edward Gibbins, Plaintiff, } WHEREAS it has been represented to me, that several of the Creditors on the Estates of the late Right Honorable John Reuben, Earl of Portarlington, and others, Defendants, } Testator in the pleadings named, have neglected or omitted to come in and file charges on foot of their respective demands and incumbrances, pursuant to the decree of the 9th day of February, 1847, and that the time limited by and for the said purpose has expired, and that it is expedient to extend said period: Now I require all Creditors and Legatees of the late Right Honorable John, Earl of Portarlington, deceased, the Testator in the pleadings named, and also all persons having Charges or Incumbrances affecting the real and freehold Estates of the said late Earl of Portarlington, to come in before me at my Chambers on the Inns Quay, in the city of Dublin, on or before Tuesday, the 20th day of November next, and present to prove and claim the same, otherwise they will be precluded the benefit of said Decree.

Dated this 30th day of June, 1848.

E. LITTON.

John Warnock, Plaintiff's Solicitor,
30, North Great George's Street, Dublin.

JUST PUBLISHED,

ADDISON ON THE LAW OF CONTRACTS

A TREATISE on the Law of CONTRACTS, and Rights and Liabilities as Contractor. By C. G. ADDISON, Esq., of the Inner Temple, Barrister-at-Law. Second Edition, 2 vols. 8vo. price £1 10s.

RUSSELL ON ARBITRATION.

A TREATISE on the Power and Duty of an ARBITRATOR, and the Law of Submissions and Awards; with an Appendix of Forms, and of the Statutes relating to Arbitration. By FRANCIS RUSSELL, Esq., M.A., Barrister-at-Law. 1 vol. 8vo. 12s.

BAYLEY ON BILLS OF EXCHANGE.

SUMMARY of the Law of Bills of Exchange, Cash Bills, and Promissory Notes. By SIR JOHN BAYLEY, Knt. Sixth Edition, by G. W. DOWDESWELL, Barrister-at-Law. 1 vol. 8vo. 12s.

BURGE ON THE LAW OF SURETYSHIP.

COMMENTARIES on the Law of SURETYSHIP, and the Rights and Obligations of the parties thereto. By WILLIAM BURGE, Esq. Q.C. M.A. &c. 1 vol. 8vo. 12s.

STANFIELD'S PRECEDENTS IN CONVEYANCING.

A COLLECTION of Copyhold PRECEDENTS IN CONVEYANCING, arranged for general and ordinary use, together with Introductory Treatises upon the various transactions and occurrences incident to Estates of customary tenure, &c. By JOHN F. STANFIELD, Esq. 1 vol. 8vo. 12s.

EDWARD J. MILLIKEN, Law Bookseller and Publisher, 15, College Green, Dublin.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION—(payable in advance):

Yearly, 30s. Half-yearly, 17s. Quarterly, 8s.

Printed by THOMAS ISAAC WHITE, at his Printing Office, No. 4, FLEET-STREET, in the Parish of St. Andrew, and published at 15, COLLEGE-GREEN, in same Parish, by EDWARD JOHNSON MILLIKEN, residing at the same place, all being in the County of the City of Dublin. Saturday, July 23, 1848.

THE Irish Jurist

No. 40.—Vol. I.

AUGUST 4, 1849.

Price { Per Annum, 21 10s.
Single Number, 6d.

The Names of the Gentlemen who favour THE IRISH JURIST with Reports in the several Courts of Law and Equity in Ireland, are as follows:—

Court of Chancery, including Bankruptcy Appeals.....	{ ROBERT LONG, Esq., and JOHN PITT KENNEDY, Esq., Barristers-at-Law.	Court of Exchequer Chamber.....	{ JOHN BLACKMAN, Esq., and A. HICKEY, Esq., Barristers-at-Law.
Rolls Court.....	{ WILLIAM BURKE, Esq., and WILLIAM JOHN DUNDAS, Esq., Barristers-at-Law.	Queen's Bench, including Civil Bill and Registry Appeals	{ FLORENCE M'CARTHY, Esq., and SAMUEL V. PRET, Esq., Barristers-at-Law.
Equity Exchequer.....	{ CHARLES HARE HENPHILL, Esq., and WILLIAM HICKSON, Esq., Barristers-at-Law.	Exchequer of Pleas, including Manor Court and Registry Appeals.	{ CHAS. H. HENPHILL, Esq., and WILLIAM HICKSON, Esq., Barristers-at-Law.
Bankrupt Court.....	{ ROBERT GRIFFIN, Esq. and W.G. CHAMNEY, Esq. Barristers-at-law.	Common Pleas.....	{ ROBERT GRIFFIN, Esq. and W. G. CHAMNEY, Esq. Barristers-at-law.
		Admiralty Court.....	{ ROBERT GRIFFIN, Esq. and W. G. CHAMNEY, Esq. Barristers-at-law.

DUBLIN, AUGUST 4, 1849.

THE differences of opinion which exist between the Master of the Rolls and the Masters in Chancery as to the eligibility or non-eligibility of attorneys to be receivers cannot but tend to accelerate a change in the whole present system of the management of estates under our courts of Equity. "A house divided against itself cannot stand." That change we have long advocated as important, has now become inevitable.

The Master of the Rolls has enunciated the principle that an attorney is not eligible for the office of receiver, and that "on the plainest grounds of public policy." His Honor's observations, or rather his deliberate judgment in Molony v. Nugent, lead to the conclusion that, in own court, he is prepared to act universally on this principle; and, in the case before him, he enforced the rule with a retrospective operation.

On the other hand, Master Litton, in a carefully prepared judgment, has expressed his dissent from the principle, and stated his own deliberate conviction, that attorneys, when resident, are the best receivers. The decision of his Honor has been reversed, and the Chancellor has decided that there is no rule of court, or of law, to prevent the appointment.

The evidence of Sir Edward Sugden before the Receiver Committee was relied on as implying that the rule of law was against the appointment; and he certainly does state that the practice of the court was against it, and, therefore, that the General Order was only directed against attorney's clerks and apprentices; but his unpremeditated answer, after a retirement of three years, may have resulted from mistake or a lapse of memory. The practice of appointing independent solicitors to be receivers always prevailed; that of appointing a partner of the solicitor for the plaintiff, or some nominee of his on "a proper understanding," at one time also extensively prevailed, and led, we do believe, to the foulest abuses and grossest system of plunder and jobbing.

It was to this practice Sir Edward Sugden must have alluded, and this he and every other judge has discouraged, but we fear not yet entirely annihilated. But there has never been a positive rule of court or of law disqualifying attorneys, disconnected with the cause or matter, from being receivers. Speaking generally, we concur in the view of his Honor that practising attorneys and barristers are not fit men to be receivers; those of both classes who have much practice are very unlikely to accept the appointment, but we think it unwise to lay down an unchangeable rule; but, in truth, having regard to the only duty of the office—to receive—it matters little under the present system what may be the profession of the individual who fills it. Under existing circumstances an inflexible rule it certainly ought not to be; and, for various reasons, a discretionary power should be vested in the Master.

It is impossible for the great majority of men who are really competent to fill the office;—from their education as land agents—to obtain securities to that amount and number which would give them an aggregate rental, upon the percentage allowed for the collection of which, they could live independently, and devote themselves entirely to the management of estates under their controul.

Mr. M'Cay's very valuable evidence before the Receiver Committee has shown that the vast bulk of properties under our Courts of Equity are small: they are also scattered; or in cases in which they are adjacent, so circumstanced, that the former agent or nominee of the plaintiff, frequently must obtain the Receivership. It is, as a general rule, impossible to combine a sufficient number of Receiverships in one locality, to secure a resident agent who will attend to no other duties; and even if that number could be found, it would be impracticable for one individual to obtain the number of distinct securities that are required by the rules of court. The multiplication of recognizances would, in most cases, be found an insuperable bar.

The best class of Receivers are men educated for the purpose, but that class cannot be had in most cases, so long as the practice of the court remains unaltered.

If then, in cases of small properties, the court cannot procure the undivided services of a well qualified Receiver, and if the Receiver, in order to support himself, must unite other business with that of his office, the objection to a solicitor is no greater on that ground than would apply to any individual who would take the appointment in connection with his other avocations.

Other reasons may be suggested why the rule should not be inflexible. Suppose the property to be house property in a town: where is the superiority of an agricultural over a legal receiver? Suppose again that the family solicitor had been the family land agent for the last twenty years, and the property were placed under the court for the discharge of a judgment debt which would be paid by the perception of two years rent; in such a case, would it be just or advisable to remove the former agent, with his pre-existing knowledge of the estate and the tenantry, and substitute a farmer, grocer, or absentee land agent in his stead?

In discussing the capabilities of the different classes for office, the important testimony of Master Henn and Master Litton cannot be discarded, and their reasoning is almost conclusive in favour of solicitors, but only so long as a system continues to exist, which is so cumbersome and complicated that no uninitiated country gentleman can understand it.

The grounds of public policy which his Honour adverted to, but did not state, must in some degree rest on the fitness or unfitness of a person immersed in other pursuits engaging in one, which requires an attention he cannot bestow, and a knowledge he does not possess. This applies very generally, and we concede at once that town solicitors and barristers in practice are unfit to be receivers, and unquestionably none of that class should ever be appointed, or seek the appointment; but there may and do exist members of both professions whose early habits and pursuits, whose tastes and connection with the estate may eminently qualify them for the office, and we should pause before we laid down an inflexible rule of exclusion.

Another ground of public policy—stated to be sufficient to disqualify attorneys—is the tendency that legal men have to create costs, to “give more law and less money,” to look at everything through a legal medium, and if they cannot make costs themselves to create a job for a brother. It is idle to say that too much of this system has not been adopted, and it is notorious that numbers of estates are thrown into the Court of Chancery to create costs, but it is rather the office of solicitor for the receiver ceiver than that of receiver-solicitor that, in this view, is the really desirable appointment.

Delinquencies and delinquents should be punished in proper cases, in every case where the office of receiver or receiver's solicitor is practised corruptly, whether it be by attorney, private gentlemen, grocer, land agent, or farmer; no class is immaculate. “Even virtue's self will sometimes bear away her outward robes, soiled in the wrestle with iniquity.” But an entire body is not to be punished because it possesses unworthy members. The opinion of Master Henn, which, founded on his long practice, is deserving of attention, is, that attorneys are the least expensive receivers, as they cannot charge for attendance, or for advice given by themselves to themselves. We agree that there are certain items they cannot charge for; but there are law proceedings which an attorney receiver will be more apt than a layman to deem necessary, and which a Master will be sure to sanction.

The Master of the Rolls has appealed to public opinion; a discriminating public opinion, we think, will pronounce against the exclusive rule.

It is one thing to be convinced that abuses do exist—and public opinion will unhesitatingly coincide in that; but the reflecting public will differ as to the mode of administering correctives for those abuses. The Chancellor has pointed out the mistake into which his Honour—actuated, we have no doubt, by the sincerest desire for the public good—has fallen, that he has considered the question more in the character of the legislator than that of the judge.

The Master of the Rolls cannot entertain a stronger opinion than we do of the necessity for a thorough reform of the administration of estates under our courts of Equity. We want a concentrated governing body, acting with educated and trained officers on a uniform system.

But we must distinguish the evils of a system from the shackled agents who have to carry it out; we should not visit on the latter those offences which are chargeable upon the former.

We have felt the question to be of such general importance, that we have opened our columns to the letter of our correspondent P. It was a question on which we knew that we could not be silent; and we cannot close this article without expressing our deep regret at the mode in which the Master of the Rolls has expressed his opinion, towards a brother judge, who never said an ungracious thing; whose courtesy, whilst it never interfered with the firm and conscientious discharge of his duties, has endeared him to every professional man who has had the privilege of practising before him.

We can conceive no deeper wound capable of being inflicted on the administration of justice in this country, than that by which members of the same court are shewn to be at variance, one speaking disrespectfully of the opinion of the other, and the other replying in language of strong retort. Men in high official legal position should be guarded in their use of language; an expression by them of approval or of dislike to an individual, may make or mar his fortune. When one judge differs from another, if he wish to preserve the respect of the public for the judicial office, he will treat the opinion of the judge from whom he differs, with courtesy and respect. There never was a better aphorism for judges than that which tells them "to express their own opinions with moderation, and to treat those of others with deference."

◆

To the Editor of the Irish Jurist.

Sir,

In your last number you promised to recur to the important question of the propriety of appointing solicitors as receivers under the courts. Having spent some thought on this subject, I take the liberty of addressing you thereupon. The whole question of receiverships under the Courts of Chancery and Exchequer has been lately brought much before the public; but the attention of the profession has been particularly turned to this peculiar branch of it, by a series of judgments, in which the practice of nominating as receivers, solicitors, or persons in any way in their confidence, has been most energetically denounced. It is true that barristers, physicians, and traders were also stigmatised as improper persons to undertake the office; thus including almost all the classes amongst which we can find men trained to habits of thought, of method, or of accuracy; but it is quite plain that the judicial mind was more appalled by the enormity of permitting one solicitor to be appointed, than it would have been by the distribution of all the receiverships of both courts amongst the other disqualified classes. Sir Edward Sugden in his examination before the Select Committee of the Commons on Receiverships,* stated that by the practice of the court a solicitor could not be a receiver. Had not the assertion been made by so very eminent a judge, it would have seemed impossible to suggest that solicitors were hitherto disqualified; and the only probable mode of accounting for the opinion is, that Sir Edward Sugden meant to confine it to solicitors in the cause. The Master of the Rolls, however, stated to the Committee† that Sir Edward Sugden was under a misapprehension on the point, and the doctrine of the text books, the reasoning of Master Litton in Molony v. Nugent, (1 I. J. 322), the constant practice of both courts, and the Lord Chancellor's decision in Geale v. Nugent, leave no doubt that no inflexible rule exists which binds the Masters to reject a solicitor in exercising their discretion as to the fittest person to be appointed receiver. It does, however, seem very doubtful, whether any single judge has it in his power now to lay down any such rule, with no higher authority in its favour than the recommendation of a select committee of the Commons, which can hardly be considered as effecting a change in the law; still less ought any one to be punished by the infliction of costs for having acted upon the law as heretofore understood. Many of the members of the Select Committee seemed impressed with the idea that much might be accomplished by the exertions of individuals; but in acting on the great maxim "Aide toi et le ciel t'aidera," the self-dependent reformer should be careful not to encroach on the duties of the higher powers.

If, however, a principle be in itself correct, much allowance should be made for the person, who, in attempting to carry it out, should even exceed the limits of his jurisdiction; but there seems grave doubt as to the expediency of the proposed rule. We may assume that the organization of a staff of professional agents—men whose lives should be devoted to the management of property, is for the present hopeless. It would be difficult to find the materials from which to form such a staff, and the opinions of many authorities of the greatest weight are opposed on principle to its creation. For some time longer it is certain that estates under the courts must be managed by persons not possessing any special professional qualifications. Is it, under those circumstances wise, that barristers, physicians, traders and solicitors should be absolutely disqualified from becoming receivers? Such is the question.

Almost all those best acquainted with the management of property in Ireland dwell much on the necessity of the agent residing upon or near the property under his care. Amongst those who have expressed this opinion most strongly may be mentioned the Master of the Rolls* and Master Brooke;† the report of the Select Committee also presses on this point, while the evidence taken by the Land Tenure Commission contains many complaints of the non-residence of agents. Without this principle all hope of improvement seems vain, and its operation will certainly exclude any man, law or lay, who does not reside for the greater part of the year on or near the estate, if any one can be found who does. If the estate be one where the fees afford a sufficient remuneration for the whole time of men of character and intelligence it seems but common honesty and common sense that the whole time of the receivers should be devoted to it, and the court may well, in such cases, insist on his relinquishing all pursuits which may in any way distract him from his duties. But it appears from the evidence of Mr. McCay‡ that scarcely 12 per cent. of the estates under the courts amount to £1000 a-year, the receivers fees on the remaining 88 per cent. are consequently below £50 per annum. Who will give up all other employment for such a salary? Is it likely to be a man of "independent character and personal influence?"

When the estates under the courts are concentrated it may be possible for one person to undertake the management of several; but they are frequently much scattered, and the choice must then be made between a man whose active labour is worth but £50 per annum, who cannot procure any higher remuneration, and one, a portion of whose more valuable time is already occupied. Can there be a doubt which to choose? Surely where the receivership is so small that its fees cannot purchase the whole attention of a competent person, the best possible arrangement is to employ a portion of the time of one who has already some other occupation. It will be conceded then that the receiver may have † Examination Select Committee, p. 93, ques. 1038.

* Examination of Select Committee, p. 47, ques. 518.

* Ev. Sel. Com. p. 98, qu. 1116; p. 103, qu. 1165.

† Ev. Sel. Com. p. 18, qu. 148 to 151; p. 16, qu. 192, 193.

‡ Ev. Sel. Com. p. 139, qu. 1364, 1365.

some other employment. We have seen that he must live on or near the estate; the most suitable resident in the neighbourhood must, therefore, be appointed. Now, what are the component parts of rural society? which of its members are best qualified? Clergymen are excluded by statute; traders, physicians and solicitors by the proposed rule; there remain land proprietors and farmers. But what proportion of the land proprietors would accept receiverships? What proportion of those who would accept them are capable of fulfilling the duty? Do they in general manage their own estates so well as to make them models for imitation? If not, why do we expect more favourable results where there are less powerful motives for exertion? It is to be feared that too many of our country gentlemen are sadly deficient in those habits of business and accuracy by which alone property can be satisfactorily administered. As a normal school for proprietors the arrangement might be valuable, but it would hardly be just to complete their education at the cost of encumbered estates. Farmers, when men of intelligence and education, frequently make excellent receivers; but, unfortunately, the number of farmers who possess those qualifications is very limited. In many parts of the country there are few, if any, above the rank of manual labourers; and even the agricultural knowledge of too many of those who consider themselves of a higher grade is limited to the alternation of exhausting white crops with scanty pasture. Almost all who live in the country have, at least, such a knowledge of farming; but those whose chief profession is not agricultural, have, in general, the additional merit of not being wedded to old and erroneous systems.

It does indeed seem difficult to say why the classes mentioned in Reynolds v. Reynolds [cited in Geale v. Nugent, (1 Ir. Jur. 321)] were singled out. If inconsistent occupation be an objection, (and we have shewn that it cannot be considered a disqualification), it applies as much to those who were admitted to be qualified. The business of a large farmer must demand at least as much of his time as that of a trader in a small town, a country doctor, or a local attorney. That seems to be the only objection pressed against two of the classes; but with regard to solicitors as receivers, a further prejudice seems to exist, apparently founded partly on a species of legal fiction, that they are always in the superior courts attending to their clients' interests, and a complete ignorance of the existence of such beings as country attorneys; but chiefly upon the idea that they are in some way or other interested in increasing the law costs of the estate. The simple answer to this is, that they are not, and can not be so interested, for the practice of the court will not permit them to act in their own behalf. It is sometimes hinted, that in order to evade this rule, they, while actually doing the business, and receiving the profits, use the name of other solicitors. It might be a sufficient answer to say, that even the Select Committee, though not a little actuated by something of the prejudices against lawyers which distinguished the Lack Learning Parliament, could procure no evidence of any such case; but when we recollect that the court exercises a most summary jurisdiction over its officers, that any solicitor who was convicted of such a fraud would very probably be struck off the roll, and that any attorney permitting his name to be so used, violated a solemn oath, we must believe that if such cases do occur, they are very exceptional, while the appointment of farmer receivers does not prevent at least an equal suspicion of similar fraud.* Master Litten, in his very able judgment in Molony v. Nugent, (1 Ir. Jur. 322,) shows how much the legal knowledge and business habits of a solicitor receiver may often save and benefit the estate, and without going quite so far as to say that they should be preferred, there certainly does not seem any sufficient reason for their exclusion.

The report of the Select Committee remarks: "that the receiver should be resident on or near the property, acquainted with agriculture, of independent character and personal influence." How is such a man most readily to be procured? By narrowing or by extending the qualification? There are not so many such men in every district in the land, that it is expedient to reduce the number from whom to select. Let the office be made less hazardous, let the difficulty of arranging accounts be diminished, let the Master have more opportunity of testing the fitness of the candidates, and we may hope for at least some such appointments. The report of the Committee of the Law Society gives some most valuable suggestions for the improvement of the practice in appointing receivers; going pretty deeply into the details requisite to carry out the principle of careful selection advised by the Master of the Rolls and the Select Committee; and by the working of some such principle may we hope to see a better class of receivers, which is not likely to be produced by any rule of exclusion—of all systems, that most opposed to the feelings, the tastes, and the tendencies of this age.

◆

Report of the Committee of the Society of the Attorneys and Solicitors of Ireland, on the subject of managing Estates by Receivers under the Court of Chancery in Ireland, with the suggestions of the Committee for the improvement of the present system.

We have considered the subject of the management of estates by Receivers under the Court of Chancery in Ireland, and beg to state that we conceive the change of property likely to take place in consequence of the measures now before Parliament, the probable decrease in the number of orders for Receivers, which will be consequent on the bill to amend the law concerning judgments, should it be passed and the capability which exists of improving the present system, render it exceedingly undesirable, that any new tribunal, or new machinery for the management of estates in the hands of the Court of Chancery should be established; any measure of the kind must entail serious expences, on owners of estates, and the officers of the Court, and it must be difficult, if not impracticable, to foresee to what extent officers and assistants would be required by such a tribunal for an efficient discharge of its duties. The present system secures the important principle of making each estate defray its own expenses of management, and no more, and all that is required is to add to the despatch of business, to diminish expense and to place the management of estates under the Court upon an improved footing, and we are of opinion that this can be accomplished with ease and by reforms involving no fundamental changes.

* Ev. Sel. Com. p. 15, qu. 102.

† Infra Ed.

For the purpose of carrying out these views, we suggest that the jurisdiction of the Masters in reference to the management and setting of estates under the control of the court should be enlarged, and in particular that they should be enabled to make leases for terms not exceeding 21 years, without the consent of the inheritor, adopting in suitable cases the form of lease prescribed by the 9th & 10th Vic. c. 112, and that they should be empowered in all causes and matters to entertain applications for reductions in rents, and with or without the consent of the parties, and whether the tenants hold by leases or not, to make such reductions as they may think proper for any period not exceeding the pendency of the cause or matter, and that the Masters when letting property should be at liberty to dispense with security, or take any description of security they may think suitable to the circumstances of each particular case.

That the Master should have power to delegate to the receiver authority to act in certain cases on his own judgment without coming to him for formal orders; but in such cases the receiver should be responsible for his acts, and should on the next proper occasion bring the matter before the Master for his approval and confirmation; and that the Master, on the application of any party interested, should be at liberty to enquire into any matter connected with the management of the estate, and the conduct of the receiver, without any order of reference from the court for that purpose.

With the view of securing in every case the appointment of the most eligible person as receiver, that it should be the duty of the solicitor having the carriage of the order for the appointment of the receiver, to insert advertisements in the local papers, stating shortly that a receiver is to be appointed over the property in question; and that all persons are at liberty to send in applications to the Master and the solicitor; and that any applicant may be put in nomination, and that the Master may be at liberty to appoint any such person, although he may not have been put forward on behalf of any of the parties in the cause or matter, and in furtherance of the same object of having the most efficient and eligible persons appointed, that the present mode of giving security should be altered. That the security of the Guarantee Society, or of any other public company approved of by the Master should be accepted, or that the receiver should be at liberty to transfer to the credit of the cause or matter an amount of Government Stock not exceeding one year's income to be dealt with in a summary way on the order of the Court or Master, or that the security by recognizance should be limited to one year's income; and that every receiver within six months after his appointment, and within six months after passing each account, without any special direction for the purpose, should file an affidavit in the Master's office, stating the amount received since his appointment or last accounting, the amount disbursed by him, and the net balance then in his hands, and that such balance should be then invested or otherwise disposed of as the Master should direct.

That in all cases, unless the Master should otherwise direct, applications in reference to the management of estates, and the letting of lands should be made to him on notice to the parties without a statement of facts being filed, and that the Master should make such order thereon as may be necessary.

That a separate book should be kept in the office of the Master, in which should be exclusively entered all orders and directions in reference to receivers, and the management and letting of estates; that copies of such orders signed by the Master's examiner should be a sufficient authority to the receiver for acting thereon; and that this receiver's book should be open to the parties and their solicitors, to inspect and extract therefrom without fee, (certified copies when required to be paid for.)

That receivers' accounts, after being vouched and passed, should remain in the Master's office, and at regular periods be bound up and indexed, and should not be filed in the register's office, but that the Master should certify to the court that he had passed and allowed the account, and stating the amount of the receipts and disbursements, and the balance due to or by the receiver on foot of the account, and which certificate should be of the same effect as that now annexed to the receiver's account, and that the receiver's solicitor should not be obliged to take out an office copy of his own account.

That the expenses attending the management of estates under the court may be curtailed by a more careful and economical mode of advertising, and by diminishing the present heavy fees payable on office copies, which, in most instances, are much higher than those paid in England, and as we understand there is a large surplus arising from the fees paid to the credit of the "Suits Fee Fund" account of the Court of Chancery in Ireland, we suggest that those fees should be now reduced in pursuance of the act 6th & 7th W. 4, c. 74.

Signed on behalf of the Committee of the Society of the Attorneys and Solicitors of Ireland,

WILLIAM GODDARD, Chairman,
PRESIDENT.

Solicitors' Buildings, Four Courts,
4th July, 1849.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

POOR LAW COMMITTEE.

James A. Lawson, Esq.—May 18.

9798. Mr. Bright.] What is your profession? —I am a barrister of ten years' standing, and I have been Professor of Political Economy in the University of Dublin.

9799. Have you ever considered the laws relating to the sale and transfer of land in Ireland?—

Yes, I have; I have practised in the courts of Equity, and am familiar with those laws, and have devoted a good deal of consideration to them.

9802. Are those laws to which you have referred principally those which affect the purchase, the sale, and the transfer and possession of real property?—Yes.

9803. Will you state what are obstacles to the transfer of land in Ireland, which have come under your notice?—I think the principal obstacles are, the expense and delay of searches, the difficulty and uncertainty of title, and the number and complication of encumbrances.

9804. With regard to searches, is it not a fact that in making out a title it is necessary to search for a very long period, say 50 or 60 years, so that the purchaser may be certain that there is no encumbrance nor any past settlement that may endanger his title?—Yes; the rule is this: the abstract must commence 60 years back; the purchaser then will require searches against every party who, during those 60 years, appears on the abstract to have had an estate in the lands; searches must be had in the registry against that party during the whole period in which he had any estate or interest which could enable him to affect the lands.

9805. Will you explain why there exists that necessity of making searches for 60 years back?—There are several reasons for it; the principal, of course, is the existence of family settlements and the law of entail; another is the present length of the period of limitations. According to the present law, a party having a right, may assert it at any period within twenty years; and if he is under what is called, technically, disability, a still further period is given to him, so that very frequently, after a lapse of 30 years, a party may come forward and assert title to the lands. I met a case very lately, in which a party had been in America for thirty years; he left this country for America before his right accrued, and after seven years he was believed to have died; the property was dealt with by his brothers during all that period as if it had been their own; he came back at the end of thirty years; there was no statute of limitations to bar his property, and of course he recovered the property. All these circumstances render it necessary that the abstract should go back for a period of sixty years.

9806. Does the cost of transfer depend upon the amount of the purchase-money, or is it dependent upon a variety of other circumstances?—The cost of the transfer does not bear any proportion to the amount of the purchase-money; if I am proceeding to sell a small portion of a large estate, it is very nearly the same expense as if I sold the entire of it, because there must be the same searches both in the registry and for judgments, and the only difference would be, perhaps, the stamp upon the conveyance. The expense of the investigation of a title to a very small lot of land is very nearly as great as the expense of investigation of a title to a large lot.

9809. And is it not a fact that on large properties there is likely to be greater number of encumbrances, and that as they all attach to the small property about to be sold, the expenses of investigating the title for the small property are especially increased, because of its being a portion of a large property?—Certainly; you cannot get well a good title to that small portion without procuring a release, or a satisfaction, from every encumbrancer who affects the entire.

9810. Therefore with regard to many large and deeply encumbered estates in Ireland, there is almost an entire impossibility of a portion of the estate being disposed of?—There is; and in the same way, when parties are going to sell by private contract, it deters them from setting up the land in lots, which otherwise would be a very advantageous proceeding, because, generally speaking, the purchase-money is higher when the estate is set up in small lots, but the expense which falls upon each of these lots deters parties from doing that; and this is a very great evil.

9811. Does not that tend to prevent the growth of a middle proprietary class, a necessary class in Ireland, and therefore is it not injurious?—Certainly; it has that effect.

9812. Generally, with regard to the effects of this heavy cost of transfer, you would say that it acts injuriously upon the proprietary class, and upon the industrious class in Ireland?—It acts very injuriously, both on those who have to sell, and on the public, who are always interested that there should be as free a circulation of land as possible.

9816. With regard to waste lands, is the cost of transfer which arises, especially in the sale of portions of a large estate, not such as to make it absolutely impossible that portions of waste land should be sold in many cases, by making the cost of the transfer greater than the value of the land which is waste?—It is; it has that effect. If there is a judgment against the party it over-rides the entire of his estate.

9817. Waste and cultivated?—Waste and cultivated. Then if you come to sell a small portion of the waste you must trace the derivation of that judgment through the different parties to whom it passes, and you must procure the party in whom it is then vested to release the land. I may also observe that until very recently even that could not be done, because it has been held that a judgment creditor could not release one portion of the lands without losing the security of the judgment altogether; that was the law until lately.

9818. Therefore that which is a very serious injury with regard to retarding changes in cultivated land, acts as an almost entire prohibition with regard to waste lands?—It does; the purchase-money frequently would not pay for the cost of making out the title.

9820. Can you suggest any remedy for the expense and delay of searches which you have described?—I think that a very simple and practical remedy can be devised for the expense and delay of searches; the way in which the searches are made now is this: When a deed is executed which affects the particular lands, a memorial of that deed is brought into the registry and lodged there. When advising searches, you direct searches against A. B. from such a year to such a year; then the officer must go over all the books of the registry for that period, and must abstract all the memorials of the deeds which relate to those particular lands. Now that is a very tedious and a very expensive process, and it very often leads to mistakes, because of course clerks cannot be perfectly accurate in going over those books; and you cannot be sure that there may not be some omission or some mistake in the names of the lands. I think therefore that the registry ought to be altered, which I think might be very easily done.

9821. Will you describe the alteration which would be necessary?—When the Commissioners were inquiring into registry in England, one great difficulty which presented itself was the non-existence of any general survey. We have in Ireland an Ordnance Survey, which is quite perfect, and which could be made the basis of this registry. I would therefore propose that the Ordnance Survey should be incorporated into the registry; that on one side of the page should be introduced a map of the particular townland against which you were about to register the deeds, and on the opposite side a registry of title, with the names of all parties claiming any estate or interest in the lands. I have just drawn out a short form of the way in which I think it ought to be done: I would have the Ordnance Survey delineated, and then, under the head of "Registry of title," I would have first a column for the townland; then the name of the party having an estate or interest; then a description of the part of the lands in which the estate or interest is claimed, because it might not extend to the entire townland; then the nature of the estate or interest, and under what deed or instrument derived. I would then have another column for the registered residence of the party having the estate or interest (that is with reference to what I shall mention presently), for the purpose of giving notice to the parties when a sale is about to take place. I would make it incumbent upon every party claiming an estate or interest to register it in this form, and to insert his residence, where any notice would be transmitted to him; and in the case of change of residence, it would be his duty to register it. That would constitute what I would call the registry of title. The memorials might be registered as at present, and if a party wished for any fuller information than that short registry of title would give him, he might get a copy of the memorial as at present; but I think that for general purposes that registry of title would be sufficient. In addition to that registry of title, I would have what I would call a registry of encumbrances, and I would arrange in precisely the same way: name of townland, name of party entitled to the encumbrance, description of the part of the lands charged with encumbrance, the nature of the encumbrance, its date, and by whom created, and the registered residence of the encumbrancer. You would then have upon one page the names of all the parties who claimed any estate or interest in the lands; you would have on the next page the names of all the parties who claimed any encumbrance against the lands; and then instead of a long and expensive search through all the books, and the very expensive stamp duties and fees upon all those searches, I would give to every party requiring a search, simply an attested copy of those pages of the book relating to those particular lands; on payment, of course, of a very small fee.

[The Witness delivered in the following Paper.]

REGISTRY OF TITLE.

Name of Townland.	Name of Party having an Estate or Interest.	Description of the part of the Lands in which such Estate or Interest is claimed.	Nature of the Estate or Interest, and under what Deed or Instrument derived.	Registered Residence of Party having the Estate or Interest.
Ballymorewaterin.	A. B.	That part marked with red on the map annexed hereto.	Tenant for life, under settlement, dated the day of 1848.	32, Sackville Street, Dublin.

REGISTRY OF ENCUMBRANCES.

Name of Townland.	Name of party entitled to the Encumbrance.	Description of the part of the lands charged with the Encumbrance.	Nature of the Encumbrance, Date, and by whom created.	Registered Residence.
Ballymorewaterin.	C. D.	All the townland.	Judgment of Hilary Term, 1836, obtained by C. D. against X. Y.	Cashe, County Tipperary.

9829. Mr. Bright.] What legal effect would you give to the map as compared with the general description by names; would you make it evidence in the same way?—I would make the map the evidence; it should be at the peril of the party registering to find out the lands upon which his encumbrance was charged.

9830. With regard to the registry of judgments, will you turn your attention to that, and say what alteration you think would be desirable?—Formerly judgments were registered in the offices of the three law courts, the Court of Queen's Bench, the Exchequer, and the Common Pleas; and therefore when you wanted to search for judgments, you had to search the books of all those courts. An Act introduced by Sir Edward Sugden made a great improvement in that respect, for it rendered it necessary that all the judgments, in order to affect the land, should be registered in one office; it put the three offices in fact into one, and thereby simplified the search very much. But, in addition to that, I conceive that a judgment, in order to form a charge upon lands, should be registered against the particular lands which are sought to be charged thereby. Now if a judgment is obtained against a party, it affects all the estates which he has.

9831. In which way is that; is it a judgment against the person which involves a judgment against all his property, or is all his property named, or is it stated in general terms, so that all his property then held, and thereafter to be held, is involved in it?—There is no property named at all in a judgment; a judgment merely is, that A. B. has recovered a judgment for £1,000 against C. D.; that is registered in the office, and by virtue of that, all the property which C. D. had at the time of the entering of that judgment, is affected by it.

9832. Then if your suggestion were adopted with regard to the judgment attaching to a specific property, and to that only, would it not leave the waste lands now in the hands of proprietors, at liberty to be more easily disposed of, in order that they might be more frequently brought into cultivation?—Unquestionably; because the judgment creditor would not think it worth his while to register his judgment against lands of no value.

9833. Against waste lands?—Against waste lands.

9835. Therefore waste lands would be practically, by your suggestion, free from encumbrances?—They would; and it would also have this very beneficial effect, that it would define the estate upon which the judgment was a charge; for instance, if I obtained a judgment against a man of large estates, I would not be unreasonable enough to register it against every one of his estates. I would be quite satisfied with registering it against one which was sufficient security.

9836. Would an alteration in the law as to registering judgments, injure their value as a security?—No; I think it would very much raise their value as a security, because the state of the law now with respect to judgments is very anomalous; although they require to be registered, in fact they have not the benefits of registration. As between deeds, the Registry Act of Anne gives a priority to the deed registered first, over the deed registered afterwards; and if a deed is executed and not registered, and then a subsequent deed is executed and registered, the subsequent deed takes priority over the first deed, unless the party having the subsequent registered deed had notice of the prior unregistered one; then he cannot take advantage of the subsequent registered deed. Unless there be a conflict between deeds, judgments are not assisted at all by the Registry Act; so that if a man executes a mortgage, and that mortgage is not registered, and then immediately afterwards confesses a judgment, still the mortgage has priority over the judgment: according to the principle which I would recommend, while I would impose upon judgment creditors the onus of registering their judgments against the particular lands, I would also give them what they do not now possess, namely, the benefits of registration; that is, that their judgments should have the same benefit from the Registry Act as deeds now have.

9837. As a mortgage now has?—As a mortgage now has. The effect of judgments not possessing that advantage now, is in fact to render them very uncertain security; for instance, this case occurred and is reported: a man deposits in the deeds as an equitable mortgage, with a party who has advanced him money; he then goes to another and borrows money from him on the security of a judgment; and although that judgment creditor knew nothing whatever of the existence of the mortgage, or of the deposit of the title-deeds, the judgment is postponed to the equitable mortgage. Now that would not be the case if the system of registration which I have suggested, extended to judgments.

9838. Do you think it advisable that judgments should continue to be a charge upon land?—I think it was a step in the wrong direction to make judgments a charge upon land; it was done by the Act of 3 and 4 of the Queen, cap. 105; but at the same time, now that that has been done I think it would be very difficult to retrace our steps in that respect.

(To be continued.)

NEW LAW BOOKS.

Lately published by
EDWARD J. MILLIKEN, ESQ., COLLEGE GREEN.
Just published, price 2s., by post 2s. 6d.

LAW OF DEBTOR AND CREDITOR IN IRELAND.

The new Act for the abolition of arrest for debts under ten pounds, and for the recovery of the possession of small tenements before Justice of the Peace, with a full Commentary, Index, Notes and Forms, adapted to the professional and trading classes.

By WILLIAM GERNON, Esq., Barrister-at-law.

"The concise and lucid style in which the subject of this work is treated cannot fail to render it clear and intelligible to the most limited capacity. We can confidently recommend it to the patronage of the profession, and the public at large."—Freeman's Journal.

"The value of this Treatise is much enhanced by the forms appended, and the whole is a very good available summary which will be found useful to the Lawyer, the Magistrate, the Proprietor of landed property, and the Trader."—Dublin Evening Mail.

12mo. Second Edition, Price 2s. 6d.—by post, 3s.

THE Act to facilitate the Sale of Incumbered Estates in Ireland, with a Copious Index and Direction, for procuring under the provisions of the Act, for the Sale of Lands subject to Incumbrances.
By W. M. McCAY, Esq., Solicitor.

"This book should be in the hands of every one tempted to litigate estates, or the securities affecting them."—Dublin Evening Mail.

"It possesses the valuable quality of being intelligible to the unprofessional, as well as instructive to the professional reader."—Freeman's Journal.

All communications for the IRISH JURIST are to be left, addressed to the Editor, with the Publisher, E. J. MILLIKEN, ESQ., COLLEGE GREEN. Correspondents will please give the Name and Address, so the columns of the paper cannot be occupied with answers to Anonymous Communications;—nor will the Editor be accountable for the return of Manuscripts, &c.

Orders for the IRISH JURIST left with E. J. MILLIKEN, ESQ., COLLEGE GREEN, or by letter (post-paid), will ensure its prompt delivery in Dublin, or its being forwarded to the Country, by Post, on the day of publication.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.—(payable in advance):
Half-yearly, 30s. Yearly, 17s. Quarterly, 9s.

Printed by THOMAS ISAAC WHITE, at his Printing Office, No. 2, FLEET STREET, in the Parish of St. Andrew, and published at E. J. MILLIKEN, in college Parish; by EDWARD JONESTON MILLIKEN, residing at the same place, all being in the County of the City of Dublin. Saturday, August 4, 1865.

THE Irish Jurist

No. 41.—VOL. I.

AUGUST 11, 1849.

Price {Per Annum, £1 10s.
Single Number, 9d.

The Names of the Gentlemen who favour THE IRISH JURIST with Reports in the several Courts of Law and Equity in Ireland, are as follows:—

Court of Chancery, including Bankruptcy Appeals.....	{ ROBERT LONG, Esq., and JOHN PITT KENNEDY, Esq., Barristers-at-Law.
Ex. Court.....	{ WILLIAM BURKE, Esq., and WILLIAM JOHN DUNDAS, Esq., Barristers-at-Law.
Equity Exchequer.....	{ CHARLES HARRIS HENPHILL, Esq., and WILLIAM HICKSON, Esq., Barristers-at-Law.
Bankrupt Court.....	{ ROBERT GRIFFIN, Esq. and W. G. CHAMNEY, Esq. Barristers-at-law.

Court of Exchequer Chamber.....	{ JOHN BLACKHAM, Esq., and A. HICKEY, Esq., Barristers-at-Law.
Queen's Bench, including Civil Bill and Registry Appeals.....	{ FLORENCE M'CARNEY, Esq., and SAMUEL V. PRET, Esq., Barristers-at-Law.
Exchequer of Pleas, including Manor Court and Registry Appeals.	{ CHAS. H. HENPHILL, Esq., and WILLIAM HICKSON, Esq., Barristers-at-Law.
Common Pleas.....	{ ROBERT GRIFFIN, Esq. and W. G. CHAMNEY, Esq. Barristers-at-law.
Admiralty Court.....	{ ROBERT GRIFFIN, Esq. and W. G. CHAMNEY, Esq. Barristers-at-law.

DUBLIN, AUGUST 11, 1849.

PUBLIC attention has been so prominently called within the last six months to the whole receiver system that we have no doubt whatsoever that a thorough reform in the abuses which have grown with the growth of receivers must take place.

If we were told that 500 attorneys were receivers—and we have been told that the number is nearly, if not quite as great—and were asked our opinion whether those gentlemen were the best qualified to be receivers, and whether estates would be as well managed by them as by resident trained agents, we should answer in the negative.

If, again, the question were put, would you exclude attorneys from being receivers? Assuming that trained resident agents were procurable, we should answer in the affirmative. In those two questions and answers lie much of the principle on which a change should be worked out.

At present we cannot have men whose sole business is to manage the estates under their care; and the office is so full of peril, and so undesirable that few men, unacquainted with the practice of the Court of Chancery, will venture to undertake it.

It is universally conceded that were properties to remain under receivers to their present extent, or an approximation of that extent, the public good demands a better management of those properties, than, to use the language of a receiver, "that most vicious of vicious systems which plunders the landlord, demoralises the tenant, and victimizes the really efficient and conscientious receiver."

Two millions of rental under that system, a seventh of the rental of the whole island, and probably an eighth of the population!

The Law Society, whose suggestions to the late committee, are deserving of the utmost attention, as they come from practical men, deprecate a change, and look forward to a rapid transfer of property, (and, consequently, removal of it from our Equity courts), under the Encumbered Estates Act, which is now the law of the land.

It would have been exceedingly desirable that Lord John Russell should have announced the names of the Commissioners; on their character and competency the fate of that measure will greatly depend. If those gentlemen do not possess the confidence of the country and of the law professions their usefulness will be materially impaired, and the operations of the act greatly limited. We trust for the sake of this country that these appointments will be made from none other than the purest motives.*

We quite admit that the first and primary consideration is to free land from its encumbered thralldom, but we are not so sanguine as to suppose that the present enormous amount of property in and out of court can rapidly change hands, that purchasers can be found ready to invest their forty or fifty millions; and the fact must not be overlooked with reference to the property under our courts of Equity that much of it is there which it would not be expedient, and much which it would not be possible to sell.

The total repeal of the power of appointing receivers under the judgment acts would have prospectively diminished the amount brought in for now sale, (if we may use the expression,) but the very limited nature of that repeal will create no sensible future diminution of the rental under our courts of Equity, though the scandal of having receivers over miserable incomes of £5 per annum will be avoided. Irrespective of the future prospect of a steady influx into court, we cannot disregard the fact that there is an enormous mass of property which is now locked up under the judgment acts, and that for the lives of many of the present generation of proprietors.

* This was written before the Commissioners had been appointed.

There has been no classification of receivers in matters and causes, but there can be no doubt that the number of the former largely preponderates, more especially when the estates of minors and lunatics are thrown into the scale, and the sojourn of those estates will be for no brief period. It may still be predicated that it is much easier to get into the Court of Chancery than it is to get out of it.

We cannot, therefore, reasonably expect that there will be such a sensible reduction of property under courts of Equity, from the sale of present incumbered estates, and the non-introduction of new ones as to render an improvement in the receiver system on that ground unnecessary.

That gradually one-half of the present two millions may be withdrawn, we believe probable; but the utmost buoyancy of hope and confidence in the revived energies of the country, does not enable us to look forward to the time when much less than a million a-year of income will be under receivers.

We cannot believe that a much less expensive mode of managing that vast amount of property, than the present cannot be devised.

Another reason against a change, which was not so clearly expressed, was the laudable objection to a system by which extensive patronage and jobbing might be introduced. The misfortune of this country being that every office is almost always jobbed; at present—to use the language of one of Sir James Graham's questions to Sir Edward Sugden—"the multiplication of receivers produces many little jobs; but the concentration of them would produce great jobs."

We should be reluctant to give power where there is not a rational expectation of its being worthily used; and we should prefer a small present evil, to increased government patronage; but we cannot, for an apprehension of this sort, allow a gigantic evil to remain unredressed; and we should take care that whoever are to be the dispensers of patronage should be obliged to exercise it under responsibility, and the broad eye of public opinion.

The Law Society states one of the excellences of the present mode of management to be, that each estate pays its own expenses; and certainly that is an excellence; but it might be added that it very often pays nothing else. The carrying out of this principle is so costly that small estates are absorbed in the expenses of management.

We find on looking at the language used by the Law Society that we did not express ourselves with half the clearness they have done on the point of each estate supporting itself. We had better give their own words: "The present system secures the important principle of making each state defray its own expenses of management, and no more!" What an important admission from men best capable of forming a deliberate judgment!

That respectable and useful body will excuse us if we mingle a little playfulness (a characteristic of our Irish nature) with the discussion of a serious question, it would be well if it had been discussed calmly at all times and on all occasions.

We cannot allow ourselves to be too much influenced by the suggestions of the Society; it is impossible for human nature to be altogether disinterested, and, to some extent, the Law Society must be looked upon as interested parties. Many of their body are receivers; whilst the present system leaves it would be impossible and impolitic (as we have shewn in our last number) to introduce an absolute rule of disqualification. Under the present system solicitors who would not accept the appointment of receiver have more or less of patronage in the nomination to the office, and more especially to the lucrative one of solicitor for the receiver.

There is as much of gangrene in that department as in any other branch of the whole system; and if that post were abolished or rendered undesirable, much of the stimulus to throw properties into the Court of Chancery, and to keep them there, would be removed. We impute no improper motive, we merely look to those which must more or less animate human nature, and sway human judgment. The document to which we have adverted contains hints that go a great way towards amelioration, but they do not go far enough; when the wound is severe the surgeon's knife must go deep to effect a cure. To adopt the idea of Sir Robert Peel, let us take hope from the magnitude of the evil, its importance, its hold on public opinion has brought it to that point, that it can no longer be disregarded.

In the case of Kinnersley v. Knott, (13 Jur. 650, C.P.) the question arising on the 12th section of the 3 & 4 W. 4, c. 42, Eng., the 41st sect. of the 3 & 4 Vic. c. 105, Ir., was raised and determined whether in actions upon written instruments the description by an initial letter only, without any averment of an excuse for not setting it forth fully, is a good cause of demurrer. The action was by the indorsee against the acceptor. The declaration stated that the plaintiff complained of John M. Knott, the acceptor's name, &c. The causes of demurrer assigned were that the Christian name of the defendant was not fully stated; that he was described with the initial letter "M." for his Christian name, which should have been in full, or a sufficient excuse for the omission. The court relying on the cases of Nash v. Collins, (17 Law Jour. N. S. C. P. 91, S. C. 5 C. B., 177,) and Miller v. Bay, (12 Jur. 985, Ex.) held that the demurrer was good. Maule, J., in his judgment, says, "I think that the statute which enables an amendment of the declaration to be made on summons, in lieu of a plea of abatement for misnomer, assumes, that when the court sees letters put as initials, and which cannot be sounded by themselves, it will treat them as initials. The cases which have been decided have recognised that principle, namely, they have decided that the party pleading must particularise the name of the person described in such pleading, or give some reason for not so doing. Where the initial is a vowel, the courts have, I think, rightly been astute to understand it as the Christian name; but when the initial letter is a consonant, it must, I think, be understood as an initial only of the Christian name."

The great practical importance of this case, arising from the great uncertainty in which the law upon this subject has been thrown, has induced us to bring the attention of the profession to it at the earliest moment. For ourselves we do not, in this respect, clearly see the soundness of the distinction between vowels and consonants. The letter "M." sounds in our ears as like a surname as A. or I. when standing alone; it is in the combination of letters only that vowels have a particular efficacy. However this case and Lomas v. Landells, (18 L. Jour. N.S. 88, C. P.) where the initial letter was "L," established the distinction.

We believe that the Courts of Queen's Bench and Exchequer in this country have taken different views of the question. The cases have not been reported, but there is a received impression among the profession, that under circumstances similar to those in the case stated, the former court overruled, the latter allowed, the demurrer. We hope this case, in the decision of which the court appears to have adopted the view taken in the majority of the previous cases, will be adopted by the courts in this country. In questions of this nature, almost purely practical, it is much more important that the law should be settled, than that the conclusion arrived at should be the true one. If this be done, the rule will be plain. If there be no Christian name whatever fully stated, and no excuse for the omission, whether the letter be vowel or consonant, the declaration will be demurrable. Appelman v. Blanche, (14 M. & W. 155); Turner v. Fitt, (9 C. B. 701); Esdaile v. McGleam, (15 M. & W. 277); Lovv v. Wilkes, and Gatty v. Webb, (9 Q. B. 427, 431.) If the defendant have two Christian names, the first of which be fully set out, the second by the initial letter alone, and that letter be a vowel, the court, to use the language of Maule, J., "will be astute to understand it as the Christian name." Lomas v. Landells, (18 Law Jour. N. S. C. P. 88.) But if the letter before the surname be a consonant, the declaration will be bad on demurrer. Kinnearley v. Knott, (13 Jur. 858); Noah v. Collier, (17 Law. Jour. N. S. C. P. 91); Miller v. Hay, (12 Jur. 985.) The only other question that could be raised would be whether this rule applies as well to parties named in the record, but not parties to the suit. This, we think, must necessarily follow the same rule; before the statute the rule of law required the names of such persons to be fully given, or an excuse for the omission—(Plow. 128; Stephen on Pleading, 1 Ed. 320)—and the statute raises no ground for the distinction. The words are, "that in all actions upon bills of exchange or promissory notes, or other written instruments, any of the parties to which are designated by the initial letter, or letters, or some contraction of the Christian name, it shall be sufficient so to designate them."

THE Right Honorable John Richards, Third Baron of Her Majesty's Court of Exchequer; Montfort Longfield, Esq., Q.C., LL.D.; and C.J. Hargreave, Esq., Barrister-at-law, 65, Chancery-lane, have been appointed the Commissioners for the sale of encumbered estates in Ireland.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

POOR LAW COMMITTEE.

James A. Lawson, Esq.—May 18.

(Continued from p. 308.)

9843. Sir J. Graham] Any search, however diligent, does not necessarily exhaust all encumbrances which may exist in Ireland?—No, but then a purchaser will take discharged of encumbrances which are not registered.

9844. Mr. Napier.] By registering his deed?—By registering his deed. A judgment creditor is not a purchaser.

9846. Can you suggest any remedy for the present uncertainty of a good title to the purchaser?—I think that where a party purchases under the court, and where notice is given to all the persons who appear upon the registry, the form of which I have suggested, that purchaser paying his purchase money into court should get a parliamentary title.

9847. How do you think the purchase-money ought to be disposed of?—I think, of course, that in sales under the court it should be paid into the Court of Chancery; then all the encumbrancers and the owners who claimed to be entitled to any portion of that purchase-money should get it out of court; but the purchaser should have nothing to do with that; he ought, the moment he pays his purchase-money, to get a good parliamentary title.

9890. Is it your opinion that the alterations which you have suggested, and which Dr. Longfield has suggested, or alterations in that direction, are calculated to give great relief to proprietors in many cases, and to place all classes depending upon the land in a more independent, and comfortable, and safe position than they are at present?—I think they are; they must inevitably have that tendency. There was one suggestion which Dr. Longfield made—namely, that of preventing parties from creating encumbrances; I do not acquiesce in that; I do not think it would be practicable to prevent parties from creating encumbrances, because, although you may prevent them by law from making a second mortgage, they may create annuities, rent-charges, and various other encumbrances, therefore I think that it would be found impracticable; but what I have suggested would give them increased facilities for selling portions of their estates; and consequently, as parties will always act for their own interest, if it were for their own interest to sell portions of their estates in order to raise the money, rather than to create encumbrances, the effect must be to diminish the number of encumbrances created.

9892. Then you would give him the greatest possible facility of borrowing money, or lending money, or buying estates, or selling estates?—I certainly would; it may be very desirable for a party to purchase an estate, and it may be very desirable for a party to raise money for the purpose of improving that estate; I do not see why he should be prevented from doing that; I think as he has the power of selling, he ought to have all the lesser powers of charging and encumbering.

RECEIVER COMMITTEE.

Sir Edward B. Sugden, June 21, 1849.

416. During the time that you were Lord Chancellor of Ireland, was your attention much directed to the management of estates under the Court of Chancery?—My attention was very much directed to the operation of judgments, and also to the operation of receivers under judgments, and generally to the management of estates under the Court of Chancery.

417. You introduced a good many important changes in the proceedings of the Court?—Yes, I did. The second time, when I went to Ireland, I found judgments very much increasing in number, and of course that had been occasioned by the Sheriffs' Act; and the question arose, which it was necessary to decide, whether it was necessary to make every judgment creditor a party to a suit in relation to the sale of the estate. As that was a question of very great importance to Ireland, I begged to have the assistance of the then Lord Chief Justice, and the then Master of the Rolls; and the question was fully argued, and they delivered their opinion in open Court, in which I concurred with them, that every judgment creditor was a necessary party to such a suit. The consequence of that was truly alarming, and therefore I immediately, with the concurrence of the Master of the Rolls, introduced a new rule, which very much lessened the evil, by rendering it not necessary, except under peculiar circumstances, to make all the judgment creditors parties to such a suit.

418. You are aware of the Act of Parliament which we call the O'Loughlin Act, which gave the power to the Court, on the application of a judgment creditor, to appoint a receiver over a property?—Yes.

419. Do you consider that, under the true construction of that Act, it was imperative upon the Court, on the application of a judgment creditor, to grant a receiver?—Certainly; the Lord Chancellor makes conditional orders for receivers; he has no power except ministerial, and every morning, when I was Lord Chancellor, I signed conditional orders for receivers upon statements properly verified by affidavits; the Chancellor has no power whatever to withhold the receiver; it goes as of course.

420. It was in the nature, in fact, of a statutory execution?—Undoubtedly; it was in lieu of the old remedy, very much enlarged, and I was going to say, very unwisely accelerated.

421. Do you conceive that the operation of that Act in compelling the Court to grant receivers in cases of judgments was injurious to the public interests?—I never had the least doubt of it, and I did all I could to correct the evil arising out of the multiplicity of judgments; for example, when in this country I was instrumental to the passing of the Act of Parliament which brought together for the first time into one office, the Queen's Bench Office, all judgments of every sort, crown debts, lis pendens and other things; instead of having to search in a number of different offices, I brought all the judgments, &c., into one office, and a small fee was paid; that is in full operation now. And with reference to England, where judgments are not as in Ireland, considered the common assurance of a country, and where receivers cannot be obtained upon judgments as they can be in Ireland, upon petition, I introduced a clause, which was passed that every judgment in England, and every Chancery bond also, should be registered every five years; it was intended to operate against purchasers of mortgages or creditors. That lessened the evil in this country very much; instead of having to go back for many years, and having to search in a dozen different courts, you go into one court and pay half-a-crown for searching one book which contains all the registers. When I returned to Ireland my desire was to assimilate the law in Ireland to the law in England, and believing that to be even more necessary in Ireland than in England, I prepared a bill of the same nature as the bill which had been passed with reference to England, applying it to Ireland, and introduced the same clause requiring re-registration every five years. There was a convulsion almost in the country; the solicitors in a body resisted the measure, and prevailed upon their clients to believe that it was a great infringement upon their rights and would be the destruction of securities in the land; the bill came as far as the House of Commons, and then I was under the necessity of giving it up. I subsequently got a similar bill passed without that clause, but with a mitigated clause that parties should register every 20 years; and in Ireland, where the evil is far greater, it is probably greater than it is in England, parties keep their judgments alive, without taking any step to indicate their intention to enforce them against purchasers and mortgagees or creditors, for 20 years. In England nobody objects to putting under re-registration every five years. When a party has been paid off, or his claim has been satisfied, and he does not desire a lien against the estate, he does not re-register; but if the party wishes to bind a purchaser, he ought to show, by re-registering his judgment, that he wishes to keep it as a lien still existing; and in England, as I have already mentioned, the parties re-register every five years.

422. Sir J. Graham.] Sir Michael O'Loughlin's Act, with regard to judgments in Ireland, is the only legislative enactment which has recently passed upon the subject; we have heard of Mr. Parnell's act; did not that act extend the operation of the law of judgments in Ireland?—That act was in point of fact, nearly a copy of the English act of the 1st & 2nd. of the Queen, which had extended very largely the operation of judgments; their operation was extended from the moiety of the estate to the entirety of the estate, and their binding power was also extended to many descriptions of property which never before that act could have been reached by a judgment; but so far as the Legislature gave additional privileges to the judgment creditor, the wording of the act made it necessary to go into equity to give it effect in many cases. But the act very unwisely, I think, declared that every judgment creditor should be considered to have a charge precisely the same as if the person against whom the judgment was recovered had executed an actual agreement to charge his land with the amount of the judgment, and that was extended so as to operate on a general power. But the legislature provided that so far as that additional security was given, the creditor should not be at liberty to resort to a court of equity to give force to it till the expiration of a year. So that they did not allow a judgment creditor, the moment he got his judgment, to go at once under this new power, and seize all the property. Mr. Pigot's act, the 3d & 4th of the Queen in Ireland, was, in point of fact, all but a copy of the English act, but with this important addition: it not only referred to the power in the Sheriff's act to appoint receivers on behalf of judgment creditors, but it extended that power to all the additional properties which had been included in the English act, and in like manner in this Irish act; and rather inconsistently I must say, the framers introduced the clause postponing the right for a year, which is in the English act. Now under the English act, where a judgment creditor could not obtain a receiver by petition and where this new power could not be exercised except after a year, it was evidently intended to give the landowner a little time to look round him, and to prevent butchers and bakers from snatching a judgment and fixing it upon the estate; but in Ireland it would scarcely have any operation, because the Sheriffs' act had already given the power over the whole property. It was before liable, and a judgment creditor could, notwithstanding the late act, obtain a receiver in a very short time. It was, therefore, of very little importance in Ireland, though of very great importance in the English act.

423. Leasehold property, which is very extensive in Ireland, especially collegiate and chapter property, until the passing of Mr. Pigot's act, did not fall under the operation of the law of judgment creditors?—Yes, all leasehold estates were bound by judgments before Mr. Pigot's act; a fiore facias would issue against them on judgments.

424. You have stated that you do not think the provisions of Sir Michael O'Loughlen's act judicious. Do you entertain the same opinion conjointly with that act of the provisions of Mr. Pigot's act?—I think that taking that law as it now stands in Ireland, it is mischievous to everybody. It leads to the rapid accumulation of judgments on estates, which are created as permanent debts, and for which receivers may be obtained at once; and these charges prevent the owner from selling his estate to advantage, and constantly occasions litigation, with heavy costs.

425. You mentioned a considerable extension of the effect given to judgments in the law of England, by the alteration which took place in the 1st & 2d of the Queen. Can you point out to the Committee the difference now existing in the law of England, with respect to judgments so extended, as contrasted with the law of Ireland under Sir Michael O'Loughlen's and Mr. Pigot's acts conjointly?—I do not apprehend that there is any difference as to the property which they bind; the question is not to the extent of the right to bind any species of property, but the difficulty arises from different remedies being given in the two cases.

426. Practically, judgments are in much more general operation in Ireland than they are at present in England?—From an early period judgments in Ireland have been considered as a common assurance, and a great misfortune it has been to the country; it was a very common thing, before the Sheriffs' act, and before Mr. Pigot's act, for an old judgment—60 or 70 years old—to be settled by the person entitled to it upon his wife and children as a permanent security, with which he was perfectly satisfied; the family could ultimately hardly escape being involved in an equity suit.

427. Have you ever considered the question whether the penal laws as existing in Ireland, with respect to real property, and the restricted rights of real property as originally enjoyed by members of the Roman Catholic religion, accelerated the action of judgments and that particular mode of obtaining security?—I do not apprehend they did, but I do not mean to speak with any confidence upon that point.

428. Whatever may have been the cause, the fact still remains, that practically judgments have been used from early times much more extensively in Ireland than in England?—Yes, so as to be considered in their own expression, a common assurance of the country.

429. Are judgments assignable in England as they are in Ireland?—Certainly not; they are assignable undoubtedly, but the assignment has not a legal operation. In Ireland judgments were made assignable as early as the act of the 9th of George the 2d. One object evidently of that act was to secure purchasers, for the act recites that it was common to assign judgments upon purchases. If you bought an estate, you would take an assignment of the judgment against that estate in order to secure you, and you would have the legal interest by such an assignment; the assignee under that act and the later act of the 25th of the same King, is placed in the same situation exactly as the donee of the judgment.

431. Is that distinction with respect to the public good in your opinion in favour of the law in Ireland as it stands, or in favour of the law of England with respect to judgments?—If I were to answer that as an abstract question, I should say that the rule in Ireland is the right one under which you may legally dispose of your whole beneficial interest in the property; it is only by a strictness of the old law that you are prevented from exercising the usual rights of property over that subject; and therefore as an abstract question, I should say that the law of Ireland is a reasonable one, and that the law of England requires a remedy. But if I were to be asked whether it is a desirable law for Ireland, I should say that it has increased the mischief considerably as regards judgments which ought, in my opinion to be discouraged, but which are used almost like common bills of exchange, and that has led to a great many of the difficulties of the landed interest in Ireland.

432. We have been told, that for small debts due to tradesmen, it is a growing practice in Ireland to give judgments?—Not only at this time, but when I was in Ireland, it gave me pain to discover that practice. I had every day to make a good many orders in chamber; I believe I may safely say that I had hardly ever occasion to sign petitions which did not include petitions for receivers upon judgments, and for the smallest sums.

433. Though the law of England, as extended, is very similar to the law of Ireland, the practice under it has not arisen to the extent, or anything like the extent, that prevails in Ireland?—Certainly not. I am not aware of there being any evil arising out of the law in England. Perhaps I may be allowed to observe that the truth is, some of the landed proprietors in Ireland require a little protection, they are so careless about their property and their money. Before I left Ireland one or two instances struck me very much. Under the tithe commutation act the court appoints a receiver (if the occupier is not liable to the payment), if the tithe rent-charge is 31 days in arrear. I have, as Chancellor, signed orders for receivers under that act, in one case for £4, and in another case for £5 only; it is a sort of insanity on the part of the owner; for the moment that order is signed it entails an expense of £30 or £40 for putting a receiver upon the property for a debt of £5.

435. On the whole, do you approve of that principle, that the judgment shall not attach to any particular portion of the property, but that it shall over-ride the whole, however small the amount of the judgment may be?—I think it is too late to alter the law of England as to judgments, where it has been carried so far. I think as the law stood before the 1st and 2nd of the Queen, the law of England intended to affect only a portion of the property, for it gave execution only against the moiety; and the legislature have gone on extending it not wisely, I think; but still you cannot now alter the law of England as regards the general operation; the 2nd of the Queen requiring a registration in the first instance, and a registration every five years, reduces to nothing the danger to purchasers, mortgagees and creditors, which is one great point to look to.

436. It has been represented to the committee, that the operation of the registration of judgments is this: that it gives facilities to owners of real property in borrowing, and makes judgments a valid security almost up to the full amount of the property; while it is a great impediment to the sale of the property; is that your view of the operation of the registration?—You are asking me a question of great extent. Many people think, and I myself have thought, that as far as regarded judgments and Crown debts, and lis pendens, that it is necessary to have a register to secure purchasers. I am responsible for that Act; but I have always opposed a general register, for very different reasons; I think it would be a great expense imposed upon the country. If country gentlemen would estimate what it would cost for a year, I think they would find that it is an immense burden imposed upon the public for which there is no corresponding benefit. I hear it said, "Go and register in full." That is not the evil, there has never been any want of knowledge of the contents where there is a register. The Registration Act goes upon a very different principle; that is, not to disclose more than is necessary, and not to tell to the whole world all my concerns, because I have executed a deed of a peculiar nature; for you can never keep people out of the Register Office. It used to be said that people would not go there; Do they, it was asked, go as to wills? We find that they do go as to wills; one reads every word in the newspapers the gifts by will of men of whom you have heard, and of whom you have not heard, if they happened to have any property. And that would be the case with deeds, if you gave them in full to the registry: their contents would be furnished ready for every body's breakfast table in the morning. The Registration Act has not the operation which people think it has; the Registration Act never comes into operation till there is a conflict between bona fide parties, of whom the one must suffer. It has not the merit, except indirectly, of saving any body; but if a man has notice of a registered deed he is bound by it; but if a person has not registered his deed, though it may be by the carelessness of the attorney, (I have known cases in the course of my experience, in which attorneys' clerks have put the fees in their pockets and have not registered deeds at all, though they have been regularly charged for), the man's estate may be lost. A general register would not improve any man's title to his estate, but I will not enter further into that. But in answer to your question, I should say that if you are to consider it an evil that the owner may encumber his property to the whole extent of its value, then of course the more you enable a man to make a good title, the more surely you lead to that conclusion; but the same thing that would enable him to encumber the estate, would enable him to sell it if the rules were properly carried out; however, as the law stands, I think that judgments in Ireland have the operation represented to the committee.

437. You stated that the owners of real property in Ireland, from the peculiar circumstances of the country, should, as far as possible, by law be guarded from their own improvidence; the question I put was, considering the practice in England as to charging land, which is generally by mortgage, attended with peculiar difficulties; and considering the facility that exists in Ireland for charging land by means of assigning judgments, whether the policy of the law in Ireland does not rather contravene that which you believe is desirable as a protection against the improvidence of owners?—My answer to that is, I think it does.

438. You have said that, whether wisely or not, we have gone too far in establishing the effects of judgments in both countries to recede. Having given that answer generally, what would you say to a reversion of the law in Ireland, especially with respect to judgments being made assignable, and the effect of Sir Michael O'Loughlin's Act more particularly?—I think it would not be advisable to take away the power of assigning judgments, though it may be open to abuse, because now judgments have become almost as universal as bills of exchange. I can imagine now a small tradesman getting a judgment for a mere household debt, and then assigning it to another person in order to avoid the odium of getting a receiver over his customer's property. I think that not at all desirable, but that is the custom of the country generally. It is very desirable, in my opinion, that the law of Ireland should be altered in this respect; it might, perhaps, be considered a strong measure to take away receivers upon petitions altogether; but I should have no hesitation, if I had the power, in very much limiting the operation of the Sheriffs' Act and the subsequent Acts, and in placing judgments in Ireland more upon the footing on which they stand in England; for example, if I had the power, I should not hesitate to limit the amount of money for which a judgment should bind the property, so as to give a right to a receiver under those Acts; that is, I would take some reasonable sum as a proper subject for a judgment and receiver, considering the expense attending such a proceeding; but as regards smaller sums, I would leave the creditor to his common law remedies, and to that credit upon which he no doubt relied when he furnished the matters in his trade. If that line were drawn, and another provision were introduced into the law, that no judgment creditor should have a receiver until after a certain period from the time of his obtaining judgment, I think the evil would be very much struck at, without alarming, which one would be very unwilling to do, the people in Ireland at the change in a law which they seem to be very much attached to.

439. Would you limit the period to a year?—I should say that that was a very fit period; it gives a man a little time to look round him, and to provide for the payment of small demands, or even of larger demands; for it is to be recollected that this system of a receiver on petition is a great boon to the creditor; it is beyond what the old law gives him; it is a pure creature of statute; and therefore, if there are evils attending it, they may be, of course, remedied or altered by statute.

440. If the line were drawn as you propose, with regard to the amount, would a judgment below a certain amount affect the realty?—Yes.

441. But the remedy of a receiver would not exist in that case?—No; and it would be no hardship upon the creditor that I am aware of; he would not have the remedy, which I think he ought never to have had, of obtaining a receiver upon petition, but he would be in the same situation as a creditor in this country would be in.

442. But can the judgment creditor apply for a receiver in England?—No; he cannot obtain a receiver in this way in England; there is no similar appointment of receivers in England upon judgments.

443. Considering the present unhappy circumstances of Ireland, and the extensive use of this power of charging land, with its present accompaniments, would there be danger in making a change of the law at this juncture?—On the contrary, I think this is the very moment at which to do it. As far as estates are so encumbered that the present owners cannot retain them, you are now attempting to introduce new blood or new life into Ireland, and it is therefore the precise moment, as it appears to me, at which to introduce a measure of that sort.

444. The general outline of the law with regard to judgments in Ireland you would leave unchanged?—Yes, I would.

445. And you object to extending to England a practice which does not now exist here?—Yes.

446. The practice being established in Ireland, through a priori, you may not consider it a desirable practice, would you leave it untouched?—Certainly; I think it would revolt the whole feeling of Ireland, which ought to be kept studiously in view and held sacred, as far as it is possible to do so; I would do nothing to outrage the feeling of the people of Ireland in that respect, for I am sure such a change would create universal alarm in the country. When a suit is instituted to sell an estate which is encumbered, by a judgment creditor or mortgagee, they have a habit of making every person a party to the suit who is a necessary party to the conveyance; that is not the case here in England; you bring the parties who have the title into court, and you do not bring other parties into court; you have them ready to join in the conveyance, but you keep them out of the suit, and when the purchaser is entitled to a conveyance, those parties come forward and execute it. I will mention the case of a lady in this country who was with a medical man under restraint: she died; she was entitled to a rent-charge upon several estates in Ireland, and there were three years' arrears; this medical gentleman (I have no fault to find with him) took out an administration to this lady, who had been his patient; he filed a bill in Ireland to make good his charge; there were only three years' arrears of rent-charge to collect, and the charge for searches preparatory to filing the bill in order to ascertain the proper parties to the suit was £720; I disallowed a great portion of it, but it was done under great advice; under the new rules that abuse could not occur again, because now solicitors in Ireland are paid, which they very much complained of, according to their labour; I do not know what such a case might cost now, but I should imagine that £20 or £30 would be the payment. I state this to show what great expenses have heretofore been incurred in selling an encumbered estate in Ireland.

447. Does the multiplication of parties to a suit which you have mentioned, and which is attended with great expense, arise out of the state of the law, or is the remedy for that evil within the purview of the rules of the Court?—The Chancellor in Ireland has very great power under Acts of Parliament. I have exercised that power to a very great extent, and even to a diminution of the revenue of the country; I could give an example. There was in Ireland, and which still prevails in England, the abuse (for I cannot call it anything else) of hourly warrants before the Master; a cause lasted for six or seven years in the Master's office, the parties met for an hour, and when they met again at the end of a week or a fortnight, you found that half of the time was always lost in considering what had been discussed or decided upon at the previous meeting, and so the cause went on from year to year. In Ireland there was a difficulty in altering that, because there was a stamp duty upon every hourly warrant, and that went to the Consolidated Fund; but I found that I had power to alter that system, and consequently I made a rule that there should be no hourly warrants, but that there should be one warrant for a cause unless the Master directed an additional one, and that every cause should be heard straight through. The consequence was, that instead of there being scores of warrants in causes, there were only two or three, and instead of there being meetings which, for example, in one case had lasted six years, I found that after the new rule had come out the whole matter was disposed of in three days.

451. After the remedies which have been applied to the registration in Ireland, have you anything to suggest upon the subject of receivers?—I am not prepared to give any advice upon the subject of receivers, but I have no doubt it wants some correction.

452. Then we are to understand that, on the whole, the law as regards receivers you would maintain?—Yes.

454. Chairman.] When you mentioned that you would, for judgments above a certain amount, grant receivers, would you still render it obligatory on the court to grant receivers, or would you leave it optional with the court to grant receivers or not, according to their discretion?—I think the court ought to have no option. The granting receivers ought to be a ministerial act merely. The duty of the court should be merely to see that the party applying is entitled to the remedy which he seeks; otherwise one Chancellor would give a receiver, and another Chancellor would not do so; and expense would be incurred, and nobody would be sure what the remedy was.

455. Have you thought of the limit that you would propose as to the amount of the judgments for which receivers should be granted?—I cannot say that I have seriously thought about it, but I should have no difficulty in stopping at £100. I should be inclined to take even a higher sum.

457. With reference to the number of receivers that have been appointed, is it your opinion that that is a great evil?—Undoubtedly; the evils are so great that no country can prosper under them; I cannot conceive any greater evils. The first effect is to sever the relation of landlord and tenant; the receiver is not the landlord, and the consequence is that the receiver of course has nothing to look to but to get the rent, in order both to get his poundage, and to keep himself right with the court and the creditor. There has been a great misapprehension in the public mind as to the power of the Court of Chancery over receivers. In the case of the estates of minors and lunatics, the court has perfect power; and I have dealt with lunatics' estates just in the same way as I would have dealt with my own estate. In the case of a peer who was a lunatic living on his own estate, I added a large sum to his allowance on my own motion, in order that, as he was living upon the estate, he might be able to live as the landlord, and fulfil the duty of landlord to his tenants. The court has the power to act as it thinks proper to any extent in these cases; but in cases of judgment creditors and mortgagees, it is said there is no money laid out in repair, or in favour of the tenants; of course there is not, because the court has no power; the creditor does not care one farthing about the estate; he looks upon it merely as a security for his debt, and he does not care whether the farms are dilapidated or whether the land is out of heart. He says, "I will have every shilling of my debt out of the estate." Now I would correct that at once; in my opinion if an estate is brought under the dominion of the court for the benefit of creditors, public necessity demands that if you make the court master of the estate for the time, you should give to the court all the power which belongs to an owner; and therefore I should feel no difficulty, if I had the power, in making a law which should give to the court a power, to be exercised of course according to its judicial discretion, with relation to the estates of encumbrancers generally as to their management, cultivation and allowances, and so forth, in the same way as the court would do with the estates of minors and lunatics.

(To be continued.)

JUST PUBLISHED,

ADDISON ON THE LAW OF CONTRACTS

A TREATISE on the Law of CONTRACTS, and Rights and Liabilities of Contractor. By C. G. ADDISON, Esq., of the Inner Temple, Barrister-at-Law. Second Edition, 2 vols. 8vo. price 10s.

RUSSELL ON ARBITRATION.

A TREATISE on the Power and Duty of an ARBITRATOR, and the Law of Submissions and Awards; with Appendix of Forms, and of the Statutes relating to Arbitration. By FRANCIS RUSSELL, Esq., M.A., Barrister-at-Law. 1 vol. 8vo. £1 8s.

BAYLEY ON BILLS OF EXCHANGE.

SUMMARY of the Law of Bills of Exchange, Cash Bills, and Promissory Notes. By SIR JOHN BAYLEY, Esq. 2nd Edition, by G. W. DOWDESWELL, Barrister-at-Law. 1 vol. 8vo. £1 2s.

BURGE ON THE LAW OF SURETYSHIP.

COMMENTARIES on the Law of SURETYSHIP, and the Rights and Obligations of the parties thereto. By WILLIAM BURGE, Esq. Q.C. M.A. &c. 1 vol. 8vo. 10s.

STANFIELD'S PRECEDENTS IN CONVEYANCING.

A COLLECTION of Copyhold PRECEDENTS IN CONVEYANCING, arranged for general and ready use, together with Introductory Treatises upon the various branches of conveyancing incident to Estates of customary tenants, &c. By JOHN E. STANFIELD, Esq. 1 vol. 8vo. 10s.

QUESTIONS FOR LAW STUDENTS on the Second Edition of Mr. Sergeant Stephen's New Commentaries on the Law of England. By JAMES STEPHEN, Esq. of the Middle Temple, Barrister-at-Law. 1 vol. 8vo. cloth boards, price 10s. 6d.

CONCISE FORMS OF WILLS, with Practical Notes. By W. HAYES and T. JARMAN. 4th Edition, cloth 6s. 6d.

THE LAW OF HUSBAND AND WIFE. A Treatise on the Law of Husband and Wife as respects Property, partly founded upon Roper's Treatise, and comprising Jacobs' Notes and Additions thereto. By J. E. WRIGHT, Esq. of the Inner Temple, Barrister-at-Law. 7th royal 8vo. £2 10s. boards.

A TREATISE ON THE LAW OF LEGACIES. By the late R. S. DONNISON ROOPER, Esq., Barrister-at-Law, of Gray's Inn; and by H. H. WHITE, Esq., Barrister-at-Law, of the Middle Temple. Fourth Edition. 2 vols. royal 8vo. £3 2s. boards.

A TREATISE ON THE LAW OF EVIDENCE, as administered in England and Ireland; with Illustrations from the American and other Foreign Laws. By JOHN PITTS TAYLOR, Esq. of the Middle Temple, Barrister-at-Law. 2 vols. royal 8vo. £3 10s.

EDWARD J. MILLIKEN, LAW BOOKSELLER AND PUBLISHER, 15, COLLEGE GREEN, DUBLIN.

All communications for the IRISH JURIST are to be sent, addressed to the Editor, with the Publisher, E. J. MILLIKEN, 15, COLLEGE GREEN. Correspondents will please give the Name and Address, as the columns of the paper cannot be occupied with anonymous Communications;—nor will the Editor be accountable for the return of Manuscripts, &c.

Orders for the IRISH JURIST left with E. J. MILLIKEN, 15, COLLEGE GREEN, or by letter (post-paid), will ensure its punctual delivery in Dublin, or its being forwarded to the Country, by Post, on the day of publication.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION—(payable in advance):
Yearly, 30s. Half-yearly, 17s. Quarterly, 9s.

Printed by THOMAS ISAAC WHITE, at his Printing Office, No. 25, FLEET STREET, in the Parish of St. Andrew, and published at 15, COLLEGE GREEN, in same Parish, by EDWARD JOHNSTON MILLIKEN, residing at the same place, all being in the County of the City of Dublin. Saturday, August 11, 1849.

THE Irish Jurist

No. 42.—VOL. I.

AUGUST 18, 1849.

Price { Per Annum, £1 10s.
Single Number, 9d.

The Names of the Gentlemen who favour THE IRISH JURIST with Reports in the several Courts of Law and Equity in Ireland, are as follows:—

Court of Chancery, including Bankruptcy Appeals	{ ROBERT LONG, Esq., and JOHN PITT KENNEDY, Esq., Barristers-at-Law.	Court of Exchequer Chamber	{ JOHN BLACKHAM, Esq., and A. HICKEY, Esq., Barristers-at-Law.
Rolls Court	{ WILLIAM BURKE, Esq., and WILLIAM JOHN DUNDAS, Esq., Barristers-at-Law.	Queen's Bench, including Civil Bill and Registry Appeals	{ FLORENCE M'CARTHY, Esq., and SAMUEL V. PEET, Esq., Barristers-at-Law.
Equity Exchequer	{ CHARLES HARE HEMPHILL, Esq., and WILLIAM HICKSON, Esq., Barristers-at-Law.	Exchequer of Pleas, including Manor Court and Registry Appeals	{ CHAS. H. HEMPHILL, Esq., and WILLIAM HICKSON, Esq., Barristers-at-Law.
Bankrupt Court	{ ROBERT GRIFFIN, Esq. and W.G. CHAMNEY, Esq. Barristers-at-law.	Common Pleas	{ ROBERT GRIFFIN, Esq. and W. G. CHAMNEY, Esq. Barristers-at-law.
		Admiralty Court	{ ROBERT GRIFFIN, Esq. and W. G. CHAMNEY, Esq. Barristers-at-law.

DUBLIN, AUGUST 18, 1849.

THE ~~right~~ decision of Crosbie v. Thompson, (11 F.E. p. 404), is one of a series of cases, by which evidence tantamount to an admission is allowed to be given in proof, though not mentioned in the pleadings.

The suit was, amongst other matters, to raise the amount of a mortgage, and it was alleged that the defendant had taken upon himself its payment, on the completion of the sale mentioned in the bill. In support of this averment, two accounts were given in evidence between the defendant and the land agent of the vendor, in which the defendant took credit for part of the purchase money retained on account of the mortgage.

These accounts were not put in issue, nor referred to in the bill.

His Lordship held that they were admissible in evidence; and having cited the judgment in Malcolm v. Scott (3 Hare 39), "this bill, however, expressly charges that there was an agreement for giving the lien in question, and I am perfectly clear, according to the rule Lord Cottenham laid down, that whatever would be evidence of an agreement at law is evidence in equity, subject to this: that if one party should keep back evidence, which the other might explain, and thereby take him by surprise, the court will give no effect to such evidence without first giving the party an opportunity of controverting it." His lordship observed, "That doctrine is approved of in M'Mahon v. Burchell, and taking it to be the rule, I must allow these accounts to be read subject to observation, and to have their effect qualified; the course pursued will, however, have great weight in the question of costs, if the court should feel coerced to give a decree on these documents."

The old rule unquestionably was different, and we are not clear that it was not more consonant with the spirit of equity jurisprudence than the modern one.

It used to be considered essential, that every matter intended to be proved, should be put distinctly in issue, to guard against the opposite party being taken by surprise, by proofs of which he could have no intimation, from the manner in which evidence in courts of equity is taken, and could not disprove before publication of that evidence.

Thus there was much reasonableness in the rule, when the mode of examining witnesses in equity is considered. The plaintiff knows no doubt what he requires his own witness to prove, although he does not know whether it has been proved or not; but the defendant does not know what particular facts the witness of the opposite side is called upon to depose to, except they be put in issue by the pleadings.

So long as the evidence of each witness is given in secret, and that the attention of the opposite party is not directed, as in the Ecclesiastical courts, to the particular branch of the case the witness is to be examined to, it appears desirable that there should be some clue to guide the party cross-examining. The points even distinctly put in issue in the pleadings formed a very wide boundary, but yet they did form a limit and a test.

An inconvenience, and which led to breaking down this rule, arose from prolix pleaders stuffing the record with every letter or document in extenso on which they relied, and it was relaxed by Sir A. Hart in Fitzgerald v. O'Flaherty, (1 Moll. 351.), to prevent equity pleadings becoming endless. The rule has now become established that where letters or documents are intended to be used as evidence of facts charged in the bill they need not be specifically put in issue. A general averment of their existence is, however, if not indispensable, very prudent, and the rule of their admissibility was by the same learned judge restricted to cases where they were used as evidence of facts; and it has been decided that they could not be used as admissions or confessions of facts without being mentioned in the pleadings. Blacker v. Phelpoe, (1 Moll. 254); Houlditch v. Marquis of Donegal, (ib. 364). And conversations between a witness and a party to the suit in which the latter admitted his having defrauded the other were rejected because not noticed in the pleadings, and the judge to whom we have already referred used the strong language that "no man would be safe if he could be affected by such evidence."

It is obvious that a question of exceeding nicety must very often arise between what is evidence of a fact and what are admissions of a fact, an inconvenience that must be the result of breaking down a general rule; cases for its relaxation will be of frequent occurrence, and give rise to the nicest and most subtle distinctions. The marginal note to Crosbie v. Thompson states that "any documents which could be used at law as admissions to prove an agreement pleaded may be used in evidence in equity for the same purpose, though not noticed in the bill, subject to enquiry, if the defendant be taken by surprise." We apprehend the learned judge did not mean to go this length, and that he admitted the accounts as evidence of the agreement, and not as an admission of it.

In this and in many other cases there is, however, almost a distinction without a difference, because here the accounts apparently were more efficacious for the purpose of admission than of evidence, and the existence of the practice excluding them in the one and admitting them in the other instance proves that the rule has been too broadly laid down by Lord Cottenham, "that whatever would be evidence of the agreement at law is evidence in equity."

An oral admission would be evidence at law, but would it be admissible in equity? No man would be safe if it were.

The principal case stands on the verge, it is a compound of evidence and admission, and it is exceedingly difficult to discriminate why oral testimony should be discarded, (as we apprehend it would be,) and written admitted, in cases similar to the principal one.

We conceive it almost impossible to adhere to Lord Cottenham's general rule, and that it would be a very unsafe one for the pleader to rely on. It must, we apprehend, introduce great laxity of pleadings, and loose general averments.

On the balance of convenience, it would appear better that the facts relied on should be distinctly stated in the first instance, than that there should be a discretion reposed in the judge "of giving the party taken by surprise an opportunity of controverting" the newly offered evidence, by further inquiry. Will not this lead to greater inconvenience than if the old rule were adhered to; and, in many cases, to save this further inquiry, the judge will either not give the evidence its true weight, and rest his decision on other grounds, or if he gives it the weight of a feather in the scale, he will, imperceptibly to himself, decide on evidence which was unfairly brought forward against the opposite party.

The analogy of a court of common law is not tenable in all its parts; the administration of justice, and the mode of its being administered in the two courts, is widely dissimilar, and the class of evidence that might answer for the scramble at Nisi Prius, would be unsuited to the deliberate inquiry of a Court of Equity.

In a recent case [Webster v. Delafield, (13 Jurist, 635,)] considerable doubt has been thrown upon a practice connected with the law of Interpleader, (1 & 2 W. 4, c. 58, Eng., 9 & 10 Vic. c. 64, Ir.) which had previously been considered settled, viz. that the statement, and nature, and particulars of the claimant's case should be upon affidavit. This is the principle feature of the decision; but two other questions, also of much practical importance, were discussed: First, as to the authority of the court to bar the plaintiff, under the 3rd section of the 9th & 10th Vic. c. 64,* he having appeared, and no rule after appearance having been made upon him; and secondly, whether the affidavit on which the claim was founded should necessarily be made by the claimant himself.

The facts of the case were, A., the plaintiff, seized the furniture and goods of B., the defendant; at the time of the seizure, C. and D. attorneys for E. the claimant, gave notice to the sheriff that the house and goods were the property of E. The sheriff having obtained a summons for an interpleader order, C. attended before Colman J. at chamber, and produced an affidavit sworn by E. before an English consul at Paris. This affidavit was refused by the judge, not being sworn before a competent person. C. then made an affidavit of his belief that the goods in question belonged to E., and that he (C.) was in possession of the title deeds of the house; that E. had left the country in 1848, and left the house and furniture in the custody of his servants. The case was adjourned to allow a proper affidavit by the claimant to be procured, but there being no competent authority at Paris to administer such an oath as the English law requires, C. again came before the judge at chamber, and made another affidavit to the effect that from papers in his possession he believed the goods seized to be the property of E., that ineffectual efforts had been made to obtain an affidavit from E., who was too unwell to travel to England. The learned judge being of opinion that the claim was insufficient, made an order to bar the claimant under the third section.

Against this order it was contended that as the order to appear and state his claim had not been served on E.,† he could not be barred, and that the affidavit of C. was sufficient. On the other hand, it was said—first, that there must be an affidavit, Powell v. Lock (3 Ad. & El. 315, S. C., 4 Nev. & Mar. 852); that this affidavit was insufficient; and that, therefore, not having maintained his claim, the claimant was barred.

* The Irish act is cited to prevent confusion, being identical with the English.

† This argument does not appear tenable; if the order was not served, the court could have no jurisdiction to adjudicate on the claimant's rights. The service upon his agent or attorney was probably that which was acted upon.—En.

The court were unanimously of opinion that the claim need not be supported by the affidavit of the claimant himself. Maule, J. was of opinion that there was no necessity for any affidavit, that the statute required none; that the judge may make an order, calling upon the party to appear and state the nature and particulars of his claim, and under certain circumstances, may declare him barred. "As to this, I do not think that the judge has any different power when the sheriff is the applicant, from that which he has when any other person applies. The true construction appears to me to be this:—Sec. 1 empowers the judge to make an order for the claimant to appear and to state the nature and particulars of his claim, which he is either to maintain or relinquish. If he maintain his claim, the judge may order an issue or action; or if the claimant and the plaintiff consent, the judge may dispose of the merits in a summary manner, which is, by sec. 2, to be final and conclusive; or the claimant may relinquish his claim; and I think it is wrong to hold that he must maintain or relinquish it by affidavit. Then comes sec. 3, which enacts, that if he shall not appear upon such rule or order, being duly served therewith, to maintain or relinquish his claim, or shall neglect or refuse to comply with any rule or order to be made after appearance, it shall be lawful for the judge to declare him to be for ever barred from prosecuting his claim against the original defendant. Sec. 1, gives the judge no power to make an order to bar a claimant; and the rules or orders mentioned in sec. 3, mean rules or orders not inconsistent with, but subservient to those authorized by sec. 1. The only section conferring the power to bar, is sec. 3, and that applies (in a case where a party appears and does not relinquish his claim) if he neglects or refuses to comply with any rule or order made after appearance. In this case no order has been made after the claimant's appearance. He has not failed to comply with any order so made. There has been no decision upon the merits by an action or feigned issue, or by the judge with the consent of the parties; nor has the claimant relinquished his claim; therefore I think his claim ought not to be barred. This view, I think, is in conformity with both the letter and the spirit of the act, which was intended to substitute a remedy for the previous tardy and expensive process in Chancery by bill of interpleader. The Legislature intended, with the addition of protection to the sheriff, to leave the rights of conflicting parties in as nearly the same state as they were in before the interpleader. Before that, the claimant might bring his action without consulting anybody; he might sue out his writ and pursue his remedy without stating any claim; and this, his right at common law, it was not the object of the statute to do away with, except so far as might be beneficial to defendants who might be sued, and have no interest in the subject matter of the suit. Further, to qualify this right does not benefit his opponent, but must prejudice the claimant; and there is no reason for imposing restrictions upon him rather than upon any other party. But it may be said, of what use is it that a judge should have power to make an order, if it may be disobeyed with impunity? It seems to me, that the claimant's duty is to obey the order, and if he does not, that he is to be mulcted in costs, but not that the penalty of his disobedience is to be a forfeiture of his whole claim. In the case of Powell v. Lock (3 Adol. & Ell. 315) the application was to the full court, and not to a judge at chambers. The objection was, that there was no affidavit, and the dicta of the judges, and the questions put from the bench were to the effect that the claim ought to have been stated on affidavit. The decision of the court was, that the party should have time to make an affidavit, and more than this they did not intend to decide. Nothing was said about the claimant being barred; and although the court thought that there should be an affidavit, they did not say what the consequence was to be if there was not one." Cresswell, J. was of opinion, on the authority of Powell v. Lock, that an affidavit was necessary, though it need not be made by the claimant. Williams, J. agreed that the affidavit need not be by the claimant himself; but was of opinion that the statute required an affidavit; and that the order of Colman, J. should not be set aside, as the true ground on which he proceeded was, that the claim was not sufficiently stated, of which he was the judge.

We agree that an affidavit by a third person, in support of a claim, is sufficient; but it also appears to us that an affidavit is necessary. The 6th section enacts, "That when a claim shall be made to any goods or chattels, taken or intended to be taken in execution, the court or judge may call before him or them, by rule of such court or judge, as well the party to every such process as the person making the claim, and thereupon to exercise for the adjustment of such claims, and the protection of the officer, all of the powers and authorities herein-before contained." The course of proceeding then is, that if a claim be made, the court, "by rule," will direct the claimant to come before them, and then will exercise the powers vested in it by the act. What then, are those powers and authorities? The first is to call upon the third party, to state the nature and particulars of his claim, or to maintain or relinquish it. How is this to be done? except by affidavit, which, by the 7th section is to be filed as a record. How, in case of an appeal, from the decision of the judge at chambers, are the facts to be brought before the court above, except they appear by affidavit? What is the nature of the evidence, on which the judge is to decide whether he will grant an issue, or, with the consent of the parties, give his final adjudication? On these grounds, together with the practice of the court, in not admitting any statement not upon affidavit, we think this case requires it.

The question then arises, whether the claimant having appeared, and failing to maintain, is barred? but for the opinion of that able and experienced judge, Mr. Justice Maule, we should have thought he was.

To follow again the course of proceeding pointed out by the statute, the claim requires no affidavit; but when made, the judge, under the 6th section, "by rule," is to call the claimant before him, for the purpose, under the 1st section, of maintaining or relinquishing his claim; upon such rule, he is to hear the allegations on the one side and the other;

and to adjudge finally, or direct an issue, as the case may be. The 2d and 3d sections refer to the first section, and the 6th section, the proceedings under which the judge is empowered to carry out according to the powers and authorities previously given, is, for the purposes of the 2d & 3d sections, to be incorporated in the first. The 3d section enacts, "That if such third party (the claimant), shall not appear upon such rule or order to maintain or relinquish, being duly served therewith; or shall neglect or refuse to comply with any rule or order to be made after appearance, he shall be barred from prosecuting his claim against the original defendant, &c." The legitimate reading of the first section appears to be, that stating the particulars of the claim, is of itself, either maintaining or relinquishing; if the claimant's statement be, in the opinion of the judge, satisfactory, the claim is maintained; if the claimant can make no such satisfactory statement, he must relinquish. What then was the state of the facts in the case before us? The claimant himself, or through his attorney, was served with a rule under the 6th section, or the court had no jurisdiction. He was bound "being duly served therewith" by the third section (under the penalty of being barred) "to appear upon such rule to maintain or relinquish his claim;" not only to appear, but in addition to maintain or relinquish. The claimant did appear, but having, in the opinion of the judge, failed to maintain, he abandoned or relinquished his claim, and was, therefore, barred.

This construction would, on the ground of convenience also, seem to be best, as the claimant having appeared, and disobeyed no order of the court made after appearance, in the opinion of Mr. Justice Maule the only penalty would be being mulcted in costs; and an action against the sheriff or execution creditor would help to compensate him for the loss of the costs of a motion.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

RECEIVER COMMITTEE.

Sir Edward B. Sugden, June 21, 1849.

(Continued from p. 316.)

471. In point of fact, the ownership of the estate has passed from the original owner, the debtor, to the judgment creditor?—No doubt; and one of the greatest mischiefs of judgments in Ireland has been, that the owner of an estate has gone on insensibly increasing the incumbrances on his property. He is regarded as the ostensible owner of an estate of £9,000 or £10,000 a year, when he has not more than £200 or £300 a year interest in the property, and he cannot accommodate himself, no man can, to that state of things. He represents an ancient family, possessed of a fine estate, and he is necessarily driven into expenses which he would not incur if he had not that estate, and yet he has no substantial interest in it.

543. Mr. R. B. Osborne.] Are you aware whether the greater proportion of the receivers that have been appointed, have been appointed for small or for large debts?—I should apprehend that till the late Acts had come into operation they would be for large debts; but since those Acts, every creditor, every butcher or baker, the moment he has got a certain amount of debt gets a judgment, and comes instantly to the Court of Chancery with a petition for a receiver. The court has avoided the difficulty of going on appointing receiver after receiver, by extending the receiver. I have seen, in cases where the court has extended the receiver, page after page filled with the names of the different matters in which he has been extended. For instance, originally it has been, "A. B. petitioner, and so and so respondent in the matter," and then the other judgment creditors who have got the receiver extended follow in succession.

545. It is considerable?—The expense of extending a receiver is about £8, or something of that sort. I would observe that there is another result of those numerous receivers which is very serious, inasmuch as it infringes upon the rights of third persons; when those receivers were not very common in the courts of equity the rule of the court did not operate injuriously; as soon as the court has granted a receiver it will not allow any third person to interfere; so that, supposing you have granted a lease for 100 years, and have a rental of £400 or £500 a year from the estate, if a party has a judgment against your tenant and gets a receiver, the court will not allow you to distrain the tenant for your own rent, or bring an ejectment if he will not pay it; if the landlord comes into court in order to obtain permission to distrain, it will give him leave to distrain, but then the court makes him pay his own costs. What the court intended to do was to prevent any unnecessary proceedings being taken, and there was no great grievance when receivers were granted with deliberation, and in suits; but when every tradesman can get a judgment for a debt, and the next morning apply to the Chancellor for a receiver, and the receivers are multiplied as they now are, the rule is a very great deprivation of the rights of property, and operates most injuriously.

546. The receiver in Ireland is only looked to as the man who can get the greatest amount of rent from the tenants?—Yes.

547. Without reference to the improvement in the mode of agriculture?—Yes, it must be so; in Ireland the creditor wants his debt, and nothing less will he have; but that is not confined to Ireland.

575. Mr. Keogh.] With reference to the immense extent to which receivers are continued from one matter to another, are you aware that the costs of appointing a receiver are paid out of the estate in the first instance, though the motion should be made by a person who never had an interest in the property?—Yes.

576. Are you aware that that has induced some persons to apply for the appointment of receivers over property where they never expected to realise their demand?—I am not aware of it, but I think it very probable.

577. Do you think it would contribute to the proper appointment of receivers if the cost of their appointment were reserved in the same way as the demand?—I think it would.

578. As regards the multiplicity of suits, a number of creditors' suits may be going on at the same time till a decree is pronounced; one creditor files his bill and then another creditor, for the purpose of accumulating costs, goes into the office and takes a copy of that and files it on his own account. Has the court power to stop those suits till the decree is pronounced?—The court has usually not exercised that power, because you can never be sure that the party who has instituted a suit will go on with it.

579. Do you think it would be possible to prevent a multiplicity of suits at the same time?—Yes.

580. It would greatly contribute, if it could be done, to save the estate from costs?—It would.

581. Sir J. Graham.] I apprehend from the former part of your evidence that you would not think it desirable to alter the law with reference to judgments as affecting the whole property of the debtor?—No. I think general public opinion is in favour of that law, the Legislature having taken away the right of arrest upon meane process.

582. It has been suggested to the committee that prospectively it would be desirable to make the judgment apply only to a particular portion of the property?—That would be very difficult.

583. To black-acre for instance?—That cannot be from the nature of the proceeding; but the court has been in the habit of putting a receiver upon a portion of the estate to pay a particular judgment which comes to the same point.

584. Sir R. Peel.] Is not the power of making the whole of an estate responsible for a judgment debt a great encouragement to improvidence and extravagance?—I think so; I have never had the least doubt about it; and particularly operating as it does in Ireland, where a judgment creditor can get a receiver instantly; if a man could only get judgment as in England, and then he had to work it out, he would not in that case be so anxious to obtain a judgment. Supposing a party did not pay his butcher's bill, the butcher would wait as a tradesman does in England, till the party were able to pay his bill, instead of which now he gets a judgment, and then a receiver, and the attorney gets his costs, and that proceeding of obtaining a receiver may never produce a single farthing to the man; but it is a great encouragement to extravagance and improvidence, and also to giving undue credit; the evils are universal almost.

585. Sir J. Graham.] You have stated that you have no hesitation as to the propriety of appointing receivers generally speaking, in cases above £100; if you raised the limit to £500 you would impose a stronger check, and so on in the proportion in which you fixed the minimum high?—No doubt, but I should not propose to take away the operation of a judgment at all; I think such a step would be very badly received in Ireland; and I think it of great importance that any alteration made in the law should carry with it the feeling generally of the people, and that you should not do anything which is adverse to their own sense of what is due to them; and they have so long considered judgments as the common assurance of the country, that they would consider it very hard if you took away the operation of judgments; but nobody would have a right to complain of your altering an Act of Parliament which was passed only the other day, and which gave creditors rights in addition to the rights they had under the old law.

586. With respect to appointing receivers, you would alter the law?—Yes; judgment creditors would then have the same rights as a judgment creditor has in England.

587. Would you make the judgment assignable?—I think that the power to assign should not be taken away in Ireland.

588. The only alteration you would propose is with respect to the appointment of receivers for sums below a certain amount?—Yes, and that no receiver should be appointed at all till within a certain period after the judgment has been obtained, say a year or some such period; I would not allow a judgment to be snatched and a receiver to be appointed instantly; I should look to England as the country in which charges on real property are properly regulated, and I should like to see Ireland placed on the same basis; it is utterly inconsistent with the prosperity of the country that there should be so many judgments upon the property and so many receivers.

589. Sir R. Peel.] Supposing the case of a creditor dealing with an improvident young man, and that young man wanted to raise £200, and that for £200 a receiver could not be appointed, might not the effect of such a restriction be that the creditor would say, "Though you only want £200, borrow £500 from me, because by lending you £500 I shall have the security of a receiver?"—No doubt that might be done, and I am not aware of anything that you could do that is not open to abuse.

590. In that case there would be a temptation to the young man to borrow money that was not absolutely required, and thereby to involve himself in greater embarrassments?—Numbers of those judgments are not for borrowed money; they are for ordinary debts, contracted in the course of a man's living, with his tradesmen, one after the other, and a person to whom he is debtor obtains a judgment; they have nothing to do with contracts, beyond the actual contracting of the debt by purchasing the goods.

591. Would not the same case occur with a tradesman who would say to the young man, "My debt amounts to £400; run it up to £500 and I shall have the benefit of a receiver?"—It does not appear to me that that is an objection to the thing. It may happen, as it happens at College, while a man goes on increasing his debts they never press him, but the moment he leaves off spending, then they press him. You cannot guard against a case of that sort.

592. Sir J. Graham.] Are not receivers appointed very often for debts under £10?—Yes.

593. You must draw the line somewhere if you strike at the abuse at all?—Yes; there would be cases such as Sir Robert Peel puts, in which there would be evasion in order to get within the rule, whatever the rule is; you can have no rule that would not be evaded, but its general leading operation would be useful. A man would, I think, not advance more money in the case Sir Robert Peel put in order to obtain a receiver upon petition; or if so, it would probably be an unfair transaction, which the Court of Chancery could correct.

594. The public good appears to you to demand the alterations of the law which you have suggested, and those alterations are the mildest that you think are indispensable?—Yes.

595. Time may show that rather stronger measures are necessary?—Yes.

596. But you recommend the alterations which you have suggested to be tried in the first instance?—Yes; and if I found the evil was not cured by them, it would be time to see whether you would strike at the receiver on petitions, or leave every thing as it stood. The Sheriff's Act not only extended this remedy over the whole estate, but gave extraordinary power besides.

597. Sir R. Peel.] Anticipating for the sake of argument a failure of the measures which you now suggest, can you state what are the other measures which you would in that case suggest?—No, I have not thought of anything beyond; I should like to see what the evil was before I addressed myself to the consideration of what would or would not be the cure.

598. Sir J. Graham.] You have mentioned incidentally what would be a stronger measure, namely, the abolition in all cases of receivers on petition?—Yes.

599. But you would not think it wise to go that length at once?—No; I should think it would be too strong a measure.

Right Hon. T. B. C. Smith.—June 28.

945. Will you state to the Committee what you think the prominent evils connected with the system of the management of estates under creditors' receivers?—The mode in which the receiver is appointed is this: an order of reference is made to the Master to appoint a receiver, either upon a decree or upon motion in a cause, or upon petition under some of the statutes in force in Ireland; when the order is made, the solicitor who has the carriage of the proceedings, who is usually the solicitor for the plaintiff or petitioner, lodges an attested copy of the decree or order in the Master's office, to whom the reference is made, and a summons is issued for some particular day, as I understand, and the Master directs who shall get notice of the proceedings; however, practically, as I understand, the solicitor for the plaintiff or petitioner is the only person who attends. I am speaking now of the majority of cases; he proposes to the Master some person to be appointed receiver, and I believe it would appear, if returns were called for, that in the vast majority of cases the person so proposed as receiver is the person appointed. I think that system has led to most injurious results, and I think it has led to the appointment of a very improper class of persons as receivers.

946. The multiplication of receivers so selected must act very injuriously upon the general interests of the country?—I think so. It would be well that I should explain to the Committee why it is that, in my opinion, improper persons are appointed as receivers. In the first place, it frequently happens that in petitions under Sir Michael O'Loughlen's act, and Mr. Pigot's act, the judgment is for a very inconsiderable amount; if that be so, of course the receiver is appointed over a very small portion of the property; but it sometimes happens, without regard to the amount due on the judgment, that the property over which the receiver is appointed is very inconsiderable. I can give two examples, which occurred before me in the present sittings. In one case, (and I have brought over a copy of the petition for the Committee,) there was an application to extend the receiver, and if you add the costs at law and the costs in equity, the debt being £5, you find a most enormous disproportion between debt and the costs. The judgment was for more than £5, because it included the costs at law; the petition stated that the debt was £5 8s. In the other case was an application to continue the proceedings under the provisions of Sir M. O'Loughlen's act, which, by the death of one of the parties, became necessary to continue. The property was £10 a-year; and I need scarcely say that appointing a receiver, either with respect to a debt of £5, which was one of the cases which was before me this term, or with respect to property worth £10 a-year, must work most oppressively.

947. Sir R. Peel.] Can you give the whole story of the £5 case?—I directed the registrar to give me a copy of the proceedings in that case which I have brought with me. It may be that, however, to say, in justification of the petition that he had thought it right, on account of the amount, to resort in the first instance to some mode of recovering the debt, and had failed in that, but I only give the case as an example; and I told the registrar at the same time to furnish me with what he believed would be the costs in equity attending the receiver. Now, in these cases it is very difficult, considering the very small remuneration which the receiver obtains, to get proper persons to be receivers. But the second cause which leads to improper persons being appointed receivers over property, and which applies to every class of property, is, that the solicitor for the petitioner or plaintiff has, in my opinion, a direct interest in nominating an unfit person.

948. Will you explain to the Committee in what manner the solicitor would have an interest in not having a fit and proper person appointed receiver?—If he was to appoint a completely independent person, in all probability he would have no legal profit on the transaction; that independent person so appointed would either select his own solicitor, or would endeavour to manage the property in such a manner as to incur as little legal expense as possible; whereas the plaintiff's solicitor has a direct interest in appointing some person who will be a complete tool in his hands.

957. Have you traced the origin of the law of judgments in Ireland as contradicting distinguished from the law of judgments in England to any connexion with the penal laws of Ireland?—My attention has not been called to that. I think there was a case relating to that point before Lord Redensdale, which is reported in Schoales and Lefroy, I speak from memory, the popery laws not having been in force since I was called to the bar. I believe judgments obtained by Roman Catholics were not within the popery laws, save that the amount could not be recovered by elegit; but I wish it to be understood that I am speaking from a vague recollection.

958. The penal laws in Ireland affected the title of land as enjoyed by Roman Catholics?—No doubt they did.

959. But judgments, when held by Roman Catholics, were an available security to their full extent without regard to creed?—I do not know that, I shall look in the House of Lord's Library, at the rising of the Committee to-day, for the case I have mentioned; [see O'Fallon v. Dillon, (2 Schoales & Lefroy, 21,) and Read v. Aylmer, (Howard's Popery Cases, 80.)] but as this question has never arisen since I was called to the bar I am not familiar with it.

961. Do you believe that the effect of the conjoint operation of Sir Michael O'Loughlen's act and Mr. Pigot's act has been advantageous or not?—That is a difficult question to answer; they have produced evil effects, no doubt; but Sir Michael O'Loughlen's act was introduced with a view to remedy a greater evil. If the Committee would wish to know the cause of the introduction of Sir Michael O'Loughlen's act I think I can refer them to a document which explains it. I cannot give the exact date of the report, but several years ago there was a commission to certain gentlemen to inquire into the proceedings of courts of justice in Ireland. One of their reports related to the mode of levying the amount of a judgment by a custodiam proceeding and outlawry, but the remedy by outlawry and custodiam was so oppressive that I believe it was that circumstance which induced Sir Michael O'Loughlen to bring in his measure.

964. Do you think that giving the right on the part of the judgment creditor to obtain the appointment of a receiver, considering the extent to which that right has been pushed, has been advantageous or otherwise?—I should say that it has been disadvantageous in this way. I am quite sure that there are a greater number of judgments affecting land in Ireland now, than there would have been if Sir Michael O'Loughlen's act had never passed.

965. Has the power of judgments, as affecting all property in the possession of the debtor, or to be acquired by the debtor, been enlarged to that extent by recent enactment?—Yes; Mr. Pigot's act introduced a clause independent of the clause which was contained in Sir Michael O'Loughlen's act, and the clause which was so introduced into Mr. Pigot's act, irrespective of Sir Michael O'Loughlen's act, was in fact copied from a recent act relating to England; the clause which authorises you to take the entire of the land of a debtor under an elegit instead of a moiety was copied from a clause in the English act.

969. Then the extended effect of judgments in Ireland under Mr. Pigot's act, as contrasted with England, has arisen from the circumstance of the power of appointing receivers existing in Ireland?—Yes; Sir Michael O'Loughlen's act gave for the first time the power of appointing receivers to the petitioner who either had sued out an elegit, or was entitled to sue out an elegit, and the receiver was not to be over the moiety, but over the entirety if necessary. There was a conflict of decision upon the construction of that act, between the Court of Chancery and the Court of Exchequer; the Court of Exchequer applying a strict construction, and only appointing a receiver in cases where the elegit could have been made available. Sir Michael O'Loughlen at the Rolls gave a more extended construction to the act, and considered that it authorised the appointment of receivers over an equity of redemption, or over terms for years. He so expressed his opinion; and the effect of the amendment of Sir Michael O'Loughlen's act by Mr. Pigot's act, was in fact to extend the remedy under Sir Michael O'Loughlen's act to those cases in which the Court of Exchequer had given a limited construction to the statute.

970. Then the conjoint effect of those acts has been to render a much larger surface of the whole of Ireland liable to management under the Court?—Certainly.

971. And you have already said, that with respect to the appointment of receivers, the system is not satisfactory, in your opinion?—It is not.

972. Therefore if the evils of the appointment of receivers remain unchanged, the effect must be very injurious to the cultivation and the management of property in Ireland?—I think it must.

985. As relates to the public good, the effect of judgments remaining unchanged in Ireland, and the power of appointing receivers still remaining unchanged, would there not be an advantage to the public in having only one jurisdiction by which receivers could be appointed?—I think so; if the Court of Chancery was capable of doing the whole equity business of the country, it would be better to have only one equity jurisdiction. I had returns made to myself of the business done at the Rolls in the last nine or ten years; I could not lay my hands upon the returns previous to the last two years, but I have the latter with me, and when I rise from the present sittings, the number of orders which I shall have made for one year from the first day of Michaelmas Term, will be about 4,700, and the number in Sir Michael O'Loughlen's time did not, I believe, amount in any one year to 3,000.

990. Since the passing of Mr. Pigot's act, tenants under long leases may obtain loans upon judgments, with all the law of judgments affecting those long leases?—No doubt they may.

991. Do you think that it is politic in the present circumstances of Ireland, to extend the leasing power of tenants for life?—That is a very large question, which I do not know that I have considered very much.

992. But it has a bearing upon the question of judgments and receivers: for as you extend the leasing power, you extend also the liability of the property so leased to judgments, with the appointment of receivers; do you not?—Of course all leasehold property is subject to the operation of Sir Michael O'Loughlen's act.

993. By splitting the reversion, and by multiplying middlemen, you subject the same farm, the same corpus, to various judgments, and with various judgments to the appointment of different receivers over it?—No doubt; and there are cases in which there is a receiver over the middleman's interest and over the landlord's interest at the same time.

994. As you multiply leases, and as you split the reversion, under the operation Mr. Pigot's act and the Sheriffs' act conjointly, you render more and more of the property of Ireland subject to the effect of judgments, and to the consequent appointment of receivers?—I think you do.

995. Then if that be an evil, has it not been the tendency of legislation to increase and aggravate the evil?—Certainly. If you authorise a tenant for life to make long leases, there is no doubt that that leasehold interest becomes subject to a receiver; but I feel some difficulty in stating how that exactly bears upon the consideration of the question.

996. If you were to increase the power of the tenant for life to grant leases, would it not be politic, conjointly with that power so about to be granted, to look at the operation of Mr. Pigot's act and the Sheriffs' act, with the view of checking the obtaining of judgments and receivers as affecting property of small amounts?—I think it might. I think myself that it was very questionable whether subjecting terms for years to judgments was a beneficial alteration of the law.

997. Looking at the present state of Ireland, with judgments the common assurance of the country, and the extended use which is now made of that mode of obtaining credit, would you think it prudent at once prospectively to put an end to judgments with the power of appointing receivers?—That is a question of very great difficulty. I apprehend that you must give the judgment creditor some remedy against the land; but the great difficulty of dealing with the question, is to determine which is the least oppressive mode of levying the debt out of the land. The oppression which outlawry proceedings led to, and which was the origin of Sir Michael O'Loughlin's act, is detailed very clearly in the report to which I have referred. If you were to repeal both the statutes, no doubt it would get property out of Chancery to a certain extent, or rather it would prevent property getting into the Court of Chancery, but you would still leave the debtor open to a proceeding by elegit; and it is right that the Committee should understand that the proceeding by elegit will of necessity lead to difficulty. I shall endeavour to explain how an elegit proceeding would lead to difficulty. Suppose there is a tenant in possession of lands and a judgment against his landlord, if his lease bears date subsequent to the date of the judgment, the creditor may issue an elegit; he may have an inquisition in the ordinary way, and a finding upon that; and upon that inquisition he may serve an ejectment on the tenant, and turn the tenant out of possession altogether. If the judgment is subsequent to the date of the lease, he cannot turn the tenant out of possession, but the judgment creditor, by the operation of the inquisition, is regarded as in the nature of the assignee of the reversion; he stands in the shoes of the landlord—and the difficulty is this: one judgment creditor having proceeded and attached the rent, may be dispossessed by a prior judgment creditor, and that prior judgment creditor may be dispossessed by another prior judgment creditor; and in this way the unfortunate tenant in possession may suffer very nearly as much by that elegit proceeding as he suffers at present by a proceeding by a receiver; the difficulty is, whichever way you turn it is only a choice of evils.

1002. Sir J. Graham.] Have you seen the bill that has been introduced by the government with respect to judgments in Ireland being no longer assignable?—I read it hastily.

(To be continued.)

CHANCERY.

Walter Humphreys, Plaintiff, } PURSUANT to the Decree
John Bowen, the younger, } made in this Cause, bearing date and others, } 10th day of May, 1849, thereby requiring all persons having Charge of or Interest in the said Decree, to come in before me, at my Chambers, in the City of Dublin, on or before the 22nd day of October next, and pay the same, otherwise they will be precluded the benefit of said Decree.
Dated this 4th day of August, 1849.

R. LITTON

GEORGE BEAMISH, Solicitor for the Plaintiff,
No. 38, Lower Gardiner Street, Dublin.

JUST PUBLISHED,

ADDISON ON THE LAW OF CONTRACT

A TREATISE on the Law of CONTRACTS, and Rights and Liabilities of Contractor. By C. G. ADDISON, Esq., of the Inner Temple, Barrister at Law. Second Edition, 2 vols. 8vo. price 25s.

RUSSELL ON ARBITRATION.

A TREATISE on the Power and Duty of an ARBITRATOR, and the Law of Submissions and Awards; with an Appendix of Forms, and of the Statutes relating to Arbitration. By FRANCIS RUSSELL, Esq., M.A., Barrister at Law. 1 vol. 8vo. 25s.

BAYLEY ON BILLS OF EXCHANGE.

SUMMARY of the Law of Bills of Exchange, Cash Bills, and Promissory Notes. By SIR JOHN BAYLEY, Esq., 2d Edition, by G. W. DOWDESWELL, Barrister at Law. 1 vol. 8vo. 21s.

BURGE ON THE LAW OF SURETSHIP.

COMMENTARIES on the Law of SURETSHIP, and the Rights and Obligations of the parties thereto. By WILLIAM BURGE, Esq. Q.C. M.A. 1 vol. 8vo. 18s.

STANFIELD'S PRECEDENTS IN CONVEYANCING.

A COLLECTION of Copyhold PRECEDENTS IN CONVEYANCING, arranged for general and ordinary use, together with Introductory Treatises upon the various transactions and occurrences incident to Estates of customary tenure, &c. By JOHN F. STANFIELD, Esq. 1 vol. 8vo. 12s.

QUESTIONS FOR LAW STUDENTS on the Second Edition of Mr. Sergeant Stephen's New Commentaries on the Law of England. By JAMES STEPHEN, Esq., of the Middle Temple, Barrister at Law. 1 vol. 8vo. cloth boards, price 10s. 6d.

CONCISE FORMS OF WILLS, with Practical Notes. By W. HAYES and T. JARMAN. 4th Edition, cloth 10s.

THE LAW OF HUSBAND AND WIFE. A Treatise on the Law of Husband and Wife as respects Property, partly founded upon Roper's Treatise, and comprising Jacobus' Notes and Additions. By J. E. WRIGHT, Esq., of the Inner Temple, Barrister at Law. 1 vol. royal 8vo. 25s. 10s. boards.

A TREATISE ON THE LAW OF LEGACIES. By the late R. & DONNISON ROPER, Esq., Barrister at Law, of Gray's Inn; and by H. H. WHITE, Esq., Barrister at Law, of the Middle Temple. Fourth Edition. 2 vols. royal 8vo. 25s. 10s. boards.

A TREATISE ON THE LAW OF EVIDENCE as administered in England and Ireland; with Illustrations from American and other Foreign Laws. By JOHN PITT TAYLOR, Esq., of the Middle Temple, Barrister at Law. 2 vols. royal 8vo. 25s.

A SELECTION OF LEADING CASES IN Various Branches of the Law, with Notes. By JOHN WILLIAM FITZ, Esq., of the Inner Temple, Barrister at Law. Third Edition. By R. A. KEATING, Esq., and JAMES S. WILLES, Esq., of the Inner Temple, Barristers at Law. 2 vols. royal 8vo. 25s. 12s. 6d.

EDWARD J. MILLIKEN, LAW BOOKSELLER AND PUBLISHER, 13, COLLEGE GREEN, DUBLIN.

All communications for the IRISH JURIST are to be sent, addressed to the Editor, with the Publisher, E. J. MILLIKEN, 13, COLLEGE GREEN. Correspondents will please give the Name and Address, in the columns of the paper cannot be occupied with answers to Anonymous Communications; nor will the Editor be accountable for the return of Manuscripts, &c.

Orders for the IRISH JURIST sent with E. J. MILLIKEN, 13, COLLEGE GREEN, or by letter (post-paid), will ensure its punctual delivery in Dublin, or its being forwarded to the Country, by Post, on the day of publication.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION—(payable in advance):
Yearly, 50s. Half-yearly, 17s. Quarterly, 14s.

Printed by THOMAS ISAAC WHITE, at his Printing Office, No. 4, FLEET STREET, in the Parish of St. Andrew, and published at 13, COLLEGE GREEN, in same Parish, by EDWARD JOHNSON MILLIKEN, residing at the same place, all being in the County of the City of Dublin. Saturday, August 18, 1849.

THE Irish Jurist

No. 43.—VOL. I.

AUGUST 25, 1849.

Price {Per Annum, £1 10s.
Single Number, 6d.

The Names of the Gentlemen who favour THE IRISH JURIST with Reports in the several Courts of Law and Equity in Ireland, are as follows:—

Court of Chancery, including Bankruptcy Appeals.....	{ ROBERT LOMB, Esq., and JOHN PITT KENNEDY, Esq., Barristers-at-Law.	Court of Exchequer Chamber.....	{ JOHN BLACKMAN, Esq., and A. HICKEY, Esq., Barristers-at-Law.
Rolls Court.....	{ WILLIAM BURKE, Esq., and WILLIAM JOHN DUNDAS, Esq., Barristers-at-Law.	Queen's Bench, including Civil Bill and Registry Appeals.....	{ FLORENCE M'CARTHY, Esq., and SAMUEL V. PEET, Esq., Barristers-at-Law.
Equity Exchequer.....	{ CHARLES HARE HEMPHILL, Esq., and WILLIAM HICKSON, Esq., Barristers-at-Law.	Exchequer of Pleas, including Manor Court and Registry Appeals.....	{ CHAS. H. HEMPHILL, Esq., and WILLIAM HICKSON, Esq., Barristers-at-Law.
Bankrupt Court.....	{ ROBERT GRIFFIN, Esq. and W.G. CHANNY, Esq. Barristers-at-law.	Common Pleas.....	{ ROBERT GRIFFIN, Esq. and W. G. CHANNY, Esq. Barristers-at-law.
		Admiralty Court.....	{ ROBERT GRIFFIN, Esq. and W. G. CHANNY, Esq. Barristers-at-law.

DUBLIN, AUGUST 25, 1849.

When several suits are instituted in Equity against the same defendant, it is the practice, both in the Court of Chancery and Exchequer, after a decree has been pronounced in one, to obtain an order staying further proceedings in the other causes, and that the parties may come in and prove their demands under the decree; and in the Court of Chancery a practice has prevailed by which the plaintiff in a stayed suit is rendered personally liable for the costs of the several defendants in that cause.

The case of Loflie v. Forbes, (2 Ir. Eq. R. 443,) is to be considered the first in this country which distinctly lays down the rule that the plaintiff in a stayed suit is personally liable to pay the costs of the several defendants in that cause, and that, whether the stayed suit has been vexatiously instituted or not. It often happens that from the obstinate litigation of defendants it is impossible for a plaintiff to obtain a decree for a considerable time, while a friendly suit, commenced it may be long after the other, is brought to a hearing first, and a decree to account obtained, from the facilities afforded by the very parties whose utmost exertions were used to retard the progress of a suit commenced by a bona fide creditor, and absolutely necessary to obtain payment of his demand. It appears to us that in such a case this rule, if laid down inflexibly and acted on without regard to the circumstances of each case, is calculated to work great hardship and oppression.

In Croker v. Copley, (2 Moll. 469,) there was a suit in the Exchequer to which the plaintiff in the second cause was a party, a receiver was appointed before the suit in Chancery was instituted, and the case came on by motion to dismiss the second bill for want of prosecution. The Master of the Rolls, in giving judgment, went very fully into the special circumstances of the case, and said, "Incumbrancers who can have no relief in the suit, and are merely brought before the court as necessary parties, are entitled to their costs, and that in the first instance out of the fund, and every plaintiff files his bill subject to this liability." This would appear to us to point out precisely the proper fund out of which a defendant's costs should be paid; for why should he be put in a better position by the order to stay than he was before? and why should a bona fide creditor plaintiff in a suit fairly instituted, be placed in a worse? Besides, by such a practice the plaintiff is injured far more than a defendant would be, were he obliged to wait until the fund be realized; there is no balance of inconvenience from which it might be said that where a plaintiff and defendant would suffer equal inconvenience, in order to discourage unnecessary suits, the leaning should be against the plaintiff who is active, and in favour of the defendant who is brought before the court in invitum, and such indeed was the reasoning of Sir Michael O'Loughlen in Loflie v. Forbes, (as reported in 2 I. Eq. Rep.) and if there was but one defendant who might become entitled to his costs such reasoning might be conclusive, but where such defendants are very numerous, and although individually their costs may be inconsiderable, yet the aggregate sum for which a plaintiff becomes personally liable may be very large, and much more than he can pay or procure until the funds in the cause are realized; the rule, therefore, does not work fairly, for though a defendant or his solicitor may be inconvenienced by having to wait for a small sum, the plaintiff may be utterly ruined by being compelled forthwith to pay a very large one.

In the case of Jackson v. Curtis, cited in Croker v. Copley, there was but one suit, and by the decree costs had been ordered to defendants, who having proceeded to enforce payment by an attachment, upon application to set it aside the Master of the Rolls considered that the costs were properly payable out of the fund; on appeal this order was set aside, and the Lord Chancellor held that the plaintiff should forthwith pay them. This case, however, would seem not to be an authority, for these defendants were prior incumbrancers, and the plaintiff when filing his bill must have been aware that they were entitled to be redeemed, and it is on that ground Lord Manners based his decision when he says, "The rule that the fund and not the plaintiff is to pay the costs only applies to formal parties, not to prior incumbrancers, as to them it is a redemption bill." This case, though cited by the Master of the Rolls in Croker v. Copley as shewing that a plaintiff is personally liable, distinctly lays down that the costs of formal parties, not prior incumbrancers, are to be paid out of the fund. And it does not appear to us that this learned judge would have sanctioned the practice which now prevails, by which all costs, whether of prior or subsequent incumbrancers, formal or other parties, are to be paid by the plaintiff in a stayed suit, although he may not have any other property whatever beyond the subject-matter of the suit.

In O'Keefe v. Holmes, (1 Irish Jurist, 78,) a defendant in a stayed suit applied that the plaintiff might pay his costs; counsel for the plaintiff insisted very strongly upon the great hardship of compelling the plaintiff to pay these costs before the funds were realized, as she had very little property except the subject-matter of the cause. The Master of the Rolls, however, was of opinion that although there might be hardship in the case he was bound by the decision in Lofthouse v. Forbes, and that it was desirable not to break in on a rule which tends to check the institution of several suits. If that was the only effect of the rule, and if it worked only to the prejudice of plaintiffs who—a suit being already in progress in which they could obtain full relief—commence another for the mere purpose of operating the estate with costs, we would be sorry to see it relaxed in the slightest degree; but when, as we have already shewn, it may injure the bond fide plaintiff, perhaps the first to take proceedings for the recovery of a fair demand, there we certainly think the rule should be relaxed.

The case of O'Keefe v. Holmes was again considered before the Lord Chancellor on appeal, who affirmed the order of the Rolls. In the same case (reported 1 Irish Jurist, 162,) an application was made by the plaintiff that the costs of the defendant, which he had been ordered to pay, should be paid to him by the receiver, and it was held that the plaintiff, who was a puisne incumbrancer, was only entitled to have these costs paid in the same priority as his demand; there was no positive decision as to the costs of prior incumbrancers; his Honor intimated, however, that a case might be made out which would entitle the plaintiff to these costs, not in the priority of the plaintiff's demand, but in that of the prior incumbrancers; but the notice not having been so framed the motion was refused. It would appear to us that the costs of all the incumbrancers, whether prior or puisne to the plaintiff's demand, should be paid according to their respective priorities, otherwise the severity of the rule, making a plaintiff personally liable, would be carried still farther, as if the fund only sufficed to reach the plain-tiff's own demand, or, as often happens, his entire claim should not be paid, it would be rendered still more deficient if to that claim were added the costs of puisne incumbrancers, which never could have been paid if the suit had gone to a hearing.

In Levinge v. De Montmorency, (1 Irish Jurist, 251,) the Court of Exchequer, upon full argument and having all the cases before it, came to a conclusion which supports the view we have here taken. A bill had been filed in that court, and a decree to account pronounced. Subsequent to the institution of the suit, but before the decree, a bill was filed in the Court of Chancery by two of the defendants in the Exchequer cause. After the decree an order was made in the Exchequer restraining the plaintiffs from proceeding in Chancery, giving them liberty to come in and prove their demand in the Exchequer; subsequent to this, an order was made in the Rolls for taxation of the costs of a defendant in the Chancery cause, these costs were paid by the plaintiff in the stayed suit, who applied to the Court of Exchequer to be repaid by the receiver. Baron Pennefather in giving judgment said:—"The present motion is, that the costs to which the plaintiff in the Chancery cause is liable, should be paid in the first instance, by the receiver out of the funds collected by the receiver, or that the defendants in the Chancery cause be restrained from taking proceedings against the plaintiff in the stayed cause on their demand for costs against him. In justice, it would appear that the plaintiff in the Chancery cause who is restrained from proceeding there by the order of this court, is substantially entitled to relief in one or other of the shapes in which he seeks it." And his Lordship referred to the manuscript note of Lofthouse v. Forbes by Sir M. O'Loughlin.* Baron Pennefather also said:—"As to the costs of prior creditors whom the plaintiff brings before the court in the Chancery cause, he is undoubtedly liable in the event of a deficient fund." "With regard to subsequent creditors they must get their costs in the same priority as their demands. The costs of puisne creditors are not to be put out of their proper priority." It appears to us that the rule as laid down in that case is calculated to work fairly and justly and does not expose to utter ruin a plaintiff who, as we have shewn, may have acted with the most perfect good faith, and without the slightest intention of instituting oppressive or unnecessary proceedings.

To the Editor of the Irish Jurist.

SIR,

In a very recent number you expressed a hope—in which all your readers participated—that the appointment of commissioners for the sale of incumbered estates should be made from none other than the purest motives.

The motives which led to these appointments I do not question, but to one of the selections I object—that of Mr. Hargreave. Towards that gentleman personally I not only entertain no ill-will, quite the reverse, I admit his talents; I acknowledge with the utmost satisfaction that general rumour does not overrate his capacity; I concede that he ran a distinguished career in the London University, that his mathematical abilities are of a very high order, and that his reputation at the Bar is that of an able and rising man; my objection will not, I hope, be imagined to arise from any other than public and professional grounds—personal, I have none. Mr. Hargreave was called to the English Bar in the year 1844; he has not yet, consequently, completed his fifth year of practice. Of a standing which, in this country, is insufficient by law to justify an appointment to the office of Assistant Barrister, and to a jurisdiction in civil actions where the debts do not exceed the paltry sum of twenty pounds; this young gentleman—who never yet spoke in a court of justice—is sent over to Ireland as a judge in a court invested with more arbitrary powers than were ever yet conferred upon any court of judicature in this or the sister country. He is sent, armed with a casting voice in decisions which may affect millions of property! sent to preside in a court clothed with greater powers than the Court of Chancery, in a court whose decision is final and irreversible except its own members think fit to allow an appeal from their decisions!

* See 1 Irish Jurist, Rep. 352.

Let me assume that the other two members of the court may differ; that the one judge may incline to decide according to the rights of creditors and owners as now existing in courts of Equity; the other—impressed with the idea that he holds his office more for a political than a judicial purpose, and that the great object of the Legislature and of the Act was to effect sales and a transfer of property—may be disposed to deal more summarily with those rights, and that the junior commissioner gives his judgment, (I care not on which side,) I ask, will that judgment be calculated to carry with it weight to satisfy the public, or be one in which the professions will be disposed to acquiesce?

Nay, without speaking of his judgments will his appointment be calculated to inspire that public confidence which is so desirable to invite incumbrancers and owners to make trial of a new and untried tribunal, where the claims of the one, and the rights of both may be dealt with in a manner they know not of, and according to the unlimited discretion of the commissioners?

Lord John Russell was frequently asked to state the names of the proposed commissioners, and he postponed his answer until Parliament rose. His Government passed a measure constituting a court which can override the established tribunals of the country—even the Court of Chancery itself—a circumstance never previously known in legislation—in which is vested the determination of questions that may affect half the properties of this country, and the adjudication of rights of the utmost magnitude and the most extreme importance. Was it too much to expect that the Crown should have chosen judiciously, should have chosen men calculated from professional reputation to create confidence in their decisions?

Most assuredly the Government should not have so outrageously shocked professional and public opinion by the selection of an English conveyancer of five years standing, who, however respectable his abilities may be, was but little known in his own, and absolutely unknown in this country.

There should have been a prestige about the name of each judge which would have carried with it the favorable testimony of the public.

Mr. Hargreave is an English conveyancer. His brother commissioner, Dr. Longfield, was examined not very long since before a Committee of the House of Commons, (the Poor Law Committee,) he was asked, "Can you suggest any remedy for the present uncertainty of title in Ireland?" "I do not think there is any considerable uncertainty of title in Ireland. I think a purchaser in Ireland can be as certain of his title as a purchaser can be in England, there is an expense in making out a title, owing to the number of incumbrancers, but there is no uncertainty of title."

"Mr. Bright. Do you know whether that is the opinion of English conveyancers, with regard to Irish titles?—I do not; but I am sure that the English conveyancers do not understand the matter; they do not know the law in Ireland, and I do not think they are competent to give an opinion upon the point."

It is one of this class who is sent over to administer the law of titles in Ireland!!! For my own part, I rather think the witness judged the English lawyers harshly, and I am satisfied, in Mr. Hargreave's instance, that he is too conscientious to accept an appointment, if he had not a knowledge of his profession; but in this I can agree with Dr. Longfield, that the English practice differs in some respects from ours, and that there are questions of daily occurrence, particularly with reference to searches and judgments, with which they are by no means familiar, and that an English conveyancer will have much to learn before he can make himself familiar with the titles and practice of this country as connected with them. Now the junior Commissioner should have been precisely the one most familiar with both; on him will devolve very probably the reference to take accounts, and ascertain priorities; and the preliminary training of an Equity lawyer would have been an important advantage, if not an essential, in the future Commissioner. His legal education should not be completed at the expense of the public; his ephemeral existence should have been one marked with the fulness of life, and with nothing of the incipient stage.

A court of a limited existence, which will commence proceedings at once should at least possess Heads intimately acquainted with the people and the country, of whose properties they were to take the disposal; a knowledge of the character of the solicitors who were to practise before them would have been desirable; and the junior Commissioner, who will be the auctioneer of his brethren, should of the three be precisely the one best acquainted with the mode of transacting business in this country.

Never, in the history of judicial appointments, was there a graver error, on public grounds; never on professional, a deeper insult to the Irish Bar.

It is true that there used to exist a practice of appointing an English lawyer to be an Irish Chancellor. These appointments were—inasmuch as there was no reciprocity—unjust towards a bar composed of as distinguished lawyers as ever adorned Westminster Hall. They were felt to be unjust by the Whig government, and the appointment of the present Chancellor was looked upon as an earnest that the practice would never again be repeated. It had, however, as an apology, though not an excuse, this argument, that the judges sent here were men who had been long before the public, whose fame had built itself secure upon the discriminating judgment of the profession before whom they practised, and who could best test their merits; they were men who stood out prominently, and who deserved judicial elevation, and I, for one, should never desire an absolute rule of exclusion. If there were a fair interchange of judges between the two countries, I should rejoice at the introduction of reciprocal appointments; but there was no reciprocity in the case. Your readers will remember that when one of the greatest lawyers of the Irish Bar, one of the most eloquent members of the British senate, whose name sheds a lustre on our profession—when Lord Plunket was nominated to the high office of the Master of the Rolls in England, the Bar of that country were so strong as to procure the withdrawal of that appointment. That bar rejected Lord Plunket—we need not say how great a man they rejected—and are we, members of the Irish Bar, so degraded, that we must accept every gentleman of the English Bar that the government may choose to nominate to our offices? Members of the Irish Bar, this should not be. The Bar of the richer country has not only appointments at home, which she altogether monopolizes, but appointments in every quarter of the habitable globe, which she almost monopolizes, to your exclusion; within her own metropolis she has courts of justice, which give to her members occupation much more extensive and varied than you can ever hope to have, and rewards infinitely more dazzling than you can ever realize in your more restricted sphere; and yet, not content with her monopoly, she would now rob you of the poor prize which is justly yours!

I advocate a principle—I will not depreciate an individual; had Mr. Hargreave actually attained the reputation which I feel satisfied he will yet acquire, (though I should prefer its attainment in his own arena), I should still state my objections, on public grounds, to his appointment.

I, at least, feel that I have done my duty in my endeavour to evoke somewhat of professional, but much more of national feeling. If we have not the spirit to assert our rights, we deserve our degradation. Members of the Irish Bar, you should be up and stirring; it is time to put a stop to this system of things—it is time, high time, that you should be insulted no longer, at least that you should not submit to this insult tamely. The English Bar would not have “our foremost man”—will you have one who, without disparagement, cannot be as competent as hundreds of yourselves?

A.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

RECEIVER COMMITTEE.

Right Hon. T. B. C. Smith.—June 28.

(Continued from p. 324.)

1003. That bill goes the whole length of abolishing, after the 31st of December next, the right of judgment creditors applying for receivers?—Yes, no doubt you will thereby remedy the existing evil; but the question is, whether you do not leave the tenant open to an evil which is not quite so great, but which I have endeavoured to explain, namely, of proceedings by elegit creditors one after the other; you might have half a dozen judgment creditors, the one proceeding against the other, rendering it impossible for the tenant to know to whom he was to pay his rent. By Mr. Pigot's act, the party is enabled to take the whole of the land instead of the moiety.

1004. In what court would that elegit process be instituted?—In a court of common law; and I have to make this observation that it may not be misunderstood; the effect of repealing or modifying to a certain extent, or altogether, Sir Michael O'Loughlen's act, and Mr. Pigot's act so far as it amends it, would be to diminish the number of cases in which proceedings would be taken against land; and therefore benefit would be gained by the modification of Sir Michael O'Loughlen's act.

1007. Supposing receivers to remain the same, would you not think that there should be a limit in point of time, before which no judgment creditor should be entitled to apply for a receiver?—I have no doubt that that would be an important alteration.

1008. Would a year be a fair time to fix?—I would not allow a party the day after he had obtained judgment to apply for a receiver, without giving his debtor proper time to realise a fund with a view to pay him off; I should say a year, by analogy to proceedings in a plenary suit, would be a fair time.

1009. We have had Sir Edward Sugden before us, and he has expressed an opinion that, considering the extent to which the law regulating judgments has been carried both in England and in Ireland, it would be inexpedient now to go back and to entirely abolish the effect of judgments in Ireland as the common assurance, or materially to interfere with the present practice, both as respects the appointment of receivers and the operation of judgments in affecting the property to its full extent as it now affects it; but he has suggested that instead of going the whole length of the government bill, which has lately been introduced, a line of demarcation should be drawn with respect to the amount, and that no judgment creditor prospectively, for a debt under £100, should be entitled, under any circumstances, or at any time, to apply for a receiver?—I should entertain a very strong opinion, that to that extent, at all events, it would be desirable to go.

1010. Mr. R. B. Osborne.] Do you think £100 is high enough?—I should say not; I would rather go higher than that.

1011. Sir J. Graham.] Supposing the principle were admitted that there should be a line of demarcation between smaller debts and larger debts, as you fixed your minimum high, you would restrict the operation of judgments quoad receivers?—I certainly consider that the Legislature has a right to qualify the rights of creditors, to the extent to which those rights are detrimental to the public at large; and I consider that one of the greatest grievances existing in Ireland, is the extent to which property is now under the Court of Chancery.

1012. Do you think that the shock to public opinion, by going the length of the proposal by government, and entailing the consequences of throwing parties back upon their common law remedies, would be great?—I believe the government propose to prevent judgments being assignable in future. I confess I am disposed to agree in that, and for this reason, I think it is rather desirable to make judgments cease to be a common assurance in Ireland. I know there is this advantage arising out of their being a common assurance, that you can purchase upon a sheet of paper a printed form of bond and warrant of attorney, which almost any one can fill up without the help of a barrister or an attorney at all, and so far there is a benefit in it. But on the other hand, the very facility of obtaining that security works injuriously. The man who signs his name to that document, very rarely knows the extent to which he involves himself; and I think he would very often pause before he would execute a mortgage, when he would have very little difficulty in signing his name to the document.

1013. As relates to the limit in point of time, you would agree with Sir Edward Sugden, that the period of a year should be fixed by act of Parliament, before a receiver should be applied for?—I think it would be reasonable that if a person proceeded within a year, he should be left to his common law remedy.

1014. Would you prefer the government measure, which provides that judgments shall not be assignable, and that after the 31st of December next, no judgment creditor shall be entitled to apply to the court for a receiver, or would you prefer Sir Edward Sugden's proposition, that judgments should continue assignable, but that no judgment creditor should apply for a receiver until 12 months elapsed, and that a line should be drawn with reference to the amount; and that no receiver should be appointed for property under a certain amount, but that the law should remain unchanged with respect to all judgments above that amount?—It is a difficult question to answer what would be the comparative effect of the two plans; but if I were at liberty to give an indirect answer to the question, I would say that I should like to have a compound of both. I should be disposed to repeal the Act which authorises the assigning of judgments, and try for the present the modified remedy that is proposed by Sir Edward Sugden, of preventing any person from obtaining a receiver unless the judgment exceeded a certain amount.

1015. And you would fix that certain amount somewhat higher than £100?—I think I should.

1016. You think the state of credit, and the feeling of the public mind in Ireland, would bear such an alteration of the law as that?—It is difficult to say that, but one of the reasons why I object to assigning judgments is, that it is made one of the means of accumulating costs. If the Committee were to call upon me to prove what I am now about to state, I could not at the moment give evidence of it, but matters occur before me constantly which lead me to suspect the existence of facts which I could not positively prove; my belief is that attorneys themselves get judgments assigned to some friend, and then issue a scire facias to revive the judgment at the suit of this assignee, and costs are accumulated to the extent of that assignment; and even if the same attorney happened to have the beneficial interest in three or four judgments, if he were inclined to make costs, the course which he would adopt would be this; he would get one of his judgments assigned to A., he would get another judgment assigned to B., a third judgment assigned to C., and a fourth judgment assigned to D.; and he would present a petition to appoint a receiver at the suit of the first party, he would present another petition to extend the receiver at the suit of the second, a third petition to extend the receiver at the suit of the third, and a fourth petition to extend the receiver at the suit of the fourth; and the decision of the court is given in ignorance and doubt whether those assignments are bond fide, or whether they are not made merely for the purpose of accumulating costs.

1020. What would be the effect of making the law of assignment in Ireland identical with the law of assignment limited as it is in England?—It would be calculated to check the course which is adopted of making judgments a common assurance. At present it is a most usual thing in Ireland to assign a judgment upon marriage; and parties assign judgments just as they assign mortgages in England; in England judgments are considered as securities which are not to remain outstanding, but in Ireland it is quite the contrary; they are considered as securities which are to remain outstanding.

1021. Considering how long that practice has obtained under the sanction of the law in Ireland, and the delicate state of credit in that country, would you be afraid of altering the law of assigning judgments in that country?—There is no doubt that the proceeding ought to be taken cautiously. I am rather stating my opinion in the abstract, than with reference to the exact time at which the measure should be adopted.

1022. What Sir Edward Sugden has stated is, that with regard to his limited plan restricting the appointment of receivers to judgments of a certain specified amount, and to allowing a year of grace, this is the particular moment when the change should be made; do you concur in that opinion?—The opinion I entertain is this, if the measures now in contemplation should be effectual to get property out of Chancery, I think it is most desirable if possible to prevent property getting back again into Chancery; and of course any measure that diminishes the number of applications for receivers will be a beneficial measure.

1023. And it will be wise to make the change at this moment?—That is a difficult question to answer.

1084. Chairman.] You observe that the Government Bill abolishes the operation of judgments prospectively?—Yes.

1085. Do not you apprehend that there would be some confusion as to the point at which the new law would come into operation, from the system of continuing judgments by means of revivors?—There is no doubt it would be inconvenient to have a class of judgments before a certain date assignable, and a class of judgments after a certain date unassignable; but I think that the law would be shortly understood; and the fact is this, that there is only at this moment a certain class of judgments assignable; you cannot assign every judgment; that point was brought under the consideration of an English court in the case of O'Callaghan v. Marchioness Thomond, (in 3rd Taunton's Reports.) The assignee of an Irish judgment sued in the Common Pleas in England upon the judgment, and the question was raised before the Judges in that Court, as to whether the Act of Parliament authorised the assignment of judgments generally, or only the assignment of a particular class of judgments; and it was decided, and the reasons for that appear very satisfactory, that it did not authorise the assignment of judgments generally, but that the Act applied only to the case of a conusor and conusee, not to the case of recoveror and recoveree; that a judgment was assignable where it was a common assurance, but that an ordinary judgment recovered in an adverse suit is not assignable. Therefore there are at present two classes of judgments as to which the law varies, and I do not know that it would be productive of any great inconvenience.

1086. A law drawing a distinction between different classes of judgments, would not in your opinion embarrass the proceedings or be productive of inconvenience?—It might; but I think the object to be attained is to prevent judgments being continued as the common assurance; I should drive a party to have a mortgage; I think he will hesitate before he signs a mortgage, but he will not hesitate before he signs a warrant of attorney.

1087. You think it would be wise to make the security of judgments unpopular?—Yes; I should like to have a judgment in Ireland a security that was sought to be recovered as quickly as one could, and not a security to remain outstanding for ever. I may mention a case which has occurred within the last twelve months in the Court of Chancery, and at the Rolls Court, which will exemplify the inconvenience of judgments remaining outstanding. A party has obtained a decision of bad title in his favour which I was obliged to pronounce, and which the Lord Chancellor has confirmed, in consequence of the existence of a judgment of the year 1786, which has remained outstanding on the estate ever since; that is 110 years ago, and upon which interest has been paid.

1088. Mr. R. Osborne.] You stated that there were cases where two receivers were placed over different parts of a debtor's estate, the one appointed by the Court of Exchequer, and the other by the Court of Chancery?—It has so happened. But I may observe that when I was first appointed Master of the Rolls I found that this course had been adopted under Sir Michael O'Loughlen's act; a judgment creditor by his own solicitor obtained an order for a receiver against Black-acre; another judgment creditor presented a petition, without saying one word about the receiver appointed over Black-acre, and got a receiver over White-acre; another creditor would get a receiver appointed over Green-acre in the same way. That appeared to me to be a monstrous abuse; because, in the first place, the expense of appointing a receiver is considerably greater than the expense of extending a receiver, and in the next place you have the unfortunate debtor subject to three receivers' accounts, and you multiply costs enormously by that plan. I require now, and have for a long time past required it, that the solicitor shall state, which appears upon the order, that there has been no receiver appointed over any part of the estate, either in the Court of Chancery or in the Court of Exchequer; because I do not think you ought under the Judgment Acts to have a separate receiver even in both courts, and that is the opinion I have acted upon. But the case that Mr. Osborne has referred to is a case where the proceeding is by a plenary suit in Chancery, where there is a receiver appointed by the Court of Exchequer under the Sheriff's act. When a creditor files a bill for the general administration of an estate in the Court of Chancery, it is the practice to appoint a receiver over the estate, because more extensive relief can be given in Chancery; but the order directs that it shall not be acted upon till the Court of Exchequer discharge their receiver. The party then who obtains the order produces that order of the Court of Chancery in the Court of Exchequer, and discharges the receiver, and then you have one receiver in Chancery for the benefit of all the creditors.

1090. Might not the equitable jurisdiction of the Court of Exchequer be abolished, and would not that diminish expenses?—Considering the quantity of business in the Master's Office, and that I make at present 1,700 more orders in the year than were made 10 years ago, if you were to give the Lord Chancellor and myself the whole of the equity business, I much doubt whether the business would not get into arrear.

1096. What, according to your knowledge, is the present class of receivers?—I cannot perhaps answer that question positively; but I must say, from the cases which have come before myself, that I do not think that proper persons have been appointed; I have found, for example, in different cases that have come before me, that solicitors have been appointed receivers, and I highly disapprove of solicitors being appointed receivers.

1098. Sir Edward Sugden stated to the Committee that there was an absolute rule of court prohibiting the appointment of solicitors as receivers?—Sir Edward Sugden was under a misapprehension upon that point. It has been decided that a solicitor, if he be a party in the cause, cannot be appointed receiver, but a solicitor unconnected with the cause may be appointed receiver, as far as any order or rule of court is concerned. I have stated my opinion often, that a solicitor ought not to be appointed receiver; but I think it right to state that my opinion has not had much effect, because one of the Masters has pronounced a very elaborate judgment in favour of appointing solicitors receivers, and it is a common practice to appoint a solicitor to be a receiver.

1099. Mr. R. B. Osborne.] Then the rule governing the Court is not the same in all cases?—No. Some of the Masters do not think it a disqualification.

1101. Then there is no order against an attorney being appointed a receiver?—None that I am aware of. I may observe that the Court of Exchequer, after Sir Edward Sugden's order, adopted an order very nearly in the words of this order; the present Lord Chancellor having been Lord Chief Baron at the time; but they had inserted the additional words: "no solicitor for any party in the cause;" and impliedly it was to be inferred from that, that a solicitor who was not solicitor for a party in the cause, was not a disqualified person.

1105. Sir J. Graham.] Is there anything wanting in that order of Sir Edward Sugden with respect to receivers if it were only made quite clear that no solicitor should be appointed a receiver?—I think there is nothing whatever; it might be worth while for the Members of the Committee to read the judgment of Sir E. Sugden which arose on that very order in the case in re Stokes, in 1st Jones and Latouche's Reports, p. 175; so anxious were the solicitors to put a narrow construction upon this order, that one of the solicitors got the clerk of an attorney, who was not his own clerk, appointed receiver, and there being an application to Sir Edward Sugden to set aside the appointment of this clerk, there were actually three counsel employed before Sir Edward Sugden, one of whom happens to be a member of this Committee, Mr. Keogh, Serjeant Warren, and some other gentleman, to insist that this order disqualified only the clerk of the particular solicitor; but Sir Edward Sugden had no difficulty in expressing an opinion, and he pronounced an excellent judgment, as all his judgments are, pointing out the evil that this order was intended to remedy, and that it applied to the system which had existed of trafficking in receiverships and actually selling the office; and this general order he held to apply to the clerks of all receivers.

1106. I asked you if the addition of the prohibition of attorneys would make that order perfect, and you, as I understood you, said it would not; what is the other addition?—I do not think any addition will make it absolutely perfect; there will always be a determination to evade it.

1107. Then you would say that the appointment of receivers was an incurable evil?—I do not see that that necessarily follows; but so long as you leave the appointment of receivers to the nomination of any solicitor in the cause, you will, I think, have a bad class of receivers appointed.

1108. If receivers are to be appointed under any circumstances by judgment creditors, what is the plan which you think, with your experience, would be less open to abuse; you being of opinion that that order is imperfect, and that the prohibition of solicitors in terms would not render it perfect, what in your opinion would be an adequate precaution to adopt?—One which would take from every solicitor or party connected with the cause, any interference, directly or indirectly, with the nomination of the receiver.

1110. Are you aware that Sir Edward Sugden's order, prohibiting the appointment of clerks of solicitors as receivers, has been evaded?—I have not heard of it since 1844; but I should not have the slightest hesitation, if a case of that kind came before me, in punishing the solicitor severely by fixing the costs upon him personally; and I think it singular if it has occurred.

1111. When you say that there has been a system of trafficking in receivers, what do you mean by that?—That system existed at the time Sir Edward Sugden made this order, as appears by the judgment I have just referred to, and I think the practice continues, as a case occurred before me in which it came to light, that when the receiver was appointed by the solicitor in the cause, there was an agreement that the solicitor should not only have his own costs of the application for the receiver and the further costs in the matter, but should pocket a certain portion of the poundage, and in point of fact he did pocket a certain portion of the poundage. I made an order that he should disgorge the whole of that and pay it into court, with six per cent. interest; but though no other cases of that kind occurred before me, I have reason to believe that such cases exist.

1115. You would not say, from your experience, that an attorney was a person qualified to manage landed property?—I should say most decidedly not. That is not merely my own opinion, but I can refer to a high authority in a case reported in 15th Vesey, junior. An application was made to Lord Eldon that a person who was appointed a receiver, he being a practising barrister and a Member of the House of Commons, should be removed. The power of the Court in making the master review his report in respect to the appointment of a receiver, is very slowly exercised. But Lord Eldon expressed a strong opinion that the duties of a Member of Parliament and a practising barrister were inconsistent with his devoting proper time, independently of anything else, to the management of an estate; and without deciding that a Member of Parliament or a practising barrister was necessarily disqualified, he made an order directing the Master to reconsider his report.

1116. In your opinion ought not the receiver to reside upon the estate, if it is of any magnitude?—I have no doubt that he ought to reside upon the estate, and to be in the habit of seeing every property upon the estate every week of his life.

1120. Sir J. Graham.] Sir Edward Sugden was asked two questions, which I will read to you (Nos. 495 and 496): "But for property which, after you shall have abated the quantity of it by your legislative interference," (that was according to the plan which he had sketched to the Committee)," shall still be under the management of the Court, you do not think that anything can be done, with respect to the appointment of receivers?" Sir Edward's answer was, "Not by legislation; I think the head of the Court can do a great deal in correcting abuses where he discovers them, and providing against them by proper rules." The next question asked was, "There is no alteration in the law with regard to receivers that you would recommend?" and Sir Edward's answer was, "No, I think not; I would prevent the appointment of so many receivers. Supposing it were an inevitable evil that they should now have £1,700,000 of property under the Court (which I think it is not, and I should be very much disinclined to appoint receivers over such a large amount of property, and I would take care that such an amount of property should not come under the management of the Court); but supposing it were inevitable under the law as it stands and is administered, that there should be that amount of property under the Court, it might be very desirable to have something in the nature of a Master, who should have his whole time and attention directed to the management of receivers." Do you agree with Sir Edward Sugden in considering that it is not possible for legislation to deal effectually and advantageously with the appointment of receivers?—I cannot say that I agree in that; it may be difficult to point out an adequate remedy, but of this I am quite clear, that you will never have estates properly managed under the Court of Chancery, so long as you have the present system existing of the solicitor for the plaintiff or the petitioner in the cause nominating the receiver, because Master Murphy has informed me that in the majority of cases nobody attends before him except the solicitor for the petitioner. The Master cannot appoint any body of his own motion without having some person named, and the only person who attends to name the receiver is a person deeply interested in having the estate ill managed, because if it is well managed it will diminish the costs.

1121. Though Sir Edward Sugden in his answer rejected legislation, he points to rules of Court meeting the evils as they shall arise, and he suggests the appointment of a Master, whose exclusive duty it shall be to look after the appointment of receivers and the conduct of receivers?—I have no hesitation in saying that I agree with Sir Edward Sugden in the propriety of having an officer in Dublin who should have nothing whatsoever to do but to attend to the general superintendence of Chancery property. That has always been my view.

(To be continued.)

IN CHANCERY, IRELAND.

Robert Edward Gibbings, Plaintiff.
The Right Honorable Henry John Eschen, Earl of Portarlington, and others, Defendants.

WHEREAS it has been represented to me, that several of the Creditors on the Estates of the late Right Honorable John, Earl of Portarlington, deceased, the Testator in the pleadings named, have neglected or omitted to come in and file charges on foot of their respective demands and incumbrances, pursuant to the decree of the 9th day of February, 1847, and that the time limited by and for the said purpose has expired, and that it is expedient to extend said period; Now I require all Creditors and Legatees of the late Right Honorable John, Earl of Portarlington, deceased, the Testator in the pleadings named, and also all persons having Charges or Incumbrances affecting the real and freehold Estates of the said late Earl of Portarlington, to come in before me at my Chambers on the Inner Quay, in the city of Dublin, on or before Tuesday, the 30th day of November next, and proceed to prove and claim the same, otherwise they will be precluded from the benefit of said Decree.

Dated this 30th day of June, 1848.

R. LITTON.

John Warnock, Plaintiff's Solicitor,
30, North Great George's Street, Dublin.

IN CHANCERY.

Executors of Price, and others, Plaintiffs. }
Hall and others, Defendants. }
In this cause, bearing date the 11th day of June, 1848, I hereby require all persons claiming to be creditors of Nicholas Price, late of Fincham in the County of Down, Requisite, deceased, the testator in the pleadings in the cause named, to come in before me at my Chambers on the Inner Quay, in the City of Dublin, on or before the First day of October next, and prove their respective demands, otherwise they will be precluded from all benefit under the said decree.

Dated this 30th day of July, 1848.

William Nevill Wallace, Solicitor for the plaintiffs,
30, North Great George's Street, Dublin.

R. LITTON.

JUST PUBLISHED.

ADDISON ON THE LAW OF CONTRACTS

A TREATISE on the Law of CONTRACTS, and Rights and Liabilities of Contractor. By C. G. ADDISON, Esq., of the Inner Temple, Barrister-at-Law. Second Edition, 2 vols. 8vo. price 12s. 6d.

RUSSELL ON ARBITRATION.

A TREATISE on the Power and Duty of an ARBITRATOR, and the Law of Submissions and Awards, with an Appendix of Forms, and of the Statutes relating to Arbitration. By FRANCIS RUSSELL, Esq., M.A., Barrister-at-Law. 1 vol. 8vo. 4s. 6d.

BAYLEY ON BILLS OF EXCHANGE.

SUMMARY of the Law of Bills of Exchange, Cash Bills, and Promissory Notes. By SIR JOHN BAYLEY, Knt. Sixth Edition, by G. W. DOWDESWELL, Barrister-at-Law. 1 vol. 8vo. 4s. 6d.

BURGE ON THE LAW OF SURETYSHIP.

COMMENTARIES on the Law of SURETYSHIP, and the Rights and Obligations of the parties thereto. By WILLIAM BURGE, Esq. 2 C. M.A. 2c. 1 vol. 8vo. 12s.

STANFIELD'S PRECEDENTS IN CONVEYANCING.

A COLLECTION of Copyhold PRECEDENTS IN CONVEYANCING, arranged for general and ordinary use, together with Introductory Treatises upon the various transactions and occurrences incident to Estates of customary tenure, &c. By JOHN F. STANFIELD, Esq. 1 vol. 8vo. 12s.

QUESTIONS FOR LAW STUDENTS on the Second Edition of Mr. Serjeant Stephen's New Commentaries on the Law of England. By JAMES STEPHEN, Esq., of the Middle Temple, Barrister-at-Law. 1 vol. 8vo. cloth boards, price 10s. 6d.

CONCISE FORMS OF WILLS, with Practical Notes. By W. HAYES and T. JARMAN. 4th Edition, cloth bds. 12s.

THE LAW OF HUSBAND AND WIFE. A Treatise on the Law of Husband and Wife as respects Property, partly founded upon Rogers's Treatise, and comprising Jacob's Notes and Additions thereto. By J. E. WRIGHT, Esq., of the Inner Temple, Barrister-at-Law. 2 vols. royal 8vo. 22s. boards.

A TREATISE ON THE LAW OF LEGACIES. By the late R. S. DONNISON ROPER, Esq., Barrister-at-Law, of Gray's Inn; and by H. H. WHITE, Esq., Barrister-at-Law, of the Middle Temple. Fourth Edition. 2 vols. royal 8vo. 22s. boards.

A TREATISE ON THE LAW OF EVIDENCE, as administered in England and Ireland; with Illustrations from the American and other Foreign Laws. By JOHN FITZ TAYLOR, Esq., of the Middle Temple, Barrister-at-Law. 2 vols. royal 8vo. 22s. 6d.

A SELECTION OF LEADING CASES in Various Branches of the Law, with Notes. By JOHN WILLIAM SMITH, Esq., of the Inner Temple, Barrister-at-Law. Third Edition. By H. E. KEATINGE, Esq., and JAMES S. WILLES, Esq., of the Inner Temple, Barristers-at-Law. 2 vols. royal 8vo. 22s. 6d.

EDWARD J. MILLIKEN, LAW BOOKSELLER AND PUBLISHER, 15, COLLEGE GREEN, DUBLIN.

All communications for the IRISH JURIST are to be left, addressed to the Editor, with the Publisher, E. J. MILLIKEN, 15 COLLEGE GREEN. Correspondents will please give the Name and Address, so the columns of the paper cannot be occupied with answers to anonymous Communications; nor will the Editor be accountable for the return of Manuscripts, &c.

Orders for the IRISH JURIST left with E. J. MILLIKEN, 15 COLLEGE GREEN, or by letter (post-paid), will secure its prompt delivery in Dublin, or its being forwarded to the Country, by Post, on the day of publication.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION—(payable in advance):
Yearly, 30s. Half-yearly, 17s. Quarterly, 9s.

Printed by THOMAS ISAAC WHITE, at his Printing Office, No. 15, FLEET-STREET, in the Parish of St. Andrew, and published at 15 COLLEGE-GREEN, in same Parish, by EDWARD JOHNSTON MILLIKEN, residing at the same place, all being in the County of the City of Dublin. Saturday, August 25, 1848.

THE Irish Jurist

No. 44.—VOL. I.

SEPTEMBER 1, 1849.

Price {Per Annum, £1 10s.
Single Number, 9d.

The Names of the Gentlemen who favour THE IRISH JURIST with Reports in the several Courts of Law and Equity in Ireland, are as follows:—

Court of Chancery, including Bankruptcy Appeals.....	{ ROBERT LONG, Esq., and JOHN PITT KENNEDY, Esq., Barristers-at-Law.	Court of Exchequer Chamber.....	{ JOHN BLACKHAW, Esq., and A. HICKEY, Esq., Barristers-at-Law.
Rolls Court.....	{ WILLIAM BURKE, Esq., and WILLIAM JOHN DUNDAS, Esq., Barristers-at-Law.	Queen's Bench, including Civil Bill and Registry Appeals.....	{ FLORENCE M'CARTHY, Esq., and SAMUEL V. PERT, Esq., Barristers-at-Law.
Equity Exchequer.....	{ CHARLES HARRIS HEMPHILL, Esq., and WILLIAM HICKSON, Esq., Barristers-at-Law.	Exchequer of Pleas, including Manor Court and Registry Appeals.....	{ CHAS. H. HEMPHILL, Esq., and WILLIAM HICKSON, Esq., Barristers-at-Law.
Bankrupt Court.....	{ ROBERT GRIFFIN, Esq. and W.G. CHANNERY, Esq. Barristers-at-law.	Common Pleas.....	{ ROBERT GRIFFIN, Esq. and W.G. CHANNERY, Esq. Barristers-at-law.
		Admiralty Court.....	{ ROBERT GRIFFIN, Esq. and W.G. CHANNERY, Esq. Barristers-at-law.

DUBLIN, SEPTEMBER 1, 1849.

THE course pursued by Her Majesty's Government with reference to the Irish Poor Law has been marked with precipitancy at the commencement, and infirmity of purpose at the close. Lord John Russell appointed a Poor Law Committee, and before a single witness was examined carried a resolution in favour of a rate in aid. He subsequently made that resolution law. His Committee examined a very large number of witnesses, and undertook a very laborious and vast enquiry, but before they had reported to the House, the Poor Law bill was introduced. This was disrespectful to the Committee. Enquiry was either necessary or it was not; if necessary, the result of that enquiry should have been made known before legislation were attempted; if unnecessary, no Committee nominated by the Government should have been appointed.

Assuming, however, that there was no intention to cast a slur upon the Committee, we can arrive at no other conclusion than that the Government had seen and heard enough to prepare them for legislation, and that their minds were made up to introduce a bill on their own responsibility.

Accordingly, Lord John Russell, on the 26th of April, deliberately laid his plan for an amended Poor Law on the table of the House. It was short, but proposed two important alterations in the law, which were received with very general satisfaction;—one by which jointures and rent-charges for life were made liable to deduction for poor-rate, and the other which adopted the principle of a maximum rate.

The Act has passed, without the clauses embodying these two changes. The sections were struck out by the House of Lords, and the alterations were submitted to by Lord John Russell.

The position of the Minister must be indeed painful who has not the power to carry in their integrity the measures which he introduces. It is to us almost incomprehensible how an objection could be persisted in and allowed to a change in the law so just as that which proposed to make rent-chargers liable to poor-rate.

We have shown to demonstration in previous numbers the glaring injustice of allowing the life proprietor to pay the whole landlord's rate, whilst the life rentcharger pays nothing; and this is strikingly exemplified in the case—which is probably not of unfrequent occurrence—of the owner settling a rent charge upon one son for life, with remainder to trustees for the use of that son's issue, and then settling the corpus of the estate upon another son for life remainder to his issue. The first son contributes nothing in aid of the poverty of that property from which he draws the first fruits, whilst the whole burden of supporting its pauperism, and contributing to a costly poor-law establishment is thrown upon the next son, who may be left with a miserable remnant to support the position and respectability of the family.

In both cases the quality of estate is equal, there should be an equality likewise in payment of a tax which has hitherto been, and ought always to be, payable out of the annual proceeds of the land subject to it.

The only arguments which can be stated in support of the present law are: First, that by dividing the amount of rate payable by the proprietor in possession, the stimulus to give employment and lessen the pauperism of the estate would be diminished, and that an incumbrancer would be taxed who has no control over the estate and its management.

And, secondly, that his case should form no exception to that of other incumbrancers.

We cannot admit the cogency of these arguments. The first assumes that a proprietor in all cases requires a money-stimulus for the proper management of his estate. Suppose this necessity not to exist—as in a vast number of cases we feel satisfied it does not—is it just to punish the benevolent landlord because there may be bad landlords upon whom it is necessary to place the screw tightly. Is it just to punish the hard-working, struggling landlord who does all in his power to make every one upon his property comfortable, and to burden him with a fixed impost, for rent of which he is the mere receiver, and never can be the beneficial owner, because there may be cases in which inhuman landlords may be induced to clear their estates—from a conviction of self interest, rendered more intense by legislative injustice? Above all, is it humane—when the death of each pauper is a positive gain to the proprietor—to give an increased interest to the unmerciful man to rid his estate of paupers, by imposing upon him, during their existence, the entire landlord's proportion of rate?

It is repugnant to common sense and common justice to allow one man who gives no return whatever for the income he derives from the estate to escape untaxed, and to impose the whole rate upon the hardworking, benevolent, resident proprietor, or the idle, avaricious absentee,—as the case may be,—in order to induce the latter class to lessen the pauperism upon their estates.

If there were no other reply to the first argument it would be sufficiently answered by the fact that the good and the bad proprietor are dealt with on the same principle, that neither the one who neglects, nor the other who fulfils every duty that devolves upon him, can ever shake off this burden. The proprietor in possession of the best managed estate in Ireland, who has reduced the poor-rate to its narrowest limits—the amount necessary for the support of the aged and impotent—must still pay a percentage upon an income which goes to another person.

The second branch of the argument is also unsustainable.

On grounds of public policy,—derived from the consideration of the present encumbered state of the landed property of this country,—it may have been considered inexpedient to tax a class of incumbrancers, who would, from the diminished income derivable from their security, so long as it remained outstanding, at once demand payment, and by selling for non-payment, add to the glut in the land-market. Measures sufficiently stringent for the gradual confiscation of encumbered properties were adopted without resorting to one that would cause the precipitate extinction of the rights of their owners. In the abstract it is unjust to tax the income derived from land as the sole fund for the support of pauperism, except that pauperism be altogether rural, more unjust to tax a portion of that income, and that portion the least able to bear it, but having regard to the particular circumstances of the period we can understand it being sound policy not to tax income derivable from redeemable incumbrances, except in common with every other species of income.

But the reasoning fails when we have to deal with unredeemable charges, their burden and their duration are alike determined; there can be no injury inflicted by the sudden calling in of a rent-charge, the annual amount comprehends the liability of the proprietor, not like interest money, (the premium of forbearance,) the transfer of the land to a new proprietor will not divest it from the charge. Whilst thus great benefits can be conferred upon the proprietor, by taxing the rent-charger, no collateral injury can arise.

The change originally proposed in the law was just to the present proprietor, and it was politic in the event of a sale of his interest towards a future owner—who might be induced to purchase, from the conviction that he would have but his equitable proportion of rate to bear.

We very much regret that the House of Commons were obliged to acquiesce in the expunction of a clause which was calculated to remove one glaring anomaly in a poor law, where the pressure of liability is so unequally adjusted.

The manner in which the House of Lords dealt with the maximum clause has some justification, though, on the whole, we regret its loss.

The Premier refused to state from what sources the funds necessary, after payment of the maximum, were to be supplied, and whilst this important blank was left unfilled, we are not surprised at the erasure of the clause. If from the solvent unions, the imposition of this impost—which would be, in point of fact, a rate in aid—would be inconsistent with the plan of diminishing the area of electoral divisions, and individualising responsibility.

The loss of this clause is, however, more properly chargeable upon the Minister, than upon the House of Lords; and upon him also we charge a grave omission in not providing some remedy for the injustice under which tithe rent-charge owners labour by the operation of the poor law. No unbiassed mind can come to any other conclusion, than that it is grossly inequitable to impose a double deduction upon this species of property, more especially when its application is not for the benefit of the pauper, but in ease of the landlord. Now that the ad valorem scale of payment is, as between landlord and tenant, repealed, it was very simple, and certainly very just, to have extended the seu principle to landlord and tithe owner—a moiety of rate to be deducted from each pound of rent-charge.

The great inconsistency in the same code is nowhere more strikingly shewn, than by exempting a lay life rent-charger altogether, and doubly taxing the clerical life rent-charger, nay, more than doubly, for he is charged on his gross income, whilst every other rate payer is assessed upon his net.

A dozen lay lords were sufficiently powerful to make the measure deficient, and where it was deficient, inequitable—and not a voice was raised from the bench of bishops for the insertion of a clause, which would have been as clearly just, as the other was unjust. The House of Commons acquiesced in the one instance—it is not too much to say they would have done so in the other.

We have shown what the act does not contain; its contents will form ample subject for another article.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

RECEIVER COMMITTEE.

Right Hon. T. B. C. Smith.—June 28.(Continued from p. 332.)

1192. And that officer should be appointed by the Court, and be under the jurisdiction of the Court?—I should be very much disposed to make it a higher officer, appointed by the Government; a Master, or something of that sort; I should not like to see him a nominee of the Lord Chancellor; I think for the due discharge of what are called public duties a man ought to be independent.

1193. If the properties which he was to superintend were brought under the jurisdiction of the Court, would there not be some anomaly in his being independent of the Court?—I think not. The Masters are independent of the Lord Chancellor; he could not remove any of them; I mean that the Lord Chancellor should exercise no more control over such person than he could exercise over one of the Masters, or over myself; he might overrule one of our decisions, but he could not remove us from office.

1195. You would have the new officer to be appointed Master of Receivers, as we will term him, responsible and obedient to the Lord Chancellor?—Yes, just as much as a Master in Chancery is.

1199. This new Master, if he were appointed, would be in the position of a Master in Chancery, and removable only for misconduct?—Yes; but I have no doubt that both Houses of Parliament would have him removed, as a matter of course, if he were to think proper to dispute the power of the Lord Chancellor, or to act improperly.

1192. Mr. R. B. Osborne.] Sir Edward Sugden has hinted at something like a Master Receiver. Supposing the management of those estates were taken from the Court of Chancery, as they are at present managed, and concentrated under the control of one governing body, would you not give a power of appeal from that body?—I think so. Though I have said that the receiver should not be appointed by the Court of Chancery, still there should be a controul vested in the Lord Chancellor.

1134. Supposing the jurisdiction, as respects the present system of receivers, were taken from the Masters, would it not relieve the Masters of the Court of Chancery from a great deal of business?—It is very hard to anticipate the effects of any system of legislation. It was contemplated, and it was so stated in the House of Commons, that when the Encumbered Estates' Bill was passed, it would leave us much less to do; and there has hardly been an acre of land sold under it.

1157. But you would anticipate that there would be a diminution of business in your own court?—I have no doubt there would, to some extent: but on the other hand, this is to be kept in mind, that our business is increasing every day as to matters with which hitherto we have had very little to do; for example, in the present term I have had a petition under the Winding-up Stock Companies Act; I have had two petitions with reference to trustees investing money; and Acts of Parliament are passing from time to time giving summary jurisdiction to the Court on petitions. I dispose of every petition presented to the Court of Chancery which is moved in court, except in lunacy and bankruptcy cases; therefore you are in that way getting into the court session after session new business.

1188. The legislation has a tendency to increase the business in Chancery?—Yes; if you will look back for the last 10 years, you will find Acts passed in almost every session, giving summary jurisdiction by petition to the Court of Chancery in various cases.

1189. Sir J. Graham.] Have you admitted a classification of minors' and lunatics' property on the one hand, and of judgment creditor's praying for receivers on the other?—I admit that there is a distinction, but I have not stated that the property of minors and lunatics is well managed; on the contrary, I can state that I do not think it is in many cases well managed, and I can give a remarkable instance of it. There is a minor a ward of the Court, who is an Irish Peer and the mismanagement of that very estate has been the subject of evidence so long ago as the Landlord and Tenant Commission. The state of that property is such that I apprehend it will be very difficult to have it well managed. An application was made to me under very painful circumstances last year to pay the expenses at Eton of this young nobleman. I thought it my duty, as I always do, whenever an ex parte application is made, (for I find it absolutely necessary from experience to do so,) to take the trouble of looking closely into all the circumstances of the case. I called for all the papers and took them home with me, and on investigating the case I found that the rents and profits of the estate were insufficient to keep down the interest of the encumbrances, and that there was not a single farthing forthcoming to pay the Eton expenses; and I was obliged to adopt the painful course, considering I had no right to be generous at the expense of the encumbrancers, to refuse the application.

1140. My wish, in calling your attention to the classification which I suggested, was with reference to the equitable considerations which guided the Court in allowing an outlay for improvements upon properties under those distinct classes?—The distinction between the two classes of cases of receivers in what may be called a creditor's suit, and receivers in minors' or lunatics' matters, is this: the Court of Chancery is considered as representing the minor or lunatic, those persons respectively being under a legal disability; and, representing the minor and lunatic, the Lord Chancellor standing in the position of a landlord; and, standing in that position, he has a power which does not exist in the case of a receiver in a creditor's suit, and the power is accordingly not exercised in the latter case.

1141. When you speak of the power that the Lord Chancellor has, the power in both cases is limited by his discretion with a view to his equitable jurisdiction, it is not limited by statute?—No, there is no limitation by statute.

1142. Assuming that the estate of a minor or a lunatic is a solvent estate, if it were proved to the Court that a certain outlay would lead to an improvement in the fee-simple value, and even in the life interest, the Court in the case of lunatics and minors, would not hesitate to order that outlay?—I apprehend not; but there are some general orders of the Court which relate to outlay. But the practical difficulty upon the subject is that the Court has no means of deciding the propriety or the impropriety of the outlay, unless the Court is put in motion by somebody. If, for example, the guardian of any estate of a minor that was well circumstanced were to apply to me for permission to lay out money on improvements, I should not hesitate for a moment. Take the case of Lord Powerscourt: if Lord Roden, who is the guardian, said that he wanted so many hundreds of pounds to expend upon draining, I should have no hesitation, either in referring it to the Master, or in making the order myself upon motion.

1144. In the case of minors, the Court stands in loco parentis, and it would order the outlay?—Exactly.

1145. In the case of creditors' estates under receivers there is a wide difference, and according to the established usage of the Court, based upon equitable principles, such an outlay would not be sanctioned by the Court?—No it would not.

1146. In reference to the interest of a creditor in possession of a judgment, and still more of a mortgagee backed by a judgment, you would hold that any outlay for the permanent improvement of the estate would be in fact an outlay of their money?—Yes.

1147. And without their consent being given, you would not think of permitting that outlay?—I would not do it, because sitting at the Rolls I feel bound to act upon what I have always understood to be the strict rule; that rule has been, without the consent of the creditor, or of the inheritor, not to sanction any outlay upon improvements.

1148. Sir Edward Sugden was asked this question in No. 552. "In the case you have put, of an estate held on behalf of creditors, would not the Chancellor feel himself at liberty to order such an outlay?"—And his answer was, "No; if the parties consented to it, he would do it, but not otherwise. "There must be a motion and notice to the parties?—Yes." "And considerable expense incurred?—Yes, because it would be a question as to the laying out of money." Then in question 555, he was asked, "And even when it came on for hearing, it would be doubtful whether it was within the limits of his jurisdiction?" And his answer was, "When I was in Ireland I was constantly forced to refuse to relieve tenants on encumbered estates, because I had no power." "But if you had the power, you would have exercised it?—I should have exercised it without the slightest difficulty." He goes on to say that he thinks some legislative interference necessary, to enable the Chancellor within certain limits to sanction an outlay even upon estates under receivers for creditors. Do you concur in that opinion?—I think that is an exceedingly difficult question, having regard to the different circumstances of different estates. I will take this case, which frequently occurs in practice. Supposing there is no surplus rental whatever; suppose that the rental of the estate is either insufficient to keep down the interest of the encumbrancers, or only just sufficient to keep down the interest. Supposing an application were made for an outlay on drainage, of £300 or £400, the difficulty the Court would be placed in would be this: To allow such an outlay would be substantially making the property of the last encumbrancer bear the whole expense, for you must let the receiver lay out the money, and allow it in passing his account, in which case substantially it would be paid out of the property of the last encumbrancer. The effect of that outlay might be to leave the creditor and his family to starve. You are applying to improve what may be the property of others, when there may be no available surplus to be applied to the improvement of the estate.

1149. On the whole, viewing the difficulties which you have just enumerated, you would not be disposed by legislation to enlarge the power of the Great Seal with reference to outlay on estates for creditors?—I should say it was desirable to give the power to the Court; but what I mean to say is, that it would be misleading the Committee and the public to suppose that it would be productive of any very beneficial results, because there are a great number of cases in which the Court could not justify the outlay proposed.

1155. Mr. R. B. Osborne.] Are there not cases in which, on public grounds, it is necessary, irrespective of the interest of the owner of the estate, or of the creditor, an expenditure should be made where both the owner and the creditor oppose it?—That is a difficult question. If you give authority to the Lord Chancellor to decide that question, you give him authority to take money out of another man's pocket for the purpose of improving an estate. I am under the impression that the object to be attained by the Legislature is to simplify the proceedings of the Court and the law of conveyancing, and thereby to reduce the number of cases in which the Court of Chancery should appoint receivers to collect the income of estates. The great object is to keep property out of the court, and not to impose a duty upon the Lord Chancellor which he cannot satisfactorily perform in the management of estates. If an estate could be sold rapidly under the Court, a receiver ought not to be appointed, except under special circumstances.

1156. Would it not be better for the estate if the owner was appointed by the Court as receiver?—I have no doubt of it; and I have expressed the opinion very frequently at the Rolls, that it was very desirable that the agent of the estate should be appointed the receiver: and I will mention one case in your county which came before me, in which I effected that object by the order I drew up.

1157. Which was opposed on petition?—Yes, it was. There was a Mr. Norris who presented a petition under the Sheriff's Act for a receiver over the estate of a noble Lord, and he having presented a petition, the course was adopted (which I thought under the circumstances was a very fit course to be adopted though it was rather a contrivance) of getting a friend of the noble Lord to file a bill with the view of preventing the attorney or some improper person being placed as receiver over his property. When the motion came on, on the part of the creditor, there was a motion on the part of the friendly encumbrancer who had filed the bill, seeking in fact to get the carriage of the proceedings with a view of naming the receiver. You can have no idea of the struggle that was made in that case to get the carriage of the proceedings, although it was at the suit of a creditor who I believe has not the slightest chance of being paid a shilling; the solicitor by getting the appointment of the receiver would have put into his pocket some hundreds a-year in the shape of costs, and I defeated that by drawing up a special order, directing the Master in appointing a receiver to have regard to the person who was named being the fittest person for the office, without regard to the circumstance of the person proposing him having the carriage of the proceedings, and that led to Mr. Richard Pennefather being appointed receiver.

1158. You are aware that he was connected with the estate?—Yes, that was the reason I took these measures with a view to his being appointed.

1159. Are you aware that since he has had the receivership the estate has improved?—That was what I expected; my object was to have him appointed and I framed the order in such a way as to defeat the very pettifogging object of Mr. Norris and his solicitor to have the estate badly managed.

1161. Are you aware that there are improvements going on on that estate, through the appointment of Mr. Pennefather as receiver?—I did not hear that; but the advantage of having a proper receiver I can exemplify, by a case that came before me this term. An application was made to abate the rents upon that property; in general, when applications of that kind are made to me, I feel great difficulty in disposing of them; I cannot tell but that the receiver may be bribed to request me to abate the rents, when probably I ought not abate them. But when I saw the title of this estate in the paper, I stated that if Mr. Pennefather would write me a letter, stating what abatement he thought it would be right to make I would at once make the order.

1162. Are you not of opinion that if you could get men connected with properties as receivers, in a high class of life, and of high character, the whole system would be very much improved?—I think that the public is vitally interested in obtaining that result.

1163. Sir J. Graham.] Is it not within the purview of the Court, and within the power of the Court, to regulate the appointment of receivers?—I did so in that case, and in the case of another property, where the same circumstances occurred in another county. The gentleman who was agent of the estate was a gentleman of most respectable character; he had been agent for 30 years. I drew up a similar order in that case; I defeated the object of the petitioner, and I got that agent appointed receiver. But it rarely happens that the respondent or defendant comes forward to litigate the point; and the fact, as Master Murphy tells me, and which I believe to be so, is, that if Parliament were to call for a return of the parties who nominated the receivers, and whose names are I believe given in the Parliamentary return, in the vast majority of cases you would find that the receivers appointed were the nominees of the plaintiff's or petitioner's solicitors; and when you find that to be so, you may infer that in nine cases out of ten, if not in 99 out of 100, the appointment is not a proper one.

1165. If Sir Edward Sugden's suggestion of a Receiver Master were adopted, and if an officer were appointed of high station and character, and it were his duty, in the absence of parties, to make inquiries before the selection of a receiver were made, would that obviate the evil?—It would be better than the present system; but it is quite plain, in my opinion, that you ought to have the receiver named by some person who has no object in view but to have a local agent resident in the district, who is to act independently of the solicitor and everybody in the cause. By what particular machinery you are to arrive at that result is a question of difficulty.

1166. You have rejected the solicitor's clerk and the agent of the solicitor, and you have stated the difficulty of arriving at the truth in appointing a receiver in the absence of parties; does it not appear to you that the great evil of the system, whatever rules the Court may adopt, arises from the circumstance of so large a quantity of encumbered property coming within the jurisdiction of the Court?—No doubt.

1167. Is that evil without remedy?—I do not know that it is. I am under the impression that you might simplify conveyancing so much, that, having also simplified the proceedings of the Court, you might sell property quickly in Chancery, provided always, that from the improved state of the country there were purchasers for it. You might in that case sell property within a year after the filing of the bill, and the Court would then be justified in refusing to appoint a receiver in any case, unless there would be danger to the property. For example, if it were a leasehold, and the property liable to be evicted for non-payment of rent, or the property was deficient; but in case the property would be ultimately sufficient to pay every creditor, I think the Court ought not to take possession of the property if they could sell it within any reasonable time.

1168. You have stated what alterations of the law you would recommend with reference to judgments, and you have given in a draft of a bill which touches a portion of the evils which now arise from the law of conveyancing; if famine should disappear, and purchasers could be found, by these legislative alterations do you think that the condition of Ireland would be as much improved as we could hope to see it by legislation?—I have already stated that that bill had only relation to such alterations in the law of conveyancing as occurred to me upon the cases that arose in the court; but it would require a totally independent and distinct measure to simplify the law of conveyancing generally, not only with reference to sales in the court, but sales out of the court.

1169. Mr. R. Osborne.] Have you seen the plan which I have submitted to the Committee for the purpose of simplifying proceedings?—I have read it over, but I cannot say that I am familiar with it.

1170. You are not able to give any decided opinion whether it would or would not effectually remedy the present evils?—I have not the slightest hesitation in saying that it would be an improvement upon the present system; any system by which you would appoint independent receivers, whether they were nominated by the Government or by the Chancellor, or any person upon whom you would impose the performance of the duty, subject to public responsibility, whatever might be the details, would be an improvement.

1171. As far as you have read that plan you think it a great improvement upon the present system?—Yes, I do. I do not see how you could suggest anything worse than the present system.

1172. Any system would, in your opinion, be better than the present?—Yes.

1173. Sir J. Graham.] Does not the creation of new officers to a considerable extent, throughout the various counties of Ireland, unhappily open the door to a great deal of jobbing?—I have no hesitation in saying that the working of any system of this kind will depend upon the honest discharge of the duty by the persons in whom the patronage is vested. If it is vested in the Government, and it is made a means of political advancement to friends of the Government, it will fail. If the Lord Chancellor nominated persons without due regard to their qualifications, the measure would fail. Any measure of this kind must depend upon the honest discharge of public duty; but I do not suppose that there is a country gentleman of Ireland on the Committee who could not name at this moment, from recollection, three or four persons in every county, who it would be universally acknowledged by every gentleman in the county would discharge the duty in a satisfactory manner.

1174. Supposing the Executive Government were vested with the appointment of district receivers, would not the pressure upon the Government be excessive from each county to job the appointment?—That might be a reason for not giving it to the Government; but my opinion is that country gentlemen, acquainted with country duties, might be selected, and they would act under public responsibility, and I may say Parliamentary responsibility. There are persons in every county who might be found willing to take the office, and who would properly discharge the duties of it; but whether they would be the men selected by the persons in whom the patronage was vested is another question.

1175. Considering the present unhappy condition of Ireland, would not the competition for the office be extreme?—Yes; but on the other hand, from that very circumstance you might get gentlemen at present willing to take the office who formerly would not have accepted the office, and whose qualifications would stand higher than the qualifications of the persons selected would have been if the present unhappy state of affairs did not exist.

1176. Mr. R. B. Osborne.] You are of opinion that in adopting any system for the management of estates very much of the success of that system would depend upon the characters of the men who were appointed?—No doubt every thing would depend upon that; but if Colonel Dunne, or yourself or Sir William Somerville, were asked whether you could mention gentlemen in the counties in which you reside, you would have no difficulty in selecting persons who would be acknowledged by all as the best persons for executing the duties.

1177. Sir J. Graham.] Have you any security that those will be the gentlemen who will get the appointments?—No; but the success of the system will altogether depend upon it. The present evils arise from solicitors abusing their patronage, and the same evils would arise from a similar abuse of patronage under any system.

1180. Chairman.] Have you any objection to giving the Court the same power in creditors' receivers matters as they have in the case of minors?—I not only see no objection to it, but I should think on the whole it would be desirable; but I wish to guard myself against being understood to express an opinion that it could be carried to so great an extent as some persons would anticipate.

1181. The Court would be cautious in exercising the jurisdiction?—Yes.

1182. You are aware that it is proposed to make judgments for poor-rates a primary charge upon property?—I did not know that.

1185. Has your attention been called to the clause in the Sheriff's Act which gives the judgment creditor applying for a receiver the costs of the petition?—Yes, that is a mischievous clause. Although I observe that it purports upon the face of it not to be imperative upon the Court to allow those costs, yet practically, ever since the passing of Sir Michael O'Loughlen's Act, it has been the uniform practice, both of the Court of Exchequer and the Court of Chancery, to order those costs in priority; and therefore, though a single Judge may disapprove of that construction, or of the course adopted in carrying out the statute, it is too much to expect him to say, "I differ from all the Judges who have acted upon this construction." But I have not the slightest hesitation in saying that it is most desirable for the Legislature to alter that portion of the Act, and to let the costs be paid according to the priority of the demand. Any gentleman of the Committee who is desirous to know the mode in which the funds in these cases are distributed, and the rule of law applicable to their distribution, will find a most able judgment of Sir Edward Sugden upon the subject in the third volume of Jones and Latouch's Reports, in the case of Abbott v. Stratton. The rule, I may observe shortly to the Committee, is this: if a puisne creditor obtains an order for a receiver under Sir Michael O'Loughlen's Act, he is entitled (and that is reasonable, I consider,) to apply towards the payment of his puisne demand, all rents actually received before the order for extending the receiver; and thus, if a judgment creditor of the year 1848 had obtained an order for a receiver, and after six months a judgment creditor of the year 1847 extended the receiver, you would pay the puisne judgment creditor of 1848 so far as the rents actually realized by the receiver in the interval between his appointment and his extension. That is reasonable enough; but it has been carried further than that; although the receiver has not received one single fraction prior to the extending order, the costs of the puisne creditor are practically paid in priority. The language of Sir Michael O'Loughlen's Act would appear not to make it imperative. I will read the first words of the Act, which at first sight it would be said did not require alteration; the words of the 38th section are, "The Court shall have power, if it shall think fit, to direct in any case that the costs incurred by the person at whose instance the receiver was first appointed, in procuring such appointment, be paid out of the funds collected by the receiver, without regard to the priority of the person on whose application such receiver was appointed." That would appear to be discretionary with the Court, which perhaps it is; but, as I have already said, practically it has been the course in both courts always to pay those costs in the first instance; and if that rule had not existed in the case that was mentioned by Mr. Osborne just now, Mr. Norris would never have presented his petition, if he had not been certain that when he got his order he would at all events get his costs. The solicitor knowing that at all events the costs will be paid him, multiplies to a great extent applications under the Sheriff's Act; but if he knew that the costs would be paid according to the priority of the demand, except as regards the rents received prior to the extending order, he would be very slow in making his application.

1188. Sir J. Graham.] Whenever there is a new tenant to be obtained, is it the invariable practice that he obtains his occupation by public auction at the highest bidding?—I believe it to be the invariable practice.

1191. Master Brooke states that there is a sum paid, however small the yearly rent, whether £5 or £10 of £5 4s. 4d. for the lease and the recognizance?—That is applicable to every case.

1192. Do you think that those recognizances work well, or that they afford greater security for the payment of the rent?—No, my opinion is against them, considering the expense. But I have to observe that there is a great deal of difficulty in that as in other cases, in the Lord Chancellor taking upon himself to alter the course of practice which has existed for 99 years. I have the original Order, which was made in the year 1750, requiring security; it is an order of Lord Chancellor Newport, and bears date the 29th of March, 1750. I cannot find any earlier Order; this is the Order: "The Lord Chancellor declares it for a general rule for the future, that in every case where a Master shall set lands pursuant to the Orders of this Court, that he do take security for the rent." And Lord Manners, by an Order of the 23rd of November, 1821, went further; that Order provides in these terms: "Whereas it hath been made known to me that in several instances where a tenant hath been declared under the Order of the Court, that the recognizance entered into by such tenant has not been duly filed in the proper office; now I, the Right honourable Thomas Lord Manners, Lord High Chancellor of Ireland, do declare it as a general rule, that in future the Masters shall not perfect any lease under a letting to a tenant, until the certificate of the clerk of the recognizances, that the recognizance of such tenant has been duly enrolled, shall be first produced." Sir Edward Sugden, in his General Orders, adopted the same principle. The 142d of Sir Edward Sugden's Orders, following up the view of Lord Chancellor Newport and of Lord Manners, is this: "That the Masters shall not perfect any lease under a letting made to a tenant, until the certificate of the clerk of the recognizances shall be first produced, that the recognizance of such tenant has been duly enrolled." Upon the whole my opinion is, that it would be desirable to dispense with all those Orders.

1195. The burden upon an estate is very much increased by accumulated stamps?—Yes. My opinion, in considering the point is, that upon the whole it would be desirable to assimilate the case of tenants under the Court to that of other tenants; and to get rid of the expense, which though nominally paid by the tenant, may be considered very often as substantially paid by the estate; for you thereby deprive the tenant of money that is properly applicable to the payment of rent.

1200. Do you think the recognizance a security which it is desirable to uphold?—I should say that it would be desirable to do away with it.

1202. Have you ever known those recognizances put in suit?—Yes, I have; the recognizance is not a mere form; it is used as a mode of recovering rent.

1203. Is it of frequent occurrence that the recognizance is put in suit?—I should say not; at least I have not known of many cases of it.

1225. Is not the suit a peculiarly difficult one; is it not necessary to state the conditions of the lease?—No; a scire facias issues upon the recognizance, and it is heard upon the Petty Bag side of the Court of Chancery. Upon this scire facias it is open to the party to do what he very often does in suits upon recognizances; to employ some very clever special pleader, who puts in very special pleas. This terminates sometimes in a demurrer, and sometimes in a replication. And there is no doubt that in many cases before Sir Edward Sugden there were most technical objections raised.

1226. In fact, it is a suit peculiarly open to technical objections?—I consider that it so.

1227. Have you known many instances of money being recovered by suits on recognizances?—I cannot say that I have.

1228. Have you known one?—It would not come before me. I do not exercise jurisdiction on the Petty Bag side of the court; but, the way in which it comes before me is, by parties making an application at the Rolls to sue on the recognizance, the object being to save the expense of the proceeding. And when a party comes in that way there is an absolute order against the tenant, where an attachment has issued against him; but there is a conditional order against the sureties; but I cannot call to mind at this moment any particular case.

1229. In fact it is rather in terrorem than any practical benefit?—I should say that it has not been productive of much practical benefit.

1234. Mr. Solicitor-general.] The costs of such a proceeding I understand to be, including the costs of law, the costs of obtaining the order, the costs of the receiver and of perfecting the recognizance, and the costs of the tenants are not less than £40 or £50?—I do not think you should tot all those together; I do not know the exact sum, but if the Committee were desirous to know what the costs of appointing and extending a receiver were, I remember calling for bills of costs two or three times; I did so for my own information, and I can state generally that the cost of the appointment of a receiver I believe to be from £25 to £27, and the cost of extending a receiver £9 or £10.

1235. That includes no law costs whatever?—No.

1236. Does it include the costs of the tenant's recognizance?—I believe not; those are paid by the tenant himself.

1245. Mr. R. B. Osborne.] Recently small properties have come under the Court much more than formerly was the case?—There are a class of cases that are moved by junior counsel, and when at the bar I seldom moved them, and I cannot therefore give an answer to the question; but I have no hesitation in saying, that now the majority of cases in which I make orders for receivers upon judgments are small amounts. But one case came before me in the course of the present term, in which there was a debt for a large amount, £10,000 or £20,000. An application was made on behalf of a Scotch company who had lent the money and who had got a mortgage; and though there was not a shilling of interest due, though all the interest was paid up, there being an increased amount of interest payable in the event of the interest not being paid after a certain date, an application was made to me to appoint a receiver over the property, and I expressed a strong opinion as to the application being one which, if I had any discretion at all upon the subject, I should refuse, for I did not consider that it was intended in a judgment of that sort to raise £15,000 or £20,000 out of the rents and profits. But upon looking into the cases, I found that Sir Edward Sugden had, in Abbott v. Stratton, decided that the Court had no discretion, and I was therefore against my own feelings compelled to make that order, and a most oppressive one it was.

1246. Sir Edward Sugden said it was impossible for any country to prosper with any system existing such as the present system in Ireland, with so much property under the management of the Court; is that your opinion?—I entertain the strongest opinion that it is one of the greatest calamities of Ireland to have such a state of things existing.

1247. It is impossible for the Lord Chancellor himself, in consequence of the practice which has existed from prescription, to remedy that?—I think Sir Edward Sugden's orders are drawn up with the greatest care, and the greatest anxiety to manage the property as well as possible; and I am sure that the Committee, if they read those orders, must highly approve of them; and if they have been ineffectual in remedying the evil, I am under the impression that the Court of Chancery cannot manage property effectually under the present system.

1249. Sir J. Graham.] To return to the question of the limited power of leasing under the Court, do you think that it is susceptible of any improvement?—I entertain the opinion, that if you are not in a position by legislation to render the proceedings in the Court of Chancery so rapid as to get rid of the receiver in a reasonable period after the bill is filed, but you are to consider property as placed permanently under the Court for a number of years, there should be the power to make a lease for a definite period, irrespective of the termination of the cause, that is a husbandry lease for 21 years.

(To be continued.)

JUST PUBLISHED,

ADDISON ON THE LAW OF CONTRACTS.

A TREATISE on the Law of CONTRACTS, and Rights and Liabilities of Contractors. By C. G. ADDISON, Esq., of the Inner Temple, Barrister-at-Law. Second Edition, 8 vol. 8vo. price 42s.

RUSSELL ON ARBITRATION.

A TREATISE on the Power and Duty of an ARBITRATOR, and the Law of Submissions and Awards; with an Appendix of Forms, and of the Statutes relating to Arbitration. By FRANCIS RUSSELL, Esq., M.A., Barrister-at-Law. 1 vol. 8vo. 41s.

BAYLEY ON BILLS OF EXCHANGE.

SUMMARY of the Law of Bills of Exchange, Cash Bills, and Promissory Notes. By SIR JOHN BAYLEY, Esq., 1st Baron of the Exchequer. By G. W. DOWDESWELL, Barrister-at-Law. 1 vol. 8vo. 41s.

BURGE ON THE LAW OF SURETYSHIP.

COMMENTARIES on the Law of SURETYSHIP, and the Rights and Obligations of the parties thereto. By WILLIAM BURGE, Esq. Q.C. M.A. &c. 1 vol. 8vo. 10s.

STANFIELD'S PRECEDENTS IN CONVEYANCING.

A COLLECTION of Copyhold PRECEDENTS IN CONVEYANCING, arranged for general and ordinary use, together with Introductory Treatises upon the various transactions occurring incident to Estates of customary tenure, &c. By JOHN STANFIELD, Esq. 1 vol. 8vo. 12s.

QUESTIONS FOR LAW STUDENTS on the Law of England. Edition of Mr. Serjeant Stephen's New Commentaries on the Law of England. By JAMES STEPHEN, Esq., of the Middle Temple, Barrister-at-Law. 1 vol. 8vo. cloth boards, price 10s. 6d.

CONCISE FORMS OF WILLS, with Practical Notes. By W. HAYES and T. JARMAN. 2d Edition, cloth boards. 10s.

THE LAW OF HUSBAND AND WIFE. A Treatise on the Law of Husband and Wife, respecting Property, and the Rights of the Parties, and comprising Jacobs' Notes and Additions. By J. E. WRIGHT, Esq., of the Inner Temple, Barrister-at-Law. 2d Edition, 8vo. 22s. 10s. boards.

A TREATISE ON THE LAW OF LEGACIES, by the late R. S. DONNISON ROVER, Esq., Barrister-at-Law, Gray's Inn; and by H. H. WHITE, Esq., Barrister-at-Law, of the Middle Temple. Fourth Edition. 2 vols. royal 8vo. 28s. 6d.

A TREATISE ON THE LAW OF EVIDENCE, as administered in England and Ireland; with Maxims, Rules, American and other Foreign Laws. By JOHN FITZPATRICK, Esq., of the Middle Temple, Barrister-at-Law. 2 vols. royal 8vo. 28s.

A SELECTION OF LEADING CASES IN VOL. 9. Branches of the Law, with Notes. By JOHN WILLIAMS, Esq., of the Inner Temple, Barrister-at-Law. Third Edition. By J. E. WRIGHT, Esq., and JAMES S. WILLES, Esq., of the Inner Temple, Barristers-at-Law. 2 vols. royal 8vo. 28s. 12s. 6d.

A TREATISE ON THE LAW OF INTERPRETATION, containing all the Reported Cases in this Country and in England with an Appendix, containing the Act 9 & 10 Vic. c. 94, with the Acts, Rules, Orders, and the Second on a Fugitive from Ireland. By BLACKMAN, Esq., Barrister-at-Law. 8vo. price 10s.—free by Post.

A PRACTICAL TREATISE ON PLEADINGS IN A BILL in the COURTS OF EQUITY in IRELAND, under the General Orders. By ALFRED McFARLANE, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

REPORTS OF PRACTICE AND NISI PRIUS CASES (including Registry and Civil Cases) DECIDED IN THE SUPERIOR COURTS, and at the AFTER SITTINGS; with Notes and Table of Cases. By J. BLACKMAN, W. J. DODD, and J. W. BAKER, Esqrs., Barristers-at-Law. Part IV., completing Vol. I., price 10s.

EDWARD J. MILLIKEN, LAW BOOKSELLER AND PUBLISHER, 15, COLLEGE GREEN, DUBLIN.

All communications for the IRISH JURIST are to be sent, either to the Editor, with the Publisher, E. J. MILLIKEN & CO., 15, COLLEGE GREEN. Correspondents will please give the Name and Address, as the columns of the paper cannot be occupied with anonymous Communications—nor will the Editor be responsible for the return of Manuscripts, &c.

Orders for the IRISH JURIST left with E. J. MILLIKEN & CO., 15, COLLEGE GREEN, or by letter (post-paid), will ensure its prompt delivery in Dublin, or its being forwarded to the Country, by Post, on the day of publication.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.—(payable in advance). Yearly, 30s. Half-yearly, 17s. Quarterly, 8s.

Printed by THOMAS ISAAC WHITE, at his Printing Office, in G. FLEET STREET, in the Parish of St. Andrew, and published by E. J. MILLIKEN, in same Parish, by EDWARD JOHNSON, MILLIKEN, residing at the same place, all being in the County of the City of Dublin. Saturday, September 1, 1860.

THE Irish Jurist

No. 45.—VOL. L.

SEPTEMBER 8, 1849.

PRICE {Per Annum, 4s 10s.
Single Number, 6d.

The Names of the Gentlemen who favour THE IRISH JURIST with Reports in the several Courts of Law and Equity in Ireland, are as follows:—

Court of Chancery, including Bankruptcy Appeals.....	{ ROBERT LONG, Esq., and JOHN PITT KENNEDY, Esq., Barristers-at-Law.	Court of Exchequer Chamber.....	{ JOHN BLACKHAN, Esq., and A. HICKEY, Esq., Barristers-at-Law.
Kells Court.....	{ WILLIAM BURKE, Esq., and WILLIAM JOHN DUNDAS, Esq., Barristers-at-Law.	Queen's Bench, including Civil Bill and Registry Appeals.....	{ FLORENCE M'CARTHY, Esq., and SAMUEL V. PERY, Esq., Barristers-at-Law.
Equity Exchequer.....	{ CHARLES HARR HEMPHILL, Esq., and WILLIAM HICKSON, Esq., Barristers-at-Law.	Exchequer of Pleas, including Manor Court and Registry Appeals.....	{ CHAS. H. HEMPHILL, Esq., and WILLIAM HICKSON, Esq., Barristers-at-Law.
Bankrupt Court.....	{ ROBERT GRIFFIN, Esq. and W.G. CHAMNEY, Esq. Barristers-at-law.	Common Pleas.....	{ ROBERT GRIFFIN, Esq. and W.G. CHAMNEY, Esq. Barristers-at-law.
		Admiralty Court.....	{ ROBERT GRIFFIN, Esq. and W.G. CHAMNEY, Esq. Barristers-at-law.

DUBLIN, SEPTEMBER 8, 1849.

THE Legislature have passed "An Act to amend the Law concerning Judgments in Ireland." During its progress through the House of Commons it was altered three times, and is now so curtailed of its just proportions that no one familiar with its first appearance could recognize its present features. The English Solicitor-general cut off a limb here, and added a joint there, so hastily that it is not surprising that it should have been put together a little imperfectly.

What measure could survive the rapid changes it underwent, and yet retain a regular and distinctive character? The bill originally contemplated that no future judgments were to be a charge upon lands until lodged in the hands of the sheriff, and that no receivers were to be appointed by petition. The latter left judgments a charge in all cases from their entry, where the debt exceeds £150, and even under that sum in Courts of Equity when administering assets, and a receiver may, in all cases, be obtained where the debt exceeds the before mentioned sum, and the judgment is a year old; and it is not a little doubtful whether a receiver cannot be obtained upon a judgment for even so small a sum as £10 after the death of the cognitor.

The history of the measure shews that it is the reflex of the opinion of the judges and Irish lawyers who were examined before the Poor Law and Receiver Committees, and that the Solicitor-general took up the subject as a matter of duty, quite ready to adopt the views of "gentlemen opposite." He appears, in fact, to have acted on the belief that the law of judgments in Ireland was pretty much the same as that in England, and that where it differed,—an assimilation would be desirable,—and where it was alike, a change.

The law of the two countries differed in the summary power to appoint receivers, and in the power of assignment at law; it coincided in making judgments charges upon lands from the time of their entry. The first bill placed the law of the two countries upon the same footing as to receivers, and the power of assignment, and varied it by making judgments in Ireland a charge only from the time of lodging the writ in the sheriff's hands.

These changes are based upon the evidence given by Dr. Longfield and Mr. Butt; the former observes, "I would have judgments placed in the same position as they were in formerly; that the judgment creditor should have the right of execution against all the property which the debtor had when he took out execution against him, but he should not have the right to disturb the possession of any purchaser of real and personal property from his debtor, and the judgment then would cease to be an incumbrance."

And Mr. Butt, in reply to the following question:—"What would you say if it were limited to the estates a man had at the time of obtaining judgment?—I think that would be an improvement; but having thought a good deal upon that subject, I would be strongly of opinion that the best thing that could be done would be to abolish altogether the law, making judgments a charge upon landed property." And again—"I would abolish the law of making a judgment a charge upon land, as it now is, I would allow a landed proprietor to borrow money on judgment, under the penalty, if he did not repay it, of having his creditor take him in execution, or take his goods in execution, or take his land in execution; but I would not allow a judgment to subsist as an indefinite charge upon land."

This evidence was given in March, and the first judgment bill was laid on the table of the House in June—an advanced period of the session; and whilst the Receiver Committee was sitting, it adopted the ideas, and carried out the views of the witnesses from whom we have quoted.

Thus judgments were to be no longer assignable, no longer a charge upon land from the time of entry, only from the time of taking it in execution. This was a bold change, and coming from the law officer of the Crown, indorsed with his name, that of Lord John Russell, and Sir William Somerville, should have been a well advised one.

The very day before its introduction—if we remember rightly—Sir Edward Sugden gave his evidence before the Receiver Committee; it was very masterly evidence, and much attention was naturally directed to it. Though fully alive to the evils, connected with the law of judgments, his knowledge of their magnitude made him cautious as to the remedy.

He is asked—"You have said that, whether wisely or not, we have gone too far in establishing the effect of judgments in both countries to recede. Having given that answer generally, what would you say to a revision of the law in Ireland, especially with respect to judgments being made assignable, and the effect of Sir Michael O'Loughlen's act more particularly?—I think it would not be advisable to take away the power of assigning judgments, though it may be open to abuse, because now judgments have become almost as universal as bills of exchange. I can imagine now a small tradesman getting a judgment for a mere household debt, and then assigning it to another person in order to avoid the odium of getting a receiver over his customer's property. I think that not at all desirable, but that is the custom of the country generally. It is very desirable, in my opinion, that the law of Ireland should be altered in this respect; it might, perhaps, be considered a strong measure to take away receivers upon petitions altogether; but I should have no hesitation, if I had the power, in very much limiting the operation of the Sheriffs' act, and the subsequent acts, and in placing judgments in Ireland more upon the footing on which they stand in England; for example, if I had the power, I should not hesitate to limit the amount of money for which a judgment should bind the property, so as to give a right to a receiver under those acts; that is, I would take some reasonable sum as a proper subject for a judgment and receiver, considering the expense attending such a proceeding; but as regards smaller sums, I would leave the creditor to his common law remedies, and to that credit upon which he no doubt relied when he furnished the matters in his trade. If that line were drawn, and another provision introduced into the law, that no judgment creditor should have a receiver until after a certain period from the time of his obtaining a judgment, I think the evil would be very much struck at, without alarming, which one would be very unwilling to do, the people in Ireland at the change in a law which they seem to be very much attached to."

These were Sir Edward Sugden's suggestions; he coincided also in the expediency of allowing the costs of appointing or extending a receiver, to be paid in the priority of the judgment, and not to be the first charge on the fund.

The Master of the Rolls was examined on the 28th of June, and he is asked—"Would you prefer the government measure, which provides that judgments shall not be assignable, and that after the 31st December next, no judgment creditor shall be entitled to apply to the court for a receiver, or would you prefer Sir E. Sugden's proposition, that judgments should continue assignable, but that no judgment creditor should apply for a receiver until 12 months elapsed, and that a line should be drawn with reference to the amount; and that no receiver should be appointed for property under a certain amount, but that the law should remain unchanged with respect to all judgments above that amount?—It is a difficult question to answer what would be the comparative effect of the two plans; but if I were at liberty to give an indirect answer to the question, I would say that I should like to have a compound of both. I should be disposed to repeal the Act which authorises the assigning of judgments, and try for the present the modified remedy that is proposed by Sir Edward Sugden, of preventing any person from obtaining a receiver unless the judgment exceeded a certain amount."

The Solicitor-general must have thought this a most happy suggestion—a safe middle course; it enabled him to retain one of the original features of his bill, and retaining that he could afford to alter the rest, so as to harmonise with the views of Sir Edward Sugden. And, accordingly, on the 10th of July, he brought in an amended bill without a word of explanation; it adopted the £150 range, and he ultimately introduced the clause which gave the year of grace, and placed the costs of appointing a receiver in the same priority as the debt. Then at the sag-end of the session the bill was entirely changed, and sent up to the House of Lords where it had not time to be discussed; and so it passed.

That this is the true history of the measure, is obvious, and surely this hasty and feeble spirit of legislation by an English lawyer on an essentially Irish subject is not the spirit or the manner in which legislation should be conducted. However, the Irish Bar deserve that it should be so, when the practice is allowed to exist of entrusting Irish Government legislation to English Law-officers.

Of the measure itself we shall at present write but little; all the changes that we advocated have been effected, and but one that we opposed has been made—we preferred the former law to that which prohibits the legal assignment of judgments. With this exception its main features represent our views, but we asked for a little delay, that the measure might be duly considered, that it might accompany a change in the system of receivers, and that its blemishes—the necessary result of precipitancy—might be removed. We regret for the sake of the country that delay was not granted.

With a little more care the Act could have been rendered more explicit. In point of phraseology nothing can be more awkward than the second section.

The judgments to which the Act is applicable is nowhere defined, and are left to implication except the following can be considered a definition: "And the judgments to which under this Act the provisions of the said Acts of the 6th of Wm. 4, and 4th of her Majesty, shall not extend or be applicable, are hereinafter referred to as judgments, subject to the provisions of this Act." Must it ever be that our glorious language becomes confused and inexplicit when applied to the wording of Acts of Parliament?

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

RECEIVER COMMITTEE.

Right Hon. T. B. Smith.—June 28.

(Continued from p. 340.)

1250. And to be binding upon the purchaser or upon any other party?—Yes, because it would be open to the owner, if the Master chooses to let it at an under value, to come to the Court, and complain of the letting.

1251. You have pointed out already that it is not a fixed term of seven years, or during his pendens, but that it is terminable whenever the estate is sold?—Yes; in consequence of that, questions have arisen in court, as to the right to what are called emblements. At common law, if a person holds for a term uncertain, determinable by the act of God, he is entitled to the crop. I remember arguing the case, and succeeding in establishing that that principle ought to be applied to a lease for seven years, pending the cause; and that if the purchaser went in when there was a crop standing, he ought to give the tenant the crop; and that has been acted upon.

1252. Would it be necessary by legislation to give the Court the power, or is it within the jurisdiction of the Court to grant longer leases?—I think it should be done by legislation. It is very difficult to draw the line, as to the power of the Lord Chancellor in making general orders; but when there is a complete change in the system, I think the Lord Chancellor has a right to the sanction of Parliament, and ought not to be subject to observations as to his introducing novelties never heard of before.

1254. Did not Sir Edward Sugden's new Rule of Court give the power of distress to the receiver upon five months' arrear of rent?—Yes, there is a general order upon that point.

1255. Has that order worked well or ill?—I do not see any objection to the order; it is the general custom in Ireland that the tenantry should pay their rent one half year within the other, and the object of fixing five months was a sort of recognition of that. A receiver cannot distrain until five months have elapsed, without the order of the Master; but the general order expressly provides that if he applies to the Master and shows any particular circumstances which will make it appear that he ought to distrain immediately, he may obtain power to distrain.

1256. We have been told that the five months' grace has allowed time for the midnight flight of the tenant?—If the receiver was to do his duty properly and was resident, he could give some hint to the Master, which would lead the Master to order an immediate distress.

1257. You would not recommend any alteration in the order in that respect?—No, I think it is sufficient as it stands.

1258. Mr. R. B. Osborne.] The receiver communicates with the attorney and he makes a statement of facts?—Yes, that is one of the objections of the present system; and if there were a Master of Receivers, one of the advantages to be derived from that would be, that the costs would be enormously decreased. If you had such an officer in Dublin, the business ought not to be done by attorneys, but by local receivers communicating with the head officer in Dublin; and if you had the intervention of attorneys it would be desirable to place them on salaries, by which you might diminish the expense thousands of pounds.

1259. Sir J. Graham.] An objection has been urged against the law in Ireland with respect to not distraining growing crops; have you formed an opinion upon that subject?—I formed an opinion at the time the Bill was prepared.

1260. How has it worked?—I am against the system of distraining growing crops; I cannot say how it has worked, but at times there were very oppressive uses made of that power. It was very much the custom to place keepers on properties when the crop was getting ripe, and oppressive use was made of the power of distraining; upon the whole, I am disposed to think that the law was rightly altered.

1261. Chairman.] Do you think it desirable that all law proceedings should be taken in the name of the receiver, in order to get rid of all the difficulties about demises; in fact, that he should represent all parties in legal proceedings?—Yes, I see no objection to that.

1262. A great deal of difficulty now arises from that cause?—Yes.

William Tighe Hamilton, Esq.—June 29, 1849.

1263. Chairman.] What offices do you hold in the Court of Exchequer in Ireland?—The office of Second Remembrancer.

1267. The Chief and Second Remembrancers discharge analogous duties on the equity side of the Exchequer to what the Masters do in the Court of Chancery?—Precisely; with this difference, that certain heads of business are done by the one and certain heads by the other, and not a certain quantity of all the different kinds by one, and a certain quantity of all the different kinds by the other, as in the Court of Chancery. What I mean is this, that the Chief Remembrancer disposes of all references in causes, and the Second Remembrancer disposes of all references in petition matters, audits the receivers' accounts, and taxes all costs; so that I have three heads of duties, and he has one; but of course the one head of business which he discharges is a far more important one than the three heads which I discharge.

1268. In your position of Second Remembrancer have you had ample opportunities of judging of the system of the management of estates under receivers?—I have; for I have audited all the receivers' accounts for the last five years, and done all acts necessary with respect to the management of the estates.

1269. The estates under the Court of Exchequer are all cases of creditors' receivers?—All cases of creditors, except where a minor happens to be incidentally interested. There are some instances in which a minor is proceeded against where he has a joint interest with some one else.

1271. Can you give the Committee any idea of the whole amount of property with reference to the rental under the Court of Exchequer?—The only way in which I can arrive at that is by the Parliamentary Return made, I think, in 1847, of the amount in the Courts of Exchequer and Chancery.

1272. You can give nothing but what appears upon the Return?—Nothing more, except by estimate and my own observation of what goes on.

1273. Can you say about what the amount is?—I think by the return it was about £160,000. But there is a great number of accounts both in the Exchequer and in Chancery, more I think in the Exchequer than in Chancery, which have not hitherto been passed annually, and with regard to some of which there has been a very long lapse of time; for instance, I have within the last month passed several accounts which have been standing over for several years, and one which never had been audited for nine years.

1274. Receivers' accounts?—Receivers' accounts. The consequence of that is that the Parliamentary Return must be to a certain extent defective; but by the nearest estimate I can make out, allowing for that, I should say there was perhaps £180,000 a year in the Exchequer; and by a similar process of reasoning, founded upon the same Parliamentary Return, I think the quantity in Chancery is about £640,000.

1275. But you find it very difficult to ascertain the amount from those returns?—Very difficult; because some of the returns are very inaccurate.

1276. They only give those estates where the receiver has accounted?—Yes; those two together will make a total amount in the two courts of £800,000. Then from the enormous rate at which receivers have been latterly appointed and none discharged, I should say that it would be a very fair estimate to say, that the amount now under the two courts is a million.

1277. That is creditors' receivers?—That is creditors' receivers, as distinguished from lunatics and minors.

1279. Has the amount been increasing very rapidly of late?—It has. As an instance of that I may mention that it appears by the books that we keep in the Chief Remembrancer's office and in my office, that for the last five years, the average number of receivers appointed by the Chief Remembrancer in causes from the 1st of January to the 1st of June was 8; this year it has been 32. Then in matters which are in my department, I find that whereas I used for the last five years to appoint an average of 12, I have this year appointed 81.

1280. That is in judgment matters?—In judgment matters.

1282. Are they generally judgments above £100 or under?—I should say decidedly the average are under £100.

1288. Is there any means, in appointing receivers in those small cases, of testing the fitness of the person to be a receiver?—Very little. It appears to me that taking the rental of the property in the two courts at a million, that amounts as nearly as possible to one-nineteenth of the whole country. I have taken some pains to ascertain that, in order to show the enormous extent of country which is subject to receivers.

(To be continued.)

JUST PUBLISHED,

ADDISON ON THE LAW OF CONTRACTS

A TREATISE on the Law of CONTRACTS, and Rights and Liabilities of Contractor. By C. G. ADDISON, Esq., of the Inner Temple, Barrister-at-Law. Second Edition, 2 vols. 8vo. price 10s.

RUSSELL ON ARBITRATION.

A TREATISE on the Power and Duty of an ARBITRATOR, and the Law of Submissions and Awards, with an Appendix of Forms, and of the Statutes relating to Arbitration. By FRANCIS RUSSELL, Esq., M.A., Barrister-at-Law. 1 vol. 8vo. 2s. 6d.

BAYLEY ON BILLS OF EXCHANGE

SUMMARY of the Law of Bills of Exchange, Cash Bills, and Promissory Notes. By SIR JOHN BAYLEY, Esq., of the Inner Temple, Barrister-at-Law. 1 vol. 8vo. 2s. 6d.

BURGE ON THE LAW OF SURETISHIP.

COMMENTARIES on the Law of SURETISHIP, and the Rights and Obligations of the parties thereto. By WILLIAM BURGE, Esq. Q.C. M.A. &c. 1 vol. 8vo. 10s.

STANFIELD'S PRECEDENTS IN CONVEYANCING

A COLLECTION of Copyhold PRECEDENTS in CONVEYANCING, arranged for general and ordinary use, together with Introductory Treatises upon the various transactions and occurrences incident to Estates of customary tenure, &c. By JOHN STANFIELD, Esq. 1 vol. 8vo. 12s.

QUESTIONS FOR LAW STUDENTS on the Small Edition of Mr. Serjeant Stephen's New Commentaries on the Law of England. By JAMES STEPHEN, Esq. of the Middle Temple, Barrister-at-Law. 1 vol. 8vo. cloth boards, price 10s. 6d.

CONCISE FORMS OF WILLS, with Practical Notes. By W. HAYES and T. JARMAN. 4th Edition, cloth 10s. 6d.

THE LAW OF HUSBAND AND WIFE, with Practical Notes on the Law of Husband and Wife as respects Property, jointly and upon Roger's Trustee, and comprising Jacobs' Notes and Additions. By J. E. WRIGHT, Esq. of the Inner Temple, Barrister-at-Law. 1 vol. 8vo. 2s. 6d.

A TREATISE ON THE LAW OF LEGACIES, by the late R. R. DONNISON BOPER, Esq., Barrister-at-Law, of Gray's Inn; and by H. H. WHITE, Esq., Barrister-at-Law, of the Middle Temple. Fourth Edition, 2 vols. royal 8vo. 28s. 6d.

A TREATISE ON THE LAW OF EVIDENCE, administered in England and Ireland; with Illustrations from American and other Foreign Laws. By JOHN FITZ TAYLOR, Esq. of the Middle Temple, Barrister-at-Law. 2 vols. royal 8vo. 28s. 6d.

A SELECTION OF LEADING CASES IN VARIOUS BRANCHES of the Law, with Notes. By JOHN WILLIAMSON, Esq. of the Inner Temple, Barrister-at-Law. Third Edition, by R. KEATING, Esq., and JAMES S. WILLES, Esq., of the Inner Temple, Barristers-at-Law. 2 vols. royal 8vo. 28s. 6d.

A TREATISE ON THE LAW OF INTERPLEADER, containing all the Reported Cases in this Country and in England, with an Appendix, containing the Act 9 & 10 Vic. c. 54, with Forms of Affidavits, Rules, Orders, and the Record on a Fulper Issue. By J. H. BLACKMAN, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

EDWARD J. MILLIKEN, LAW BOOKSELLER AND PUBLISHER, 15, COLLEGE GREEN, DUBLIN.

All communications for the IRISH JURIST are to be left, addressed to the Editor, with the Publisher, E. J. MILLIKEN, at COLLEGE GREEN. Correspondents will please give the Name and Address, in the columns of the paper cannot be connected with answers to anonymous Communications; nor will the Editor be accountable for the return of Manuscripts, &c.

Orders for the IRISH JURIST left with E. J. MILLIKEN, at COLLEGE GREEN, or by letter (post-paid), will ensure its prompt delivery in Dublin, or its being forwarded to the Country, by Post, on the day of publication.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION—(payable in advance):
Yearly, 30s. Half-yearly, 17s. Quarterly, 8s.

Printed by THOMAS ISAAC WHITE, at his Printing Office, No. 6, FLEET-STREET, in the Parish of St. Andrew, and published at 15, COLLEGE GREEN, in same Parish, by EDWARD JOHNSON MILLIKEN, residing at the same place, all being in the County of the City of Dublin. Saturday, September 3, 1860.

THE Irish Jurist

No. 46.—VOL. I.

SEPTEMBER 15, 1849.

PRICE { Per Annum, £1 10s.
Single Number, 9d.

The Names of the Gentlemen who favour THE IRISH JURIST with Reports in the several Courts of Law and Equity in Ireland, are as follows:—

Court of Chancery, including Bankruptcy Appeals.....	{ ROBERT LONG, Esq., and JOHN PITT KENNEDY, Esq., Barristers-at-Law.	Court of Exchequer Chamber.....	{ JOHN BLACKMAN, Esq., and A. HICKEY, Esq., Barristers-at-Law.
Bells Court.....	{ WILLIAM BURKE, Esq., and WILLIAM JOHN DUNDAS, Esq., Barristers-at-Law.	Queen's Bench, including Civil Bill and Registry Appeals.....	{ FLORENCE M'CARNEY, Esq., and SAMUEL V. PREY, Esq., Barristers-at-Law.
Equity Exchequer.....	{ CHARLES HARE HENPHILL, Esq., and WILLIAM HICKSON, Esq., Barristers-at-Law.	Exchequer of Pleas, including Manor Court and Registry Appeals.....	{ CHAS. H. HENPHILL, Esq., and WILLIAM HICKSON, Esq., Barristers-at-Law.
Bankrupt Court.....	{ ROBERT GRIFFIN, Esq. and W.G. CHAMNEY, Esq. Barristers-at-law.	Common Pleas.....	{ ROBERT GRIFFIN, Esq. and W. G. CHAMNEY, Esq. Barristers-at-law.
		Admiralty Court.....	{ ROBERT GRIFFIN, Esq. and W. G. CHAMNEY, Esq. Barristers-at-law.

DUBLIN, SEPTEMBER 15, 1849.

Our volumes of last week and this contain the first parts of a Digest of all the cases reported in our Irish Courts of Law since the commencement of the Irish Law Reports. It has been a work of very considerable labour, but, being so very desirable, we trust that it will prove acceptable to our professional brethren.

The multiplication of cases, without any attempt at their classification, is a source of great labour to the industrious lawyer, and not calculated to be useful, except they be susceptible of arrangement. One circumstance that has much impeded our progress, has arisen from the difficulty of finding a proper heading under which to place cases of very difficult definition. We have, however, we hope, reduced chaos into order; and will present to the Irish Bar a work, which has not been attempted since Mr. Archer's Digest. Next year we shall give a Digest of all our reported cases in Courts of Equity; and thus, having brought down our compilation to the period of publication, each volume will contain the Digest of the cases reported in Ireland during the then current year; and we shall then have more than redeemed the promise which we made to our readers, in our first number, of presenting them with an Index of the cases of each year.

We cannot refuse admission to the following letter—We are by no means so enamoured of our jury system as our correspondent appears to suppose; we should, however, suggest to him, that he should study a little more minutely the details of the French and Scotch systems before he pronounces so unhesitatingly in their favour. It is a singular feature in our criminal jurisprudence, that in all questions of fact, the verdict of a jury is irreversible, though the right to the possession of a single acre of land may be untested frequently; but, when once the verdict of guilty has been recorded, there is no appeal. Does not this circumstance afford a powerful argument against any change in our present system—and prove that the evidence should be so clear, as to convince even the most obtuse, of the guilt of the accused? The individual sufferings which our correspondent has endured, we regret for his sake, and we quite agree with him that it is a barbarous notion to starve a jury into a verdict: on this point, a change is very desirable. The instances of misconduct in English juries, to which he refers, he is probably not aware are punishable. Juries should not be starved; and they should, if guilty of misconduct, be punished. So long as the great bulk of the people of England acquiesce in requiring unanimity, we think the existing law should be suffered to remain.

To the Editor of the Irish Jurist.

SIR,

Though I am no lawyer,—your courtesy will, perhaps, allow me the privilege of occupying a page or two in the Irish Jurist, when I inform you that I have had no little experience in some of the details of law, and more especially in the working of our jury system. It has been my misfortune to have been locked up in cold winter nights, on three or four occasions, and to have been frequently associated with men whose avowed partizanship, or obstinacy in unintentional error, has baffled the ends of justice, and occasioned extreme annoyance to those of the jury who have formed contrary judgments.

Assuming, Sir, that you will permit one of your lay readers to address to you a few observations on a point which involves no legal technicalities, or intricate embarrassments, and only relates to a matter which unprofessional men like myself may be supposed to understand, and in which they have a personal concern, I shall, as briefly as possible, state my point. It is this:—

Does the English law, which requires the entire unanimity of juries in giving verdicts, effect the objects of justice so surely as the jury laws of Scotland or of France? I think, Sir, that it does not.

Perhaps it may not be superfluous for me to assume in limine that I am not an advocate for hazardous or crotchety innovations; our judicial system has worked admirably in its grand movements; the main pivots upon which it revolves are perfect, and the aphorism—Nolumus leges Angliæ mutari—is revered by me, but with qualification as to details; these in innumerable instances, require remodification. Prejudice alone can blind thinking men, so that they cannot perceive that the ever progressive state of society requires continued modification of the laws which are to regulate its concordant movements. Dare I hint to you, Sir, the heretical insinuation—as you may indignantly deem it—that the working of that great fundamental law of the British constitution, trial by jury, is not perfect in its organization; that it wants a little oiling, and a little screwing, to make it move more effectively? What! you will possibly exclaim, Touch the palladium under which we have maintained our liberty for nine centuries.

Bear with me a moment. I am still smarting in imagination from the long wearisome sittings I have undergone in jury rooms; craving from the hunger I have endured; suffering—sympathetically—from the nausea, the misery of sleeplessness, the cold, noise, senseless babbling, and angry disputation I have suffered during an imprisonment of twenty-four hours, and all this without the satisfaction of recording an honest verdict, though eleven out of twelve of the jury were decidedly agreed in opinion!

This is not an extreme case. The records of Irish trials furnish several instances in which justice has been frustrated by the determination of one juror—unencumbered by conscience, or, it may be, without understanding—who will not permit a just verdict to be returned. There have been jurors without regard for the moral obligation of an oath, and there will be such.

It may be said, that though cases occur in Ireland in which jurors occasionally forswear themselves, or delude themselves through some quackery of conscience, and illegitimate compromise between a correct judgment on the one side and the tendencies of party on the other, no such abuse of the jury system occurs in England. This I deny to be fact. I know that the trial by jury is not unfrequently nullified in England by the pig-headedness of a single juror—rarely indeed from political or sectarian influences, but from that deficiency of intellect and obliquity of moral perception by which jurymen, like other men, are sometimes distinguished. I know that a minority of three or four out of twelve have persuaded the majority to concur in a verdict contrary to their own opinions, in order to avoid the tedium of a lock-up, or the fancied discredit of an absolute disagreement. I can vouch for the fact that verdicts in England have been returned by a jury who have allowed them to be decided by thin loss-up of a shilling. I would put it to the calm deliberation of any person familiar with the management of juries in cases of a party nature, whether the grand consideration be not, “Who are on the jury?” “A. B. C. are good men and true, but D. would rather chew the leather of his boots for luncheon, dinner, and supper during a week than find the traverser guilty.”

Now, Sir, I respectfully urge that no ground should be left for such observations; and I may farther that society ought not to be satisfied with a system which involves at least the possibility of manœuvring in order to select the individuals who are to compose a jury. Such manœuvring arises from the law which requires unanimity; where there is manœuvring the fountain of justice is corrupted. No society ought to be content with the results of trial by jury unless all men who are legally and morally eligible to act as jurors be called to discharge their function according to the exact order of their names on the lists, without any selection whatever, but subject to challenge. At present, even the most upright and impartial sheriff will be an object of confidence to one party, and of suspicion to the other, where the issue of the trial materially affects the interests, or agitates the passions of the antagonist sides.

But why, it may be said, should a change be necessary now in the jury system, when we have, in the classes from which jurors are usually chosen, more independence of mind than was to be found in former times, when our forefathers were satisfied with the system? I might, perhaps reply, that the modern spirit of independence has become, in many instances, egotistical obstinacy, or an independence of the opinion of judge or brother jurors. A juror feels that no judge can compel him to agree with his fellows in a verdict; there is now no Jeffries nor Scroggs to imprison him for contumacy, or to gratify his rancour or malignity, or subvert the purposes of an arbitrary sovereign; there is no red in terror over him—he is free to think and act as he chooses; he enjoys real liberty, and though he cannot stifle the expression of public opinion if he be known wilfully to frustrate the ends of justice by his perverseness, or want of honesty or of courage, he may snap his fingers at the judge's charge, his fellow-jurors, and the public, and say sic volo with sovereign contempt for them all. But does this independence exist in fact? Are jurors never slaves to influence on the one hand, nor to fear on the other? Have the terms pig-headed, perverse, obstinate, boot-eater, become obsolete? Are our jurors so far advanced in intellect, that a modification of the jury laws, which might have been desirable in more uneducated and arbitrary ages is not essential now? Methinks they order these things better in France and in Scotland. In neither country is unanimity required. The assassin, murderer, or slanderer, does not there evade the penalty of his crime because a dissentient voice may cry out in his favour, even though his guilt may be clear as the noon day.

I have not the life of Sir Samuel Romilly within my reach, but I think he was favourable to the French jury system. If I be correct in my recollection, I have no mean authority on my side.

From our experience of human nature, it is too much to expect that twelve men will agree in opinion even on any ordinary point—how much less reasonable is it to expect their unanimity in cases of a complicated character, and in which various collateral interests may be involved. Is it not wiser to calculate for and provide against the probabilities of diversity of opinion among thinking and free men? I would remind you of the wise reflection of the Emperor Charles V., after his long experience of the complicated workings of the human mind, and the various springs by which it is influenced—"It is not wonderful that men cannot be induced to think and act in harmony together, when I cannot get even these two watches to keep the same time precisely." If the catalogue could be placed before us, of those criminals who have been let loose upon society from want of unanimity among the juries before whom they were tried, and if a table could also be laid before us, showing the precautions taken (unavoidably in some cases under the existing system) by sheriffs to exclude men whose single voices would have rendered trials nugatory, I feel satisfied that the modification of the jury law, to which I have solicited your attention, would not be considered undesirable.

I have the honour to be,

Your obedient Servant,

M. D.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

RECEIVER COMMITTEE.

William Tighe Hamilton, Esq.—June 29.

(Continued from p. 344.)

1284. Sir J. Graham.] Is that one-nineteenth of the area or one-nineteenth of the rental?—One-nineteenth of the area. The way I make it out is this: the modern poor-law valuation is 13 millions; but that is not the sum to be compared with a million of rental, otherwise it would be one-thirtieth of the whole country. What is called the old valuation of Ireland is generally considered 20 millions, and that is a valuation taken at the same time and under the same circumstances under which these rents which constitute this rental under the Court of Chancery were fixed; therefore the million rental, as it exists now, is to be compared with the twenty millions. Then inasmuch as demesne lands, for which receivers are seldom appointed, and lands for which fines have been paid for leases, must be deducted from that, so as to make the comparison a fair one, and which we may take at about one million, the receiver rental would make about one-nineteenth of the whole country.

1285. Chairman.] Have you any notion of the number of tenants under the Court?—I could not say as to the million of rental, but I can give it to the Committee as nearly as possible from 300 estates, which I have examined, and then by the rule of three one might make a very near approximation to the whole.

1286. Will you state what that calculation is?—There are 9,442 upon a rental of £159,000. Then it must be determined by the rule of three, how many will be upon a million rental.

1287. You have already mentioned that you have no very satisfactory means of testing the fitness of those persons to be receivers. How does that difficulty arise?—In the first place, when it is referred to me to appoint a receiver, I have no possible means of knowing whether the individual proposed is a proper person or not, for this reason, that perhaps he lives in the county of Kerry, and he is the only person proposed. If one says to the parties, "There is a very good receiver on such and such an estate near," the answer which is invariably given to me is, that such a person will not now undertake a receivership, such is the disadvantageous position in which a receiver is placed; and it becomes impossible in that way to have any selection.

1288. Do you think that that difficulty arises from the impossibility of getting proper persons to take those small receiverships, or does it arise from your want of power to ascertain who are proper persons?—No; I think it arises more from the difficulty of getting a proper person, than the want of power supposing he existed, because we certainly have the power of appointing whomever we think fittest.

1289. In the case of receivers appointed over large properties have you the means of obtaining fit persons and of ascertaining their fitness?—I do not think more so. It is a matter which, in fact, is very much left to the nomination of the parties interested.

1291. What power would you require for the purpose of satisfactorily discharging that duty?—I do not think I should require any additional power if all the rules and regulations with respect to the management of estates and the mode of accounting were of an unexceptionable character, because I think in that case there would be a great number of perfectly competent persons willing to undertake the receivership, and one would have a choice, instead of being confined to the party most interested often in exhausting the estate.

1292. In what way would you suppose that the evil with regard to the difficulty of getting proper persons to be receivers would be most effectually met?—I see no mode of doing it, except by having certain fixed ascertained persons as standing receivers, who should be authorised to act in every case where a receiver was to be appointed.

1293. In whom would you vest the selection of those ascertained persons?—I should vest it unquestionably in the Chancellor.

1294. Supposing you could get fixed ascertained persons selected by the Chancellor to discharge the duty under that system, why could not they be had now in the case of large estates? I think there is a very strong feeling growing out of the risks and liabilities to which receivers are subject, and that till something is done to make the system more regular and more satisfactory few persons will undertake receivership.

1295. Is not it in the power of the Court, by arranging the matter of the liability of receivers, so to adjust its rules with regard to receivers as to get rid of the objection?—It is such an immense subject and ramifies into so many directions, and into other subjects upon which legislation would be necessary, that I do not think any Chancellor could carry out the sweeping reform that is necessary, except with the sanction and under the direction of the Legislature.

1296. What specific interference on the part of the Legislature do you consider would be proper and necessary in order to effect the reform that is required?—With respect to the receivers themselves I should say that there ought to be a power in the Chancellor to consolidate the existing receiverships into districts, so that ultimately without doing any violence to vested rights and the interests of parties more or less dependant upon their receiverships for their income and support, you might approximate in a very few years to the still more perfect system of having a receiver for every county, or part of a county, as an efficient public officer.

1297. Is not there great difficulty in this way, that causes now in the Court may be passing out of it, and that the estates under the Court are constantly varying; is not there therefore great difficulty in appointing a permanent officer of that kind?—All experience is against a great deal of shifting, because when once an estate goes into the Court of Chancery and a receiver is appointed over it, it very slowly leaves it. But that consideration belongs to every system of receivers.

1298. Do you think it is right to provide for the continuance of that system by having a permanent staff under the supposition that the estates are to remain under the Court of Chancery?—Clearly so, because there will always be a large quantity under the Court.

1302. Do you think that there might be substantial improvements made in the mode of receivers accounting?—I think nothing can be worse than the present system of receivers accounting; they are under no constant controul. The account is a mere legal transaction, which is only brought into court by a summons; and if the parties, for any particular motive, do not choose to call the matter on, it might stand over for years upon years. In addition to the case which I mentioned just now of a nine years' account, it is a common thing to have an account of three, four or five years. If the parties are interested in keeping the thing back, it may go on for a great length of years longer.

1303. Do you think that it would be desirable that the receiver should be obliged from time to time to deposit in some neighbouring bank the monies as he got them?—I think it would be a very essential part of a better system that he should send in monthly, to whomsoever was the head of the department, an abstract of all his proceedings; and that the amount he had received should be lodged monthly, or perhaps quarterly, as might be thought best.

1304. Supposing he was obliged to deposit the money from time to time as he received it, and to give an abstract monthly or quarterly, and that at certain intervals he should be obliged to give his report upon the condition of the estate under his management, and that when he was passing his general account with the officer it should be verified by affidavit, do you think those would be great improvements?—I think those would be great improvements upon the present system, but I should rather look at a more official system of accounting; for instance, the system of accounting that is practised in the Excise and the Customs, and wherever the revenue is received, which is done by a very simple official process not by the present cumbrous and expensive machinery of a court of justice.

(To be continued.)

IN CHANCERY.

Robert Malcomson, and Robert Shaw, Plaintiffs,
Richard Burgess Labarte, (a minor),
Elizabeth Usher Labarte, and Anne Elizabeth Labarte, Amelia Usher Labarte, Edward Usher Labarte, and Beverly Usher Labarte, (minors), by the said Elizabeth Usher
Labarte, Defendants.

PURSUANT to the order of her Majesty's Court of Chancery made in this cause, bearing the 20th day of June last, whereby the said late Richard Burgess Labarte, in his lifetime,
permy, decerned, relator,

ing Debts, Charges, and Incumbrances affecting all the said Lands of Ballywilliam, in the County of Cork, and Thames, &c. wise Ballythomas, Caracloagh, otherwise Ballyclough, Lough and Knockanastarra, otherwise Moss Hill, and the Watercourse situate in the County of Waterford, in the parishes of the mentioned, to come in before me, as my Chamberlain on the last Dublin, on Monday the first day of October next, and stand to the same, otherwise they will be precluded the benefit of aid from Dated this 6th day of September, 1848.

For MASTER MURPHY, 2 LIT.

Matthew Anderson, Solicitor for the Plaintiffs, No. 2, Inn Quay, Dublin.

JUST PUBLISHED.

ADDISON ON THE LAW OF CONTRACTS

A TREATISE on the Law of CONTRACTS, and Liabilities as Contractor. By C. G. ADDISON, Esq.
Esq. Barrister-at-Law. Second Edition, 2 vols. 8vo. price 10s.

RUSSELL ON ARBITRATION.

A TREATISE on the Power and Duty of an ARBITRATOR, and the Law of Submissions and Awards; with Appendix of Forms, and of the Statutes relating to Arbitration.
By FRANCIS RUSSELL, Esq., M.A., Barrister-at-Law. 1 vol. 8vo.
4s. 6d.

BAYLEY ON BILLS OF EXCHANGE.

SUMMARY of the Law of Bills of Exchange, Cash and Promissory Notes. By SIR JOHN BAYLEY, Esq. 4th Edition, by G. W. DOWDESWELL, Barrister-at-Law. 1 vol. 8vo.
4s. 6d.

BURGE ON THE LAW OF SURETIES.

COMMENTARIES on the Law of SURETIES, and the Rights and Obligations of the parties thereto. By WILLIAM BURGE, Esq. Q.C. M.A. &c. 1 vol. 8vo. 10s.

STANFIELD'S PRECEDENTS IN CONVEYANCING.

A COLLECTION of Copyhold PRECEDENTS
CONVEYANCING, arranged for general and ordinary use, together with Introductory Transcripts upon the various conveyancing occurrences incident to Estates of customary tenure, &c. By JOHN STANFIELD, Esq. 1 vol. 8vo. 12s.

QUESTIONS FOR LAW STUDENTS on the Edition of Mr. Serjeant Stephen's New Commentary on the Law of England. By JAMES STEPHEN, Esq. of the Middle Temple, Barrister-at-Law. 1 vol. 8vo. cloth boards, price 10s. 6d.

CONCISE FORMS OF WILLS, with Practical Notes
By W. HAYES and T. JARMAN. 6th Edition, cloth 10s.

THE LAW OF HUSBAND AND WIFE. A Treatise on the Law of Husband and Wife as respects Property, with Notes upon Roper's Treatise, and comprising Jacobs' Notes and Additions.
By J. E. WRIGHT, Esq. of the Inner Temple, Barrister-at-Law.
royal 8vo. 4s. 10s. boards.

EDWARD J. MILLIKEN, LAW BOOKSELLER AND PUBLISHER, 15, COLLEGE GREEN, DUBLIN.

All communications for the IRISH JURIST are to be sent, either to the Editor, with the Publisher, E. J. MILLIKEN, 15, COLLEGE GREEN. Correspondents will please give the Name and Address, and columns of the paper cannot be accepted with answers to anonymous Communications—nor will the Editor be accountable for the return of Manuscripts, &c.

Orders for the IRISH JURIST sent with E. J. MILLIKEN, 15, COLLEGE
GREEN, or by letter (post-paid), will ensure its punctual delivery in Dublin, or its being forwarded to the Country, by Post, on the day of publication.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION—(payable in advance).
Yearly, 30s. Half-yearly, 17s. Quarterly, 9s.

Printed by THOMAS ISAAC WHITE, at his Printing Office, No. 6, FLEET-STREET, in the Parish of St. Andrew, and published at COLLEGE GREEN, in the same Parish, by EDWARD JOHNSON MILLIKEN, residing at the same place, all being in the County of City of Dublin. Saturday, September 15, 1848.

Irish Jurist

Q. 4.—VOL. I.

SEPTEMBER 22, 1849.

Price {Per Annum, 21 1/2s.
{Single Number, 9d.

The Names of the Gentlemen who favour THE IRISH JURIST with Reports in the several Courts of Law and Equity in Ireland, are as follows:—

et of Chancery, including Bankruptcy Appeals.....	{ ROBERT LONG, Esq., and JOHN PITT KENNEDY, Esq., Barristers-at-Law.	Court of Exchequer Chamber.....	{ JOHN BLACKMAN, Esq., and A. HICKEY, Esq., Barristers-at-Law.
Court.....	{ WILLIAM BURKE, Esq., and WILLIAM JOHN DUNDAS, Esq., Barristers-at-Law.	Queen's Bench, including Civil Bill and Registry Appeals.....	{ FLORENCE M'CARTHY, Esq., and SAMUEL V. PEET, Esq., Barristers-at-Law.
ity Exchequer.....	{ CHARLES HARR HENPHILL, Esq., and WILLIAM HICKSON, Esq., Barristers-at-Law.	Exchequer of Pleas, including Master Court and Registry Appeals.....	{ CHAS. H. HENPHILL, Esq., and WILLIAM HICKSON, Esq., Barristers-at-Law.
rupt Court.....	{ ROBERT GRIFFIN, Esq. and W. G. CHANNERY, Esq. Barristers-at-law.	Common Pleas.....	{ ROBERT GRIFFIN, Esq. and W. G. CHANNERY, Esq. Barristers-at-law.
		Admiralty Court.....	{ ROBERT GRIFFIN, Esq. and W. G. CHANNERY, Esq. Barristers-at-law.

DUBLIN, SEPTEMBER 22, 1849.

considering the Encumbered Estates Act two suggest themselves as subjects for consideration.

The first connected with its policy.

The second with the practical working of the measure; what it proposes to effect, and how?

to policy, though a very legitimate subject for discussion, ceases to be of practical importance to lawyer further than as a key to the meaning of Legislature. Whilst the measure was passing through both Houses of Parliament we freely discussed that policy; we expressed ourselves as not satisfied of the expediency of establishing a new trial at a great expense to the country, and which, assigned to act on principles of equity, must be Court of Chancery in other hands; and that we would have preferred the adaptation of that court to the emergencies of the country rather than the institution of a new one invested with powers of the arbitrary nature, and established on the assumption that the Irish Court of Chancery was inadequate to the management of the real property of Ireland. The court has been well abused, and we have ourselves not failed to point out reforms which were necessary for its renovation, and for the public good, more especially with reference to the management of estates under its controul; but we knew that and within itself the power of expansion and modification, and that with little assistance from the Legislature it was perfectly adaptable to all national property exigencies. We considered it unwise to bring an organised, ancient, and, generally speaking, efficient tribunal into disrepute by its being enervated or superseded. We cannot omit the defence lately made for it by one of its former distinguished heads—Sir Edward Sugden—on the occasion of giving his evidence before the Receiver Committee.

"I believe there is a great misapprehension about the Irish Court of Chancery. I believe the Irish Court of Chancery to be as capable of administering justice speedily as any court that ever existed. When I left Ireland you could have a case in Chancery decided more quickly than you could have an action at law tried; the court waited for the cause, not the causes for the court. No unnecessary references were made to the Master, but every point that could be, was disposed of at the hearing. Judgment was never delayed."

But whatever may have been our predilections, they did not render us insensible to the reasons and motives which actuated the framers of the act now under consideration. The introduction of a new tribunal had not only the charm of novelty, but the more important charm that it had no popular prejudices to encounter; there were no ancient reminiscences of Chancery tediousness, delay, and expense to overcome. A new tribunal, which charged no fees, except those incurred for actual outlay, which had no arrear of business to clear off, and but a single duty to perform, and which could confer a Parliamentary title, possessed considerable attractions to buyer and seller. We do not, therefore, wonder at the experiment, which, if it failed, was not productive of the mischief of disturbing a settled court practice for an emergency which it was to be hoped would pass away, and if successful was capable of being happily blended with the established tribunals of the country. We are sufficiently creatures of circumstances to accommodate ourselves to the change, and to consider the act fairly and impartially.

We are quite willing to believe that patronage, though possibly a small item in the scale, was not a determining point in favour of a new court.

When honourable motives are just as likely, if not more so than unworthy ones, to have influenced the decision, we invariably reject the idea that it has been caused by the latter; and we subscribe to the truth of the celebrated remark of the great Condé, "These blackguards attribute to us the motives which would have influenced them were they placed in our circumstances."

We are quite willing to concede that the measure was passed in its present shape for worthier purposes than the appointment of three Commissioners; one of those appointments shall be mentioned before the conclusion of this article.

Nor can we forget that the former act, the working of which was placed under the management of the Court of Chancery, proved a failure; but this arose from intrinsic and extrinsic causes. It was at first a very lame dog, and the general orders did not help it over the stile.

The national policy of the measure is summed up with sufficient clearness in the preamble, "that it is expedient that further facilities should be given for the sale and transfer of incumbered estates in Ireland." In that expediency we acquiesce, and turn to the measure to see to what extent those facilities are afforded.

The emancipation of estates from embarrassment is designed to be complete; the incumbrance, by section 19, must affect the inheritance, or a term of not less than fifty years, and in the latter case, have been created by the owner of an estate of inheritance; the object of the Legislature being that the entire interest may be sold.

No incumbrancer of a tenant for life can apply under the act for the sale of the life-interest, nor for the sale of an estate pur autre vie, where there is no covenant for perpetual renewal.

Where the life-interest is severed from the inheritance, the purchaser of the former—an estate of such limited duration—has no permanent interest to improve; and, the object of the act being the acquisition of an entirely new race of proprietary—if that cannot be obtained, its powers are not allowed to be called into operation at the instance of a life incumbrancer, who must therefore still resort to a Court of Equity. This limitation will operate to some considerable extent, but with its exception any owner from the tenant in fee to the tenant by the courtesy, and any incumbrancer from the mortgagee in fee to the annuitant (whose annuity has been allowed to fall in arrear, and for the arrears of which a Court of Equity would direct a sale) may apply and obtain an order for a sale, except in cases where the owner shall be enabled to shew that no receiver nor incumbrancer is in possession of the land, and that the interest of the incumbrances and amount of the annual charges do not exceed one half of the net yearly income; the decision of the Commissioners to be final on these points, which in truth, involve no more than questions of fact. This clause was inserted at the instance of the House of Lords.

No one who has read the former measure, and the present, can fail to be struck with the remarkable absence of detail in the one before us. It is comparatively easy to state general principles, and to confer arbitrary powers, but extremely difficult to work out the details by which the former are to be carried into actual operation, and to impose exact limits upon the holders of powers, when the words by which they are conferred are of the largest possible signification.

In the extinct act, the directions which the Court of Chancery was to pursue, were elaborately, though sometimes not very clearly stated; in the former one the Commissioners are left an almost untrammelled discretion. By sections 10, 15, and 51, they may bind and loose, they may make and unmake, they may cancel and re-enact, they may alter, they may vary, they are tied by no precedent, they are bound by no rule, save during the continuance of a general order, which they have power to suspend substituting another in its place, subject to sanction by the Privy Council; and we before this tribunal, partly composed of Peers, Soldiers, and Commissioners of National Education, will not interpose an active interference. Nay, so unlimited are the powers of the new Commissioners, that where there are no general orders, or they are inapplicable, (inapplicable!!) they can act according to their own discretion, and their judgments are final, unless they are pleased to allow an appeal from their own decisions. They are not subject to a Court of Equity, nor to a Court of Common Law, to writ of injunction, nor to writ of mandamus; the Court of Chancery is their vassal, in their own sphere they are omnipotent, and that sphere comprehends all the incumbered estates of inheritance in Ireland.

We trembled when we came to the words, "at the discretion of the Commissioners;" the words of Lord Camden rushed to our memory—"The discretion of a judge is the law of tyrants; it is always unknown, it is different in different men, it is capricious and depends upon constitution, temper and passion. In the best it is oftentimes caprice; in the worst it is every vice, folly, and passion to which human nature is liable."

The temper of the laws of England is retrograding; the appellate jurisdiction is year by year becoming restricted; judges are more frequently than of old vested with final power; the rights of person and of property are less jealously guarded by us than by our forefathers; and we regret this, because we know no check more effective in making judges do their duty, and no greater safeguard for the public, than the suitor's right of appeal or double justice.

We select the present instance to state our opinion, both because the finality of the decision of the Commissioners is a leading feature of the Act, and because we can do so without offence. From the temper of those of the Commissioners whom we know, we feel satisfied that in their hands there will be no abuse of power. Our dislike is to the principle; we have no dread of the hands to whom the power has in this instance been confided.

The most cursory perusal of the Act proves the very large powers with which the Commissioners are entrusted, we do not say, if ably exercised, unwisely entrusted. We should have wished a right of appeal to a properly constituted tribunal, but in the spirit of the Act is so arbitrary, we venture to suggest to them, in order that everything may be in character, to observe as much latitude as possible in their general orders, and as they are unrestricted themselves, to leave the suitors tolerably free also.

The general orders under the late Act imposed so many restrictions, and so much preliminary trouble, which did not devolve upon a plaintiff in a Court of Chancery, that no incumbrancer would resort to it when he had the option of filing a foreclosure bill; the Commissioners should remember that the incumbrancer still has that option, and that they should in some degree invite suitors. The Act has done much to insure the acceptance of the invitation; it gives the Commissioners many advantages which the Court of Chancery does not possess; their court is open to all comers both owner and incumbrancer—the Court of Chancery to the latter only—without the payment of office fees, and although the Commissioners are empowered to make such orders as to costs as they shall see fit, yet the costs are the first charge upon the purchase-money. See section 30.

This provision renders it tolerably certain that the Act will be operative. The construction given to the Sheriff's Act as to the priority of the costs of appointing a receiver, induced many a puisne claimant to present his petition; so here where the costs are tolerably safe, and no undertaking to redeem prior incumbrances required, we predict that, except the general orders paralyse the effect of the section, applications will be numerous, and that the rooting out of incumbered proprietors will be effected.

We cannot conclude these observations without adverting to a letter which appeared in this journal from one of our correspondents, which deprecated the appointment of Mr. Hargreave: the communication has excited considerable public attention, and been much quoted and commented upon. We enter fully into the national and professional views of the writer; but we can assure Mr. Hargreave that our objection to him is grounded on no personal cause, and on no narrow spirit of exclusiveness, but simply because we believe his nomination to be an injustice to the Irish Bar, and the re-establishment of a system which we had hoped was struck down for ever. There should either be reciprocity of appointments between the two Bars, or the preserves of each should be strictly guarded. Either the leading men of the Irish Bar should be eligible to English judicial appointments, or, if not, neither should the leading men of the English Bar be eligible to Irish. We should prefer investing the Government with the power of selecting the best men of both countries for the judicial offices of both, that so out of the wider range they might secure the best men for the best places. But this practice has never been even professed, and never acted upon. English offices are closed upon us with the most jealous exclusiveness, and the opposite practice is now carried to such an extreme, that a very junior member of the English Bar is placed in a very responsible judicial office over the heads of some of the oldest and most deserving members of our body.

We do not censure Mr. Hargreave for taking the appointment—its emoluments to him are probably not as considerable as those derived from the lucrative branch of the profession to which he had devoted himself—it was an advancement which it would have been absurd in him to have rejected, but we think Her Majesty's Government could have selected a gentleman of our own Bar more suited to the office from professional standing, and a knowledge of the peculiarities of the laws of this country, whose appointment would have carried more weight with the public, and given no shock to professional opinion, whilst they could in England or in the colonies have discovered a more permanent place for Mr. Hargreave as a reward for his services in the preparation of the Act—if in fact it be attributable to his pen, report has ascribed the merits of it to another person,—or for those other qualities which entitle him to judicial eminence.

We can scarcely conceive a greater contumely to the members of the Irish Bar than the exaltation over their heads of an English barrister, not yet of five years standing, and whose practice—being exclusively confined to conveyancing—has never placed him in the position of addressing a court of justice.

We are almost weary of endeavouring to infuse a degree of public spirit into the Irish Bar. When the Huguenot leader, Montgomery, was condemned to death, and informed that his children were degraded to the condition of villainage, his observation was truly noble; "If they have not the virtue of nobles to raise themselves again, I consent to their degradation." We paraphrase the sentence, "If our Bar have not the virtue to raise itself, we consent to its degradation;" when once it loses that high place in public estimation which it used to hold, the shorter its Decline and the sooner its Fall the better.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

RECEIVER COMMITTEE.

William Tighe Hamilton, Esq.—June 29.

(Continued from p. 348.)

1816. Have you turned your attention much to what might be the best remedy for some of these acknowledged evils?—I have; I have considered it very much, having to do with a great many different receivers and other persons who are very much interested in the subject. Perhaps the Committee would wish me to hand in a sketch of the heads of a Bill which I drew up a short time ago.

(The witness handed in the following Bill.)

HEADS of a BILL to provide for the BETTER MANAGEMENT of ESTATES under the Court of Chancery, and to establish a Uniform System of Equity Jurisdiction in Ireland.

I. The jurisdiction of the equity side of the Court of Exchequer to cease, and all equity proceedings now pending in the said Court to be transferred to the Court of Chancery and continued there, as was done in England in 1841. See 5 Vict., c. 5.

II. The Government to appoint a fifth Master in the Court of Chancery at once.

III. The Government, on recommendation of the Lord Chancellor and Lords of the Treasury, to have power to authorise the appointment of a sixth Master hereafter, in case it shall be found necessary.

IV. All the Masters, clerks and other officers in the Court of Chancery now paid by fees, to be hereafter paid by fixed salaries, and the fees to be collected by means of stamps.

V. The Lord Chancellor to have power to make orders that such matters as are now disposed of by the Master of the Rolls in Ireland, but by the Masters in England, shall be disposed of by the Masters in Ireland.

VI. The Lord Chancellor to assign to one of the Masters the exclusive duty of superintending the management of all estates subject to receivers in the said Court, and who shall be styled the "Auditor-general of Receivers' Accounts."

VII. The Lord Chancellor and Lords of the Treasury to have power to authorise the appointment of such further clerk or clerks as may be found necessary in the office of the Auditor-general for a very effective system of book entries and other official management.

VIII. The Lords of the Treasury to fix the salaries of such clerks, payable out of the Consolidated Fund.

IX. The poundage of five per cent. now allowed to receivers to be paid in to the Accountant-general's credit as a fund for the following purposes:

- (1.) The Lord Chancellor to fix such amount of said sum as he shall see fit to be paid to each receiver, either by way of salary, or of allowances proportioned to his receipts.
- (2.) The Lord Chancellor out of said sum to allow payment to the sessional Crown solicitors for conducting all legal proceedings directed to be taken by the receivers at quarter sessions, &c.
- (3.) The Lord Chancellor out of said sum to allow payment of such salaries and other expenses as he shall see fit for two or more surveyors, who shall be at the disposal of the Auditor-general, to visit the estates and report their opinion upon all special applications requiring local observation.

X. All the general regulations to be followed by the Auditor-general to be subject to the approval of the Lord Chancellor.

XI. Any party who objects to any proceeding authorised by the Auditor-general to be at liberty to bring the same before the Lord Chancellor, by motion, who shall make such order in the matter as he may see fit.

XII. Subject to the above approval and controul, the Auditor-general to have full power.

- (1.) To entertain all applications from head landlord for permission to proceed for recovery of head-rents, together with such other matters connected with the management of said estates as may be from time to time referred to him specially by the Lord Chancellor or Master of the Rolls.
- (2.) To sanction such outlay in repairs, improvements, or other reproductive works as he may think advisable, considering the interest of the parties.
- (3.) To grant such leases for terms not exceeding 21 years or take such surrenders of leases as the proprietor could himself, according to his estate, take or grant.
- (4.) To make such abatements of rents, or reduction of arrears, as he may think advisable.
- (5.) To make such regulations as he thinks fit as to the form of receivers' accounts, and the time of accounting.
- (6.) To do all such other acts as a Master of the Court of Chancery is now by law authorised to do in respect to estates subject to receivers.

XIII. The Auditor-general to have full power to make special orders for all purposes of this Act, either absolute in the first instance, or conditional, to show cause before himself within such time or upon such notice as he may fix in each case; such orders to have the same force as the like orders now made by the Court.

XIV. The Auditor-general to exercise all such powers, either of his own motion; or upon the application of the receiver, or of any of the parties interested, and whether all or any of the parties consent or not.

XV. No fees to be paid to any of the officers of the Court in respect to the lodgment of money, when ordered by the Auditor-general to be brought in for that purpose.

XVI. The Auditor-general to allow receivers only such reasonable costs in respect to the passing of their accounts, and all other matters done by them, as he shall think fit, either generally or by special order in each case.

XVII. The Auditor-general to appoint no individual as a receiver, when any other qualified person who has been already appointed a receiver in the same county is willing to undertake such receivership, but to endeavour, as far as possible, to consolidate the receiverships in the hands of one or more individuals in each county or other district, and shall give their whole time to the discharge of the duties, and who shall reside in the district.

(To be continued.)

IN CHANCERY.

Executors of Price, and others, Plaintiffs, }
Hull and others, Defendants. }
DURSUANT to the Decree of the Court, bearing date the 1st day of June, 1860, I hereby certify that the persons claiming to be creditors of Nicholas Price, late of London, County of Down, Esquire, deceased, the testator in the above cause named, to come in before me at my Chambers on the 1st day of the City of Dublin, on or before the First day of October next, and their respective demands, otherwise they will be precluded from claiming under the said decree.

Dated this 30th day of July, 1860.

R. LITTON.

William Nevill Walker, Solicitor for the plaintiffs,
30, North Great George's Street, Dublin.

JUST PUBLISHED,

ADDISON ON THE LAW OF CONTRACTS

A TREATISE on the Law of CONTRACTS, and the Rights and Liabilities of Contractor. By C. G. ADDISON, Esq., Barrister-at-Law. Second Edition, 2 vols. 8vo. price 10s. 6d.

RUSSELL ON ARBITRATION

A TREATISE on the Power and Duty of an Arbitrator, and the Law of Submissions and Awards; with an Appendix of Forms, and of the Statutes relating to Arbitration. FRANCIS RUSSELL, Esq., M.A., Barrister-at-Law. 1 vol. 8vo. price 4s. 6d.

BAYLEY ON BILLS OF EXCHANGE

SUMMARY of the Law of Bills of Exchange, Cash and Promissory Notes. By SIR JOHN BAYLEY, Esq., Barrister-at-Law. By G. W. DOWDESWELL, Barrister-at-Law. 1 vol. 8vo. price 4s. 6d.

BURGE ON THE LAW OF SURETSHIP

COMMENTARIES on the Law of SURETSHIP, the Rights and Obligations of the parties therein. By WILLIAM BURGE, Esq. Q.C. M.A. &c. 1 vol. 8vo. price 10s.

STANFIELD'S PRECEDENTS IN CONVEYANCING

A COLLECTION of Copyhold PRECEDENTS in CONVEYANCING, arranged for general and ordinary use, together with Introductory Treatises upon the various transactions occurring incident to Estates of customary tenure, &c. BY JOHN STANFIELD, Esq. 1 vol. 8vo. price 10s.

QUESTIONS FOR LAW STUDENTS on the Decisions of Mr. Sergeant Stephen's New Commentaries on the Law of England. By JAMES STEPHEN, Esq., of the Middle Temple, Barrister-at-Law. 1 vol. 8vo. cloth boards, price 10s. 6d.

CONCISE FORMS OF WILLS, with Practical Notes. By W. HAYES and T. JARMAN. 4th Edition, cloth 10s. 6d.

THE LAW OF HUSBAND AND WIFE. A Treatise on the Law of Husband and Wife as respects Property, partly based upon Rogers's Treatise, and comprising Jackson's Notes and Additions. By J. E. WRIGHT, Esq., of the Inner Temple, Barrister-at-Law. 1 vol. 8vo. price 10s. 6d. boards.

A PRACTICAL TREATISE ON PLEADING in the COURTS OF EQUITY in IRELAND; adapted to the General Orders. By ALFRED McFARLAND, Esq., Barrister-at-Law. 1 vol. 8vo. price 10s. 6d.

REPORTS OF PRACTICE AND NISI PRIUS CASES (including Registry and Civil Bill Appeals) DECIDED in the SUPREME COURT, and at the AFTER SITTINGS; with Notes and Table of Cases. By J. BLACKMAN, W. J. DUNNE, and E. W. GIBSON, Esqrs., Barristers-at-Law. Part IV., completing Vol. I., price 10s.

EDWARD J. MILLIKEN, LAW BOOKSELLER AND PUBLISHER, 13, COLLEGE GREEN, DUBLIN.

All communications for the IRISH JURIST are to be sent, either to the Editor, with the Publisher, E. J. MILLIKEN, 13, COLLEGE GREEN. Correspondents will please give the Name and Address, as columns of the paper cannot be occupied with anonymous Communications; nor will the Editor be accountable for the return of Manuscripts, &c.

Orders for the IRISH JURIST left with E. J. MILLIKEN, 13, COLLEGE GREEN, or by letter (post-paid), will ensure its punctual delivery in Dublin, or its being forwarded to the Country, by Post, on the day of publication.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION—(payable in advance):
Yearly, 30s. Half-yearly, 17s. Quarterly, 9s.

Printed by THOMAS ISAAC WHITE, at his Printing Office, No. 1, FLEET STREET, in the Parish of St. Andrew, and published at COLLEGE GREEN, in the same Parish, by EDWARD JOHNSON MILLIKEN, residing at the same place, all being in the County of City of Dublin. Saturday, September 22, 1860.

THE Irish Jurist

No. 48.—VOL. I.

SEPTEMBER 29, 1849.

Price { Per Annum, £1 10s.
Single Number, 9d.

The Names of the Gentlemen who favour THE IRISH JURIST with Reports in the several Courts of Law and Equity in Ireland, are as follows:—

Court of Chancery, including Bankruptcy Appeals.....	{ ROBERT LONG, Esq., and JOHN PITT KENNEDY, Esq., Barristers-at-Law.	Court of Exchequer Chamber.....	{ JOHN BLACKHAM, Esq., and A. HICKEY, Esq., Barristers-at-Law.
Rolls Court.....	{ WILLIAM BURKE, Esq., and WILLIAM JOHN DUNDAS, Esq., Barristers-at-Law.	Queen's Bench, including Civil Bill and Registry Appeals.....	{ FLORENCE M'CARTHY, Esq., and SAMUEL V. PRET, Esq., Barristers-at-Law.
Equity Exchequer.....	{ CHARLES HARE HENPHILL, Esq., and WILLIAM HICKSON, Esq., Barristers-at-Law.	Exchequer of Pleas, including Manor Court and Registry Appeals.....	{ CHAS. H. HENPHILL, Esq., and WILLIAM HICKSON, Esq., Barristers-at-Law.
Bankrupt Court.....	{ ROBERT GRIFFIN, Esq. and W. G. CHAMNEY, Esq. Barristers-at-law.	Common Pleas.....	{ ROBERT GRIFFIN, Esq. and W. G. CHAMNEY, Esq. Barristers-at-law.
		Admiralty Court.....	{ ROBERT GRIFFIN, Esq. and W. G. CHAMNEY, Esq. Barristers-at-law.

DUBLIN, SEPTEMBER 29, 1849.

LORD BROUGHAM has written to Sir James Graham a letter on the recent changes in the law of Bankruptcy, and he has stated what is a matter of sincere congratulation, that the Commissioners who have laboured for sixteen years, will be prepared next session to lay two bills before Parliament, in which our whole criminal law will be digested and codified. His Lordship observes—

“Since 1843, only two circumstances have occurred, which it is necessary to mention, touching the labours of the Commissioners. I presented in 1844 a bill for enacting a Digest of the Criminal Law, founded upon their valuable report. Lord Lyndhurst (then Chancellor) highly approved of the bill; but considering the great importance of the subject—considering also that from the nature of the thing, the work must be mainly executed out of Parliament, and required only to be adopted or sanctioned by the Legislature, he referred it to another Commission—that is, to the same Commissioners, with others added, to revise their labours. Accordingly a further report was made in 1847, and the Digest having now received a very full consideration, I again brought in a bill founded upon it, which in 1848 was referred to a select Committee of the Lords. As chairman of that Committee I addressed letters to all the judges of the three kingdoms, requesting their observations upon the Digest, submitting it to them, together with copies of all the reports upon which it had been founded. Waiting for the answers of these learned persons, I postponed to the next session all further proceedings with the bill. Again I presented it at the very beginning of the session just ended; again it was referred to the same select Committee, and again we anxiously expected the answers of the judges. The session has, however, passed away, without any answer whatever from any of the English judges, though valuable suggestions have been communicated from those of the other two kingdoms. I conclude from this circumstance, that the judges of England are, generally speaking, satisfied with the Digest, and have no corrections to offer which they deem of sufficient importance to call for the consideration of the Lords. Meanwhile the far more arduous task has been performed by the learned Commissioners, of digesting into one body the whole law of procedure in criminal cases. This work, equally important and difficult, consists of 12 chapters, 47 sections, 1,180 articles. I have examined it with an admiration which I believe will be shared by every lawyer who studies it. Coupled with the former Digest of Crimes and Punishments, it gives us a complete code of the Criminal Law, and enables the Legislature of this country to escape the grave censure of not furnishing to the people the means of knowing what those laws are, which it commands them, under the heaviest penalties, to obey.”

His Lordship then details minutely the proceedings taken for the codification of the Bankrupt Act, of which he had the charge last session—the assiduity and pains taken with the measure by the gentleman (Mr. Miller) who prepared it—by the learned judges of the Bankrupt Court, to whom it had been submitted—by the Select Committee of the Lords—and by the writer himself; and deprecates very urgently the changes made by the Committee of the Commons. The pith of his Lordship's observations being, that in matters of this kind, where the subject has been considered and treated by competent persons—skilled workmen in the law—the act, the product of their skill, should, in its main features, be allowed to pass through Parliament untouched.

This is a startling doctrine, and requires rather stronger proofs than his Lordship has adduced for our acquiescence in it.

Great deference, undoubtedly, should be paid to the opinions of those who have bestowed their time, talents, and labour upon the particular subject submitted to them; but that the House of Commons should be the register of the edicts of the Lords, or the Lords of the Commons, is neither a very constitutional theory, nor a very advisable practice, whether the proposed edicts be on questions exclusively relating to the administration of the law, or subjects of general policy.

We hope to return to the consideration of his Lordship's letter on a future occasion.

—♦—

To the Editor of the Irish Jurist.

SIR,

Perhaps you will add to the amount of obligation that you have already conferred on me, in admitting my last letter into your columns, by giving insertion to another on a different subject.

It appears to me that the maxim "No man should be compelled to criminate himself," is pushed to an extreme that is reprehensible.

I have long been of this opinion, and my recent perusal of the course of practice pursued at some of our state trials which took place immediately before the Revolution of 1688, and for a short period after it, while the law was in a state of transition, and, therefore, unsettled, has confirmed me in my previous impression. We know that in cases of suspected treason, more particularly, the iniquitous practice of questioning prisoners, even by torture, for the purpose of extracting from them testimony against themselves, was no unusual occurrence. A declaration, published by order of Lord Burleigh, in the reign of Elizabeth, set forth that torture, in order to obtain confession from persons under confinement, was applied "in as charitable (!) a manner as such a thing might be."

This was the apology which that distinguished man offered for a cruel and barbarous usage, that was not abolished in the times of the Tudors. That torture was ever charitably inflicted will not be credited in these days, even on the authority of Lord Burleigh. It would be absurd to conceive that a fiendish act, essentially cruel and unjust—because the extremity of pain, "and the instant and almost irresistible desire of relief, may draw from the sufferer false accusations of himself or others"—could have been charitably or tenderly applied.

When it became obsolete, or its exercise very infrequent, the torture was transferred from the body to the mind, and a prisoner was cajoled or menaced to acknowledge his guilt.

Cases are recorded in which an Attorney General and a Chief Justice importunately advised prisoners arraigned for treason to confess their guilt, under threats of severer consequences if they did not. This was, after all, but another mode of administering torture. Neither the iron boot nor the thumb-screw was applied to a limb, but the mental organs were agonized.

A very flagrant violation of judicial power is related in the case of Sir Nicholas Throckmorton, when under trial for treason, in the reign of Elizabeth. The Crown lawyer, Sergeant Sturges, addressed him thus:—"Therefore, Throckmorton, since this matter is so manifest, and the evidence so apparent, I would advise you to confess your guilt, and submit yourself to the Queen's mercy." "How say you?" asked Chief Justice Bromley. "Will you confess the matter, and it will be better for you?"

In the succeeding reign, when Garnet was on his trial for aiding in the Gunpowder Plot, he was pressed by interrogatories from the bench, even in the presence of King James, to confess in plain, or, more correctly, to criminate himself, though the contradictory statements which those questions led him to make.

It appears from Philipp's State Trials, that some years after the Revolution, instances occurred in which both the judge and the Crown lawyer endeavoured to obtain from the prisoner, by examination, evidence to convict him. This practice became at length totally discontinued. But the opposite extreme of a usage, which, in humble judgment, only became dangerous from abuse, has led to results, fatal, in frequent instances to the cause of justice. I have reprobated the practice of cajoling or menacing a prisoner to confess his guilt, and I now venture to condemn the opposite extreme.

I find, among my papers, a memorandum which I took some years ago from a passage in the life of Sir Samuel Romilly, which supports my view of the subject under present inquiry. That distinguished lawyer had been, I think, considering the French system of examining prisoners in criminal cases, a system so entirely opposed to ours, yet one which, I would say, works effectively for the punishment of evil doers and the prevention of increasing crime. He observes: "It should not, however, if the great object of all trials be to discover the truth, to punish the guilty, and to afford security to the innocent, that the examination of the accused is the most important and indispensable part of every trial." He was an advocate then for the principle of putting interrogatories to the accused, though he condemned the latitude which judges occasionally exercised in putting subtle and perplexing questions, to shew their own skill, and confound the accused person under examination. Of this abuse of the privilege of questioning a prisoner, the trial of Madame Lafarge is an instance. The limits of the jus talionis, which I consider necessary for the discovery of truth, were shamefully exceeded in the case of that criminal.

"When a contest of ingenuity arises between the court and defendant, the temper and impartiality of a judge are placed in too much hazard when he becomes the antagonist of the prisoner."

I venture, however, to maintain, that the jealous avoidance, by the magistrate, of every thing likely to lead a prisoner to give evidence against himself, even though he were willing to tell the truth, is false in principle, and injurious to the interests of society.

1. It is false in principle.—If I refer to the morality of the Bible, which I assume to be an indestructible element in our legislation, I see that lying, directly, or indirectly, is a grievous offence against God, and that the liar, and murderer, are placed in the same category of sin. Is not that, then, a false principle, which leads a judge to caution a prisoner against pleading guilty to a crime, which, from compunction of mind, or any other motive, he voluntarily acknowledges? If I consider the morality of that judicial practice, which sanctions the judge to recommend a prisoner, who has entered a truthful plea of guilty, in presence of a crowded court, who, with the jury, have heard the avowal, to withdraw that plea, and substitute for it an undoubted lie, I discern at once the falsity of the principle under which the judge, influenced by tender feeling, leads the prisoner to record that lie—yet, not a lie which the recording angel, with a tear, blots out. Lying in self defence is not indictable by our human laws, and erring man is thus encouraged to declare, from his open lips, that he is a liar, and the truth is not in him.

2. It is injurious to the interests of society.—By not interrogating a prisoner, we discard one of the most important means of eliciting truth, and thereby inflict a deep social injury. Allow me to refer to a familiar passage in Paley's Moral and Political Philosophy—"A maxim which deserves similar examination is this:—'That it is better that ten guilty persons escape, than that one innocent man should suffer.' If by saying it is better, it be meant that it is more for the public advantage, the proposition, I think, cannot be maintained. The security of civil life, which is essential to the value and enjoyment of every blessing it contains, and the interruption of which is followed by universal misery and confusion, is protected chiefly by the dread of punishment. The misfortune of an individual, (for such may the sufferings, or even the death, of an innocent person be called, when they are occasioned by no evil intention,) cannot be placed in competition with this object—I do not contend that the life or safety of the meanest subject ought in any case to be knowingly sacrificed: no principle of judicature, no end of punishment can ever require that.

"But when certain rules of adjudication must be pursued, when certain degrees of credibility must be accepted, in order to reach the crimes with which the public are infested; courts of justice should not be deterred from the application of these rules by every suspicion of danger, or by the mere possibility of confounding the innocent with the guilty. They ought rather to reflect, that he who falls by a mistaken sentence, may be considered as falling for his country, whilst he suffers under the operation of those rules, by the general effect and tendency of which the welfare of the community is maintained and uphelden."

I believe that we repudiate a very effective mode of promoting the ends of justice, and of reaching "those crimes with which the public are infested," and of dissociating "the innocent from the guilty," by the rejection of the French system, of interrogating a prisoner—in order to afford the important means of comparing his written depositions with his verbal testimony when afterwards interrogated. A man falsely charged with a crime, alleged to have been committed on a certain day, and in a certain place, is usually eager to answer any questions on the subject, expecting that his answers will establish his innocence; and a guilty man will evade interrogatories, fearing that his contradictions and lies, should be exposed by his inconsistent and conflicting answers. TRUTH, and JUSTICE, will not suffer from interrogating accused persons—and individual guilt will be more easily proved by it.

The inconsistencies and involuntary admissions of a criminal, are often the only means of arriving at the truth.

Circumstances, indeed, may be ingeniously imagined—and cases may have occurred in which the questioning of innocent persons, accused of a specific crime, may have led to their conviction of it. But such, extraordinary and very improbable cases—which must assume that both judge and jury are deceived by false impressions, are such as, according to the argument of Paley, ought not to be admitted to operate in opposition to rules, the general effect and tendency of which is to promote and preserve the welfare of the community.

I hope that the period is not remote, when that strong prejudice, which prevents Englishmen from appreciating the excellence of laws, or institutions, which prevail in other countries, will diminish; when what is really good in those laws and institutions will be adapted to our social system—and England will adopt the Continental practice, of interrogating a prisoner—with modifications suited to our free constitution, and no longer persevere in the present system, which is repugnant to common sense, and favourable to crime.

M. D.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

RECEIVER COMMITTEE.

William Tighe Hamilton, Esq.—June 29.

(Continued from p. 352.)

XVIII. But the Lord Chancellor to have power from time to time, according as circumstances may admit, to remove existing receivers and to appoint such persons as he shall see fit to be the receivers for such districts as he shall assign to them.

XIX. The Auditor-general to decide on the amount of security to be given by receivers, and to investigate the solvency of all sureties; and the recognizances to be entered into before him.

XX. (1.) The whole legal estate of owner to rest in the receiver on his appointment, so far as that all legal proceedings brought in his name may have the same effect as if brought in the name of such owner.

(2.) The tenants of the estates to be obliged forthwith to sign a deed of the form in the schedule to this Act, acknowledging that they hold under the receiver in the same manner as they had previously held under the owner.

(3.) Any tenant refusing to sign such deed, or to produce to the receiver the lease or instrument under which he holds, or to disclose the amount of his rent or arrears, to be deemed as but a tenant at will, and liable to be proceeded against as such on a quarter's notice to quit.

(4.) The receiver to be a competent witness in all proceedings.

XXI. A tenant whose rent is less than £50. not to be at the expense of a lease but the present fees to be abolished, and the other costs and stamps to be paid by the estate.

XXII. No tenant to be required to enter into recognisances in future.

Epitome of the measure.

- I. All receiverships to be collected under one head.
- II. That head to have same power to manage or improve as an owner.
- III. Receivers to be gradually consolidated, with a view to their being district public officers.
- IV. The receiver to have same powers to recover rent or possession as an owner.
- V. The tenants not to be subject to greater hardships than they would be under the owner.
- VI. The system of accounting not to be as at present, a more annual legal transaction conducted by attorneys, but a continuous official one, carried on either with the receiver in person or through the medium of clerks. Abstract of accounts to be furnished, and balances lodged at least quarterly.
- VII. A variety of acts now done by the Master of the Rolls to be done by the Auditor-general, as being matters more for office inquiry than judicial decision, so as to save the great expense of proceedings in the Court.

1825. Chairman.] Is the abolition of the equity side of the Court of Exchequer a necessary part of the plan which you propose to remedy the evil?—I think it is, in this way; that I do not see how you can have a system for supervising estates, which should represent two Courts; I do not see how you can have two uniform systems, one existing in one Court and the other in the other. I do not think you can have one man representing two Courts, inasmuch as two Courts would probably take two different views upon questions that would arise upon the management of estates and other important questions. Therefore that question appears to me naturally to connect itself with the subject in this way, that I do not think you can have a proper system till you get all the estates under one head.

1826. Mr. R. B. Osborne.] What reason have you to suppose that one court would be a better means of managing estates than the other?—I have no reason to think that one court would be better than the other; but the far larger quantity certainly exists in the Court of Chancery, and that being the court of highest character in the country, and having the largest quantity of estates under it, I should say is the proper head.

1827. When you say that it is the "Court of the highest character in the country," do you mean with reference to its knowledge of agriculture?—No, but as to its power of carrying out any particular system I think you must depend entirely upon other means for agricultural knowledge.

(To be continued.)

IN CHANCERY, IRELAND.

Robert Edward Gibbins,

The Right Honorable Henry John Reuben, Earl of Portarlington, and others, Plaintiff.

Defendants.

WHEREAS it has been represented to me, that several of the Creditors on the Estates of the late Right Honorable John, Earl of Portarlington, deceased, the Testator in the pleadings named, have neglected or omitted to come in and file charges on foot of their respective demands and incumbrances, pursuant to the decree of the 5th day of February, 1847, and that the time limited by and for the said purpose has expired, and that it is expedient to extend said period: Now I require all Creditors and Legatees of the late Right Honorable John, Earl of Portarlington, deceased, the Testator in the pleadings named, and also all persons having charges or incumbrances affecting the real and freehold Estates of the said late Earl of Portarlington, to come in before me at my Chambers on the Inns Quay, in the city of Dublin, on or before Tuesday, the 20th day of November next, and proceed to prove and claim the same, otherwise they will be precluded the benefit of said Decree.

Dated this 20th day of June, 1849.
John Warnock, Plaintiff's Solicitor,
30, North Great George's Street, Dublin.

E. LITTON.

NEW LAW BOOKS.

BEST'S PRINCIPLES OF EVIDENCE.

A TREATISE on the Principles of EVIDENCE and PRACTICE as to Proof in Courts of Common Law; with Elementary Rules for conducting the Examination and Cross-examination of Witnesses. By W. M. BEST, A.M. LL.B., Barrister at Law. 1 vol. 8vo. cloth, 18s.

ANGELL ON THE LAW OF CARRIERS.

A TREATISE on the Law of CARRIERS of GOODS and PASSENGERS by Land and by Water. By S. K. ANGELL, Esq., Barrister at Law. 1 vol. royal 8vo. bds. 25s.

ROGER'S ECCLESIASTICAL LAW.

A Practical Arrangement of ECCLESIASTICAL LAW. Second Edition, considerably enlarged. By FRANCIS NEWMAN ROGERS, Esq., Barrister at Law. 1 vol. 8vo. 21 18s.

PRINCIPLES OF EQUITY JURISPRUDENCE.

THE Principles of EQUITY JURISPRUDENCE, embracing the Concurrent, Exclusive, and Auxiliary Jurisdiction of Courts of Equity. By the Editors of the Law Students' Magazine. 1 vol. 8vo. cloth bds. 12s. 6d.

ADDISON ON THE LAW OF CONTRACTS.

A TREATISE on the Law of CONTRACTS, and Rights and Liabilities of Contractor. By C. G. ADDISON, Esq. of the Inner Temple, Barrister at Law. Second Edition, 3 vols. 8vo. price 21 18s.

RUSSELL ON ARBITRATION.

A TREATISE on the Power and Duty of an ARBITRATOR, and the Law of Submissions and Awards; with an Appendix of Forms, and of the Statutes relating to Arbitration. By FRANCIS RUSSELL, Esq., M.A., Barrister at Law. 1 vol. 8vo. bds. 21 6s.

BAYLEY ON BILLS OF EXCHANGE.

SUMMARY of the Law of Bills of Exchange, Cash Bills, and Promissory Notes. By SIR JOHN BAYLEY, Knt. 2nd Edition, by G. W. DOWDESWELL, Barrister at Law. 1 vol. 8vo. 21 2s.

BURGE ON THE LAW OF SURETSHIP.

COMMENTARIES on the Law of SURETSHIP, and the Rights and Obligations of the parties thereto. By WILLIAM BURGE, Esq. Q.C. M.A. &c. 1 vol. 8vo. 18s.

STANFIELD'S PRECEDENTS IN CONVEYANCING.

A COLLECTION of Copyhold PRECEDENTS IN CONVEYANCING, arranged for general and ordinary use, together with Introductory Treatises upon the various transactions and occurrences incident to Estates of customary tenure, &c. By JOHN F. STANFIELD, Esq. 1 vol. 8vo. 12s.

QUESTIONS FOR LAW STUDENTS on the Second Edition of Mr. Serjeant Stephen's New Commentaries on the Laws of England. By JAMES STEPHEN, Esq. of the Middle Temple, Barrister at Law. 1 vol. 8vo. cloth boards, price 10s. 6d.

CONCISE FORMS OF WILLS, with Practical Notes. By W. HAYES and T. JARMAN. 4th Edition, cloth bds. 1s.

THE LAW OF HUSBAND AND WIFE. A Treatise on the Law of Husband and Wife as respects Property, partly founded upon Hoper's Treatise, and comprising Jacobs' Notes and Additions thereto. By J. E. WRIGHT, Esq. of the Inner Temple, Barrister at Law. 2 vols. royal 8vo. 43 10s. boards.

8vo. price 12s.—free by Post.

A PRACTICAL TREATISE ON PLEADING BY BILL in the COURTS OF EQUITY in IRELAND; adapted to the General Orders. By ALFRED M'FARLAND, Esq., Barrister at Law.

REPORTS OF PRACTICE AND NISI PRIUS CASES (including Registry and Civil Bill Appeals) DECIDED in the SUPERIOR COURTS, and at the AFTER SITTINGS; with Index and Table of Cases. By J. BLACKMAN, W. J. DUNDAS, and E. W. OUSSELY, Esqrs., Barristers at Law. Part IV., completing Vol. I., price 3s.

EDWARD J. MILLIKEN, LAW BOOKSELLER AND PUBLISHER, 15, COLLEGE GREEN, DUBLIN.

All communications for the IRISH JURIST are to be sent, addressed to the Editor, with the Publisher, E. J. MILLIKEN, 15, COLLEGE GREEN. Correspondents will please give the Name and Address, as the columns of the paper cannot be occupied with answers to Anonymous Communications; nor will the Editor be accountable for the return of Manuscripts, &c.

Orders for the IRISH JURIST left with E. J. MILLIKEN, 15, COLLEGE GREEN, or by letter (post-paid), will ensure its punctual delivery in Dublin, or its being forwarded to the Country, by Post, on the day of publication.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION—(payable in advance):
Yearly, 30s. Half-yearly, 17s. Quarterly, 9s.

Printed by THOMAS ISAAC WHITE, at his Printing Office, No. 15, FLEET STREET, in the Parish of St. Andrew, and published at 15 COLLEGE GREEN, in same Parish, by EDWARD JOHNSTON MILLIKEN, residing at the same place, all being in the County of the City of Dublin. Saturday, September 2, 1849.

THE Irish Jurist

No. 49.—Vol. 1.

OCTOBER 6, 1849.

Price {Per Annum, £1 10s.
Single Number, 6d.

The Names of the Gentlemen who favour THE IRISH JURIST with Reports in the several Courts of Law and Equity in Ireland, are as follows:—

Court of Chancery, including Bankruptcy Appeals.....	{ ROBERT LOWE, Esq., and JOHN PITT KENNEDY, Esq., Barristers-at-Law.	Court of Exchequer Chamber.....	{ JOHN BLACKHAM, Esq., and A. HICKEY, Esq., Barristers-at-Law.
Rolls Court.....	{ WILLIAM BURKE, Esq., and WILLIAM JOHN DUNDAS, Esq., Barristers-at-Law.	Queen's Bench, including Civil Bill and Registry Appeals.....	{ FLORENCE M'CARNEY, Esq., and SAMUEL V. PEET, Esq., Barristers-at-Law.
Equity Exchequer.....	{ CHARLES HARE HEMPHILL, Esq., and WILLIAM HICKSON, Esq., Barristers-at-Law.	Exchequer of Pleas, including Manor Court and Registry Appeals.....	{ CHAS. H. HEMPHILL, Esq., and WILLIAM HICKSON, Esq., Barristers-at-Law.
Bankrupt Court.....	{ ROBERT GRIFFIN, Esq. and W.G. CHAMNEY, Esq. Barristers-at-law.	Common Pleas.....	{ ROBERT GRIFFIN, Esq. and W. G. CHAMNEY, Esq. Barristers-at-law.
		Admiralty Court.....	{ ROBERT GRIFFIN, Esq. and W. G. CHAMNEY, Esq. Barristers-at-law.

DUBLIN, OCTOBER 6, 1849.

WE return to the consideration of Lord Brougham's very remarkable letter, which demonstrates the absolute necessity for some improved machinery in the manufacture of Acts of Parliament. Nothing can be worse than the present want of system, and of a superintending power. Can anything be conceived more disgraceful, for the Legislature of an enlightened community, than the following narrative, and the facts stated in it, disclose.

"When I presented my first bill, digesting the criminal law, Lord Lyndhurst at once said, 'as this is a digest, nothing can be done with it in Parliament; we are wholly incapable of revision in such a matter; therefore let us, for security sake, refer it to another commission to revise and improve it.' This course, pointed out by the never failing sagacity of that manly understanding, was taken; and we submitted the amended draft to all the judges, and to the profession at large. Of their suggestions we shall gladly avail ourselves. But if after receiving this ultimate consideration, a Committee of the House of Commons, not satisfied with what has satisfied the Lords, and the Bench, and the profession, undertakes to go through each of the codes minutely, and weigh every word of above 2,000 articles, we require no gift of prophecy to let us foresee that such a labour will have no end, and if it ever be terminated, would only mar the work of abler men more calmly considering the subject. Every sciolist who belonged to the profession, but had never practised in any of its walks." "Whatever worthy citizen had an attorney at his elbow to suggest criticisms, objections, and improvements—whatever new-made senator felt the desire of private distinction more than the value of public time—all would fasten on points of discussion so numerous, that no appetite but must find some one suited to its taste. And if ever the revision was brought to a close, the learned authors of the code would assuredly never recognise their own work."

And again—"Our laws are prepared by individuals, or by boards in connexion with the government; but there is no communication between those parties from whom those different bills proceed. Hence, there is no guarantee whatever against the most manifest inconsistencies in their various provisions. But again, each party has one particular object in view, and his bill is framed to obtain that object. Hence, an almost entire disregard, not only of general principles, but of former statutory provisions. It is evidently impossible that bills so prepared can be at all safe to pass. But the evil stops not here. After any one is introduced, it undergoes alterations, first in one house, alterations made wholly without regard to the portions left unchanged; then in the other house, new changes are made, without any regard to the proceedings in the former; of course, I speak only of many instances; for such want of precaution to avoid error cannot prevail in all the alterations made. But, whoever has attended to the manner in which bills are first framed, and then altered during their passage through Parliament, must be aware what gross blunders are committed; and that such blunders are inevitable so long as the work is prepared by various unconnected parties, without superintendence. Thus it has often been said, that the scissors of the draftsman make many a clause, and so does the pen of the amender. Hence, nothing is more common (as lawyers who answer cases well know) than to find one section of a statute referring to something as aforesaid, when nothing of the kind was said before; but the section had been cut off a former Act, in which there had been an antecedent, which was not taken. Thus far the scissors; but so too the pen. I was astonished to find my patent bill of 1835 in one or two places made wholly insensible when it was returned from the Commons; and how? by the members then introducing new matter wholly at variance with the Act, which they left unchanged. But though much embarrassment was seen to arise in courts of law and equity from this blunder, I was forced to submit on pain of losing the bill. In 1834 I was compelled to alter a clause sent up from the Commons, which would have suspended all the criminal justice of the country from the next October sessions. The Commons were angry at their blunder being detected, and threw out the bill, depriving the country of a very valuable measure, for such it was all, except that erroneous portion.

"Of the havoc made by careless drawing, one instance, I admit an extreme one, is sometimes cited in that notable feat of the legislatorial-scissors, which awarded one moiety of a penalty, namely transportation or whipping, to the person suing for the same; and another to his Majesty, his heirs and successors. If it be said that there is sufficient security against the discrepancies, or the oversights of the draftsman in the discussions of the two houses, I would answer, first, by referring to the innumerable clauses which come yearly before those bodies. I take the first year's statutes that come to my hand, those of 1833, and I find them to contain 2,600 sections, besides somewhere from 90 to 100 printed pages of schedules; to say nothing of 195 private or local Acts, with their hundred or thousands of sections, or schedules; and this before the railway fever broke out. After that calamity, we saw in one session 400 or 500 Acts, with 13,000, or 14,000 clauses.

"The impossibility of due attention being paid to each clause, in each bill, is quite apparent.

"I would for further answer refer to the undeniable fact, that they who have the care of any bill are only occupied with having its main provisions carried, and take little heed to its details. I would, thirdly, refer to the fact, staring us in the face, that the draft of the bill is, generally speaking, to be found in the Act, with its sins of omission, and commission, increased by the errors which creep in during its progress, of this I have given instances."

Though we do not concur in the entire of his lordship's ideas, we can perfectly understand his letter deprecatory of interference, by a Committee of the House of Commons, with a code, the product of years of learned labour. He has proved his case thus far, that there should be a permanent staff for the careful preparation and revision of all bills submitted or passed through the house, to preserve consistency of plan, and to prevent the insertion of contradictory clauses, and all formal errors; but we cannot coincide in the view, that any measure, be it ever so well and skilfully prepared, should be laid on the table of either house with an understanding that it should not be altered. This would amount to the creation of an imperium in imperio, a law-making body more potent than either of the recognised branches of the Legislature.

As his Lordship approaches the fulfilment of one of the leading objects of his life, we can understand his anxiety, that it may not be marred by the untimely interference of an unskilled or hypercritical Commons Committee.

Our observations only go to the extent that the suggesting power of that body should remain; we do not advocate its unseasonable interposition.

Lord Brougham's efforts, as a law reformer, have been long sustained, earnest and persevering; and we hope he will live to see them thoroughly successful. In one of his greatest speeches, he animated the House of Commons to the amendment of our laws, by the most masterly eloquence. "You have it in your power to hand down your name to all time, illustrated by deeds of higher fame, of more useful import, than ever were accomplished within these walls. You saw him, conqueror of Germany, subduer of Italy, terror of the North—count all his matchless victories poor. Saw him despise the fickleness of fortune, whilst, in despite of her, he could pronounce his memorable boast—I shall go down to posterity with the code in my hand."

We should rejoice that his Lordship would be enabled to use a similar boast, that would in truth be a just subject for self gratulation. His eccentricities, his errors would be forgotten—the recollection of his wonderful abilities alone would live, enhanced by the enduring fame of an accomplishment of the mightiest and most useful character.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

RECEIVER COMMITTEE.

William Tighe Hamilton, Esq.—June 29.

(Continued from p. 356.)

1828. When you use the term "of the highest character in the country," do not you understand that this Committee is now sitting in consequence of the Court of Chancery having failed in the management of those estates?—Yes, I do; I do not mean high character, in the ordinary sense of the term character, but that it is the highest court in point of legal jurisdiction.

1829. Chairman.] Supposing that you abolished the equity side of the Exchequer, how would you propose the equity business then to be done?—There is very little done now in the Court of Exchequer compared with what there used to be. My general idea is this, that you should collect all estates under one head, and then give that head precisely the same powers in all respects for the management of the estates, as the owners would have; that you should place under that head a body of receivers fully as well qualified for the purpose as the private agents of owners; that you should place that receiver in precisely the same position for all purposes of recovering rents, and all purposes of managing the estate, that the private agent is in, and that you should place the tenants in precisely the same position as they would be in under a private-owner, and in fact, relieve them from the very great hardships to which they are now subject, and which lead to the demoralization of the tenantry over a very great extent of country; and, lastly, that you should adopt such a system of accounting under that head, as will resemble as nearly as possible the system that private owners for their own purposes have adopted.

1330. The first thing would be to get a fit class of persons as receivers?—Yes.

1331. The second thing would be to get proper superintendence of those receivers?—Precisely. I ought to state here that the present system is literally nothing more nor less than a machine for the collection of rent, and a machine, if I might use that figure, wholly uncontrolled by a proper "governor." I can illustrate that by putting in some interesting returns made out from the first 150 accounts which I passed this year in the Court of Exchequer, and the first 150 which were passed in the Court of Chancery, and I have taken the instance of four rather well-managed estates under private owners, to show a comparison of the amount of rental, arrears and receipts, and the amount expended in improvements.

1332. With regard to obtaining a fit class of persons to be receivers, you have said that by properly regulating the liabilities and duties of the office you conceive that a competition could be produced amongst a respectable class of men for it. Then with regard to the superintendence of those persons do you conceive that the Masters of the Court of Chancery and the Remembrancers of the Court of Exchequer are not suitable persons to superintend the proceedings of receivers?—I do not think, generally speaking, that a legal education is the one best suited to a person who has to manage estates; I should say not. At the same time I believe that some of the persons who have filled the offices of Remembrancer and Masters in Chancery have been eminently suited for the duty.

1333. Is not it absolutely necessary that there should be a paramount controul over the management of the estates by a legal tribunal?—I think decidedly so.

1337. Then any new instrumentality for that purpose should be under the jurisdiction of the equity courts?—I think so, for this reason, that the Court has to deal with the corpus of the estate or with the rights of creditors, and therefore I think there would be inconvenience in separating the management of the estate from the tribunal that is to decide upon the thing itself.

1338. Then what necessity would there be for abolishing altogether the equity jurisdiction of the Court of Exchequer?—I do not see any other means of bringing all the estates under one tribunal except that.

1339. You mean under the control of a court of equity?—Precisely; under one Court, in order that you may have uniformity of system.

1346. Chairman.] Are not you aware of the extreme diligence of the Master of the Rolls, and the large amount of business which he does as an equity Judge?—Clearly; I think he is the hardest worked Judge in the Four Courts.

1347. Do you conceive that it would be just towards him to impose additional duties upon him besides what are imposed already?—No, quite the contrary; I think he ought to have his duties lightened, if possible.

1348. Do you think that the abolition of the equity side of the Court of Exchequer would lighten his duties?—I think it would if it were part and parcel of a better measure for receivers, and the English practice of references were adopted.

1349. In what way?—He would be relieved altogether of an immense mass of business which he now has to dispose of connected with receivers' accounts, arising in a great measure from the viciousness of the system; for instance, he has to entertain all applications for renewals and for permission to eject. Those are applications which ought to be made to the Auditor-general. He has also to entertain all applications from tenants for references to the Masters for abatements of their rents, and in fact, every other matter which concerns the management of estates must first go to the Master of the Rolls, and then go into the Master's office; and it strikes me that by adopting the system which I have suggested a very considerable portion of that business would cease, and great expense to the suitors be saved.

1350. In whom would you vest the power of deciding those questions?—I would vest it in whatever Master was appointed Auditor-general of the receivers' accounts, or in whatever other person was appointed for similar duties.

1351. Would the head of this new Court be a legal person?—He would be a Master of the Court, and therefore legal.

1352. You were understood to say, that you thought that legal persons were not competent to discharge those duties?—I said that I did not think that a legal education, as such, necessarily produced the best persons for the discharge of those duties. But I think that there would always be one of the five Masters who would add to his legal knowledge the other necessary qualifications.

1353. You were understood to say that one ground of the transfer of jurisdiction was, that the Masters of the Court of Chancery, or the Remembrancers of the Court of Exchequer, were not suitable persons to control the management of estates?—What I mean is this, there are no less than five independent individuals, under two different Courts, managing these estates, every one of whom will naturally take a different view, and manage in a different mode; therefore I would connect them all under one head, and I would give to that one head all the duties to discharge which are now done conjointly between the Master of the Rolls and the Masters in Chancery and the Remembrancers.

1354. In the Court of Exchequer, where the duties are more concentrated in two officers, are the estates under them better managed than the estates under the Masters in Chancery?—No: I think there is a very great similarity between them.

1355. Mr. R. B. Osbornes.] They are similarly badly managed?—Similarly badly managed.

1356. Does that arise from the unsuitableness of the officers, or to what do you ascribe it?—I ascribe it entirely, not to the unsuitableness of the officers, because I am one of the officers myself, but to the system.

1357. Chairman.] Supposing one of those officers were the head of this new Board which you propose to establish, do you think he could work it well?—I think he could.

1358. Then why cannot he now as an officer of the Court, the Court merely controlling the rights of creditors and generally superintending the whole, supposing the system to be so improved as to work in the way which you desire?—I think he could do so if you gave him proper powers, but at present you might as well expect a man to run steadily in a sack.

1359. Then it would remedy the mischief if he, as an officer of the Court, had sufficient powers for carrying out an efficient system of management?—No doubt; and then the only inconvenience which would exist would be the having one officer in one court managing perhaps better or perhaps worse than the analogous officer in the other court.

1360. It would appear to you desirable, as a general proposition, to concentrate the duties of superintendence as much as possible in one person, that person being amenable to the general equitable control of the Court as guarding the rights of creditors?—Clearly.

1374. With reference to getting a better class of persons to act as receivers, you are in favour of abolishing the remedy by receivers on small judgments?—I think decidedly so.

1375. Have you considered the plan in the Government Bill for altering the law of judgments?—No, I have not seen it yet. The grounds upon which I entertain my opinion are, the very small rental over which receivers are by these means appointed, and the ruin which necessarily follows to the parties. I have frequently, since the commencement of this year, extended the time for three years for passing the accounts of receivers, on the ground that they were as low as £12 or £14, and that the estate would not bear the cost of the annual expenditure of £6 for passing the account. I passed the other day two accounts; in the one the rental was £19, the costs of appointing the receiver were £28, and the costs of passing the account were £6; in the other the rental was £20, the costs of appointing a receiver were £29, and the costs of passing the account were £6.

1377. It is in your opinion more desirable to endeavour to improve the system of receivers, or to abolish the remedy by receivers on judgment and to go back to the old law?—The old law is said to have been almost as bad as the new one, but if a very perfect system of receivers could be adopted, nearly as perfect which it might be, I think as a system of private management, I think that would take away a great deal of the objection to appointing receivers for large sums.

1378. Would it in your opinion be more easy to improve the remedy under the existing law, or the remedy under the old law?—I am very little conversant with the old law, so that I cannot say how far I think it could be improved, but I certainly think that the new law could be very much improved.

1379. Supposing it were improved to any reasonable extent, such as you have suggested, so as to get the system of receivers into a better condition, that would take away a great many of the objections to the system?—It would take away a great many of the objections, so far as regards the question of public policy, as to the condition of the tenantry of the country, but it is quite another question as to the relation between the debtor and the creditor.

IN CHANCERY.

PURSUANT to the Decree in this cause, bearing date the 14th day of June, 1840, I require all persons having Charges or Incumbrances affecting the Lands of DRUMQUIN, situate in the County of Clare, being the property of the said defendant, JOHN O'DONNELL, in the pleadings in this cause mentioned, to come in before me at my Chambers on the 10th day, in the City of Dublin, on or before the First day of November next, and proceed to prove the same, otherwise they will be precluded from the benefit of said Decree.

Dated this 6th day of September, 1840.

For MASTER HENRY, R. LITTON.

Michael Cullinan, Solicitor for Plaintiff,
No. 64, Capel Street, Dublin.

NEW LAW BOOKS.

BEST'S PRINCIPLES OF EVIDENCE.

A TREATISE on the Principles of EVIDENCE and PRACTICE as to Proof in Courts of Common Law; with Elementary Rules for conducting the Examination and Cross-examination of Witnesses. By W. M. BEST, A.M. LL.B., Barrister at Law. 1 vol. 8vo. cloth, 18s.

ANGELL ON THE LAW OF CARRIERS.

A TREATISE on the Law of CARRIERS of GOODS and PASSENGERS by Land and by Water. By S. K. ANGELL, Esq., Barrister at Law. 1 vol. royal 8vo. 2s. 6d.

ROGER'S ECCLESIASTICAL LAW.

A Practical Arrangement of ECCLESIASTICAL LAW. Second Edition, considerably enlarged. By FRANCIS NEWMAN ROGER, Esq., Barrister at Law. 1 vol. 8vo. 21s.

PRINCIPLES OF EQUITY JURISPRUDENCE.

THE Principles of EQUITY JURISPRUDENCE, embracing the Concurrent, Exclusive, and Auxiliary Jurisdiction of Courts of Equity. By the Editors of the Law Students' Magazine. 1 vol. 8vo. cloth bds. 12s. 6d.

ADDISON ON THE LAW OF CONTRACTS.

A TREATISE on the Law of CONTRACTS, and Rights and Liabilities of Contractor. By C. G. ADDISON, Esq., of the Inner Temple, Barrister at Law. Second Edition, 2 vols. 8vo. price 21s.

RUSSELL ON ARBITRATION.

A TREATISE on the Power and Duty of an ARBITRATOR, and the Law of Submissions and Awards; with an Appendix of Forms, and of the Statutes relating to Arbitration. By FRANCIS RUSSELL, Esq., M.A., Barrister at Law. 1 vol. 8vo. 21s.

BAYLEY ON BILLS OF EXCHANGE.

SUMMARY of the Law of Bills of Exchange, Cash Bills, and Promissory Notes. By SIR JOHN BAYLEY, Knt. Just. Edition, by G. W. DOWDESWELL, Barrister at Law. 1 vol. 8vo. 21s.

BURGE ON THE LAW OF SURETSHIP.

COMMENTARIES on the Law of SURETSHIP, and the Rights and Obligations of the parties therein. By WILLIAM BURGE, Esq. Q.C. M.A. &c. 1 vol. 8vo. 18s.

STANFIELD'S PRECEDENTS IN CONVEYANCING.

A COLLECTION of Copyhold PRECEDENTS in CONVEYANCING, arranged for general and ordinary use, together with Introductory Treatises upon the various transactions and occurrences incident to Estates of customary tenure, &c. By JOHN T. STANFIELD, Esq. 1 vol. 8vo. 12s.

QUESTIONS FOR LAW STUDENTS on the Second Edition of Mr. Serjeant Stephen's New Commentaries on the Law of England. By JAMES STEPHEN, Esq. of the Middle Temple, Barrister at Law. 1 vol. 8vo. cloth boards, price 10s. 6d.

EDWARD J. MILLIKEN, LAW BOOKSELLER AND PUBLISHER, 18, COLLEGE GREEN, DUBLIN.

All communications for the IRISH JURIST are to be sent, addressed to the Editor, with the Publisher, E. J. MILLIKEN, 18, COLLEGE GREEN. Correspondents will please give the Name and Address, as the columns of the paper cannot be occupied with answers to Anonymous Communications—nor will the Editor be accountable for the return of Manuscripts, &c.

Orders for the IRISH JURIST left with E. J. MILLIKEN, 18, COLLEGE GREEN, or by letter (post-paid), will ensure its punctual delivery in Dublin, or its being forwarded to the Country, by Post, on the day of publication.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION—(payable in advance):
Yearly, 30s. Half-yearly, 17s. Quarterly, 9s.

Printed by THOMAS ISAAC WHITE, at his Printing Office, No. 45, FLEET STREET, in the Parish of St. Andrew, and published at COLLEGE GREEN, in same Parish, by EDWARD JOHNSTON MILLIKEN, residing at the same place, all being in the County of the City of Dublin. Saturday, October 6, 1840.

THE Irish Jurist

No. 50.—VOL. I.

OCTOBER 13, 1849.

Price { Per Annum, £1 10s.
Single Number, 6d.

The Names of the Gentlemen who favour THE IRISH JURIST with Reports in the several Courts of Law and Equity in Ireland, are as follows :—

Court of Chancery, including Bankruptcy Appeals.....	{ ROBERT LONG, Esq., and JOHN PITT KENNEDY, Esq., Barristers-at-Law.	Court of Exchequer Chamber.....	{ JOHN BLACKMAN, Esq., and A. HICKY, Esq., Barristers-at-Law.
Rolls Court.....	{ WILLIAM BURKE, Esq., and WILLIAM JOHN DUNDAS, Esq., Barristers-at-Law.	Queen's Bench, including Civil Bill and Registry Appeals	{ FLORENCE M'CARTHY, Esq., and SAMUEL V. PEET, Esq., Barristers-at-Law.
Equity Exchequer.....	{ CHARLES HARRIS HEMPHILL, Esq., and WILLIAM HICKSON, Esq., Barristers-at-Law.	Exchequer of Pleas, including Manor Court and Registry Appeals.	{ CHAS. H. HEMPHILL, Esq., and WILLIAM HICKSON, Esq., Barristers-at-Law.
Bankrupt Court.....	{ ROBERT GRIFFIN, Esq. and W. G. CHANNY, Esq. Barristers-at-law.	Common Pleas.....	{ ROBERT GRIFFIN, Esq. and W. G. CHANNY, Esq. Barristers-at-law.
		Admiralty Court.....	{ ROBERT GRIFFIN, Esq. and W. G. CHANNY, Esq. Barristers-at-law.

DUBLIN, OCTOBER 13, 1849.

AMID the varied changes required in the real property law of this country, there is no branch of it which calls for greater revision, than that which is supposed to regulate the relation between landlord and tenant.

It is defective in two vital particulars; the landlord has no protection against the fraudulent tenant, and the improving tenant has no security for his improvements.

The want of the first protection, has led to a frightful system of fraud and illegal combination.

The whole code, though enacted by landlords, is, in some particulars, very unfavourable to themselves, and leaves them often at the mercy of the knavish occupier. Take, for instance, the law as it affects the assignees of leases. They can discharge themselves from all future liability by assignment over. We are aware that this is doubted, but it has been established by such inveterate usage as to be now considered settled. Suppose rent, reserved by lease, to fall due on the 29th of September, on the 28th the assignee assigns to a pauper—a beggar in the streets—then leaves the premises, and pays no rent for the half year, minus one day, he has been in occupation. He has broken no covenant in the lease; he was out of possession before the rent became due; by no action founded on the lease can that rent be recovered, and that lease being still subsisting, can an action for use and occupation be maintained? This, we believe, has never been tried; and except the bona fides of the assignment could, as to the half year which has elapsed, be treated as fraudulent—with a view to prospective discharge from liability it has been held not fraudulent—we know not how that form of action could be maintained.

Nor is it easy to determine how the same instrument can be considered fraudulent for one purpose, and bona fide for another. It was executed the 28th of September, with a prospective view to discharge the liability of the gale day of the 29th, as well as every subsequent one. But the mischief ends not here, if the assignee be merciful, he will send the key to the landlord, if not, he places his pauper assignee in possession, and the landlord must allow that man to remain another half year in occupation of a dilapidating house, before an ejectment can be brought for its recovery—the expense of which he must bear.

Surely this is a great evil, which admits of easy remedy. It may be answered, that the original lessee always continues liable; but after a lapse of years, and change of parties, this liability can rarely be enforced.

There is a considerable practical inconvenience likewise resulting from the rule of law, that the action of ejectment will not lie where there is no reversion. It will be found not an unfrequent case, that the lessor, having allowed more than a year's rent to accrue, finds that he would be non-suited at the trial, if he brought his ejectment; not because the rent is not due, nor that the legal and moral liability is not complete, but because his lessee holds for the same years or lives as himself, and he is obliged to remit that rent, and pay that tenant a handsome premium to get rid of him. Surely this evil is susceptible of easy remedy.

The legislation, of a few years since, attempted to remove the grievances, to which tenants were said to be exposed, and the right to distrain growing crops was taken away. It had probably often been vexatiously exercised, but its removal has been fraught with the most pernicious consequences, and the recent conduct of Irish tenants has produced the painful conviction, that no power of enforcing an honest obligation can with safety be withdrawn from the landlord.

That power in the hands of a judicious proprietor was most useful, more by way of check to the tenant than for practical enforcement. It is necessary, in a country like ours, that the former should have the most stringent and summary powers for the recovery of his rent, and of his premises, if that be unpaid; and, simultaneously with the investment of those powers upon him, should be passed a law giving the tenant the most ample security for money expended in lasting improvements.

The want of such a law before the agricultural interest had received its late shock, retarded the prosperity of the country. It was not reasonable to suppose that men of capital would expend money on a fleeting possession, and it was not just that the permanent product of their labours should altogether become the property of the landlord.

In England the same law would be quite unnecessary, for there the landlord leases highly improved premises, with an excellent habitation, in the most perfect order, for a short term. In Ireland a tenant takes possession of lands out of heart, and either without a dwelling, or with one not much better than a pig-stye, and if he improve the land, and build a substantial house at his own expense, at the termination of his lease he is at the mercy of his landlord as to increased rent or eviction.

This circumstance prevented the outlay of capital by skilled agriculturists possessed of capital, and except the Legislature interpose, the evil cannot be generally removed in a country where the leasing powers of the proprietors are so restricted by family settlements. In an agricultural community it is a matter for grave observation that all our land relations are so imperfect. There is no subject of greater practical importance for the future well-being of this country than that of landlord and tenant. If our anticipations be correct the deeply incumbered properties of the West must be sold; the buyers will, in many instances, for the sake of self-preservation, be the pious creditors, whose capital will have been sunk in their own incumbrance, or exhausted in paying off the prior ones. They will not have means to do more than purchase the soil—the raw material—a good tenant farmer class will be required to manufacture the fabric. This preceding observation, though written relatively to one class of purchasers, admits of general application. It will not be within the grasp of the fee proprietors to improve and to build upon every farm on their properties. They must call in aid another race of men, and to them they must give reasonable inducements. There is no greater motive for human action than that which is derived from the assurance that the labourer shall reap the fruit of his labours, and that another shall not reap what he has sown.

A well-prepared digest of the law of landlord and tenant is an essential. We trust that Mr. Napier will not allow another session to pass without the devotion of his abilities and energies to this most useful undertaking, in which he can command the cordial co-operation of every well-thinking man in the community. Nor is it one of great labour or difficulty, it only requires the present materials to be consolidated, and, in some particulars, obviously just, improved.

We have instanced Mr. Napier, as he has expressed his intention of, patiently and prudently following up the necessary reforms in our law. He has certainly the right of selecting the order in which he will proceed, but we would venture to suggest to him, that the reform and consolidation that we have suggested, demand his most immediate attention.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

RECEIVER COMMITTEE.

William Tighe Hamilton, Esq.—Jan. 29,

(Continued from p. 360.)

1380. With regard to the case of judgments for small sums, does not it appear almost necessary to abolish the remedy by a receiver for small judgments?—I think so. For instance, I think a case as this is a monstrous hardship. The day I appointed a receiver under order of the Court for a debt of £10, over an estate of £400 a year. That was under the Tithe Rent-charge Act.

1385. Can you state what you think are the evil evils of this system as bearing upon the debt with the tenantry?—I think the first evil to me the tenants are subject is the cost of their lease. I think that a very great hardship. A tenant to a private owner generally pays about £2 for his lease, but a tenant under the Court cannot get his lease for less than £6 10s.

1389. What is the next grievance of which you think that the tenants under the Court have to complain?—The next grievance is that they cannot get a lease for a fixed term. I think that it is a great hardship to the tenant that the longest lease he can get is seven years, which may determine to expire, and if his rent is £10 he must pay £6 10s. for the lease.

1392. Do you think the system of bidding for land a judicious one?—I think nothing can be worse; so much so, that in my office for the last two or three years I have discouraged it as much as I possibly can; and my practice is almost invariably now to direct the receiver to go amongst the tenantry, to circulate handbills in the neighbourhood, and to get into local communication with the parties likely to take; and then he sends up to me proposals from different tenants, and I hear his opinion upon these, as nearly as possible in the way in which a private owner would, through his agent; and I decide upon the most eligible party, without any reference whatever to the comparative amount that he proposes, but entirely with reference to his eligibility as a tenant and the intrinsic value of the farm. Then another hardship connected with the mode of letting, which I think is a very great one, is that the tenant is obliged to incur the expense of a recognizance, which is either perfectly futile, or if it is not futile is likely to be very injurious to those who are inadvertently drawn in.

1394. Does the recognizance in fact operate as substantial security?—I think not. Then there is this further hardship, that when the tenancy is de-terminated, as it may be in a few months after it commences, by a sale, the unfortunate tenant has to go to the expense of getting that recognizance vacated, which he cannot do for less than £5 or £6.

1397. Chairman.] There is a natural indisposition in the Court where there has been a long established practice, without some legislative sanction to alter it?—No doubt. Another very great grievance to which the tenants under the Court are subject is the want of help when they get into difficulties; if a tenant gets embarrassed in any way it is a very fair thing that the landlord should help him, but we have no power whatever to do that; and therefore when once the Court comes over a tenant, he is put in a position that he would not be in under a private landlord. I think that forms a very important item in his grievances.

1415. Mr. R. B. Osborne.] Is there any other hardship upon the tenants?—I think the next mode in which the tenants suffer is by the way in which they are harrassed by some receivers. There is nothing more common now than for the receiver, the moment his account is passed, to rush to the tenantry, and take every possible means to collect the rent, in order to use this rent till thirteen months or a longer period, if he is not called upon, has elapsed; so that in that way, the very form of accounting acts to harrass the tenantry.

1444. Chairman.] With regard to legal proceedings against the tenantry, do you think that the character of the proceedings usually adopted to recover the arrears of rent is satisfactory?—I think they are most unsatisfactory.

1446. Supposing it were certified by the officer that so much rent is in arrear, and that were really ascertained, can you see any advantage, either to the estate or to the tenant, in allowing the process of ejectment to be gone through, or an action, or any of those proceedings?—None whatever in the present form of those proceedings; I think it is the greatest possible advantage.

1447. Then if you were improving the system, do not you think that it might be very materially improved by allowing proper steps to be taken in a summary way as soon as you have ascertained the state of the rent account?—No question about it.

1448. And that would do away in many cases with the necessity of ejectments and distresses, and the consequent expense to all parties?—Clearly; I think that the difficulties which exist in the way of ejectment now are most demoralizing to the tenants: in fact it enables them to set the receiver at defiance, and to set an example of defiance in the neighbourhood, and that sometimes is an evil of the greatest magnitude.

1449. Do you think that the opportunity which they have of postponing the discharge of their liabilities and baffling the receiver by protracted litigation, is injurious in every point of view?—No question about it.

1456. Mr. R. B. Osborne.] In your Court is there any inquiry as to the qualification of a person proposed to be a receiver?—There is a verbal inquiry which is rather a negative one, whether he possesses certain qualities which unfit him for receiver; for instance, whether he is an attorney connected with the cause; whether he is an attorney's clerk; whether he is a public-house keeper. That is according to the rule of both Courts, indicating the very low description of persons that are liable to be appointed receiver, when it is necessary to follow such a rule.

1457. That rule was made by Sir Edward Sugden, was it not?—I think it is a rule of practice rather than a written rule.

1458. Are you aware that Sir Edward Sugden laid down certain rules by which no attorney in the cause, nor attorney's clerk, could be appointed a receiver?—Yes; I only spoke of public-house keepers.

1465. Can you give me any idea what the costs of a receiver are to the estate?—His poundage is five per cent.; by an analysis of the 150 accounts passed before me, I find that the legal expenses for the recovery of rents come to about 12 per cent. upon the sum received.

1467. Would you think that 15 per cent. was too high to put it at, as the costs of the receiver?—In the case of certain estates I should say it would be a great deal more than that; in the general run of estates which have come from the hands of distressed landlords, I should say that 15 per cent. was a low average for poundage and costs.

1488. You have put in the heads of a bill; would the effect of that bill be to abolish the equity side of the Court of Exchequer, and to save the public expense?—It would save the public £15,400 a year, taking from that whatever might be necessary for the new establishment in Chancery, which would not exceed £3,500.

1493. But if the estates now cost 15 per cent. for managing, would it not be possible to have a plan which would be self-supporting without charging those expenses upon the Consolidated Fund?—I think so; but where you have establishments for all legal proceedings charged upon the State, it would be departing from that practice to charge these particular expenses upon the owners of the property which is so unfortunate as to be brought into the Court, and which already contributes largely to the State by stamps upon the proceedings.

1497. Would it not be possible to do the whole under the Court for seven per cent?—I think not, because part of the system which I should strongly recommend would require a large staff of clerks and surveyors, who should be at the disposal of the Auditor-general, to go into the country, and to be as it were his eyes, to inspect the estates and report personally to him upon every question of improvement or every other matter. I think that would swallow up a very large part of the maximum poundage.

1504. But in your opinion nothing can be worse than the present state of the management of property under the Court of Chancery?—Nothing can be worse.

William Macartney M^c Cay, Esq., June 29, 1849.

1523. Mr. R. B. Osborne.] Will you state your profession?—I am a solicitor.

1524. Are you acquainted with the management of landed property in Ireland?—Yes; I have been whether it would be giving the Act a retroactive operation, to hold that it extends to releases made before it passed."

The learned writer has so studiously guarded himself in the expression of his opinion, that it is difficult to determine to which side it inclines; he states the doubt, and leaves it unsolved; we, however, conjecture, that he is of opinion that the Act extends to releases prior and subsequent to its passing, because he considers it "questionable whether such a construction would be giving it a retroactive operation," and affirms, that "there is nothing in the expressions used in the enacting clause, to prevent it extending to releases executed before the passing of the Act."

We entertain so sincere a respect for the soundness of his judgment, that we arrive at a different conclusion, with considerable distrust of our own, and, as we differ from what we assume to be his opinion, we hope we have misinterpreted it; but we cannot read the whole preamble of the clause without doing violence to the English language, or feeling impressed with the idea that it relates alone to future releases. It speaks of a judgment affecting lands in Ireland, and the owner of it, being willing to release a portion of such lands, evidently referring to a future act by him, and where it speaks of retaining its validity it uses the words, "which it is intended should remain subject to such judgment." In the whole preamble there is not a single word referable to the past, whilst every expression relates to the present or the future. And the enacting clause appears to us studiously confined to future releases; the future "shall," is the operative word. Unaffected by the Statute, the question is one of extreme nicety, and we shall look forward to its ultimate decision with interest.

One of the judges of the Court of Common Pleas was, we presume, absent during the argument, at least he did not sign the certificate, and the other members of the Court adopted the ancient practice—better honoured in the breach than the observance—of returning their certificate without assigning their reasons for the conclusions to which they had arrived. When difficult questions are thus submitted to Courts of Law it would be extremely satisfactory to learn as well the judgment as the process of reasoning which led to it. And the wholesome practice, introduced by Lord Mansfield, and sanctioned by subsequent general usage, of giving the grounds of his opinion, would appear to exist as strongly now as when that ornament of our profession, by a series of masterly decisions, delivered in the most perspicuous and elegant language, laid the foundation of our commercial code. And if the remark be generally true, it would appear peculiarly applicable to cases sent by reason of their difficulty by the head of one court for the advice and assistance of the collective wisdom of another. And yet in these instances alone our Courts of Law rest satisfied with an answer to the questions submitted to their consideration, leaving to conjecture and in mystery the arguments and reasons which led to their opinion.

The present state of the law of judgments in Ireland is extremely unsatisfactory, even as amended by the hasty legislation of the past session, which has disturbed, without settling it.

An historical sketch of the rise and progress of this mode of assurance, of its effect upon the landed and commercial interests of the country, together with a statement of the changes which have been lately made, of the different incidents attaching to the different species of judgments, and a collection of the cases bearing upon each would, we should think, be very acceptable at the present moment.

It would certainly, to the lawyer who has leisure to consider the subject, and somewhat of a philosophical turn of mind, be a subject of considerable interest, as well as of considerable practical benefit to himself in the pursuit of his profession, and, if treated worthily, conducive to his future fame.

The Irish lawyer, who desires literary distinction by the publication of law works has, unfortunately, to earn it at his own expense, the present depressed state of the profession and of law publishing rendering the authorship of any legal work of pretension unremunerative.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

RECEIVER COMMITTEE.

William Macartney M'Cay Esq.—June 29.

(Continued from p. 364.)

1534. That includes minors and all?—It does. It may be necessary to explain that it is with great difficulty we arrive at anything like certainty upon this point, for there is no means patent to the public or to the profession of knowing the exact amount of property under either of those courts. Even with the assistance of the return laid before Parliament, we can only approximate to it. The paper which I hold in my hand is an abstract of the return of the Court of Exchequer, which gives a rental of £155,402 a year, but that sum, I think, is much under the true amount, because it professes to give only those receivers who have passed their accounts. The Court of Chancery gives a return for each of the years, 1844, 1845, 1846, 1847, of those receivers only who have passed accounts in those years. Now the Committee are aware that the rule of accounting is, that when a receiver is first appointed he has 15 months to account, and that for each subsequent account he has 13 months. But the Committee are probably not aware of another rule of the Court, that if the period for accounting happens to fall in the month of August, the time for accounting is extended, without any application to the Master, to November, I think the 10th of November, so that in the case of a newly appointed receiver whose time for accounting would expire in August, it virtually gives him 18 months, and in the case of an old receiver it virtually gives him 16 months to account, besides which the time for accounting is frequently extended by the Master, so that in those four years it is not likely that any receiver has accounted more than three times. And taking that as an average, there will appear a gross rental under the Court of Chancery of £903,883 in 1847, which, added to that in the Court of Exchequer, makes £1,059,285. That would be the result supposing that there was the same number of receivers in 1844 as in the other years; but that was not the case, for many new receivers were appointed in each of the following years, some of whom had only accounted twice, and some only once, up to the date of the return; and it must also be taken into consideration that this return could not give an account of any receivers who have been appointed since October 1846, for their time for accounting would not expire in 1847. Therefore, for these reasons, I add one-fourth and say, that in 1847 there was at the very least £1,300,000. a year. Now Master Brooke has told the Committee, that in his office the average amount of rental over which he appoints receivers is £3,000. to £4,000 a week. Taking it at £3,000. a week, it will amount in his office to £120,000. a year for the 40 weeks he sits. For the four Masters that would be £480,000. in 1848, and taking the half of that sum for the three terms gone by in 1849, it would make a total exceeding two millions of rental.

1535. Assuming that there is now that amount of rental under the Court, what is your opinion of the cost per cent. at present paid for the management of that property?—As nearly as I can estimate it, I would say that it cannot be under 15 per cent.

1536. How much would that amount to per annum, on the gross rental you have named?—Fifteen per cent. upon two millions is £300,000.

1537. Do you mean to tell the Committee that £300,000. a year is now spent upon the management of these estates?—I do not think so, because the whole rental is not collected. I never knew the rental of an estate under the Court of Chancery fully collected. Mr. Henry Darley, an officer of the Rolls Court, stated, as the result of his experience in the Rolls Court for many years, that no estate in the Court of Chancery ever yielded more than two-thirds, and in a great many cases not more than one-half the sum it would yield to the owner of the estate if under his own management.

1538. Then what sum would you say is probably now being spent on the management of these estates?—Taking as the average that two-thirds of the rental is received, 15 per cent. upon that would be £200,000.

1539. You say that 15 per cent. is the present cost of management?—How do you calculate that 15 per cent.?—There is the receiver's poundage, 5 per cent. Then the receiver's costs come to about 5 per cent. I came to that conclusion from a great number of large estates which appear to be managed in the most economical way as to costs. The great majority are small estates, which in proportion are much the more expensive. Therefore taking one with another, I arrive at the conclusion that 5 per cent. covers the receiver's costs, I estimate the whole cost at 15 per cent. at least, including the plaintiff's and owner's costs, in relation to the management of the estate by the receiver, the passing of his account, and applications to Court.

1540. Have you known numerous instances where it exceeded 15 per cent.?—Many; many where it has exceeded the rent of the estate.

1546. Is it your opinion that a more direct mode of communicating with and directing a receiver would be desirable?—I should say it would be most desirable.

1548. Do you think the present system of accounting a good one?—Not at all; it is cumbrous, unsatisfactory, and expensive.

1554. Do you think the proceeding by attachment against tenants is an efficacious remedy?—I should think quite the contrary, except in cases where the tenant is a solvent person; it is difficult and tedious to arrive at an actual attachment, and in very few cases is it operative.

1556. How has the law which prevents the growing crop being distrained affected the receiver?—It is one of his difficulties. I believe it is very generally the practice for fraudulent tenants to assemble their neighbours by moonlight and cut and carry off the crop before sunrise.

1558. From what you have stated, does not it appear that the receiver, to save himself, most frequently put the estate to the expense of statement of facts?—Certainly; if a receiver wishes to keep himself harmless, he must be almost reckless as to expense. If the Master directs ejectments, the estate pays for those ejectments.

1559. Can you state to what extent in your opinion the property of Ireland is charged with incumbrances?—With respect to judgments it is very difficult to ascertain that, for although there is a registry of judgments, a great many are registered and re-registered over and over again; but as to mortgages, I find that in the ten years ending the 31st of December 1847, the number of mortgages registered in Ireland was upwards of 7,000, representing a principal sum of about £17,000,000, in ten years, and in the same time there were registered jointures and annuities which affected rentals of estates to the amount of half a million per annum. For that class of encumbrances alone it would take a million and a half of rental to pay the interest upon them; that is, for mortgages and annuities, without taking into account judgments that are not collateral with mortgages.

1560. Have you examined the returns furnished by the Courts of Chancery and Equity Exchequer as to the properties under their receivers, and can you state what is the general class of properties under receivers?—Generally a small class of properties.

1561. What proportion of them are under £1,000 a year?—About three-fourths in value are under £1,000. a year.

1563. Mr. R. B. Osborne.] Does that apply to both Courts of Equity?—There is a slight difference between them. In the Court of Chancery, five-sixths of the whole are under £1,000. a year, and in the Court of Exchequer, three-fourths of the whole in value.

1565. Chairman.] From your experience, do you suppose that those very small cases are cases of judgments?—I would suppose so. In the Court of Chancery I classified 1,000 estates, the accounts for which were passed in the year 1847 and the latter part of the year 1846. [The number of estates and accounts passed in 1847 did not amount to 1,000; they amounted to about 800.] Of those 1,000 estates 812 were under £1,000 a year, and 178 above £1,000 a year, of the 812 estates, 626 were under £500 a year, and 186 above £500. a year. Then of the 626 under £500 a year, 117 did not amount to £300 a year, 170 did not amount to £200. a year, and 164 did not amount to £100. a year. I found that in the latter class there were many as low as £30. or £20 a year, and some as low as £15. a year. The 178 estates above £1,000, a year are thus classed; 113 under £2,000, 31 under £3,000, 12 under £4,000, 8 under £5,000, 15 above £5,000, of which some are as large as £24,000, a year.

1576. Is it considered the duty of the receiver in creditors' suits, to look to the good cultivation of the land, or to see that the tenants observe the covenants in their leases?—Theoretically it may be, but not in practice.

1582. Do you consider the system of letting by the Court and the tenure to be injurious to the estate?—Most injurious; it is calculated to prevent a tenant improving his land; he is not certain even of seven years' tenancy; if the cause terminates his tenancy terminates; no tenant would be likely to expend money in improving the land.

1583. Did you ever know of a tenant on a seven years' lease, under the Court, to lay out money in improving his holding?—I know of but one instance, and in that case the effect was that the tenant took the land again; it was a rent exceeding £300. a year and he had to pay £80. a year increased rent, from competition.

1587. What alteration do you think ought to be made in the mode of managing those estates?—I would say that the object should be to bring the management of them as nearly as possible to the manner in which a private gentleman would insist upon his agent managing his estate.

1588. Do you think that there ought to be a power of expending part of the rents in improving the property?—Decidedly; there should be a power to do that which a wise landlord would do for his own estate; the word "improvement," I think, scarcely conveys an idea of what we mean in Ireland by improvement; it requires a sum to be expended upon land to prevent it from getting worse, to keep it from deteriorating; we should rather call it "maintaining;" you may go on improving land to any extent, but there is a sum which is really necessary to be expended in maintaining and to keep the land in heart; and that class of expenditure I think the receiver should have the power to make, such as draining; very often a large tract of land is covered with water, and deepening the bed of a river, which would cost but a few pounds to do it, would carry off the water; very often tenants are put to serious inconveniences by having very bad roads through the lands; that class of improvement ought to be done; it would give employment to the people, and would stimulate their industry; I have heard gentlemen talk about the right to spend creditors' money in such things; I do not take that view of it; if you do not give some employment upon the estates in Ireland you will increase the poor-rates upon those estates, and those poor-rates will become the first charge upon the estate; so that the creditor is injured in that way.

1597. Mr. R. B. Osborne. You were the person who principally drew up the suggestions which are embodied in this paper before the Committee?—Yes.

IN CHANCERY.

Henry Cavendish Johnston, Plaintiff.
The Rev. Samuel Henry Mason,
Eliza Ada Mason, and others,
Defendants.

PURSUANT to the Decree made in this cause, bearing date the 14th day of June, 1860, I hereby require all persons having Claims and Incumbrances affecting the Estate of the said Defendant, Samuel Henry Mason, and Eliza Ada Mason, in all that and those certain LANDS and HOUSES situate in North County, land Street, Dame Street, and Camden Street, in the City and County of Dublin, to come in and prove the same before me, on or before the last day of November next, otherwise they will be precluded the benefit of the said Decree.

Dated this 13th day of September, 1860.

W. BROOKS

Thomas Pickett Reade, Plaintiff's Solicitor,
10, St. Andrew Street.

NEW LAW BOOKS.

BEST'S PRINCIPLES OF EVIDENCE.

A TREATISE on the Principles of EVIDENCE and PRACTICE as to Proof in Courts of Common Law; with Documentary Rules for conducting the Examination and Cross-examination of Witnesses. By W. M. BEST, A. M., LL. B., Barrister at Law. 1 vol. 8vo. cloth, 18s.

ANGELL ON THE LAW OF CARRIERS.

A TREATISE on the Law of CARRIERS OF GOODS AND PASSENGERS by Land and by Water. By S. R. ANGELL, Esq., Barrister at Law. 1 vol. royal 8vo. bds. 2s.

ROGER'S ECCLESIASTICAL LAW.

A Practical Arrangement of ECCLESIASTICAL LAW. Second Edition, considerably enlarged. By FRANCIS NEWMAN ROGERS, Esq., Barrister at Law. 1 vol. 8vo. 41 Ms.

PRINCIPLES OF EQUITY JURISPRUDENCE.

THE Principles of EQUITY JURISPRUDENCE, embracing the Concurrent, Exclusive, and Auxiliary Jurisdictions of Courts of Equity. By the Editors of the Law Students' Magazine. 1 vol. 8vo. cloth bds. 12s. 6d.

ADDISON ON THE LAW OF CONTRACTS.

A TREATISE on the Law of CONTRACTS, and Rights and Liabilities of Contractors. By C. G. ADDISON, Esq., of the Inner Temple, Barrister at Law. Second Edition, 2 vols. 8vo. price 21 sh.

RUSSELL ON ARBITRATION.

A TREATISE on the Power and Duty of an ARBITRATOR, and the Law of Substantive and Accessory, with an Appendix of Forms, and of the Statutes relating to Arbitration. By FRANCIS RUSSELL, Esq., M.A., Barrister at Law. 1 vol. 8vo. bds. 41 sh.

BAYLEY ON BILLS OF EXCHANGE.

SUMMARY of the Law of Bills of Exchange, Cash Bills, and Promissory Notes. By SIR JOHN BAYLEY, Knt. 4th Edition, by G. W. DOWDESWELL, Barrister at Law. 1 vol. 8vo. 41 sh.

BURGE ON THE LAW OF SURETYSHIP.

COMMENTARIES on the Law of SURETYSHIP, and the Rights and Obligations of the parties thereto. By WILLIAM BURGE, Esq. Q. C. M. A., &c. 1 vol. 8vo. 18s.

STANFIELD'S PRECEDENTS IN CONVEYANCING.

A COLLECTION of Copyhold PRECEDENTS IN CONVEYANCING, arranged for general and ordinary use, together with Introductory Treatises upon the various transactions and occurrences incident to Estates of customary tenure, &c. By JOHN F. STANFIELD, Esq. 1 vol. 8vo. 12s.

QUESTIONS FOR LAW STUDENTS on the Second Edition of Mr. Serjeant Stephen's New Commentaries on the Law of England. By JAMES STEPHEN, Esq. of the Middle Temple, Barrister at Law. 1 vol. 8vo. cloth boards, price 10s. 6d.

CONCISE FORMS OF WILLS, with Practical Notes.

By W. HAYES and T. JARMAN. 4th Edition, cloth bds. 1s. EDWARD J. MILLIKEN, LAW BOOKSELLER AND PRINTER, 15, COLLEGE GREEN, DUBLIN.

All communications for the IRISH JURIST are to be sent, addressed to the Editor, with the Publisher, E. J. MILLIKEN, at COLLEGE GREEN. Correspondents will please give the Name and Address, as the columns of the paper cannot be occupied with answers to Anonymous Communications—nor will the Editor be accountable for the return of Manuscripts, &c.

Orders for the IRISH JURIST left with E. J. MILLIKEN, at COLLEGE GREEN, or by letter (post-paid), will ensure its punctual delivery in Dublin, or its being forwarded to the Country, by Post, on the day of publication.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION—(payable in advance):
Yearly, 30s. Half-yearly, 17s. Quarterly, 9s.

Printed by THOMAS ISAAC WHITE, at his Printing Office, No. 6, FLEET STREET, in the Parish of St. Andrew, and published at COLLEGE GREEN, in same Parish, by EDWARD JOHNSTON MILLIKEN, residing at the same place, all being in the County of the City of Dublin. Saturday, October 20, 1860.

THE

Irish Jurist

No. 52.—VOL. I.

OCTOBER 27, 1849.

PRICE {Per Annum, £1 10s.
Single Number, 1s1.

The Names of the Gentlemen who favour THE IRISH JURIST with Reports in the several Courts of Law and Equity in Ireland, are as follows :—

Court of Chancery, including Bankruptcy Appeals.....	{ ROBERT LONG, Esq., and JOHN PITT KENNEDY, Esq., Barristers-at-Law.	Court of Exchequer Chamber.....	{ JOHN BLACKHAM, Esq., and A. HICKEY, Esq., Barristers-at-Law.
Bolls Court.....	{ WILLIAM BURKE, Esq., and WILLIAM JOHN DUNDAS, Esq., Barristers-at-Law.	Queen's Bench, including Civil Bill and Registry Appeals.....	{ FLORENCE M'CARTHY, Esq., and SAMUEL V. PEET, Esq., Barristers-at-Law.
Equity Exchequer.....	{ CHARLES HARE HENPHILL, Esq., and WILLIAM HICKSON, Esq., Barristers-at-Law.	Exchequer of Pleas, including Manor Court and Registry Appeals.....	{ CHAS. H. HENPHILL, Esq., and WILLIAM HICKSON, Esq., Barristers-at-Law.
Bankrupt Court.....	{ ROBERT GRIFFIN, Esq. and W.G. CHANNEY, Esq. Barristers-at-law.	Common Pleas.....	{ ROBERT GRIFFIN, Esq. and W. G. CHANNEY, Esq. Barristers-at-law.
		Admiralty Court.....	{ ROBERT GRIFFIN, Esq. and W. G. CHANNEY, Esq. Barristers-at-law.

DUBLIN, OCTOBER 27, 1849.

We give in a Supplement to this Number the Act for the Sale of Incumbered Estates, together with the General Orders published on the 18th instant; and we purpose to offer such observations on both from time to time, as may suggest themselves to us as useful. We should have given the Orders last week, but no authentic copy had been then published.

We shall also give rapid and carefully prepared reports of the cases decided by the Commissioners. In this Number we shall only touch upon the general character of the measure in its complete form, one of the boldest experiments short of an entirely new code of real property, ever attempted.

That it will be very generally tried, the nature of the measure itself, and the depressed and incumbered circumstances of the landed proprietors leave little room to doubt.

And yet, before taking the plunge, the owner or incumbrancer should consider, because—another new feature in legislation—once taken, there is no receding; by the 48th general order, which is as binding upon the suitor as a statute, “no petition shall be withdrawn or dismissed without the leave of the Commissioners.”

The seller is offered these advantages, that whenever an incumbrance affects the inheritance, the property can be sold, and an indefeasible title given to the purchaser; that the costs of the judicial sale are certainly so much less than they would have been under a decree of a Court of Equity, by the saving of office fees, and probably very much less by the diminished number and length of the pleadings—if indeed, the proceedings under the new court can be called pleadings; and the further boon is proffered, that those costs shall form the first charge upon the fund.

It has been apprehended that the Act will drop still-born for want of purchasers, but unquestionably the inducement to buy under this tribunal is the greatest ever yet offered.

Certainty of title, and no expense of investigating it. If there were no glut in the market, it is plain that sales under this court should bring higher sums than those made by private contract or by the established Equity tribunals. The purchaser bids for the estate, and deducts comparatively nothing from the purchase-money, on the score of costs of title. If, then, the supply could be regulated, so as not to deluge the market, so far as the Act is concerned, it confers a benefit upon the owner who may anticipate a surplus—if, indeed, there be any such owner now in Ireland—and if not upon him, upon the pious creditor, and that in two ways—diminishing the cost of bringing the article to sale, and enhancing its value when brought.

One of the gravest objections urged to the measure was, that the interests of creditors and of remainder-men would not be sufficiently protected, and that in the desire to give “currency to land,” the rights of those who had claims upon it would be sacrificed.

Unquestionably the powers conferred upon the Commissioners are very arbitrary, and in a former article we ventured to suggest that, in order to preserve uniformity of design, they would act prudently by leaving the suitor as unshackled in his mode of operation as possible. The general orders carry out our views on this point; they are numerous, but they relate principally to matters of form and of routine. That which prescribes the mode of proceeding is the 5th order, and directs “that proceedings shall be commenced by petition, to be addressed and framed according to the forms to be approved of by the Commissioners, and every such petition shall be signed by the petitioner or his attorney, and shall be accompanied by an affidavit, verifying the material facts therein."

Further than by reference to the forms, there is no direction as to what searches should be made, and although the forms prescribe that the incumbancers shall be specified, it would appear that they need not necessarily have notice of the proceedings, until an absolute order for the sale has been pronounced.

Nor do we observe any machinery provided for the protection of the rights of persons under disability, except in those cases in which, by the 46th general order, the Commissioners shall appoint a person to act in the nature of a guardian, or next friend, and this will be in those instances in which they conceive such an appointment to be necessary. There is no definition of what those cases are. The course of proceeding, we presume, will be, that one of the Commissioners will peruse the petition, and read the title in the same way as any counsel at the Bar, and having ascertained the incumbrances appearing upon the abstract, and the parties entitled to the life estate and inheritance in the lands, will direct notice to be served upon them, and if there be no cause shewn by any of the parties served, an absolute order for a sale will then be pronounced. This is our conjecture; the frame of the orders as we shall point out hereafter, does not lead us to any certain conclusion of our correctness. This course imposes considerable labour and considerable responsibility upon the Commissioners. When we use the word "responsibility," we apply it in a moral not a legal sense; on them will depend the protection of absent parties, and they will require to peruse the title with as keen a scrutiny, as if retained at the Bar by a purchaser.

The rule caveat emptor made purchasers lynx-eyed in the investigation of title, now that the court warrants title, they have no object in probing it, nor in seeing that every party, who by possibility could have an interest in the lands has had notice and is bound; by this removal of personal risk, the onus is shifted completely from them, and the responsibility is made official, with this remarkable difference to the incumbancer, that if overlooked, he is absolutely, so far as the lands are concerned—and the money will soon follow the lands—without remedy.

The old principle gave greater chances to the creditor, the new one may be—we do not say it is—better adapted to a political emergency.

A perusal of the rules shews us that the Commissioners—in a manner very praiseworthy to themselves—have promulgated none to diminish their own labours. On the contrary, they might have prepared rules which might have materially lightened them; for instance, they might, with slight modification, have adopted the 138th general order of the Court of Chancery, requiring the opinion of counsel to be obtained that the title is good, or could be made so, by the removal of the defects indicated. The statement in the forms does, however, impose an honorable responsibility on counsel in this respect.

The Act is, in fact, an experiment in more ways than one; the transfer of the real property of the country is proposed to be accomplished in a great measure, by the personal labour of the judges in chamber, and without the assistance of counsel.

This was a suggestion originally given, we think, by Lord Langdale, in his evidence before the Real Property Commissioners, the expense formerly borne by the suitor, is transferred to a pull at the Exchequer. We shall allow no selfish professional views to prejudice or condemn the experiment. We are but entering upon it, and we trust that, in any event, the country may be benefitted, but we confess the general orders leave us still rather in the dark as to the proceedings of the Commissioners.

Thus the 8th general order provides that in cases in which a conditional order for a sale shall be made the names or general description of the parties to be served therewith must be stated; and the 23d general order, and those which follow it, and which relate to the distribution of the purchase-money, lead to the inference that for the first time the incumbancers on the estate will have notice of the sale, for it is not until an absolute order for a sale shall have been pronounced that advertisements are to be issued for creditors, and that the Commissioners "shall direct what further information shall be procured respecting the title of all parties to the premises, and to the incumbrances affecting the same, and what searches or further searches should be made in relation thereto."

The Commissioners have given themselves a wide latitude in their proceedings, no one order need resemble its predecessor, but each be made pro re nata, as in an action on the case at law a new writ for each new case. An incumbancer would certainly be a little surprised to find that an absolute order had been pronounced for the sale of the property on which he had lent his money, and so opportunity given to remonstrate, and shew cause against the sale, if any. We do not suppose this can be the intention of the Commissioners, but we regret that their orders are not a little more explicit upon the point.

We this week close our extracts from the evidence given before the Committees of the House of Commons by legal men on those questions which related to the most important changes proposed in the law of Ireland.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

POOR LAW COMMITTEE.

(Continued from p. 316.)

William Neilson Hancock, Esq.—May 18, 1849.

9955. Mr. Bright.] What is your profession?—I am a practising barrister, of five years' standing.

9956. Do you hold any situation in the University of Dublin at this time?—Yes; I have been for the last three years Archbishop Whately's professor of political economy.

9997. Is it your opinion that the principle of what is called a Parliamentary title might be extended to sales of land without the intervention of commissioners; you heard what Mr. Lawson said upon that point?—I entertain a very similar view to what

Mr. Lawson has expressed upon that point; and that is, that if the registry of deeds and the registry of judgments be put in a proper state on the plan that I have considered, and which is very similar to what Mr. Lawson has mentioned, then, after due notice to all parties on the register, a person having a power of sale, may sell at a public sale, and the purchaser, on paying the money either to the party selling, or, in case any of the encumbrancers give notice, lodging the money in court, should get a Parliamentary title. It would be in fact applying the doctrine of what is called market overt to land. With regard to chattel property, if it is sold in public market, the purchaser acquires a title to the property by its being so sold, and I propose to establish periodical land sales, which should be deemed market overt with regard to land, and then that the principle which applies to chattel property should extend to the sale of land.

9998. Do you think that by that means you would obviate the danger of collusive sales, by which encumbrancers would be liable to be defrauded?—I think so, for this simple reason; that if an estate were sold after due advertisement, and due notice, in public market, with a Parliamentary title, I think it would be sold for its full market value. If the money arising from that sale be placed in court no encumbrancer can be defrauded, because he has a fund which is the full market value of the land which was his security.

9999. But when you consider how many persons do not see placards, and know nothing of notices, do you not think that there would be a great liability of parties who had an interest in land being dispossessed of it, and the money, instead of going to them, being expended in such a manner as perhaps they could not discover?—That could not happen, for this reason; that the name of every party having an interest in the land, or having an encumbrance affecting a particular portion of the land, with his residence, would be entered in the registry, and when a sale was intended notice must be given three months, or perhaps six months previously to every one of those parties, that a sale was to take place of the land on a particular day; they would have full notice, and if they thought that the land was going too cheap they could buy it themselves.

10018. Mr. Bright.] Do you think it desirable to substitute some simple form of charging land for the various methods of mortgages, recognizances, and crown bonds?—Yes; I think it would be well to have some simple plan, that instead of different methods of charging land there would be one method. There is one point with regard to judgments upon which I would make an observation; I believe that the Commissioners of Her Majesty's Treasury have power under the Act of last Session to consolidate the registry of judgments with the registry of deeds; these are now separate offices, and I would suggest that the two offices of registry should be consolidated.

10023. Suppose the law with regard to judgments and similar charges to remain unaltered, can you suggest any improvement in the law with regard to the registration of judgments?—Yes. At present the memorandum of the judgment is required to contain the name or title of the cause or matter in which the same has been made or pronounced, the names, and the usual or last place of abode, and title, trade, or profession of the plaintiff, if there be any such, and of the defendant or person whose estate is intended to be affected by the judgment, the court in which the judgment or rule has been pronounced, the date, and the debt, damages, and monies thereby recovered or ordered to be paid. I would suggest that the office for registration of judgments should be consolidated with the office for the registration of deeds. I believe the Lords of the Treasury have power, under the Act of last Session, to effect this consolidation. I would suggest that the memorandum of every future judgment or similar charge be required to contain the names of the townlands and the numbers of the tenements less than townlands, both taken from the Ordnance Survey, with the numbers of the Ordnance sheets, and the interest, freehold or leasehold, or sub-leasehold of any degree in such townlands or tenements on which such judgment is intended to be a charge; that such memorandum be registered as well against the name of the defendant or person whose estate is intended to be affected as it is at present, as also against the townlands and tenements named therein; that the residence of the plaintiff be registered under the townlands and tenements to be charged; that every notice sent to such plaintiff, at such residence, be sufficiently served on him, and that the plaintiff may, on change of residence, apply to the registrar and have his new residence entered; that in case the defendant or person whose estate is to be affected by any judgment should become entitled to any lands not mentioned in the memorandum first registered, the plaintiff may present a further memorandum, mentioning such lands, and have the judgment registered against them.

10024. Do you apprehend that a proper system of registry would have much effect in diminishing the costs of Chancery suits for sales of land?—Yes; there is a great deal of delay and expense when a Chancery suit is instituted in inquiring who are the parties entitled to incumbrances, and what are the amounts of their incumbrances. This would be disclosed in the first instance in one page of the registry with regard to any portion of the land, a copy of which would give the information which is now only obtained after a great deal of trouble in the Court of Chancery.

10025. Would not an improved registry, such as you recommend, be objected to on the ground that it would disclose private affairs?—Yes, it might; but I think that could be entirely obviated upon the plan suggested by the Real Property Commissioners in England, which was to have the names and residences public, but to have the amount and other particulars of the judgment kept in the same book, but private, so as not to be disclosed unless to persons having authority from parties interested in the subject to inspect them; that other persons should not inspect the amount or the nature of the charge; that they should merely know the names and residences of the parties entitled to notice; that is all the public requires to know for the purposes of notice; and then when the Court of Chancery required the amount to be known, or parties themselves wished to disclose the amount, it could be disclosed in a very simple manner.

10026. With regard to the registry of deeds, have you any observation to make. You have heard the evidence which has been given by Dr. Longfield and Mr. Lawson; is there anything with regard to that point which you would wish to state to the Committee?—With regard to that, I would suggest, that the memorial of the deed be required to contain the names, not only of the parties to the deed, but of all parties taking any estate or interest under it on which judgments can attach, and of all trustees and other parties who in consequence of the deed should receive notice of any sale of the land, that the memorial be required to contain the residences of all such persons, in the same manner as each memorandum of a judgment or similar charge is required to contain such residences now. That parties be enabled to record a change of residence, and that notice at the registered residence be conclusive on all parties for the purposes of a sale. That the memorial be required to contain the names of the townlands and numbers of the tenements less than townlands, both taken from the Ordnance Survey, with the numbers of the Ordnance sheets, and the interest, whether freehold or leasehold, or sub-leasehold of any degree, in such townlands or tenements to be affected, by registering such memorial, and that no other description of the lands to be affected be required. That such memorial be registered as well against the name of every grantor in such deed, as also against the townlands and tenements named therein, and in a separate index against the grantees taking any estate or interest on which judgments can attach. I propose this last, namely, having a separate index, because, as judgments are to be required to register their judgments against particular portions of land, I think it only fair to afford them the facility of ascertaining what lands parties are entitled to on which a judgment can attach.

10043. Mr. Bright. I asked you whether there was not land in Ireland held under patent, with reversion to the Crown?—Yes; I believe that that is an impediment to the transfer of land peculiar to Ireland; I am not aware that it exists to anything like the same extent in England: some of the grants from the Crown in particular counties, and made at particular periods, contain reversions on the failure of issue, or of male issue. In almost every investigation of title it is necessary to search the original patent of the grant from the Crown, to see whether it is in this way or not. Now, the suggestion which I would make on this subject is, that the Commissioners of Woods and Forests be required to register against the townlands or tenements affected by such reversions the existence of such reversions, so that in every case where it was not registered there would be no occasion to search to see whether such reversion existed or not. I think then that the Commissioners of Woods and Forests should institute an inquiry into the value of such reversions, and having inquired carefully into that, should proceed to sell them under their power of sale and exchange, and that the parties under limited interests should be enabled to charge the inheritance for the purpose of buying up such reversions.

IN CHANCERY.

Henry Cavendish Johnston,
The Rev. Samuel Henry Mason,
Eliza Ada Mason, and others,
Plaintiffs,
Defendants.

PURSUANT to the Decree made in this case, bearing date the 14th day of June, 1865, I hereby require all persons having Charge and Incumbrances affecting the Estate of the said Defendant, Samuel Henry Mason, and Eliza Ada Mason, in all that and those certain LANDS and HOUSES situate in North County, land Street, Dame Street, and Camden Street, in the City and County of Dublin, to come in and prove the same before me, on or before the 1st day of November next, otherwise they will be precluded the benefit of said Decree.

Dated this 13th day of September, 1869.

W. BROOKER.

Thomas Pictou Reada, Plaintiff's Solicitor,
15, St. Andrew Street

IN CHANCERY, IRELAND.

Robert Edward O'Flaherty,

Plaintiff,

The Right Honorable Henry John Rauben, Earl of Portarlington, and others,
Defendants.

WHEREAS it has been represented to me, the undersigned, of the Creditors on the Estate of the late Right Honorable John, Earl of Portarlington, deceased, Testator in the pleadings, that the said Creditors and Legatees of the late Right Honorable John, Earl of Portarlington, deceased, the Testator in the pleadings, and also all persons having Charges or Incumbrances affecting the said Estate of the said late Earl of Portarlington, to come in and prove the same before me, on or before the 1st day of November next, and proceed to prove the same, and claim the same, otherwise they will be precluded the benefit of said Decree.

Dated this 30th day of June, 1869.

E. LITTON.

John Warnock, Plaintiff's Solicitor,
30, North Great George's Street, Dublin.

NEW LAW BOOKS.

BEST'S PRINCIPLES OF EVIDENCE.

A TREATISE on the Principles of EVIDENCE and PRACTICE as to Proofs in Courts of Common Law; with Elementary Rules for conducting the Examination and Cross-examination of Witnesses. By W. M. BEST, A.M., LL.B., Barrister at Law. 1 vol. 8vo. cloth, 10s.

ANGELL ON THE LAW OF CARRIERS.

A TREATISE on the Law of CARRIERS OF GOODS and PASSENGERS by Land and by Water. By S. K. ANGELL, Esq., Barrister at Law. 1 vol. royal 8vo. bds. 2s.

ROGER'S ECCLESIASTICAL LAW.

A Practical Arrangement of ECCLESIASTICAL LAW. Second Edition, considerably enlarged. By FRANCIS RUSSELL ROGERS, Esq., Barrister at Law. 1 vol. 8vo. 21 10s.

PRINCIPLES OF EQUITY JURISPRUDENCE.

THE Principles of EQUITY JURISPRUDENCE, embracing the Concurrent, Exclusive, and Auxiliary Jurisdiction of Courts of Equity. By the Editors of the Law Students' Magazine. 1 vol. 8vo. cloth bds. 13s. 6d.

ADDISON ON THE LAW OF CONTRACTS.

A TREATISE on the Law of CONTRACTS, and Rights and Liabilities of Contractors. By C. G. ADDISON, Esq., of Inner Temple, Barrister at Law. Second Edition, 2 vols. 8vo. price 51s.

RUSSELL ON ARBITRATION.

A TREATISE on the Power and Duty of an ARBITRATOR, and the Law of Submissions and Awards; with an Appendix of Forms, and of the Statutes relating to Arbitration. By FRANCIS RUSSELL, Esq., M.A., Barrister at Law. 1 vol. 8vo. 21 6s.

BAYLEY ON BILLS OF EXCHANGE.

SUMMARY of the Law of Bills of Exchange, Cash Bills, and Promissory Notes. By SIR JOHN BAYLEY, Esq., and Edition, by G. W. DOWDESWELL, Barrister at Law. 1 vol. 8vo. 21 2s.

All communications for the IRISH JURIST are to be sent, addressed to the Editor, with the Publisher, E. J. MILLIKEN, at COLLEGE GREEN. Correspondents will please give the Name and Address, as the columns of the paper cannot be occupied with answers to Anonymous Communications; nor will the Editor be accountable for the return of Manuscripts, &c.

Orders for the IRISH JURIST left with E. J. MILLIKEN, at COLLEGE GREEN, or by letter (post-paid), will ensure its punctual delivery in Dublin, or its being forwarded to the Country, by Post, on the day of publication.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION—(payable in advance):
Yearly, 30s. Half-yearly, 17s. Quarterly, 9s.

Printed by THOMAS ISAAC WHITE, at his Printing Office, No. 61, FLEET-STREET, in the Parish of St. Andrew, and published at COLLEGE GREEN, in same Parish, by EDWARD JOHNSON MILLIKEN, residing at the same place, all being in the County of the City of Dublin, Saturday, October 27, 1869.

Supplement to The Irish Jurist.

No. 52.—VOL. I.

OCTOBER 27, 1849.

Price {Subscribers, 6d.
Non-Subscribers, 1s.

COURT OF COMMISSIONERS FOR THE SALE OF INCUMBERED ESTATES.

October 24, 1849.

The Right Hon. BARON RICHARDS (Chief Commissioner) said—This being the first public sitting of the Court for the Sale and Transfer of Incumbered Estates in Ireland, as established under the Act of Parliament passed in the Sessions holden in the 12th and 13th years of the reign of her Majesty Queen Victoria, it may be right briefly to call attention to some matters connected with the establishment of this Court, and with the course of procedure which it is our intention to have adopted for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of the Statute. The Act of Parliament, from whence all our jurisdiction is derived, appears to have received the Royal assent on the 28th of July, 1849, and, shortly after that time, Dr. Longfield, Mr. Hargreave, and myself, had the honour to be appointed Commissioners by her Majesty, pursuant to the 1st section of the Act; and with all convenient speed, afterwards, we, the Commissioners, assembled together, and proceeded to frame a code of rules for regulating the course of procedure under the Act, and for securing the due execution of the powers vested in us, and giving effect to the provisions and objects of the Act. These rules we were enabled to lay before her Majesty's Privy Council in Ireland, for their approbation or amendment, on the 18th September, 1849. Some of these rules that right hon. and learned body were pleased to strike out altogether, and to alter others; and on the 17th of October, 1849, the Privy Council were pleased finally to dispose of the matter, and to express their approbation of the rules as so altered by them, and immediately afterwards the rules, as so altered, were, as I understand, enrolled in the High Court of Chancery, as required by the 10th section of the Statute, and that being done we have thought it right to name this day, being the earliest that we could well appoint, for the opening of our Court. I may mention that certain of the rules which we have laid before the Privy Council, relative to matters of form merely, and to the mode of commencing and continuing proceedings in our Court, and though we felt that we had sufficient authority of ourselves, under the 9th section of the Act, to frame rules and regulations of that description, without requiring the approbation of the Privy Council, we thought it would be more satisfactory that the entire of the proposed plan and framework of our court should be laid before the Council, rather than a mere fractional portion of our intended practice, leaving it, however, to that learned body to deal with the rules generally in whatever way they might, in their wisdom, think proper; and accordingly the Privy Council, considering it unnecessary that their approbation should be required in respect to matters which fell within our own authority, under the 9th section of the Act, did, as I understand, strike out all those rules which appeared to them to partake of that character. But they, no doubt, also varied other rules, which we submitted to them, in many important particulars. I mention these matters chiefly to account for our having introduced into a separate code, and upon our own authority alone, certain of those forms and directions which, if the matter were unexplained, it might be supposed the Privy Council had dissented from; but that is not the case. We are quite aware that, wherever the Privy Council varied or expunged any of the rules submitted to them, except upon the grounds that I have mentioned, we had no authority to retain those rules so disapproved of, nor have we any disposition to assume the authority of running counter in any respect to the judgment of that learned body. With regard to the rules themselves, it would be taking up time unnecessarily if I were to attempt here to state them either in detail or otherwise; all persons who are desirous of making themselves acquainted with the subject, would do well to study attentively both sets of rules and forms—I mean those approved of by the Privy Council and those emanating from ourselves, and propounded upon our own authority. We have endeavoured to make all those rules as plain and as clear as we could, and those that have been framed under the 10th section of the act having in their present state, received the sanction of such distinguished personages as presided at the Council Board, I should hope they will not be found very difficult to be understood. But, considering the novelty of the subject, we think it right to invite those who intend practising in the Court to communicate freely with us, in case of any difficulty arising in their minds in regard to any of those rules. Such communication, however, must be made in public, and at the sitting of the Court, and not in any other manner, or at any other time. Having said this much upon the subject of our general rules and orders, I would next observe that although we (the Commissioners) are now perfectly ready and most anxious on our parts, to proceed with the business of our Court, yet I do not well see, how we can advance a step, until some fit and proper place shall be provided and prepared for us in which to hold our sittings, and more especially a place in which the office business of our Court can be carried on, and where the pleadings and documents connected with the business of our Court can be deposited, and safely kept, and filed, and registered. It is not to be expected that our secretary can keep all those pleadings and documents about his person, or even in his own domicile; and I would not think it right that valuable papers and muniments of title and deeds should be lodged with our officer, until he shall have a safe and convenient place in which to deposit them. I trust, however, that ere long we shall be provided with all necessary accommodation for the purpose of carrying on the business of our Court; indeed I have every reason to believe that his Excellency the Lord Lieutenant, and the government, are most anxious to second our efforts to obtain that accommodation with as little delay as possible. But until this accommodation shall be obtained, I greatly fear that the business of the court must be very much impeded. I do not feel that it is within my province to touch upon the general policy of this measure, except to say, that nothing shall be wanting on the part of the Commissioners to carry out, as far as in them lies, the great object which the Legislature had in view in enacting this law, and we hope and trust that public expectation may not be disappointed. Upon the subject of sales before us, I would wish to call particular attention to our sixteenth rule; and chiefly because that rule establishes a practice essentially variant from the practice of every other Court of Equity both in England and Ireland. By that rule we have concluded ourselves from opening any sale by reason of an advance in the bidding merely. Many persons, I dare say, will disapprove of the principle of that rule, but we do not expect to please all parties, we can only say that the principle of that rule engaged our most earnest and anxious consideration; and, upon the deepest reflection, we arrive at the conclusion that the practice of opening sales from time to time, by reason of an advance in the biddings, was calculated to damp very much the ardour of bonâ fide purchasers, to delay the final completion of the sale and winding up of the cause; and, in fact, more or less to damage all parties interested in the case. It is essential, however, that this most important alteration in the mode of procedure, in respect to the sales of property, should be very generally known, and we trust it will obtain universal publicity; on the other hand, to guard against a collusive or fraudulent attempt to have property knocked down at a gross undervalue, we have reserved to ourselves a power by the fifteenth rule, to adjourn the sale of any lot if, in our opinion, the highest price offered is clearly inadequate. This is a power which, I apprehend, we shall very seldom have occasion to exercise, and, most likely, never shall exercise, except where we have reason to suspect something in the nature of fraud or contrivance in the case. It is right, however, that we should have such a power, to be used or not as the circumstances of the case may appear to render necessary. Indeed I have heard it said by some, and I have read something of the same kind also, that unless we are prepared to sacrifice all property brought into our Court we shall not be able to effect sales. I don't know whether it is expected that I should enter at any length into that subject. But I presume it is not, and, for myself, I must confess I have no disposition to prophecy one way or other on that point. All I shall therefore say is, that I see no well-founded reason why persons desirous of investing capital in a profitable manner should refrain from doing so in the purchase of land in Ireland, and especially in the purchase of land to be sold under our Court; for, first, they will have a clear and indefeasible title not depending upon the preservation of any ancient deeds or charters, or on the accuracy of searches, or on the opinions of counsel; but deriving its validity from the statute under which we are acting; and secondly, they will have a clear possession, free from all claims of tenancy, save those subject to which the property is expressly sold; but chiefly the purchaser under our Court will obtain the benefit of his contract at once, and not be delayed, as is sometimes the case, for years, not knowing, up almost to the latest moment, whether his purchase is to be on or off. As to the objection I have here made against purchasing in Ireland, arising out of the present state of this country, I shall only observe that if we reflect upon the calamitous events of the last four years, it is not surprising that the state of society in Ireland should be, to a certain extent at least, disorganised. We have had by the awful visitation of Providence, I may say four successive years of partial famine, accompanied with pestilence and wretchedness unparalleled; and it has been our fate during the same time, to have had a code of laws to work out which, even in better times, could not fail in their commencement to press severely upon many—I mean the poor-law acts. But this state of things is not, I trust, to last for ever; and I confess I have strong hope and expectation that, ere long, we shall see Ireland emerging from her present condition, and rising into a more elevated and healthy state, both morally and physically, than we have ever yet known her to enjoy. With regard to the frauds attempted by tenants on their landlords in carrying away their crops and stock to avoid payment of their lawful debts and engagements, I have every confidence that such a state of things will not have continuance; and that contracts between landlords and tenants will be observed with the same fidelity in Ireland as elsewhere. But however fraught with matter for observation the present state of Ireland may be, it is not for me to enter upon that wide field; there are far more competent persons engaged in considering what is best to be done for the improvement and amelioration of our country, and I shall not, therefore, be tempted to pursue this subject.

SECOND SITTING.—October 25, 1849.

THE RIGHT HON. BARON RICHARDS, Chief Commissioner, said:—That a doubt had been suggested to the Court on the construction of the 5th general order, requiring the petition to be accompanied by an affidavit verifying the material facts therein; and the question is, whether it is necessary to re-state in the affidavit the facts and other matter in the petition. We consider it to be a sufficient compliance, if the petitioner state that he has read the facts, &c., and that they are true. It might so happen that he might be scrupulous of swearing to his belief of the truth of every fact; it is sufficient if he does so, as to the material facts. In a case where the incumbrance originally affected the whole property, and the latter has become divided, it will not be, in the first instance, necessary, perhaps, to have separate petitions; one will, at first, be sufficient, and further directions, if necessary, can be given on the granting the conditional order for a sale. Objections have been made to our scale of fees. We do not profess to include therein every item that may be charged; we have framed them as a guide to our officer in his taxation of costs. We wish to make the fees remunerative in proportion to the trouble and expense incurred, and shall be glad to have, on this subject, any suggestions emanating from the respectable body of solicitors. When the proceedings here are after Decree we do not think that it is necessary that the Decree annexed to the petition should be attested by the officer; an attested copy is but a compared copy, and if the affidavit state that it is in every respect similar, the actual signature of the officer will be unnecessary. As to any difficulties that may arise, we shall be ever accessible and willing to answer any questions on the rules and directions, if arising out of or relating to a petition before us. With regard to the construction of the Act parties must rely upon themselves, or consult counsel. If any such questions should arise in a case before us we will then answer them as best we can. The course of proceeding we intend to adopt will necessarily cause much of our business to be done in the office. When the petition is lodged, the Commissioners, or one of them, will read and consider it in his chamber, and then make such order thereon as he may think proper, either order a sale, or direct notices to be served, and on whom, or require such further information as he may deem necessary.

LIST OF OFFICERS APPOINTED BY THE COMMISSIONERS.

Stephen W. Flanagan, Esq., Barrister-at-Law, Secretary.
 Henry Carey, Esq., Barrister-at-Law, Clerk and Examiner.
 Robert King Piers, Esq., Solicitor, Notice Clerk.
 Richard Augustine Fitzgerald, Esq., Solicitor, General Clerk.
 Andrew Armstrong, Esq., Solicitor, Clerk and Accountant.

CAP. LXXVII.

AN ACT FURTHER TO FACILITATE THE SALE AND TRANSFER OF INCUMBERED ESTATES IN IRELAND.

28th July, 1849.

WHEREAS it is expedient that further facilities should be given for the sale and transfer of Incumbered Estates in Ireland. Be it enacted, therefore, by the Queen's most Excellent Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the lords spiritual and temporal, and commons, in this present Parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same, that it shall and may be lawful for Her Majesty, by warrant or warrants under the Royal Sign Manual, to appoint any number of persons not exceeding three to be Commissioners under this act during Her Majesty's pleasure, and upon every vacancy in the office of any such Commissioner in like manner to appoint some other person to such office, and the said persons so to be from time to time appointed shall be Commissioners for the execution of this act, and shall be styled "The Commissioners for sale of Incumbered Estates in Ireland."

2. And be it enacted, that the Commissioners shall cause to be made a Seal for their Commission, and shall cause to be sealed therewith all orders, conveyances, and other instruments made by or proceeding from the Commissioners in pursuance of this act; and all such orders, conveyances, and other instruments, or copies thereof, purporting to be sealed with the seal of the Commissioners, shall be received in evidence without any further proof thereof.

3. And be it enacted, that all acts, matters, and things which the Commissioners are by any of the provisions of this act required or authorized to do or execute shall and may be done and executed by any two of such Commissioners.

4. And be it enacted, that it shall be lawful for the Commissioners, from time to time, (with the consent in every case of the Commissioners of Her Majesty's treasury,) to appoint a secretary, and such clerks, messengers, and officers as they shall deem necessary for the purposes of this act, and to remove such secretary, clerks, messengers, and officers, or any of them.

5. And be it enacted, that no Commissioner, secretary, or other officer to be appointed as aforesaid shall hold his office for a longer period than five years next after the day of the passing of this act, and thenceforth until the end of the then next session of Parliament.

6. And be it enacted, that it shall be lawful for the Commissioners of Her Majesty's Treasury to direct a salary not exceeding three thousand pounds by the year to be paid to one of the said Commissioners, and a salary not exceeding two thousand pounds by the year to each of the other Commissioners for the time being appointed under this act; and the salaries of the Secretary, Clerks, Messengers, and other Officers to be appointed under this act shall be from time to time regulated by the Commissioners of Her Majesty's Treasury; and the salaries of such Commissioners, Secretary, Clerks, Messengers, and Officers as aforesaid, and all other incidental expenses of carrying this act into execution not herein otherwise provided for, shall be paid out of such monies as shall be provided by Parliament.

7. And be it enacted, that no Commissioner appointed under this act shall during his continuance in such office be capable of being elected or of sitting as a member of the House of Commons.

8. And be it enacted, that every Commissioner appointed under this act shall, before he enters upon the execution of his office, take the following oath before one of the Justices of the Court of Queen's Bench or Common Pleas, or one of the Barons of the Court of Exchequer, in Ireland; (that is to say,)

"I A. B. do swear, that I will faithfully, impartially, and honestly, according to the best of my skill and judgment, fulfil all the powers and duties of a Commissioner under an act passed in the twelfth year of the reign of Queen Victoria, intituled [here set forth the title of this act]."

And the appointment of every such Commissioner, with the time when, and the name of the Justice or Baron before whom he shall have taken the said oath, shall be forthwith published in the Dublin Gazette.

9. And be it enacted, that the Commissioners shall frame, and cause to be printed, and circulated or promulgated, as they shall see occasion, forms of application and directions indicating the particulars of the information to be furnished to the Commissioners, on application to them under this act, with reference to title, incumbrances, and the circumstances of the land, and such other information as in the judgment of the Commissioners may assist them in forming an opinion on such application, and also such other forms and directions as the Commissioners may deem requisite or expedient for facilitating proceedings under this act.

10. And be it enacted, that the Commissioners shall from time to time make such general rules as they may think best adapted for regulating the course of procedure under this act, and for securing the prompt and due distribution and payment of the monies received upon sales under this act amongst or for the benefit of the persons entitled thereto, and for the protection in respect of such monies of the interests of persons under disability and of future interests, and generally for securing the due execution of the powers vested in the Commissioners under this act, and giving effect to the provisions and objects of this act; but no fees or sums shall, under any such general rule or otherwise, be payable to any officers or persons appointed under this act, save upon or in respect of any proceedings under this act, save, in respect of any copy or extract of or from any order, document, or proceeding actually required and taken by any party, such sum, not exceeding three halfpence for every ninety words, as shall be paid for the making of such copy or extract, and the Commissioners shall authorize to be charged to such party for the same: provided that every such general rule shall be laid before Her Majesty's Privy Council of Ireland, and it shall be lawful for such Privy Council, by order signed by six of the said Privy Council, to confirm or disallow any such rule, or to alter or amend, and confirm with alteration or amendment, any such rule, or to remit any such rule to the Commissioners for further consideration; and every such general rule (when the same shall have been confirmed by order of the said Privy Council) shall be enrolled in the High Court of Chancery in Ireland, and when so enrolled shall be binding on the Commissioners in the exercise of their powers, and shall be of the same force and effect as if the same had been enacted by authority of Parliament: provided always, that any rules so confirmed and enrolled as aforesaid may from time to time be rescinded, amended, or altered as occasion may require by other rules made by the Commissioners and confirmed and enrolled in like manner.

11. And be it enacted, that all such general rules as shall be made and confirmed as aforesaid shall be laid before both Houses of Parliament within one calendar month from the confirmation thereof, if Parliament be then sitting, or if Parliament be not then sitting, within one calendar month from the commencement of the then next session of Parliament.

12. And be it enacted, that it shall be lawful for the Commissioners by summons under their seal to require the attendance before them, at a time and place to be mentioned in such summons, of all such persons as they shall think fit to examine in relation to any question or matter depending before them, and to require all such persons to produce before them all deeds, books, papers, documents, and writings relating to such question or matter, and to examine upon oath, or, in the case of persons allowed to make affirmation or declaration in lieu of an oath, upon affirmation or declaration (as the case may require), all persons who shall attend under such summons, and all persons who shall voluntarily attend before them as witnesses; and it shall be lawful for any of the Commissioners to administer such oath, affirmation, or declaration; and every person required by such summons to attend before the Commissioners, who, without reasonable cause, to be allowed by the Commissioners, shall fail to appear according to the tenor of such summons, or shall refuse to be sworn or to make affirmation or declaration (as the case may be), or shall not make answer to all such questions as shall be lawfully put to him by the Commissioners, or shall refuse or fail to produce before the Commissioners any such deed, book, paper, document, or writing, being in or under his custody, possession or power, as shall be lawfully required to be produced by him before the Commissioners, shall for such default of appearance, refusal to be sworn or to make affirmation or declaration, or for not answering any such question as aforesaid, or not producing such deed, book, paper, document, or writing, incur and be liable to all such penalties, prosecutions, actions, and suits as a person might incur or be liable to for failing to appear, or refusing to be sworn or to give evidence in any suit or matter depending in the High Court of Chancery in Ireland, and the Commissioners shall have the like powers, jurisdiction, and authority, for enforcing the attendance of persons summoned as aforesaid for punishing persons failing to appear, or refusing to be sworn or to make affirmation or declaration or to give evidence, or guilty of contempt, and generally for enforcing all orders made by the Commissioners under any of the powers or authorities vested in them under this act, and otherwise in relation to the matters to be inquired into and done by them under this act, as are by law vested in the High Court of Chancery in Ireland for such purposes in relation to any suit or matter depending in such court.

13. Provided always, and be it enacted, that the Commissioners may, where they think fit, receive in evidence affidavits; and such affidavits may be made before any person empowered to take affidavits which may be received in evidence in the Court of Chancery in Ireland, or, where they think fit, the Commissioners may by order under their seal appoint and authorize any person to take affidavits, or to examine any witness or witnesses who shall attend before such person to be examined, in Ireland or elsewhere, in relation to any application to or matter pending before the Commissioners, and to administer oaths, affirmations, or declarations for the purposes of such examination.

14. And be it enacted, that every order made by the Commissioners under this act, a copy whereof shall be certified under their seal to the High Court of Chancery in England, may be enrolled in like manner and enforced by the like process as an order for payment or for accounting for money made by the High Court of Chancery in Ireland, a copy whereof is exemplified and certified to the said Court of Chancery in England under the great seal of Ireland, may be enrolled and enforced under an act passed in the forty-first year of King George the Third, intitled An Act for the more speedy and effectual Recovery of Debts due to His Majesty, his heirs and successors, in right of the crown of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, and for the better administration of justice within the same.

15. And be it enacted, that the Commissioners shall be a Court of Record, and shall have all the powers, authority, and jurisdiction of a Court of Equity in Ireland for the investigation of title, and for ascertaining and allowing mortgages and charges and the amounts due thereon, and settling the priority of such charges and incumbrances respectively, and the rights of owners and others, and generally for ascertaining, declaring, and allowing the rights of persons in any land or lease in respect of which application may be made under this act, or in the money to arise from sales under this act, and shall have the like authority and jurisdiction for enforcing, rescinding, or varying any contract for sale made under this act, and in other matters incident to or consequent on a sale under this act, as are vested in a Court of Equity in relation to a sale under the direction of such court, but their procedure shall be according to such general rules as aforesaid, or, where the general rules shall be inapplicable, at the discretion of the Commissioners; and the Commissioners shall have power, in relation to any matter or question before them, to send cases for the opinion of a Court of Law, and to direct issues of fact to be tried by a jury; and, subject to any such general rules as aforesaid, the Commissioners may refer to any one of such Commissioners any such inquiries and matters as they may think fit, and such one Commissioner shall, for all the purposes of this act, have in relation to all such inquiries and matters as shall be so referred to him the like powers, authority, and jurisdiction as the Commissioners or any two of them could have under this act.

16. And be it enacted, that where land in Ireland, or a lease in perpetuity, or any lease for a term whereof not less than sixty years shall be unexpired at the time of such application as hereinafter mentioned, or any church or college lease, of land in Ireland, shall be subject to any incumbrance, it shall be lawful for the owner of such land or lease, within three years from the passing of this act, to apply to the Commissioners for a sale of such land or lease under the provisions of this act.

17. And be it enacted, that where any land in Ireland, or any such lease as aforesaid of land in Ireland, shall be subject to any incumbrance, it shall be lawful for any incumbrancer on such land or lease, within three years from the passing of this act, to apply to the Commissioners for a sale under the provisions of this act of the whole or part, as in the judgment of the Commissioners may appear necessary of such land or lease, for the purpose of discharging the incumbrances thereon.

18. And be it enacted, that where application for a sale of any land or lease has been dismissed with costs by a competent tribunal, no application by the same party for a sale of such land or lease, or any part thereof, shall be entertained by the Commissioners, unless it is shown that such costs have been paid.

19. Provided always, and be it enacted, that for the purpose of authorizing an application for a sale under this act the land shall not be deemed subject to an incumbrance where the same shall not effect the inheritance, unless such incumbrance shall affect a term of not less than fifty years absolute unexpired, or a greater estate in such land, and shall have been created by the owner of an estate of inheritance, or by a person who, but for an act which is void against or postponed at law or in equity to such incumbrance, would be the owner of an estate of inheritance, but an incumbrance charged under a power created by the owner of an estate of inheritance shall be deemed to have been created by such owner; and such lease in perpetuity or other lease as aforesaid shall not be deemed subject to an incumbrance where the same shall affect a derivative estate or interest only, or less than the whole estate created or agreed to be created by such lease in perpetuity or other lease as aforesaid, unless such incumbrance shall have been created by the owner of or person entitled to the whole estate created or agreed to be created by such lease in perpetuity or other lease as aforesaid, or by a person who, but for an act which is void against or postponed at law or in equity to such incumbrance, would be such owner or so entitled, but any incumbrance charged under a power created by the owner of or person entitled to such whole estate as aforesaid shall be deemed to have been created by such owner or person so entitled.

20. And be it enacted, that when any incumbrance shall be subject to any limitations of estate or interest, or shall be held upon any trust, the Commissioners may proceed and act upon an application or consent under this act made or given in respect of such incumbrance by the first person entitled to the income of such incumbrance, or by any trustee thereof, or other person whose estate or interest in the incumbrance appears to the Commissioners sufficient to enable him properly to apply or consent in respect of the interests of the parties interested in the incumbrance.

21. And be it enacted, that if upon any application for a sale under this act, or upon any information or evidence which may be required by and produced to the Commissioners in relation to the matter of such application, it shall appear to the Commissioners that a sale of the land or lease to which the application may relate, or any part thereof, may be found to be expedient, they shall direct notices to be given to such persons and in such manner as they think fit, and shall, where any parties interested in the land or lease apply to them for that purpose, hear such parties, by themselves, their counsel or agents, and shall, so far only as may be necessary to enable them to determine whether under all the circumstances it is expedient that a sale of all or any part of the land or lease should be made, investigate the title and the incumbrances affecting the land or lease, and the state and circumstances of the land, or of the land comprised in the lease, and, if it shall in their opinion be expedient that such a sale should be made, may, at their discretion, make an order for the sale of all or any part of such land or

22. Provided always, and be it enacted, that the Commissioners shall not make an order for sale of any land or lease, or any part thereof, upon application by an incumbrancer on such land or lease, in case it be shown to the satisfaction of the Commissioners, by the owner of such land or lease, that no part of such land or lease is subject to any receiver or in the possession of any incumbrancer, and that the amount of the yearly interest on the incumbrances and other yearly payments (if any) in respect of charges payable out of the income of such land or lease, and the other lands or leases (if any) subject to the incumbrance of such incumbrancer, do not exceed one half of the net yearly income (after the payment of all tithe rent-charge, such part of the county cess and poor's rate as is payable by the owner, and all crows, quit, and head rent,) of such land or lease, or of all the lands or leases so subject: provided always, that the decision of the said Commissioners thereupon shall in all cases be final and conclusive to all intents and purposes whatsoever.

23. And be it enacted, that where a sale shall be made under this act the Commissioners shall, where and so far as they may deem necessary for the purposes of such sale, ascertain the tenancies of the occupying tenants, and of any leases or under-leases whose tenancies, leases, or under-leases affect the land or lease, or part thereof, to be sold, and may give such notices and make or cause to be made such inquiries as they shall think necessary for ascertaining and securing the rights of such tenants, leasees, or under-leasees as aforesaid; and all occupying tenants, and all persons being or claiming to be leasees or under leasees, as aforesaid, shall, at such times and places as the Commissioners may by their notices require, produce all leases, under-leases, and agreements in writing under which such tenants or persons occupy or claim to hold, if such leases, under-leases, or agreements, or counter parts thereof, be in their possession or power, and where they occupy or claim to hold under leases, under-leases, or agreements in writing not in their possession or power, or under parol agreements or lettings, they shall deliver, at such times and places as aforesaid, particulars of the terms and conditions upon and subject to which they occupy or claim to hold; and the sale shall be made subject to the tenancies, leases, or under-leases, ascertained as aforesaid, and subject to which the owner or incumbrancer, applying for a sale under this act shall be owner or incumbrancer, and such other of the tenancies, leases, and under-leases, ascertained as aforesaid, as shall appear to the Commissioners to have been granted bona fide by the owner or person in possession or in receipt of the rents and profits, and subject to which it shall appear to the Commissioners the sale should be made, save such (if any) of such respective tenancies, leases, and under-leases as, with consent as herein-after mentioned, shall be included in such sale, and, where the Commissioners think fit, be made subject to any leases, under-leases, or tenancies, according to any general description or subject to any condition concerning any leases, under leases, or tenancies the nature of which shall not have been ascertained or shall be disputed; and when the Commissioners shall think fit, such sale may be made subject to any annual charge affecting the land or lease, or part thereof, sold, or to any such apportioned part of such annual charge as the Commissioners may think fit should remain charged thereon; and where such land or lease, or part thereof, is subject to any incumbrance under the terms of which the incumbrancer cannot be required to accept payment of the principal money before the expiration of a term of years unexpired, such sale may, if the Commissioners think fit, be made subject to such incumbrance.

24. And be it enacted, that where the Commissioners make an order for sale, the land or lease, or part thereof, to which such order shall relate shall be sold, by or under the control and direction of the Commissioners, by public sale or private contract, together or in lots or parcels at such time and place and generally in such manner as the Commissioners think fit; and the conveyance or assignment of the land or lease, or part thereof, shall be made by the Commissioners under their seal, and shall be signed by two of the Commissioners, and the execution by any other party of such conveyance or assignment shall be unnecessary; and such conveyance or assignment shall express or refer to the tenancies, leases, and under leases (if any), and charge (if any), subject to which the sale is made, and may be in the form contained in the schedule to this act, or to the like effect, with such limitation of uses and other additions or variations as, with the approval of the Commissioners, the purchaser may direct.

25. And it be enacted, that the purchase money in every case shall be paid into the bank of Ireland, to an account to be there opened in the name of the Commissioners and to the credit in each case of the estate sold, or as the Commissioners by general rule or special order shall direct; and on the notification by the said bank to the Commissioners of the receipt of the money, a certificate by the Commissioners of such payment shall be endorsed on or written at the foot of the conveyance or assignment; and on such payment into the bank the purchaser shall be discharged from all liability in respect of the application of the money so paid, and such certificate of the Commissioners shall be evidence of such payment.

26. Provided always, and be it enacted, that it shall be lawful for any incumbrancer on or person otherwise interested in any land or lease, or part thereof, (other than the incumbrancer or owner upon whose application the sale has been ordered,) to bid at any public sale, and to become the purchaser at any public sale or by private contract, in like manner as any person not interested therein might bid and become the purchaser; and by leave of the Commissioners, it shall be lawful for the incumbrancer, or owner on whose application the sale has been ordered to bid and become the purchaser; and where an incumbrancer on any land or lease, or part thereof, shall be the purchaser of such land or lease, or part thereof, the Commissioners may, where they think fit, authorize such purchaser to retain out of the purchase money the amount which might have been ordered to be paid thereout in respect of such incumbrance in case the whole purchase money had been paid into the bank of Ireland, under this act, or such sum on account of such amount as the Commissioners may think fit, and to pay the residue only of the purchase money into the said bank; and where at the time of authorising such retainer, as aforesaid the Commissioners shall not finally have ascertained and determined the priority and rights of such purchaser in respect of his incumbrance, and the amount which he would be entitled to be paid in respect thereof out of the purchase money, such retainer shall be without prejudice to the power of the Commissioners to require such purchaser to pay into the said bank the whole or any part of the amount so retained which ought to be so paid by him; and the Commissioners shall withhold their certificate of payment herein-before mentioned until they shall be satisfied that the full purchase money, less the amount which such purchaser would be entitled to be paid in respect of his incumbrance, has been paid into the said bank.

27. And be it enacted, that every such conveyance, executed as aforesaid by the Commissioners upon the sale of land, shall be effectual to pass the fee simple and inheritance of the land thereby expressed to be conveyed, subject to such tenancies, leases, and under-leases as shall be expressed or referred to therein as aforesaid, but, save as aforesaid and as herein-after provided, discharged from all former and other estates, rights, titles, charges, and incumbrances, whatsoever of Her Majesty, her heirs and successors, and of all other persons whomsoever; and every such conveyance or assignment, executed by the Commissioners upon the sale of a lease in perpetuity or other lease, shall be effectual to pass the estate created or agreed to be created by such lease and then remaining unexpired, subject to the rent and covenants annexed to the reversion expectant on the determination of such lease, and to such tenancies, leases and under-leases as shall be expressed or referred to in such conveyance or assignment, but, save as aforesaid and as herein-after provided, discharged from all rights, titles, charges, and incumbrances, whatsoever affecting the leasehold estate or interest: provided that where any land or lease, or part thereof, shall be sold and conveyed or assigned subject to any annual charge or apportioned part thereof, such annual charge or such apportioned part thereof only (as the case may be) shall remain and be charged on and payable out of such land or lease, or part thereof, as in the conveyance or assignment shall be expressed.

28. Provided always, and be it enacted, that any such conveyance or assignment as aforesaid shall not prejudice or affect any right of common, or any right of way or other easement, or any rent charge in lieu of tithes, crown rent, or quit rent, charged upon or issuing out of any land, or any charge made by virtue of an act passed in the sixth year of Her Majesty intituled An Act to promote the Drainage of lands and improvement of Navigation and water power in connexion with such Drainage, in Ireland, and the acts amending the same, or by virtue of an act passed in the tenth year of Her Majesty, intituled An Act to facilitate the improvement of landed property in Ireland, save where the Commissioners shall think fit to redeem the crown rents or quit rents, or to pay off or redeem the charges under the said acts or either of them under the power herein-after contained, and shall express in such conveyance or assignment that the land conveyed or assigned thereby is so conveyed or assigned discharged of all crown rents or quit rents, or charges under the said acts or either of them, as the case may be, and in such case such land shall be so discharged accordingly.

29. And it be enacted, that the Commissioners shall have power to order the delivery to the purchaser, or as he shall direct, of all leases or counterparts of leases and agreements, and other evidences of the tenancies subject to which the sale shall be made, affecting the land or lease, or part thereof, sold, and shall, on the application of any purchaser, issue an order to the sheriff, to put such purchaser in possession of all lands not in the occupation of lessees, under-lessees, or tenants subject to whose leases, under-leases, or tenancies the sale shall have been made, and who shall have attorned to such purchaser within a time to be limited in such order, and such order shall be executed by the sheriff in like manner as a writ for the delivery of possession.

30. And it be enacted, that the Commissioners shall, out of the purchase money to be received on the sale of any land or lease, or part thereof, under this act, allow and pay such costs of and consequential on the application for the order for the sale as they shall think fit, and the expenses of and incidental to the sale; and the surplus of such purchase money, after payment of such costs and expenses, shall, under the order of the Commissioners, be applied in or towards payment or satisfaction of the incumbrances or charges which affected such land or lease, or part thereof, according to their priorities, and shall, subject as aforesaid, be paid to the owner previously to the sale of such land or lease, where such owner was absolutely entitled thereto, or, where not so entitled, be laid out in the purchase of land which shall be limited and settled to the same uses, upon the same trusts, for the same purposes, and in the same manner as the land or lease, or part thereof, sold, stood, settled or limited to, or such of them as shall be then subsisting or capable of taking effect; and until such money can be so laid out as aforesaid, under such order as aforesaid, be transferred or paid over to trustees to be appointed or approved by the Commissioners, for the purpose of being so laid out as aforesaid, with such power for the investment thereof in government stocks, funds, or securities in the meantime, and such directions for the payment of the income of such investment in the manner in which the rents of the land to be purchased would be applicable, as the Commissioners shall think fit.

31. And it be enacted, that any money so paid into the bank as aforesaid may by order of the Commissioners be invested in their name in the purchase of any stocks, funds, or annuities transferable at the bank of Ireland; and, until the same shall be sold by order of the Commissioners for the purposes of this act, the dividends thereof shall from time to time be applied, under the order of the Commissioners, in like manner as the rents of the land or lease, or part thereof, from the sale whereof the money invested in such stocks, funds, or annuities has arisen would have been applicable.

32. And be it enacted, that whenever the Commissioners shall appoint or shall direct the appointment of Trustees for any of the purposes of this act it shall be lawful for the Commissioners to make or to direct to be made such provision as they shall think fit for the appointment of new Trustees, on any event to be determined by the Commissioners.

33. Provided always, and be it enacted, that no payment under this act towards discharge of what shall be due on any incumbrance or charge, not being payment in full, shall prejudice or affect any right or remedy of the incumbrancer or the person entitled to the charge in respect of the balance, otherwise than as against the land or lease, or part thereof, sold under this act; and no payment under this act of or in respect of any incumbrance or charge shall impair any right or equity of any persons out of whose estate such payment shall be made to be reimbursed or indemnified by any person or out of any other land or estate, except so far as the Commissioners under any special circumstances shall order.

34. And be it enacted, that it shall be lawful for the Commissioners to sell any land or lease, or part thereof, discharged from any crown rent or quit rent which they may be enabled and may, with the consent of the owner, think fit to purchase, or from any charge made by virtue of the said acts of the sixth year and tenth year of Her Majesty, or either of them, which they may, with such consent, think fit to pay off or redeem; and in any such case the Commissioners shall, out of the money arising from the sale, and in preference to all other payments thereout, pay the consideration for the purchase of such crown rent or quit rent, or such sum as may be necessary for paying off or redeeming such charge; and it shall be lawful for the Commissioners, where they think fit, to pay to any person entitled to any annual or other charge, not being an incumbrance according to the definition of this act, who may consent to accept the same, a gross sum in discharge or by way of redemption thereof or of a part thereof, and where a part only of any land or lease subject to any incumbrance or charge is sold, to charge the part not sold with such incumbrance or charge, or an apportioned part thereof, in exoneration of the money arising from the sale, and to enable or authorize persons to release the money arising from the part so sold from any incumbrance or charge, or to relinquish their claim on such money in respect thereof, without impairing or affecting such incumbrance or charge as to the remaining part of the land or lease originally charged; and the Commissioners, where they think fit, may invest or provide for the investment of money to meet any annual or periodical charge, or any other charge, incumbrance, or interest, where, by reason of such charge, incumbrance, or interest being contingent or otherwise, it shall appear to the Commissioners proper or expedient so to do, and otherwise may make such orders and directions for applying the money arising from any sale in such manner as will secure the convenient application thereof for the benefit and according to the rights of the parties interested in the land or lease, or part thereof, from the sale of which the same shall have arisen.

35. And be it enacted, that where any money arising from a sale under this act is not immediately distributable, or the parties entitled thereto cannot be ascertained, or where from any other cause the Commissioners think it expedient for the protection of the rights and interests therein the Commissioners may order such money, or any stocks, funds, or securities in which the same may have been invested under this act, to be transferred to the account of the Accountant-General of the High Court of Chancery or of the Court of Exchequer in Ireland, or (where the case may require) of the High Court of Chancery in England, in the matter of the parties interested in the same, to be described as the Commissioners shall think fit and direct, in trust to attend the orders of such respective court; and the Commissioners may by their order declare the trusts affecting such money, stocks, funds, or securities, so far as they have ascertained the same, or state (for the information of the respective court) the facts or matters found by them in relation to the rights and interests therein; and the High Court of Chancery, Lord Chancellor, and Master of the Rolls, in England and Ireland respectively, and the Court of Exchequer in Ireland may make such orders and give such directions in relation to any such monies, stocks, funds, or securities as shall be so transferred to the account of the Accountant-General of such respective court as such court or judge respectively might make or give in relation to any trust monies, stocks, or securities paid in, transferred or deposited under the act passed in the eleventh year of Her Majesty "for better securing trust funds, and for the relief of trustees," or the act of the last session of Parliament for extending to Ireland the said act of the eleventh year of Her Majesty respectively; and no money transferred into the name of the Accountant-General of the Court of Chancery in Ireland, or paid out under this provision under any order of the Lord Chancellor or Master of the Rolls, shall be liable to Usher's poundage.

36. And be it enacted, that where there shall be separate applications to the Commissioners for sales under this act of any land and of any lease in the same land, or of two or more leases in the same land, or there shall be such applications for sales of different undivided shares of any land or lease, it shall be lawful for the Commissioners, where they shall see fit so to do, to include, with the consent of the persons by whom such respective applications may be made or prosecuted, and of any other persons whose consent the Commissioners may, under the circumstances, think fit to require, in the same sale, upon such terms as they think fit, such land and lease, or such leases, or such several undivided shares as aforesaid, and where there shall be separate applications for sales under this act of any land and of any lease in other land, or of different lands or leases in different lands, it shall be lawful for the Commissioners, where, from the lands being intermixed, or from other circumstances, it shall appear to them convenient so to do, to include, with such consent as aforesaid, such land and lease, or lands or leases, in the same sale, upon such terms as they may think fit; and where any land or lease, or part thereof, subject to any incumbrance, is proposed or ordered to be sold under this act, it shall be lawful for the Commissioners, upon the application of the owner of any lease or under lease, or estate in reversion, or other estate or interest whatsoever in the same land, (and although such lease, under lease, estate in reversion, or other estate or interest be not subject to any incumbrance, or would not, if subject to any incumbrance, be subject to be sold under an order of the Commissioners under the provisions herein-before contained) or upon the application of any incumbrancer on any such lease, under lease, estate, or interest, to include the same, upon such terms as they may see fit, in the sale of the land or lease, or part thereof, so proposed or ordered to be sold as aforesaid; and all the provisions of this act applicable to any land or lease subject to any incumbrance, and ordered to be sold under this act, and to any incumbrance or charge upon such land or lease, and to the purchase money arising from the sale thereof, and to the conveyance or assignment thereof, shall, so far as circumstances admit, extend and be applicable to every such lease, under lease, estate in reversion, or other estate or interest to be so included in the sale; and in every such case as aforesaid the Commissioners shall apportion the purchase money and expenses as they see fit.

37. And be it enacted, that if any land or lease to be sold under this act shall be subject to a lease or under lease for years or lives comprising other land at an entire rent, it shall be lawful for the Commissioners to apportion the rent between the land to be sold and the remainder of the land subject to such rent; and where it is intended to sell under this act a part only of any lease in perpetuity or other lease, it shall be lawful for the Commissioners, where they shall think fit, and (having regard to the rights and interest of the owner of the reversion) it shall appear to them just so to do, to apportion the rent reserved by such lease between the land to be sold and the remainder of the land; and the Commissioners shall direct notices of any such intended apportionment as aforesaid to be given to such persons and in such manner as they shall think fit, and shall hear such parties as shall apply to them in relation thereto; and after such apportionment, and after the sale shall be completed, the owners of the reversion in the respective lands shall have the like remedies for the apportioned rents against the lands out of which the same shall be payable, and the owners and occupiers thereof respectively, as were subsisting for the entire rent before such apportionment; and all the covenants, conditions, and agreements of every lease or under-lease, except as to the amount of rent to be paid, shall, as regards the apportioned parts, remain in force in the same manner as they would have done in case no such apportionment had taken place.

38. And be it enacted, that where any person who (if not under disability) might have made any application, given any consent, done any act, or been party to any proceeding under this Act, shall be a minor, idiot, lunatic, or married woman, the guardian, committee of the estate, and husband respectively of such person may make such applications, give such consents, do such acts, and be party to such proceedings, as such persons respectively, if free from disability, might have made, given, done, or been party to, and shall otherwise represent such person for the purposes of this Act; but a married woman entitled for her separate use (with or without power of anticipation) shall, for the purposes of this Act, be deemed a feme sole: provided always, that where there shall be no guardian or committee of the estate of any such person as aforesaid, being infant, idiot, or lunatic, or where any person the committee of whose estate if he were idiot or lunatic would be authorized to act for and represent such person under this Act shall be of unsound mind or incapable of managing his affairs, but shall not have been found idiot or lunatic under an inquisition, it shall be lawful for the Commissioners to appoint a guardian of such person for the purpose of any proceedings under this Act, and from time to time to change such guardian; and where the Commissioners see fit they may appoint a person to act as the next friend of a married woman for the purpose of any proceeding under this Act, and from time to time remove or change such next friend.

39. And be it enacted, that proceedings under this Act shall not abate or be suspended by any death or transmission or change of interest, but in any such case of death or transmission or change of interest it shall be lawful for the Commissioners, where they see fit, to require notices to be given to persons becoming interested, or to make any order for discontinuing, suspending, or carrying on the proceedings, or otherwise in relation thereto, which to them may appear just.

40. And be it enacted, that in every proceeding under this Act the Commissioners shall have full power and discretion as to the giving or withholding costs and expenses, and as to the persons by whom and the funds out of which the same shall in the first instance or ultimately be paid, repaid, and borne, and shall and may apportion the same amongst such parties, and in respect of interest, rents, or income, and principal or corpus, as they shall see fit.

41. And be it enacted, that application may be made to the Commissioners for a sale under this Act, and an order for such sale may be made by them notwithstanding any pending proceedings in a Court of Equity in England or Ireland, or any decree of any such Court of Equity already made for sale, and notwithstanding the owner may have power under an Act of Parliament or otherwise to make a sale; and where it shall be shown to the Commissioners that a decree for sale has been made by a Court of Equity, the Commissioners shall, if they see fit, without further inquiry, order a sale of the land or lease decreed to be sold; and where any sale shall be made of any land or lease, or part thereof, in respect of which there shall have been a decree of a Court of Equity, or any proceedings pending in a Court of Equity, the Commissioners shall, in distributing such monies and in their other proceedings, have regard to the proceedings in such court in relation to the priorities and rights of incumbrancers and others; and where there shall have been a decree of a Court of Equity the Commissioners shall, in distributing the monies arising on the sale and in their other proceedings, proceed upon and be guided by the declarations of and inquiries and proofs made and taken under such decree in relation to such priorities and rights as aforesaid; provided that it shall be lawful for the Commissioners, where it shall appear to them that there is any clerical error, or any error of names or in computation, or other like error, in such decree, or in any finding or proof, or where from matters coming to their knowledge it shall appear to them that the court in which the decree has been made should have an opportunity of reconsidering such decree, or considering or reconsidering any finding or proof, to direct such person as the Commissioners may think fit to apply to such court in relation thereto, and such court may make such order concerning the matter of such application as it may think fit; and the Commissioners shall, out of any monies arising from any sale under this Act, where there shall have been any such decree or pending proceedings as aforesaid, make such provision for payment of any costs incurred in relation to the proceedings in the Court of Equity as the circumstances may require; or the Commissioners may, in any of the cases aforesaid, where they think fit, order all or any part of the purchase money, after payment thereof of such costs and expenses as may be payable thereout under the orders of the Commissioners, to be paid into the Court of Equity in or under any suit or decree there pending or made.

42. And be it enacted, that where the Commissioners shall order the sale of any land or lease, or part thereof, in respect of which any decree shall have been already made by a Court of Equity for sale, or any proceedings shall be pending in a Court of Equity, they shall, by certificate under their seal, notify to such court the order so made by them; and all proceedings for or in relation to a sale under the decree of such court shall be stayed, and upon the completion of the sale under such order of the Commissioners any receiver appointed by such court shall cease to act as such receiver with respect to the land or lease, or part thereof, sold, and it shall be lawful for the court to suspend or stay any other proceedings in such court, or under any order or decree already made by such court, as the court shall think fit; and pending any proceedings for a sale under this Act it shall not be lawful for any owner or person claiming to be owner within the meaning of this Act, or claiming by the Act of such owner or person or by Act of Law, or any incumbrancer, to commence any proceedings at law or in equity by redemption, foreclosure, or sale, or to commence, sue, continue, or prosecute any proceeding whatsoever under the Act of the last Session of Parliament, "to facilitate the sale of Incumbered estates in Ireland," without the leave of the Commissioners.

43. And be it enacted, that where an application shall be made for a sale under this Act of an undivided share of any land or lease, or where any such undivided share shall have been sold under this Act, and either before or after the conveyance or assignment thereof under this Act, the Commissioners, on the application of any party interested in such undivided share, or of the purchaser, (as the case may be) and after causing to be given such notices to the owner or owners of the other undivided share or shares of the same land or lease as they may think fit, and hearing such parties interested in the respective shares as may apply to them, and making or causing to be made such inquiries as may enable them to make a just partition, may, if they think fit, make an order under their seal for the partition of such land or lease; and in such order, or in a map or plan annexed thereto, shall be shown the part allotted in severalty in respect of each of the undivided shares in such land or lease; and the Commissioners shall have the like authorities, jurisdiction, and powers in relation to such partition as a Court of Equity would have in the case of a partition under the direction of such court; and the part so allotted in severalty in respect of each such undivided share by such order for partition as aforesaid shall, without any conveyance or other assurance in relation thereto, go and endure to and upon the same uses and trusts, and be subject to the same conditions, charges, and incumbrances, as the undivided share in respect of which the same is so allotted would have stood limited or been subject to in case such order had not been made; and the like order for a sale of the part allotted in respect of the undivided share to which the application for the sale shall relate may be made (where the order for partition is made before sale,) and the like proceedings had in relation to such sale, and the like conveyance or assignment may be made of the part allotted in respect of the share sold (where the order for partition is made after sale, and before conveyance or assignment,) and with the like consequences in the several cases aforesaid, as if the application for a sale, or the sale, (as the case may be,) had been in respect of the part so allotted as aforesaid; and where any land or lease, or part thereof, to be sold under this Act, is subject to any lease, under-lease, or tenancy under which the lessor, under-lessee, or tenants hold jointly or as tenants in common, it shall be lawful for the Commissioners, on the application of any such lessee, under-lessee, or tenant, and after causing to be given such notices as they may think fit, and hearing such parties as may apply to them, and making such inquiries as they may think necessary, to make an order under their seal for the partition, as between such lessor, under-lessee, or tenants, of the land included in their lease, under-lease, or tenancy, and for the apportionment of the rent reserved or payable under such lease, under-lease, or tenancy; and after such order of partition the owner of the reversion in the respective parts of the land shall have the like remedies for the apportioned rents against the respective parts out of which the same shall be payable, and the lessor, under-lessee, or tenants holding such respective parts under such lease, under-lease, or tenancy, and such order of partition, as were subsisting for the entire rent before such partition and apportionment; and all the covenants, conditions, and agreements of every such lease, under-lease, or tenancy, except as to the amount of rent to be paid, shall, as regards the respective parts allotted on such partition, and the apportioned parts of the rent, remain in force as against the respective lessees, under-lessees, or tenants to whom under such partition such respective parts shall be allotted.

44. And be it enacted, that where an application shall be made for a sale under this Act of any land or lease, or part thereof, or where the same shall have been sold under this Act, and either before or after the conveyance or assignment thereof under this Act, if application be made to the Commissioners by any party interested in such land or lease, or by the purchaser, (as the case may be,) for the exchange of all or any part of such land, or of all or any part of the land comprised in such lease, for other land which the owner thereof may be willing to give in exchange, the Commissioners may make or cause to be made such inquiries as they may think fit for ascertaining whether such exchange would be beneficial to the persons interested in the respective lands, and cause such notices to be given to parties interested in the respective lands as they may think fit; and if, after making such inquiries, and hearing such parties interested in the respective lands as may apply to them, the Commissioners shall be of opinion that such exchange would be beneficial, and that the terms thereof as proposed, or as modified by them, with the consent of such owner as aforesaid, are just and reasonable, they may make an order under their seal for such exchange accordingly, and in such order for exchange, or in a map or plan annexed thereto, shall be shown the lands given and taken in exchange respectively under such order; and the land taken upon such exchange under such order shall, without any conveyance or other assurance in relation thereto, go and ensure to and upon the same uses and trusts, and be subject to the same conditions, charges, and incumbrances, as the land given on such exchange would have stood limited or been subject to in case such order had not been made; and the like order for a sale may be made in respect of the land taken in exchange for any land, or any land comprised in any lease to which the application for a sale shall relate, (where the order for exchange is made before sale,) and the like proceedings had in relation to such sale, and the like conveyance or assignment may be made in respect of the land taken in exchange for the land or lease, or part thereof, sold, (where the order for exchange is made after sale, and before conveyance or assignment,) and with the like consequences, in the several cases aforesaid, as if the application for a sale, or the sale, (as the case may be,) had been in respect of the land so taken in exchange.

45. And be it enacted, that it shall be lawful for the Commissioners, upon the application of the owners of the several undivided shares (not subject to be sold under this act, or as to which no proceedings for a sale under this act shall be pending,) of any land in Ireland who shall desire to effect a partition of such land, to make or cause to be made such inquiries as the Commissioners may think fit for ascertaining whether such partition would be beneficial to the persons interested in such respective shares; and in case the Commissioners shall be of opinion that the proposed partition would be beneficial, and that the terms thereof are just and reasonable, they shall make an order under their seal for such partition accordingly; and in such order, or in a map or plan annexed thereto, shall be shown the part allotted in severalty in respect of each such undivided share; and the part so allotted in severalty in respect of each such undivided share by such order of partition shall, without any conveyance or other assurance in relation thereto, go and ensure to and upon the same uses, and be subject to the same conditions, charges, and incumbrances, as the undivided share in respect of which the same is so allotted would have stood limited or been subject to in case such order had not been made.

46. And be it enacted, that it shall be lawful for the Commissioners, upon the application of the owners of lands in Ireland not subject to be sold under this act, or as to which no proceedings for a sale under this act shall be pending, who shall desire to effect an exchange of such lands, to make or cause to be made such inquiries as the Commissioners may think fit for ascertaining whether such exchange would be beneficial to the persons interested in the respective lands; and in case the Commissioners shall be of opinion that the proposed exchange would be beneficial, and that the terms thereof are just and reasonable, they shall make an order under their seal for such exchange accordingly; and in such order for exchange, or in a map or plan annexed thereto, shall be shown the lands given and taken in exchange respectively under such order; and the land taken upon such exchange under such order shall, without any conveyance or other assurance, in relation thereto, go and ensure to and upon the same uses and trusts, and be subject to the same conditions, charges, and incumbrances, as the land given upon such exchange would have stood limited or been subject to in case such order had not been made.

47. And be it enacted, that it shall be lawful for the Commissioners, upon the application of any number of persons who shall be separately owners of parcels of land not subject to be sold under this act, or as to which no proceedings for a sale under this act shall be pending, so intermixed, or divided into parcels of inconvenient form or quantity, that the same cannot be cultivated or occupied to the best advantage, but forming together a tract which may be divided into convenient parcels, and who shall desire to have the whole of such tract divided into convenient parcels, to be allotted in lieu of the old parcels, to make or cause to be made such inquiries as the Commissioners may think fit, for ascertaining whether such proposed division and allotment would be beneficial to the persons interested in such lands; and in case the Commissioners shall be of opinion that the proposed division and allotment would be beneficial, they shall make an order for the division and allotment thereof accordingly, with a map or plan thereunto annexed, in which shall be specified as well the parcels in which the several persons on whose application such order shall have been made were respectively interested before such division and allotment as the several parcels allotted to them respectively by such order; and the parcels of land taken under such division and allotment shall go and ensure to and upon the same uses and trusts, and be subject to the same conditions, charges and incumbrances, as the several lands which the persons taking the same shall have relinquished or lost on such division would have stood limited or been subject to in case such order had not been made.

48. Provided always, and be it enacted, that in the case of land in respect of which no proceedings for a sale under this act shall be pending, no such order of partition or of exchange, or of division and allotment, as aforesaid, shall be made by the Commissioners until such notices by advertisement in such public newspaper or newspapers as the Commissioners shall direct shall have been given of such proposed partition, exchange, or division and allotment, and three calendar months shall have elapsed from the publication of the last of such advertisements; and in case before the expiration of such three calendar months any person entitled to any estate in or to any charge upon any land included in such proposed partition, exchange, or division and allotment, shall give notice in writing to the Commissioners of his dissent from such proposed partition, exchange, or division and allotment, (as the case may be,) the Commissioners shall not make an order for such partition, exchange, or division and allotment, unless such dissent shall be withdrawn, or it shall be shown to the Commissioners that the estate or charge of the party so dissenting shall have ceased, or that such estate or charge is not an estate or charge in respect of which he would be entitled in equity to prevent such partition, exchange, or division and allotment; but no such order as aforesaid shall be in anywise liable to be impeached by reason of any infirmity of estate or defect of title of the persons on whose application the same shall have been made.

49. And be it enacted, that every conveyance and assignment respectively executed as required by this act, and every order for partition or for exchange, or for division and allotment, made by the Commissioners under their seal, shall for all purposes be conclusive evidence that every application, proceeding, consent, and act whatsoever which ought to have been made, given, and done previously to the execution of such conveyance or assignment, or the making of such order respectively, has been made, given, and done by the person authorized to make, give, and do the same; and no such conveyance, assignment, or order shall be impeached by reason of any informality therein.

50. And be it enacted, that the Commissioners shall not be subject to be restrained in the execution of their powers under this act, nor shall any person be restrained from making application under this act to the Commissioners, or doing any other act or giving any consent under the provisions of this act, by order or injunction of a Court of Equity, or by writ of prohibition, nor shall the Commissioners be required by writ of mandamus to do any act or take any proceeding under this act, nor shall proceedings before them be removable by certiorari; and the Commissioners shall not, nor shall any of them, nor shall any person acting under the order or authority of them or any of them, be liable to any action, suit, or proceeding for or in respect of any act or matter bona fide done or omitted by them respectively in the exercise or supposed exercise of the powers of this act.

51. And be it enacted, that it shall be lawful for the Commissioners to review and rescind or vary any order which shall have been previously made by them, but, save as aforesaid and as herein-after provided, every order of the Commissioners shall be final: provided always, that where the Commissioners allow appeal, but not otherwise, appeal against any order of the Commissioners may be made to the Privy Council of Ireland within one calendar month from the making of the order appealed against, and such appeal shall be heard and reported on by members of the Privy Council, to be appointed by such judicial committee of the said Privy Council as herein-after mentioned, and the orders of the said Privy Council in relation to such appeal shall be made according to the reports of such judicial committee, and the order of the said Privy Council on the appeal shall be final.

52. And be it enacted, that the judicial committee herein-before referred to shall consist of the Lord High Chancellor of Ireland for the time being, and such of the members of the said Privy Council as shall from time to time hold any of the following offices in Ireland; that is to say, the office of Lord Keeper or First Lord Commissioner of the Great Seal of Ireland, Lord Chief Justice or Judge of the Court of Queen's Bench, Master of the Rolls, Lord Chief Justice or Judge of the Court of Common Pleas, Lord Chief Baron or Baron of the Court of Exchequer, and Judge or Commissary of Her Majesty's Court of Prerogative for Causes Ecclesiastical and Court of Faculties in and throughout Ireland, and of all persons members of the said Privy Council who shall have held the office of Lord Chancellor of Ireland, or any of the other offices herein-before mentioned, and of such other persons not exceeding four in number, being Privy Councillors in Ireland, as the Lord Lieutenant or other chief governor or governors for the time being of Ireland shall appoint to be members of such committee; and no such appeal as aforesaid shall be heard or reported on by the said judicial committee unless in the presence of at least four members of the said committee; and no report on such appeal shall be made unless a majority of the members of such committee present at the hearing concur in such report.

53. And be it enacted that every person who upon examination upon oath, affirmation, or declaration before the Commissioners or any of them, or any person appointed and authorized under this act by the Commissioners to administer such oath, affirmation, or declaration, shall wilfully give false evidence, and every person who shall wilfully swear affirm, or declare falsely in any affidavit authorized under this act to be received in evidence by the Commissioners, shall be liable to the pains and penalties of perjury.

54. And it be enacted, that in the construction of this act (except where the context or other provisions of the act require a different construction) the word "Land" shall extend to manors, advowsons, rectories, messuages, lands, tenements, rents, and hereditaments of any tenure, whether subject to any fee farm or other perpetual rent, with or without condition of re-entry for securing the same, or otherwise, and whether corporeal or incorporeal, and any undivided share thereof; and the word "estate" shall extend to an estate in equity as well as at law, and to an equity of redemption, and to the benefit of any covenant or contract for or right of renewal; and the word "Lease" shall include an agreement for a lease, and the estate or interest created or agreed to be created by such lease or agreement in the whole or any part of the land therein comprised; and the expression "lease in perpetuity" shall mean any lease or grant for one or more life or lives, with or without a term of years, or for years determinable on one or more life or lives, or for years absolute, with a covenant or agreement in any of such cases, whether in the same or in any other instrument, for the perpetual renewal of such lease or grant, whether such lease shall be derived out of the inheritance or by way of under lease out of any lease or other estate; and the expression "church or college lease" shall include any lease by any archbishop, bishop, dean, or dean and chapter, or other ecclesiastical corporation, sole or aggregate, or by the College of the Holy and Undivided Trinity near Dublin, or by the Ecclesiastical Commissioners for Ireland, where a fine has been paid on the grant of such lease; and the word "incumbrance" shall mean any legal or equitable mortgage in fee, or for any less estate, and also any money secured by a trust, or by judgment, decree, or order of any superior court of law or equity duly registered, and also any legacy, portion, lien, or other charge, whereby a gross sum of money is secured to be paid on an event or at a time certain, and also any annual or periodical charge which by the instrument creating the same, or by any other instrument, is made repurchasable on payment of a gross sum of money, and also any arrear remaining unpaid of any annual or periodical charge, for payment of which arrear a sale of any land charged therewith might be decreed by a court of equity; and the word "incumbrancer" shall mean any person entitled to such incumbrance, or entitled to require the payment or discharge thereof; and the word "possession" shall include the receipt of the rents and profits; and the word "owner" as applied to any land, shall include any person entitled in possession in fee simple or in tail, or quasi in tail, and any person entitled in possession for a life or lives, or for a term of years determinable on the dropping of any life or lives, or for a term of years of which not less than ninety-nine years are unexpired, not being a leasee at a rent, and also any person entitled in possession as tenant by the curtesy, whether at law or in equity, and any person entitled in possession, whether in fee or for any lesser estate as aforesaid, to the equity of redemption in any land, or to the land subject to any incumbrance, or a trust for the payment of any incumbrance, and any feeoffees or trustees for charitable or other purposes, entitled in possession; and the word "owner" as applied to a lease in perpetuity or other lease, shall include any person entitled in possession to the land comprised in such lease for the whole estate created or agreed to be created by such lease, or for any derivative estate (created by settlement, or testamentary or other disposition thereof), quasi in tail, or for a life or lives, or for years determinable on the dropping of a life or lives, or for years of which not less than fifty years are unexpired, not being an under lease at a rent derived out of such lease, and any person entitled in possession, for such whole estate or such derivative estate as aforesaid, to the equity of redemption in such lease, or to such lease subject to any incumbrance, or a trust for the payment of any incumbrance; and the word "person" and the word "owner" shall extend to a body politic or corporate as well as to an individual; the word "Commissioners" shall mean "the Commissioners for sale of Incumbered Estates in Ireland;" the expression "the Commissioners of Her Majesty's Treasury" shall mean such Commissioners for the time being or any three of them, or the Lord High Treasurer for the time being; and every word importing the singular number only shall extend to several persons or things, and every word importing the plural number shall apply to one person or thing; and every word importing the masculine gender only shall extend to a female.

55. And be it enacted, that this act shall, except so far as the special provisions of the same otherwise require, extend only to Ireland, and may be amended or repealed by any act to be passed in this session of parliament.

SCHEDULE.

Form of conveyance on sales by the Commissioners (which may be used with such variations as the circumstances may appear to the Commissioners to require).

WE two of the Commissioners for sale of Incumbered Estates in Ireland, under the authority of an act passed in the year of the reign of Queen Victoria, intituled [here set forth the title of this act], in consideration of the sum of by E. F. of &c., paid into the Bank of Ireland to our account to the credit of do grant unto the said E. F. all [here describe the premises to be sold], to hold the same unto the said E. F., his heirs and assigns, [or, in the case of a chattel interest in a lease, his executors, administrators, and assigns,] for ever, [or for the unexpired term created by a certain lease, describing the lease, as the case may be], subject to [here specify, where the sale is made subject thereto, the tenancies, leases, or other leases, or charge, either by reference to a schedule or otherwise].

In witness whereof we the said A. B. and C. D. have hereunto set our hands and the seal of the said Commissioners, this day of in the year of our Lord

A. B.

C. D.

[Seal of the Commission.]

The certificate of payment to be endorsed on or written at the foot of the conveyance or assignment may be in the following form:

WE certify that the within [or above] mentioned sum of was paid into the Bank of Ireland to the account and credit within [or above] mentioned on the day of

A. B.

C. D.

[Seal of the Commission.]

GENERAL RULES.

UNDER THE 12TH & 13TH VIC.. CHAP 77.

Dated the 18th day of October, 1849.

IT is this day ordered by the Right Honourable John Richards, one of the Barons of Her Majesty's Court of Exchequer in Ireland, Mountfort Longfield, LL.D., and Charles James Hargreave, Esq., being the Commissioners for sale of incumbered estates in Ireland, pursuant to the statute in that case made and provided, that the following general rules and orders shall take effect and be binding in relation to all proceedings to be hereafter had or taken under and in pursuance of the provisions of an act passed in the session holden in the 12th and 13th years of the reign of Her Majesty Queen Victoria, chap. 77, entitled "An Act further to facilitate the sale and transfer of incumbered estates in Ireland":—

1. That in the construction of any general rules or orders made by the Commissioners, the words and phrases to which a particular or extended meaning is assigned by the 54th section of the act shall, when used in such rules or orders, be understood to bear such particular or extended meaning, except where the context or other provisions of the rules require a different construction; and the word "affidavit" shall include an affirmation or declaration made by any person who by law is empowered to give evidence by affirmation or declaration in lieu of oath; and that when time is to be computed by days, it shall be exclusive of Sundays, and the holidays in the next succeeding rule stated, and when it is to be computed by the month, it shall be construed calendar month, and in all cases it shall be exclusive of the first, and inclusive of the last day, unless the last day be one of such holidays, when the following day shall be included.

2. That the Commissioners may adjourn their sittings from one day to the next, or to any other day they may think expedient, having regard to the state of their business and the public convenience; but they may resume such sittings again for the despatch of business on any day or days during the interval of any such adjournment, should they find it necessary so to do; and the several offices of the court shall be open for business upon all days of the year, except on Sundays, Christmas Day, and the three days next after Christmas Day, New Year's Day, Good Friday, and Easter Monday and Tuesday; and shall continue open for the despatch of business from ten until four o'clock each day during the period appointed for the sittings of the court, and from twelve until three o'clock on all other days; and the officers and clerks belonging thereto respectively, shall attend in such offices in the discharge of their several duties during the periods above mentioned, unless otherwise engaged in the business of the court, or unless prevented by sickness, or other unavoidable cause, or allowed leave of absence by the court.

3. That an entry be made in the office, in a book to be kept for that purpose, of every matter depending in the court, with a proper index, for the purpose of reference; and whenever a petition shall be presented by a party who is not the owner, the name of the owner, as well as the petitioner, shall be inserted in the index to such book, in order that the proceedings pending in the court, may be the more easily searched for and ascertained; and that all orders and rules made by the Commissioners shall be entered in a book to be called the "Rule Book."

4. That all attested copies of petitions, affidavits, and other documents, in the offices of the court shall be written on foolscap paper, bookwise, and shall contain three folios of ninety words in each page; and all copies shall be attested by the secretary or a chief clerk, whether such copies be brought in for attestation, or be made out in the office, and when it is required that the common seal of the Commissioners shall be affixed to any document, the same shall be done by the secretary, or by such other persons as the court shall from time to time appoint for that purpose.

5. That proceedings under this act shall be commenced by petition, to be addressed and framed according to the forms to be approved of by the Commissioners; and every such petition shall be signed by the petitioner or his attorney, and shall be accompanied by an affidavit verifying the material facts therein.

6. That every person presenting a petition to the Commissioners, otherwise than through the agency of an attorney, shall state some place at foot thereof, within the City of Dublin, where notices and orders may be served on him; and such party, or in case of his death or transmission of his interest, the party claiming in his right may from time to time change such place of address, and substitute some other place within the City of Dublin for the like purpose.

7. That after a petition is filed, the secretary, or such other officer as the Commissioners shall from time to time, for that purpose appoint, shall, on the application of any party interested, give a certificate that such petition has been filed, in order that the matter may be registered as a lis pendens.

8. That on every petition for a sale, an order shall be made by the Commissioners, either dismissing the petition, or referring it for inquiry to one of the Commissioners, or granting a conditional order for a sale, stating therein by name or general description, the parties who must be served with such order, and the time within which cause against such order must be shown; but the petitioner, if he be dissatisfied with the fiat of the Commissioners, may, by notice left in the office, require that the matter of his petition may be moved in court.

9. That in any case in which a party shall seek to show cause against, or to set aside any order made by the Commissioners, he shall lodge a notice to that effect in the office, and state at foot, or on the back thereof, upon what party he requires such notice to be served and the subject matter of such notice shall come on to be heard in due course before the Commissioners; and the Commissioners, on the hearing of such matter, shall make an order to vary, or to discharge the order already pronounced, or to direct a reference to one of the Commissioners, or make such other order as they shall think fit, and may order the whole, or any portion of the costs, up to and including the hearing of such matter, to be paid by such of the parties as they shall think properly liable thereto.

10. That, if the owner shall rely upon the provisions of the 22nd section of the Act, in opposition to a sale, he shall file an affidavit containing all the particulars required by that section; and also stating, as nearly as he can, how much has been received during each of the seven years immediately preceding the presentation of the petition for the rent and arrears of rent, of all the premises subject to the incumbrance of the petitioner, and how much has become due during that period for tithes rent-charge, poor's rate, and county cess.

11. That when an absolute order for a sale shall be pronounced, the Commissioners may, if they shall think it necessary, require the owner, and all other persons, to produce to, or lodge with, the Commissioners, on oath, all deeds, books, papers, documents, and writings in their possession, custody, or power respectively, relating to the premises ordered to be sold, and to the charges thereon, and to do all such other acts, and furnish such information within the authority of the Commissioners, to direct as may be necessary to enable the Commissioners to sell the premises to the best advantage.

12. That the statements in any petition shall not constitute an admission of the validity of any claim stated therein or of any particular sum being due in respect of any incumbrance, save claims and sums expressly admitted by the petitioner.

13. That on the order for a sale being made absolute, a notice shall be circulated among the tenantry or persons residing on the property, according to a printed form to be approved by the Commissioners, specifying the tenancies, leases, and agreements which are admitted, and calling upon all parties who have claims for other tenancies, leases, or agreements not specified, or who consider that the terms of their tenancies, leases, or agreements are incorrectly stated, to come forward, and apply for an amendment of the order in this behalf. But this rule shall not be construed as rendering it necessary to serve every tenant, or every person residing on the property, or claiming to be interested therein, with such notice.

14. That if any person shall claim to be entitled to any lease or agreement other than those which are admitted, he shall lodge in the office, the particulars of such claim, accompanied by an affidavit that he believes the same to be just and true, and (if he does not appear by attorney) stating the address to which notices and orders may be served on him; and the Commissioners shall thereupon make an order, either allowing his claim in the whole or in part, or calling upon him to sustain it by sufficient evidence, or such other order as may meet the merits of the case.

SALE AND CONVEYANCE.

15. That, if upon a sale by auction, the highest price offered for any lot be, in the opinion of the Commissioners, clearly inadequate, they shall be at liberty to adjourn the sale of that lot to a future day; and no sale of any lot shall be deemed to have been made until the amount of deposit (if any) required by the conditions of sale shall have been actually paid in the manner prescribed by such conditions.

16. That immediately after a sale, whether by public auction or private contract, the purchaser shall obtain a certificate under the seal of the Commissioners, that he is the purchaser, thereby authorising him to pay the amount of his purchase money, into the Bank of Ireland, to the account of the Commissioners, to the credit of the estate of A. B. of, &c., [as the case may be,] and shall procure the notification by the bank to the Commissioners of the receipt of the money; and no sale shall be opened merely by reason of any advance being made upon the biddings or price.

17. That in any case in which it shall appear to the Commissioners that any premises can be sold by auction to better advantage out of Dublin, the Commissioners may direct that the biddings shall be made at such place, and before such person, as they shall for that purpose appoint, and thereupon such biddings shall be had accordingly, and shall be returned to the Commissioners, who shall declare the highest bidder the purchaser, unless the highest sum offered shall be, in the opinion of the Commissioners, clearly inadequate, or unless the Commissioners shall see good cause against confirming the sale.

18. That, the conveyance or assignment of all premises sold by the Commissioners, shall be prepared by and at the expense of the purchaser, and the draft thereof shall be approved of by the Commissioners, or by the Commissioner, to whom the matter is referred. It shall specify the tenancies (if any) subject to which the sale is made, and any apportionment of rent between the purchaser and the proprietor of other lands demised with the lands sold or any part thereof, and any rents or incumbrances remaining charged upon the property or any part thereof in the hands of the purchaser; and the Commissioners shall, when necessary, ascertain and define the relative rights of the purchaser and the prior possessor with respect to any crops on the land.

19. That the Commissioners, whenever they shall think fit, may dispense with the personal service of notice upon any of the tenants to the lands who may be required to attend, and may direct that such notice shall be given to such tenants, either by posting the same on some conspicuous place on or near the lands, or by advertising the same in one or more newspapers, or transmitting the same notice through the Post Office, or otherwise, as to the Commissioners shall seem proper.

20. That the duplicates, or counterparts of leases, where they exist, and can be had, or other evidences of the tenancies subject to which the sale is made shall be delivered to the purchaser, except where they relate also to other lands, in which case copies shall be delivered to him.

21. That the Commissioners may require and compel all persons claiming to be tenants to produce the leases or agreements, or other instruments under which they so claim, and to give copies thereof.

22. That in case the purchase money and any interest which may have accrued upon it under the terms of the sale or by law shall not be paid into the bank within fourteen days after the sale, any party to the proceedings may procure an order for payment; or the Commissioners may make such order without any special application, or may, if they think proper, re-sell the property, and the expenses incident to such re-sale, together with the deficiency, if any, in the price obtained below the former price, shall be paid forthwith by the purchaser at the former sale, for which payment, the deposit (if any) shall be a guarantee; but he shall not be entitled to the benefit of any excess in the price, which may be obtained at the latter sale.

DISTRIBUTION OF THE PURCHASE MONEY.

23. That, when the absolute order for a sale shall be pronounced, advertisements shall be published in a Dublin newspaper, and in one or more local newspapers, and such other newspapers as the Commissioners shall direct, giving notice of such order, and calling upon all claimants of estates, interests, or incumbrances in or upon the premises ordered to be sold, to come forward and establish their several claims and demands.

24. That when the absolute order for a sale shall be pronounced, the Commissioners, or in case of a reference to one Commissioner, such one Commissioner shall direct what further information shall be procured respecting the title of all parties to the premises, and to the incumbrances affecting the same, and what searches or further searches should be made in relation thereto, and such person as they or he shall direct, shall forthwith proceed to make out a full title to the premises, including charges and incumbrances thereon, and shall prove and verify the same in such manner as the Commissioners, or such one Commissioner, shall direct; but the sale itself shall not be delayed by the proceedings under this and the preceding rule, unless the Commissioners shall see cause for deferring such sale.

25. That the costs chargeable against the fund produced by a sale shall be, first, such costs of, and consequential on the application for the order for sale, as the Commissioners shall think fit to allow; secondly, the expense of, and incidental to the sale; thirdly, the costs awarded to any tenant who shall establish a claim for a lease or agreement not set forth in the schedules given by the owner of the land, escept such part of the last-mentioned costs as shall be actually recovered under the order of the Commissioners from the owner or person who shall have contested such claim; and the Commissioners may direct the owner or other person contesting such claim to reimburse the fund in any costs awarded to the tenant establishing his claim, and paid to him out of the funds in court, provided that nothing herein contained shall preclude the Commissioners from giving costs to an owner not being the petitioner or party having the carriage of the proceedings in any case in which it shall appear to be just and reasonable that such owner should be allowed costs.

26. That the costs properly incurred by an incumbrancer coming in and proving his incumbrance, shall, except where the Commissioners may otherwise direct, rank in point of priority with the incumbrance, in respect of which such costs have been incurred.

27. That a schedule of incumbrances shall be prepared by the Commissioners, or one of them, or such of their officers as they shall appoint, according to their several priorities, with the sums due on each for principal, interest, and costs respectively, and in case of an annuity, for arrears and costs; and when such schedule shall be filed, notice thereof shall be given in a Dublin newspaper and in a local newspaper, and such other newspapers as the Commissioners shall direct, and if the Commissioners shall consider it necessary, notice shall also be specially given to the incumbrancers and other parties interested in the premises, or their attorneys; and if no party interested shall file an objection thereto, within such time as the Commissioners shall appoint for that purpose, the same shall stand confirmed without further order, and all parties shall be bound thereby, so far as relates to the money produced by the sale of the premises, in respect of which such schedule shall be made, unless the Commissioners shall, on special application, make an order to the contrary.

28. That any party may file an objection to the schedule of incumbrances, within the time specified under the last preceding rule, and shall briefly state therein the grounds of his objection, and such objection shall be heard and dealt with by the Commissioners in such manner as they shall think fit.

29. That after the schedule of incumbrances shall be confirmed, and if the Commissioners shall think the funds may be safely distributed, one of the Commissioners shall allocate the stock and funds in court (computing the value of the stock at the price of the day of such allocation) among the several incumbrancers and parties entitled, according to their priorities; and such allocation, so far as it may extend, shall be deemed payment of such incumbrances so that they shall cease to bear interest, and the owner of the incumbrance shall be entitled to the dividends on the stock, and shall be liable to all the consequences of its fall or rise in price, but such Commissioner shall not be bound to make any allocation of stock or funds in part payment of an incumbrance, unless the incumbrancer consents to such allocation.

30. That the Commissioners may, before such schedule as aforesaid shall be finally settled, upon the application of any person who shall be the first or an early incumbrancer, and whose claim shall appear to be valid, order payment to such incumbrancer of the amount claimed by him, or any part thereof, if it shall appear to the Commissioners that such order may be made with safety to all parties; but the costs of such application shall not be allowed on taxation against the fund, unless in the order pronounced by the Commissioners they shall award the costs thereof to such incumbrancer.

31. That when stock or money is allocated to trustees, the Commissioners may refuse to order a transfer or payment thereof to be made to them, unless the full number of trustees shall exist according to the provisions of the instrument creating the trust.

32. That the fund allocated to any party shall not be transferred or paid over to him, until he shall have verified his title thereto as the Commissioners shall direct.

33. That the Commissioners shall not draw in favour of, or transfer stock to, any person in payment of a legacy, until the person entitled to such payment shall produce a certificate from the proper officer, of the payment of the legacy duty, if any payable in respect thereof; but the Commissioners may, with the consent of such person, draw in favour of, or transfer to, the proper officer authorized to receive the same, the amount of such duty.

34. The Commissioners may, in any special case, order the payment of money or transfer of stock to any person upon his giving such security as shall be approved of by the Commissioners, to abide any order which the Commissioners may make in regard thereto.

35. That notice, in writing, of any assignment, charge, or other disposition of any funds in the hands of the Commissioners, or of the interest of any person therein, must be lodged in the office, stating particularly the fund to which the same relates, and the name of the person whose interest therein is affected, and the name of the party so claiming to be interested in such charge, and some place in Great Britain and Ireland where notice may be served upon such party or his attorney.

PROCEEDINGS FOR AN APPORTIONMENT OF RENT.

36. That when it is proposed to sell a part only of any lease, any person interested may apply to the Commissioners for an apportionment of the rent reserved by such lease; and notice of such proposed apportionment shall be given to the landlord and to the owner of the remainder of the land included in the lease; and such landlord or owner may lodge in the office a notice of his intention to oppose such apportionment; in which case the matter shall be heard and determined by the Commissioners.

37. That an application for apportionment may be included in a petition for sale.

PROCEEDINGS FOR A PARTITION.

38. That when an application for a partition is presented under the 43rd section of the act, the Commissioners shall direct what notices shall be served, and on whom, and shall direct advertisements to be published in at least one Dublin newspaper and one local newspaper, calling on all parties interested to serve notice of objections, (if any they have to a partition) before a certain day therein to be named, and on the day named in such advertisement, or as soon after as may be convenient, the Commissioners shall hear the said application, and if no objection shall be substantiated, will issue an order to one or more surveyor or surveyors to make a report according to instructions to be contained in such order, and as soon as the report of the surveyor or surveyors shall be returned to the Commissioners, they shall name a day on which a partition shall be made, unless in the meantime a notice of objection shall be served on behalf of some interested party, in which case the Commissioners shall hear all parties who require to be heard, and examine the proceedings, and make a partition, or such other order thereon as may appear to them to be proper.

39. That application for a partition, under the 43rd section of the act, may be either included in an original petition for a sale, or made by supplemental petition referring to the former petition, and to the proceedings thereon.

40. That the costs properly incurred in proceedings for a partition, including the costs of the survey and advertisements, shall be borne by the owners of the estate in proportion to their respective shares; and the amount paid by any owner having a limited interest, shall be a charge in his favour upon the inheritance or whole interest in the share allotted to him.

PROCEEDINGS FOR EXCHANGE, OR FOR DIVISION OF INTERMIXED LANDS.

41. That application for an exchange under the 44th section of the act, may be either included in an original petition for sale, or made by supplemental petition, referring to the former petition, and to the proceedings thereon.

42. That the costs properly incurred in proceedings for exchange or division shall be borne in such proportions as the Commissioners shall direct, having regard to any special agreement between the parties; and the amount paid by any owner having a limited interest, shall be a charge in his favour, upon the inheritance or whole interest in the lands allotted to him.

PRACTICE.

43. That every attorney who appears for any party, shall enter his name and address in a book, to be kept in the office for that purpose; and every change of attorney or address shall be entered in the same manner.

44. That every person making an application to the Commissioners shall enter an address in Great Britain or Ireland, to which all notices or orders to him may be sent, and may change the same from time to time; and that any notice or order which may require to be served in any matter shall be lodged with such of the officers of the court as the Commissioners shall appoint for that purpose, and shall be served in manner hereinafter mentioned, through the office of such officer, unless the court, or a Commissioner, when sitting alone upon any matter referred to him, shall otherwise order; and such notice or order may be transmitted by the post, by the clerk or officer so to be appointed for that purpose; and the certificate of such clerk or officer, of the sending by post of such notice or order, shall be sufficient proof that such notice or order was duly served at the time when the same would reach the said address in the ordinary course of the post.

45. That whenever a notice or order shall be lodged in the notice office, for the purpose of being served, the person lodging the same shall at the same time bring in and lodge as many copies of such notice or order as such person shall require to be served, and shall also at the same time bring in and lodge in the office as many covers or envelopes, with a sufficient postage stamp affixed on each, as may be necessary for the purpose of transmitting such copies free by post; and upon which envelopes or covers shall be legibly written by the party bringing in the same, the address of the parties respectively on whom such copies are to be served; and it shall be the duty of the officer to compare such copies with the notice, and to correct the same when necessary, and also to compare the address on each cover or envelope with the address mentioned at the foot of such original notice, and to see that the same is correct. And that all notices to be served through the notice shall be lodged in such office before the hour of two o'clock on the day upon which it is required that the same shall be sent; and that the notice clerk himself, or some other of the sworn clerks of the court, shall deliver into the General Post-Office copies of the different notices, properly addressed, as before mentioned, previous to the usual time for closing the post-office for receipt of letters to be despatched by the evening mail of that day; and such clerk shall enter in a book, to be kept for that purpose, a memorandum or minute of his having posted such notices, and there shall be endorsed at the foot or on the back of every notice or order that shall be brought into the notice office, the name and address of every person upon whom it is required that such notice or order shall be served, and if an attorney, the name of the party for whom he is concerned.

46. That when ever the Commissioners shall appoint any person to act in the nature of guardian, or next friend, to protect the rights of any infant, idiot, lunatic, or married woman, in any matter depending before them, the order made by the Commissioners to that effect shall be served upon such person, and all notices and orders subsequently served upon such person shall be deemed to have been duly served upon the party whose interests such person has been so appointed to protect. But it shall be competent for any person interested, or claiming to be interested, to apply to the Commissioners to rescind or vary the order appointing such guardian, or next friend, or to have some other person appointed in his place.

47. That when any person claiming to be interested shall desire to be served with notice of the proceedings in any matter he shall be at liberty to enter an appearance in the form or to the effect following:—

"C. D. appears in this matter [stating the title of the matter], for the purpose of being served with notice of all proceedings therein.

"Dated this day of 184 ."
And which notice must be signed by the party himself, or his attorney, and some place stated therein where notices are to be served on him, or on his attorney; and thereupon the party entering such appearance shall be entitled, unless the court shall think fit otherwise to direct, to be served with notice of all proceedings in the matter, and to appear thereon, until he shall, by notice declare that he withdraws such appearance; but the costs occasioned by entering such appearance, shall be paid by the party entering the same, unless the court shall otherwise direct.

48. That the Commissioners, or one of them, shall in the first week of each month, from November to August, inclusive, examine the state of each matter, and the proceedings which may have taken place since such last examination; and if any matter shall appear not to have been prosecuted with due diligence, they shall require the party lodging the carriage thereof to explain the reason of such neglect or delay, and if such reason shall not appear satisfactory they shall be at liberty to order the carriage of such matter to be transferred to some other party interested in such matter, who shall undertake to prosecute the same with due diligence and shall order the costs occasioned by such transfer to be paid by the party guilty of such delay, and shall order all such papers and documents relating to the proceedings in such matter, which were in the custody, power, or procurement of the petitioner, or party having the carriage of the proceeding or his attorney to be handed over to such other party, or lodged in court, as the Commissioners shall direct; and no petition shall be withdrawn or dismissed without the leave of the Commissioners.

49. That every petitioner shall be at liberty, once in order shall be made upon his petition, to amend the same, as often as he may be advised; but after any order shall be made upon the petition no other amendment shall be made on any petition, without the leave of the court; and all cases of amendment, the material facts, the subject matter of the amendment so sought to be made, shall be verified by affidavit.

50. That any party introducing any scandalous, prolix, or irrelevant matter into any petition, affidavit, or other document, shall pay the costs incident to such misconduct, and all such scandalous, prolix, and impertinent matter shall be expunged at the expense of such party.

EXAMINATION.

51. That all examinations before the Commissioners or one of them upon reference to a single Commissioner, or before any examiner, shall be viâ voce, unless the Commissioner in any special case shall otherwise direct.

52. That whenever any witness shall be examined otherwise than viâ voce, he shall be examined upon interrogatories which shall be previously lodged in the office two days prior to such examination, and copies of which interrogatories may be taken out by all parties; but in case of emergency, the Commissioners, or one of them, may certify that the party examining should not be required to wait for two days after the lodging of his interrogatories, before commencing such examination, and in that case the examination may be proceeded with at such time as the Commissioners, or one of them, shall certify to be proper; and when an examination shall take place out of Dublin, the party examining shall not be precluded from lodging with the examiner additional interrogatories, and examining the witnesses thereto, in case any matter shall come to the knowledge of such party or his attorney, subsequent to his lodging his interrogatories originally in the office, but in such case the party or his attorney must make an affidavit to account for his not having lodged such additional interrogatories originally in the office, and such party shall be bound to furnish a full and true copy of such additional interrogatories to the opposite party at or prior to his lodging the same with the examiner. But this rule shall not extend to cross-interrogatories or to the cross-examination of witnesses; and it shall not be considered necessary to lodge at the office, or to furnish copies to the opposite party, of cross-interrogatories to be exhibited to witnesses.

53. That all witnesses examined, whether in Great Britain or Ireland, who shall not be examined viâ voce, shall be examined by such of the officers of the court as the Commissioners shall appoint for that purpose, and with respect to all examinations that shall take place more than ten statute miles from the General Post Office, Dublin, the officer performing that duty shall receive, for each day upon which he shall be actually engaged on that duty, such sum (in addition to his yearly salary) as the Commissioners of Her Majesty's Treasury shall allow, and also his actual travelling charges, not including any allowance for his support, such allowance and charges to be ascertained before the Commissioners, upon the oath of the officer, and to be included amongst the incidental charges and expenses of the court, in each quarterly account returned to the Commissioners of Her Majesty's Treasury. And it shall be competent for such person as the Commissioners shall so appoint for the examination of parties or witnesses, to administer all necessary oaths to such parties and witnesses. But in no case shall it be necessary to issue any Commission for the examination of parties or witnesses to the person so authorized to act as examiner.

54. That when a party or witness shall be examined out of Dublin, it shall be the duty of the examiner to be at the place appointed for the examination of such party or witness, at the hour of eleven o'clock in the forenoon, at the latest, on each day, and to be then ready to proceed with such examination, and to continue in the discharge of such duty till four o'clock in the afternoon; and in case such examination shall not have been commenced at eleven o'clock, and continued till four o'clock, each day, such examiner shall state, on the dominical to be returned by him, by whose delay or default it was that such examination was not so commenced or continued.

55. That all examiners shall take down the depositions of parties and witnesses in the first person, and no party or witness shall be examined in Dublin, except before the Commissioners, or one of them, or at the usual public office of the examiner, unless the Commissioners, or one of them, shall certify that such examination may be had at some other place, to be mentioned in such certificate.

56. That the Commissioners, if they shall think fit, on the application of any party, shall make an order for the examination of any witness out of Great Britain and Ireland, before a person to be mentioned in such order, and the expenses of such order and of executing the same shall be in the discretion of the Commissioners; and the examination and cross-examination of such witness shall be subject to the rules applicable to the examination of a witness in Great Britain or Ireland, unless the Commissioners shall otherwise direct.

57. That prior to any examination the Commissioners, or one of them, shall certify the day when publication shall pass, and unless the time so appointed for passing publication shall be enlarged by the Commissioners, or one of them, publication shall pass on that day.

58. That all parties claiming to be interested, in any matter before the Commissioners, and all witnesses, shall be bound to answer all lawful questions; and in the event of such parties or witnesses not fully or fairly answering the same, whether upon vind voce examination, or upon interrogatories, shall be deemed guilty of a contempt of court.

59. That the examiner shall, at the instance of any party, sign a notice specifying the time and place when and where such examination shall be held, which notice shall be duly served on the opposite party, seven days at least before the day named for commencing the examination, if in Ireland, and fourteen days before commencing the examination, out of Ireland.

60. That all interrogatories shall be conveniently distinguished and numbered, and a copy of all direct interrogatories shall be left with the examiner two days before they shall be administered to any witness.

61. That at least four days before the direct examination of any witness by either party, a notice shall be duly served on the opposite party, describing such witness by name, place of residence, and addition, and specifying, by the numbers thereof, the interrogatories which are to be administered to such witness; and the interrogatories to be administered for the cross-examination of any witness shall be confined to matters affecting the credit of such witness, or tending to discredit, to explain, or to qualify the evidence which he may have given on his direct examination; but it shall be competent for a party cross-examining a witness, to administer direct interrogatories also to such witness, in like manner, and subject to such rules, as if such witness had been originally produced by him.

62. That any party interested in any matter shall be at liberty to examine any other party interested therein upon such personal interrogatories as the Commissioners, or one of them, shall approve of, and such examination shall take place within such time as the Commissioners, or one of them, shall appoint; and the examination of any party on personal interrogatories shall be conducted in the same manner as the examination of a witness before an examiner.

AFFIDAVITS.

63. That whenever any affidavit shall be made before the Commissioners, or any of them, or before any of their officers whom they shall authorize to take the same, such affidavit or affirmation shall not be returned to the party, but shall be filed in the proper office of the court.

64. That no affidavit shall be received in which there shall appear to be either interlineation or erasure, unless such interlineation or erasure be noticed in the jurat of such affidavit; and the time when, and the place where, every affidavit is sworn, shall be stated in the jurat thereof.

65. That every affidavit to be made elsewhere than in the City of Dublin shall be folded up in a proper cover, and sealed by the person before whom such affidavit shall be sworn, with his seal, and endorsed and signed by him on the outside, in manner following:—

In the matter of the estate of
A. B., owner, &c., [as the } The affidavit of X. Y., sworn case may be.] before me on this day of M. N. [stating what character the person taking the affidavit fills—such as Master Extraordinary, or Commissioner for taking Affidavits for the Court of Chancery, &c.]

And such cover shall not be opened, or the seal broken until the same shall be delivered to the proper officer of the court; but it shall be competent for the party making such affidavit to transmit the same by post, addressed to the secretary, first paying the postage thereof.

66. That all affidavits, answers, and all other proceedings that could be read and relied upon in any of the Superior Courts of Law and Equity, may be read and relied upon before the Commissioners, subject to all just exceptions; and that copies thereof, purporting to be attested by the proper officer, shall be considered as prima facie evidence thereof.

67. That the Commissioners shall not be bound to reject any affidavit, by reason of any irregularity in the heading or the jurat thereof, or by reason of non-compliance with any of the preceding rules.

ORDERS.

68. That whenever a party served with a conditional order shall file an affidavit, or rely on any other matter as cause against such order, and shall give notice thereof, and the party obtaining such conditional order, shall not, within the time specified in such conditional order, or within four days after the expiration thereof, serve notice of motion to make the same absolute, the party opposing such order shall be entitled to have an office rule entered, allowing the cause shown as an authority for taxing the costs of resisting such conditional order; and such costs shall be taxed accordingly: and upon the entering such office rule, and not before, the cause shall be deemed to be allowed.

69. That in case of disobedience of any order made by the Commissioners, a writ of attachment, in the form to be hereafter settled by them, shall issue against the party so in default or disobeying the order of the court; and all sheriffs and other officers charged with the execution of like writs, issuing out of the Court of Chancery in Ireland, shall be bound duly to execute the same.

70. That the Commissioners shall, in case they think fit, in order to enforce obedience to their orders, cause a writ of sequestration to issue against any party in default, such writ to be in the form to be hereafter approved of by the Commissioners; and such writ of sequestration shall be executed in like manner as writs of sequestration issuing out of the Court of Chancery in Ireland may now be executed.

COSTS.

71. That all costs incurred in proceedings before the Commissioners, or in relation thereto, shall be taxable upon the requisition of any party (without any order referring the same for taxation) by such officer of the court as the Commissioners shall from time to time appoint for that purpose; and it shall be the duty of such officer, if any difficulty shall arise upon the taxation of such costs, to consult the Commissioners, or one of them, in regard thereto. And it shall be lawful for any party dissatisfied with such taxation, to apply to the Commissioners by way of appeal from such taxation. But unless notice of such application shall be lodged for service within two days after such costs shall be certified by the officer appointed to tax the same, the taxation thereof shall be conclusive upon all parties, unless the Commissioners, upon special grounds, shall otherwise order.

72. That the officer appointed to tax costs, shall be at liberty to tax costs incurred in proceedings before the Commissioners, or in relation thereto, between attorney and client, without any rule or order for that purpose, and it shall be his duty so to do, upon the requisition of the client.

73. That in all cases of costs, whether between party and party, or attorney and client, it shall be competent for the party against whom such costs are claimed, to offer by notice a sum in gross in lieu of such costs. And if the party entitled to such costs shall agree to accept of such sum, the officer appointed for the taxation of costs shall certify the sum specified in such notice, as the sum to which he has ascertained such costs; but in case the party entitled to such costs shall refuse to agree to such notice, and shall thereby render it necessary to have such costs taxed, and the same shall be taxed to less than the sum so offered by such notice, the party entitled to such costs shall be charged with the expenses of such taxation, and the same shall be ascertained by the officer and deducted from the amount of such costs, or an office rule may be obtained for the payment of the same, in case the sum due on such costs shall not be sufficient to cover the amount of such expenses.

74. That in any case in which the court shall award costs to any party, it shall be optional with the court, either to refer the costs to be taxed, or by the order to direct payment of a sum in gross in lieu of taxed costs, and also to direct by, and to whom, such sum in gross shall be paid.

75. That in any case in which costs are directed to be paid by any order, and the same shall be subsequently taxed or ascertained, the party entitled to such costs may, upon production of the said order, and the officer's certificate of the amount thereof, have an office rule entered for the payment of the same.

76. That all bills of costs, whether between attorney and client, or party and party, when taxed, shall be retained in the office; and at the end of every term, all such bills of costs taxed since the previous term, shall be bound up in one or more volumes, with proper indexes, and to that end the costs for taxation shall be written on post paper, book-wise, with a sufficient margin; and in taxing any subsequent costs in the same cause or matter, regard shall be had to the preceding bills, so as to ascertain that none of the items charged were included in any previous bill; but no inspection shall be given of any bills of costs lodged in the office between attorney and client, except to the attorney or client, or their respective agents, without the special order of the court.

77. That on the taxation of costs, no sum shall be allowed for the attendance of counsel, on a reference before a Commissioner, unless such Commissioner shall have entered in his book his approbation of the attendance of such counsel.

MONEY AND STOCK.

78. That when any stock shall stand in the Bank of Ireland, to the credit of the Commissioners, the Governor and Company of the Bank of Ireland shall from time to time receive the dividends arising therefrom, and furnish to the Commissioners a schedule signed by the proper officer of the Bank of Ireland, containing all sums of money received by them for such dividends, specifying in what matter and account each sum is received.

79. That the Governor and Company of the Bank of Ireland shall not transfer stock, or pay money, standing to the credit of any matter, without an order of the court, under their seal, and signed by two of the Commissioners.

80. That in order to provide against the accumulation of accounts for sums under six-pence, in all cases where a fractional part of six-pence may occur in dividing sums in cash or stock, or may remain, after payment out of all other funds, as the sole balance, the Commissioners may pay or transfer the same, not exceeding six-pence, to the parties in such manner as shall appear most convenient for closing finally such account; and that where an allocation or order shall be made for any fraction under one penny, the Commissioners may draw without regard to such fraction.

81. That in any case in which an order shall direct the dividends of stock to be invested from time to time, the officer of the court shall give a schedule and notice thereof to the broker, who shall accordingly invest such dividends at the end of each half year, deducting therefrom his lawful commission; and thereupon the Commissioners shall draw in favour of such broker for the sum so invested.

82. That the broker, in figuring valuations of stock under any money order, shall not charge more than five shillings for the first valuation, and two shillings for every subsequent valuation; and shall, on the first day of January, and first day of July, in every year, certify to the Commissioners what has been received by him for such valuations during the preceding six months.

83. That in any case in which any stock shall have been allocated to, and afterwards ordered to be transferred to any person, the Commissioners shall draw in his favour for the dividends (if any) received, subsequent to such allocation.

84. That whenever any order shall be made for the purchase of stock with money standing to the credit of the Commissioners, the price shall not be paid to the broker until he shall have transferred to the Commissioners, stock equal in value to the money to be invested, deducting his lawful commission, and shall have produced the certificate of the proper officer of the Bank of Ireland to that effect, unless the Commissioners shall, under special circumstances, otherwise direct.

85. That whenever an order shall be made for the sale of stock standing in the names of the Commissioners, the same shall not be transferred until the broker shall have lodged in bank, to the credit of the Commissioners, the price thereof, deducting his lawful commission, and shall have produced the certificate of the proper officer of the Bank of Ireland to that effect, unless the Commissioners shall, under special circumstances, otherwise direct.

SCHEDULE OF FEES.

	s.	d.
Instructions to Proceed	...	6 8
Instructions for Affidavit	...	6 8
Instructions for Affidavit to verify Undisputed Claim	...	6 8
Term Fee for Party having the Carriage of the Suit, or for the Owner, only once	...	21 0
Entering an Appearance, and all Attendance in relation thereto	...	6 8
Term Fee for other Parties, only once	...	6 8
Writing Letter, Signing, and Entry	...	3 4
If several of the same Import, in Nature of a Circular, for the First	...	3 4
For each subsequent one, or Copy	...	1 0
Reading Letter containing Instructions	...	2 6
Signing any Document requiring Signature	...	3 4
Attending on Client not exceeding One Hour	...	6 8
For each subsequent Hour	...	6 8
For each Day Cause or Motion in Day List, and not at Hearing	...	6 8
Each Day it is at Hearing	...	12 4
[Not to be allowed unless a competent person attends, acquainted with the facts and proceedings in the Cause, and having the proper documents in readiness.]
Fee on each Office Rule	...	3 4
Filing a Notice Order, or Marking the Names of the Parties on whom it is to be Served, and attending with it at the Notice Office	...	3 4

each Copy, including Postage Stamp and Envelope directed ...	1 0
Attendance on Counsel, with Brief or Case ...	6 8
all Attendances to Lodge Money in Bank, including the procuring of the Order and returning the Receipt to Court ...	20 0
Drawing Money, obtaining Order, and returning Receipt ...	20 0
Appointment of New Solicitor for Reading Documents, Proceedings, and Rules ...	20 0
Writing and Abstracting Deeds Preparatory to Drawing Statement of Title, for each Skin of Fifteen Office Sheets of Ninety words each ...	3 0
concluding Fraction of a Skin ...	3 0 any Document to be Filed in Court, not otherwise provided for, per Skin ...	15 0 last Fraction to be deemed a Skin
Copy of any Document or Statement of Title, under Six Folios of Ninety Words each ...	1 6
each succeeding Folio of Ninety Words ...	0 8
the Solicitor who obtains any Order of Court, being out same, Attendance included ...	6 8
Petition for Sale, Exchange, &c., and copy thereof ...	42 0 not lodged therewith, per Folio ...	0 8
rules attached to Petition; for each Denomination of Land Incumbrance or Lease ...	2 0 additional charge to be allowed for any amendment that may be made in Abstract or Petition.]
my Claim of Lease or Agreement on behalf of Tenant, including Attendance ...	20 0
Copy of Lease or Agreement, Signed by Tenant, per Folio ...	0 8
Preparing Schedule of Incumbrances, after Abate Order for Sale, for each Incumbrance ...	5 0
Preparing Copy of Advertisement ...	6 8
each Newspaper in which same is inserted, exclusive of Charges by Proprietor of Newspaper ...	3 4 of Costs, each Item ...	0 1
riding on Taxation, including Perusal and Instructions, each Item ...	0 1 of Brief for Counsel, per Folio of Ninety words ...	0 8
e of Examination of each Witness ...	6 8
ding on Witness in Town ...	6 8
ding with Witness to Examination ...	6 8
each in the Registry Office for each Head denomination of land, for each Ten years, or fraction of Ten Years ...	6 8
a Search, for each Person searched against, for Ten Years, or fraction of Ten Years ...	6 8
every Negative Search by Officer ...	12 6
Requisition for Search, per Folio of Ninety words ...	1 0 like fees for searches in any public office, when directed by the Court.]
ng Deed of Conveyance, per Skin ...	15 0
wing same, per Skin ...	15 0 ch skin to contain fifteen folios of ninety words each.]
any business not specified above, the same Fee allowed for similar business in the Court of ancery.
above Fees are to be exclusive of all Disbursements, except for Clerks, Stationery, and Scribes' Work.
Preparation of Documents, Fees to Counsel when on Perusing and Settling Draft Petition, Interrogatories, Cross Interrogatories, and Consequence.
mitted to the Privy Council for their approbation, number 18, 1849.

S. WOLFE FLANAGAN, Sec.

FORMS AND DIRECTIONS

Petitions shall be addressed to "The Commissioners for sale of Incumbered Estates in Ireland," and shall be entitled to the effect following:—

"In the matter of the estate of A. B. of [naming the owner.]"

And shall commence as follows:—

"The petition of J. D. of an owner of land [or an incumbrancer on land, as the case may be.]"

And all subsequent proceedings shall be entitled to the effect following:—

"In the matter of the estate of A. B., owner and petitioner [or in the matter of the estate of A. B. owner, and of E. F. petitioner, as the case may be.]"

But in case of the death, or transmission, or change of interest, of such owner or petitioner, the name of the person in regard to whom such proceedings shall be continued in place and stead of such original party, shall also be stated in the title of all such subsequent proceedings in the manner or to the effect following:—

"In the matter of the estate of A. B., owner and petitioner, now deceased [or otherwise as the case may be] and of C. D. [stating his character in reference to the original party, whether heir, devisee, or personal representative, assignee, &c.]" or otherwise:—

"In the matter of the estate of A. B., owner, and of C. D. petitioner, now deceased [or otherwise as the case may be,] and of E. F. [stating his character in reference to the original petitioner, as the case may be.]"

And in case of the death, or transmission, or change of interest, of such added party; then substituting for such firstly added party, the name of the new party in regard to whom such proceedings shall be still continued.

Any party presenting a petition shall be bound to bring in, and lodge at the same time, a fair copy of such petition, for the use of the court.

If a petition is signed by counsel, it will be his duty to see that the petition and schedules are justified by the abstract, and that the abstract is drawn in a fair and concise form. No costs will be allowed, without the special order of the Commissioners, for any amendment to the petition, schedules, or abstract; but if such amendments shall be made by a different attorney, he shall be allowed his reasonable costs, which shall be deducted from the costs allowed to the attorney for preparing the petition and abstract, unless the Commissioners shall otherwise direct. If the party who presents the petition gives the secretary, at the same time, a stamped envelope, entitled in the matter, and addressed to himself, he will receive notice when the petition is filed, and may thus avoid the trouble of calling at the office.

In every petition, the petitioner shall state whether he knows, or has reason to suppose that any person interested in the premises to which the petition relates, is an infant, idiot, lunatic, or married woman; and if so, he shall state, so far as he is able, the names and addresses of the guardian or committees of the estate and person, or husband, of any such person.

Form.—Petition for sale by an owner.

In the matter of the Estate of William Howard, of Ballinderry, in the co. of Cork.

To the Commissioners for Sale of Incumbered Estates in Ireland.

The petition of William Howard, an owner of land. Showeth,

That he is owner, as tenant in fee, of the premises described in the first part of the first schedule hereunto annexed, under the title set forth in the abstract accompanying this petition, and that he is in possession and receipt of the rents and profits of the whole thereof, under his said title, since the 1st of January, 1835.

That he is owner, as tenant for his life, of the premises described in the second part of the first schedule hereunto annexed, under the title set forth in the abstract accompanying this petition; and that on the 15th of June, 1830, he entered into possession and receipt of the rents and profits thereof, and is still in receipt of the rents and profits of every portion thereof, except the lands of Ballintoye and Garranebeg.

That William Johnson, of the city of Dublin, entered into receipt of the rents and profits of Ballintoye, under an elegit, on the 30th of April, 1844, and has continued in the receipt thereof to this date; and that George Symons entered into receipt of the rents and profits of Garranebeg on the 5th of March, 1845, under the mortgage in the abstract stated, bearing date the 11th of May, 1849, and is still in receipt thereof.

That the said premises are subject to the several incumbrances set forth in the second schedule hereunto annexed, and that there is not any suit or matter depending in any court of equity in relation to the premises, or any part thereof, or in relation to the receipt of the rents and profits thereof.

Your Petitioner therefore prays that the premises, or such part thereof as the Commissioners shall direct, may be sold, and that the petitioner may have such further relief in the premises as to the Commissioners shall seem meet. The petition shall contain a schedule of the property of which a sale is sought, stating—

- 1st. The denominations of the land, or in the case of incorporeal hereditaments, a full and complete description thereof.
- 2nd. The head-rent or quit-rent, if any, to which the property or any part thereof is liable, and the gale days, and if held by lease the particulars thereof and the gale days, and if held by lease in perpetuity the circumstances of the property in regard to renewals.
- 3rd. The arrears, if any, of head-rent or quit-rent, due up to and including the last gale-day.
- 4th. The tenants' names.
- 5th. The date and description of the instrument, if any, under which each tenant holds, and the tenure of each tenant, and whether any timber or trees on the land belong to the tenant, or are claimed by him.
- 6th. The extent and description of each holding or farm.
- 7th. The annual rent.
- 8th. The gale-days.
- 9th. The arrears due up to last gale-day inclusive.
- 10th. Observations, relating for example to the character and capabilities of the estate proposed to be sold, to the liability of the estate to any arrear of tithe rent-charge, or to any charge for money borrowed under the acts for promoting the drainage of lands and the improvement of navigation and water-power, in connexion with such drainage; or the act to facilitate the improvement of landed property in Ireland, or imposed thereon under the provisions of the labour rate acts, and the acts for the relief of the poor; or to any other special matter affecting the circumstances of the premises proposed to be sold, and the charges affecting the same.

It shall also contain a schedule of all charges and incumbrances, whatever, affecting the premises, and each and every part thereof, specifying—

- 1st. The date of each incumbrance.
- 2nd. The name of the party entitled to the same.
- 3rd. The manner in which such charge was created, whether by will, settlement or mortgage, judgment or otherwise.
- 4th. The sum due for principal on each incumbrance.
- 5th. The annual rate of interest payable in respect of each charge or incumbrance; the day or days of payment of the same, if there be any specially appointed for that purpose; and the amount due for interest up to some certain day to be named in the petition; or in the case of an annuity, the arrears up to and including the gale-day next before the presenting of the petition.
- 6th. Any special circumstances, such, for example, as any proviso respecting the rate of interest, or the terms on which an incumbrance may be paid off, or an annuity redeemed, or any exemption of a portion of the premises from the whole or any portion of the incumbrance, or the liability of any other property, or of any person, to pay any incumbrance, whether in exoneration of the premises or otherwise, distinguishing whether the estate proposed to be sold is primarily liable to the incumbrance or only by way of guarantee-ship or suretyship.

The petition shall be accompanied by a concise abstract of the title to the premises, and by an affidavit by the petitioner or his attorney, that he has read the petition, including the schedules, and also the abstract of title accompanying the same, and that he believes the said petition and schedules to be true, and that he believes the abstract to be a correct and fair abstract of petitioner's title.

The deponent must sign the petition and each schedule, and the abstract of title.

Form.—Petition for Sale by an Incumbrancer.
In the Matter of the Estate of William Howard, of Ballinderry, in the co. of } To the Commissioners for Sale of Incumbered Estates in Ireland.

Cork.
 The Petition of James Johnson, an Incumbrancer of the Showeth,—That on the 17th of December, 1830, James Howard, of Ballinderry, in the county of Cork, Merchant, since deceased, conveyed the lands mentioned in the last schedule hereto, in fee to one Henry Dillon and his heirs, by way of mortgage, to secure the sum of £10,000 with interest, at the rate of 5 per cent. per annum payable the 1st of March, and 29th of September.

That the said James Howard had such an estate or power over the premises as enabled him to execute the said mortgage.

That your petitioner is now the owner of the said mortgage, as appears by the abstract of title herewith lodged. That William Howard, of Ballinderry, is now the owner of said lands, as tenant for life thereof.

That on the 5th of May, 1838, one John M'Namara filed his bill in the Court of Chancery in Ireland (among other purposes) to recover a certain charge of £5,000 due on the premises, and to which the said John M'Namara claims to be entitled.

That a receiver in said cause is now in the receipt of the rents and profits of the premises, except the lands of Ballinderry, which are in the possession of the said William Howard.

That a decree to account in the said cause was pronounced on the 16th of June, 1843, a copy of which is annexed hereto.

That the Master in the said cause made his report, bearing date the 3rd of August, 1847, a copy of which is annexed hereto.

That the said report was confirmed, and a decree pronounced in the said cause on the 18th of November, 1847, a copy of which is annexed hereto, and that no person is known to object to the said decree and report.

That the sum of £12,500 is now due on foot of the said mortgage, together with interest, since the 29th of September, 1849, the gale day up to which interest is computed.

That your petitioner is not the first incumbrancer on the said premises, and that he has in a schedule hereto annexed set forth the other incumbrances affecting the premises, and in whom the same are vested according to the best of his knowledge, information, and belief.

Your petitioner prays that the premises or a competent part thereof, for the discharge of the incumbrances affecting the same may be sold, and that your petitioner may have such further relief in relation to the matters above said, as to the Commissioners shall seem meet.

To this petition must be annexed a schedule of the lands proposed to be sold, which shall be in the same form as the schedule to a petition by an owner, so far as the information of the petitioner shall enable him to give the same; and also a schedule of the incumbrances affecting the premises, so far as petitioner is acquainted with the same, and copies of all decrees and reports made in the pending suit in Chancery. The petition must be accompanied by an abstract of petitioner's title, and by an affidavit by petitioner or his solicitor, that he has read the said petition, and schedules, and abstract, and that the petition, including the schedules, is true to the best of deponent's knowledge, information, and belief; and that he believes the abstract to be a fair and true abstract.

The deponent must sign the petition and each schedule, and the abstracts of title.

Where an application for a sale of any land or lease has been dismissed with costs by a competent tribunal, ap-application by the same party for a sale of such land or lease, or any part thereof, he shall, by his petition, state that such costs have been paid, and when, and to whom, and verify such statement by affidavit.

That every petition for sale, whether by an owner or incumbrancer, shall state whether there is any suit or matter depending in any court of equity in relation to the premises or any part thereof; or in relation to the receipt of the rents and profits thereof; and if there be any such suit or matter, it shall state in what court such suit or matter is depending, and a short description of the title thereof, and to what state such suit or matter has reached, and what declarations, inquiries, or proofs have been made under any decree or order in such suit or matter, and whether the petitioner, or any other person to his knowledge, objects to the decree or to any finding or proof under it, as erroneous or proper to be reconsidered.

In case an agreement by private contract for sale of any portion of the lands of which a sale is sought by petition, shall be entered into with any person before the premises are set up to auction, the parties shall be at liberty to apply by motion to the Commissioners that such sale shall be confirmed, and a conveyance executed to the purchaser; such motion shall be grounded on an affidavit by the party making the application, showing that such sale would be beneficial to the parties, and stating that no consideration has been directly or indirectly given or agreed to be given for the premises, except the purchase-money stated in such affidavit.

In setting forth the schedules of tenancies, leases, agreements for leases, and incumbrances, the owner shall include all such as he knows or believes to be claimed by any person, although he may dispute the validity of such claim; and in the column of observations, he may state how far he disputes such claim.

In preparing an abstract of title, either to land or to an incumbrance, accompanying a petition by an owner or incumbrancer, it is not necessary to go back earlier than the earliest deed creating an incumbrance still affecting the premises. But as a perfect abstract of title will be required in the course of the proceedings, it may in some cases expedite the distribution of the purchase-money if a complete abstract is presented in the first instance. This is left to the discretion of the petitioner.

The attorney presenting a petition for an incumbrancer, ought to be prepared with the documents showing the existence of the incumbrance and of petitioner's title thereto, as the Commissioners may require to inspect them, before filing the petition under rule.

Form.—Petition for partition, under 43rd section, before sale.

In the matter of the Estate of Jacob Dixon, of &c., Esq., late an Owner of Land.

To the Commissioners for the Sale of Incumbered Estates in Ireland.

The petition of Jacob Dixon, of &c., Esq., an owner of land, Showeth,

That James M'Cann, of &c., gentleman, did, on the 28th day of May last, present his petition in this court, in the above matter, praying for a sale of one undivided moiety of certain lands and premises in such petition mentioned or referred to, of which moiety your now petitioner is the owner, and the matter of the said petition is still pending, and no sale has been made under the said petition.

That Sarah Bright, of &c., spinster, and Jane Dickins, of &c., widow, are the owners of the other moiety of the said premises, the said Sarah Bright being entitled to one-fourth part of such moiety, and the said Jane Dickins to three-fourth parts thereof.

That the said Sarah Bright has been found a lunatic by inquisition, and Thomas Bright, of &c., gentleman, is the committee of her estate, and M^r. Allen, of &c., Esq., is committee of her person.

That your petitioner believes that the said Jane Dickins is tenant for her life only of her said shares, but your petitioner has not been able to learn how such estate was created, or who is entitled in remainder.

That your petitioner is desirous that a partition should be made of the said premises before proceeding to a sale of his moiety thereof.

Your petitioner therefore prays that a partition may be made of the premises mentioned in the said petition for sale, and that your petitioner may have such further and other relief in relation to the matters aforesaid, as to the Commissioners shall seem meet.

Form.—Petition for partition under 43rd section, after sale and conveyance.

In the matter of the Estate of Jacob Dixon, of &c., Esq., late an Owner of land, and of Samuel Green, of &c., Esq., a Purchaser of such land.

To the Commissioners for the Sale of Incumbered Estates in Ireland.

The petition of Samuel Green, of &c., Esq., an owner of land, Showeth,

That James M'Cann, of &c., gentleman, did, on the 28th day of May last, present his petition in this court, "In the matter of the estate of Jacob Dixon, of &c., Esq.," praying for a sale of one undivided moiety of certain premises, including the lands and premises mentioned in the schedule herunto annexed; and that such proceedings were had in the matter, that on the 30th day of August last, two of the Commissioners duly conveyed one undivided moiety of the premises mentioned in the schedule hereto unto your petitioner, his heirs and assigns for ever.

That the other moiety of the said premises is vested in fee in John Taylor, of &c., Esq., and Richard Smyth, of &c., merchant, as trustees of the will of Thomas M'Mahon, of &c., brewer, deceased, upon trust to pay certain annuities to A. B. and C. D., and subject thereto upon certain trusts under which the children of the said Thomas M'Mahon are interested.

Your petitioner therefore prays that a partition may be made of the premises mentioned in the schedule hereto, and that your petitioner may have such further and other relief in relation to the matters aforesaid, as to the Commissioners may seem meet.

Schedule of lands intended to be partitioned, specifying the denominations and head rent (if any) and the tenancies.

If the purchaser has mortgaged, settled, or otherwise dealt with the property, there should be an abstract of his title.

The purchaser may petition for a partition before he has obtained his conveyance, in which case he may, if convenient, describe the lands by reference to the order for sale.

Form.—Petition for partition, under the 45th section.

In the matter of the Estate of John Jones, of &c., farmer; Wm. Blake, of &c., bookseller; and Jane, the wife of Ar. Daly, of &c., innkeeper, Owners of land.

To the Commissioners for Sale of Incumbered Estates in Ireland.

The petition of John Jones, of &c., farmer; Wm. Blake, of &c., bookseller; and Jane, the wife of Ar. Daly, of &c., innkeeper, owners of land, Showeth,

That your petitioners are the owners of the lands and premises mentioned in the first schedule herunto annexed, which are held for an estate in fee-simple, subject to an annual quit rent of £2 16s. 8d., payable to the crown.

That your petitioner, John Jones, is the owner of seven equal sixteenth parts of the said premises, in the following manner, that is to say, he is entitled in fee-simple to four of such parts, and he is tenant for his life of the remaining three of such parts, with remainder to such of his children as shall be living at his decease, equally as tenants in common in fee, as by the abstract of title lodged herewith by the said John Jones more fully appears.

That your petitioners, Wm. Blake, and Sarah, his wife, formerly Sarah Jones, spinster, in right of the said Sarah Blake, are entitled in fee-simple to one equal sixteenth part of the said premises, as appears by the abstract of title lodged herewith by the said Wm. Blake.

That no settlement was ever made of the said share of the said Sarah Blake.

That your petitioner, Jane Daly, is entitled for her life and during her present coverture, for her separate use to one moiety or eight equal sixteenth parts of the said premises, the said Jane Daly being so entitled under the settlement made upon her marriage with Ar. Daly, bearing date the 23rd day of July, 1827, whereby the said last-mentioned parts (which were the property of your petitioner, Jane Daly, then Jane Jones, spinster), were vested in certain trustees upon trust, during the joint lives of your petitioner Jane Daly and her said husband, for your petitioner, Jane Daly, for her separate use, with power of anticipation. And upon further trust for the survivor of your said petitioner and her said husband during her or his life. And upon trust after decease of your said petitioner and her said husband, to sell the said shares and hold the proceeds thereof upon trust, for such of the children of your petitioner, Jane Daly, as being sons should attain the age of twenty-one years, or being daughters should attain that age or marry, as by the abstract of title lodged herewith by the said Jane Daly more fully appears.

That your petitioners are desirous to effect a partition of the said premises, and have proposed that such partition should be made on the following terms (that is to say), that the premises mentioned in the first denomination of the said schedule, subject to the quit-rent of 14s. 3d., should be allotted in respect of the four-sixteenth parts whereof your petitioner John Jones is seized in fee; that the premises mentioned in the second denomination of the same schedule, subject to the quit-rent of 10s. 7½d., should be allotted in respect of the three-sixteenth parts, whereof your petitioner John Jones is tenant for life. That the premises mentioned in the third denomination of the same schedule, subject to the quit-rent of 3s. 6½d., should be allotted in respect of the one-sixteenth part of your petitioner William Blake and Sarah his wife; and that the premises mentioned in the fourth denomination of the same schedule, subject to the quit-rent of £1 8s. 4d., should be allotted in respect of the eight-sixteenth parts settled for the benefit of your petitioner Jane Daly and her husband and children.

Your petitioners therefore believing that such partition will be beneficial to all persons interested in the premises, pray that a partition may be made of the said premises according to the terms aforesaid, and that your petitioners may have such further and other relief in relation to the matters aforesaid, as to the Commissioners shall seem meet.

Schedule (showing the lands in the divided parts, and stating minutely any rights of way or other easements created for the purpose of the partition).

If convenient, the general description of the whole property may be placed in a separate schedule from the divided lots, and in all cases the schedule must specify the denominations of the land, the head-rent or quit-rent, if any, with the arrears, if any; the tenants' names, and the date and description of the instrument, if any, under which each tenant holds.

If there be any incumbrances affecting the entirety of the property, or of any portion thereof, they should be noticed; and incumbrances affecting any undivided shares should be scheduled or mentioned explicitly in the body of the petition.

The petition should be accompanied by concise abstracts of each petitioner's title, from the period when the interests were severed, and by an affidavit by each petitioner, or his attorney, that he has read the petition, including the schedules, and also the abstract of his own title, and that he believes the petition and schedules to be true, and that he believes the abstract to be a fair and correct abstract of his title. The deponents must sign the petition and each schedule, and each deponent must sign the abstract to which his affidavit relates.

Form.—Petition for exchange after sale and conveyance, the proceedings upon the petition for sale being still pending.

In the matter of the Estate of Jacob Dixon of &c., Esq., late an owner of land, and of Samuel Green, of &c., Esq., a purchaser of such land,

To the Commissioners for sale of Incumbered Estates in Ireland.

The petition of Samuel Green, of &c., Esq., an owner of land.

Sheweth,

That James M'Cann, of &c., gentleman, did on the 26th day of May last, present his petition in this court, "In the matter of the estate of Jacob Dixon, of &c., Esq.," praying for a sale of the premises mentioned in the first schedule hereto, the same premises being then held by the said Jacob Dixon, in fee-simple, subject to a fee-farm rent of £20: and that such proceedings were had in the said matter, that on the 30th day of August last, two of the Commissioners duly conveyed the said premises unto your petitioner, his heirs and assigns.

That your petitioner is still the owner of the said premises, the same being vested in trustees (subject to an incumbrance affecting the same), upon trust for your petitioner, for his life, and subject thereto upon certain trusts for the children of your petitioner who shall attain the age of twenty-one years, as appears more fully by the abstract of title lodged by your petitioner.

That your petitioner has agreed with the Right Hon. James, Earl of B. for an exchange of the said premises for the premises mentioned in the second schedule hereto, whereof the said James, Earl of B. is seized in fee-simple, and Wm. M'Mahon, who is the sole incumbrancer on the premises mentioned in the said first schedule, has joined in the said agreement, and thereby agreed to accept a mortgage of the said premises mentioned in the said second schedule, in lieu of his said former mortgage as by the said abstract of title more fully appears.

That your petitioner has caused an abstract of the title of the said James, Earl of B. to the said premises mentioned in the second schedule, to be lodged with this petition.

That the said exchange will be very beneficial to your petitioner and his children, inasmuch as the premises mentioned in the said first schedule be dispersed and intermixed with the lands of the said James, Earl of B., and the said Earl being desirous of laying out such lands for building purposes, and being unable conveniently to do so without acquiring the said lands mentioned in the first schedule, has been willing to contract for the same upon terms highly advantageous to your petitioner and his children.

Your petitioner therefore prays that an exchange may be made of the aforesaid premises upon the terms hereinbefore mentioned, or upon such other terms as the Commissioners shall approve of, and as shall be consented to by the said James, Earl of B. and that your petitioner may have such further and other relief in relation to the matters aforesaid, as to the Commissioners shall seem meet.

Schedules specifying the denominations, the head or quit rent (if any), and the tenancies.

If the proceedings upon the original petition for sale are no longer pending, both owners should be petitioners under the 46th section, and the petition should be entitled, "In the matter of the estate of Samuel Green, of &c., Esq., and of the estate of the Right Hon. James, Earl of B."

This precedent may be adapted to the case of a petition by the owner before sale, or by the purchaser after sale, and before conveyance; and to the case of a petition for division of intermixed lands by several owners.

In all cases of partition by consent, and of exchange and division of intermixed lands, the affidavit of the petitioner or petitioners, shall deny all collusion, and shall state that no consideration has been directly or indirectly given or agreed to be given otherwise than as appears by the petition and abstracts.

Printed by THOMAS ISAAC WHITE, at his Printing Office, No. 4, FLEET-STREET, in the Parish of St. Andrew, and published at 15 COLLEGE-GREEN, in same Parish, by EDWARD JOHNSTON MILLIKEN, residing at the same place, all being in the County of the City of Dublin. Saturday, October 27, 1849.

THE Irish Jurist

No. 53.—VOL. I.

NOVEMBER 3, 1849.

Price { Per Annum, £1 10s.
Single Number, 6d

The Names of the Gentlemen who favour THE IRISH JURIST with Reports in the several Courts of Law and Equity in Ireland, are as follows:—

Court of Chancery, including Bankruptcy Appeals.....	{ ROBERT LONG, Esq., and JOHN PITT KENNEDY, Esq., Barristers-at-Law.	Court of Exchequer Chamber.....	{ JOHN BLACKHAM, Esq., and A. HICKEY, Esq., Barristers-at-Law.
Rolls Court.....	{ WILLIAM BURKE, Esq., and WILLIAM JOHN DUNDAS, Esq., Barristers-at-Law.	Queen's Bench, including Civil Bill and Registry Appeals.....	{ FLORENCE M'CARTHY, Esq., and SAMUEL V. PEET, Esq., Barristers-at-Law.
Equity Exchequer.....	{ CHARLES HARE HEMPHILL, Esq., and WILLIAM HICKSON, Esq., Barristers-at-Law.	Exchequer of Pleas, including Manor Court and Registry Appeals.....	{ CHAS. H. HEMPHILL, Esq., and WILLIAM HICKSON, Esq., Barristers-at-Law.
Bankrupt Court.....	{ ROBERT GRIFFIN, Esq. and W.G. CHAMNEY, Esq. Barristers-at-law.	Common Pleas.....	{ ROBERT GRIFFIN, Esq. and W.G. CHAMNEY, Esq. Barristers-at-law.
		Admiralty Court.....	{ ROBERT GRIFFIN, Esq. and W.G. CHAMNEY, Esq. Barristers-at-law.

DUBLIN, NOVEMBER 3, 1849.

We are disposed to regret the rule adopted by the Commissioners, which precludes the biddings being opened by an advance of price.

From the combined working of legislation and of famine, the real property of Ireland is thrown upon the market in enormous quantities, and as a consequence at a depreciated value.

No owner, who could stem the torrent of the times, would voluntarily sell an acre of his estate; he would hold it over until a re-action in value took place, and the new Court should deal towards those hapless owners—whose properties must be sold—with as much consideration as possible, and in offering an estate for sale, should be scrupulous in not depriving the owner or creditor of the smallest possible advantage, even if that should turn out to be more imaginary than real.

Baron Richards states "that nothing shall be wanting on the part of the Commissioners to carry out, as far as in them lies, the great objects which the Legislature had in view in enacting this law." And in close connection with this statement he pointedly adverts to the sixteenth rule, "chiefly because that rule establishes a practice essentially variant from the practice of every other Court of Equity, both in England and Ireland."

This departure from the long established practice of every Equity Court is startling, and, we should say, will be looked upon with great alarm by the great body of the incumbrancers upon real property, and all its owners.

The policy of the measure is admittedly the introduction of a new unembarrassed proprietary; we neither deprecate that, nor the avowed intention of the Commissioners to carry it out, provided it be done with the greatest regard to existing interests, compatible with the working of the measure.

It is quite true, that at the sale of a horse, or of household furniture, when the auctioneer's hammer once knocks down the article to the purchaser, no advance of price will take it from him; and the present rule of the Commissioners is calculated to assimilate the laws which regulate the sale of land and chattels; but this attempt is best made when made gradually, and so as not to excite alarm or distrust. The minds of the great majority of the upper orders of this country are not prepared to carry out the designs of the economic school, and to consider land in the same light as a bale of merchandise.

The vast body of incumbered proprietors look upon this new court as unjust in its constitution towards them, as created to give facilities for the sale of their properties, at a period when they are unduly and unjustly depreciated; and neither their minds nor those of their creditors, are made up to have their properties knocked down irrecoverably at the first offer.

The Commissioners are of opinion that the practice of opening sales "was calculated to damp very much the ardour of bona fide purchasers, to delay the final completion of the sale, and winding up of the cause, and, in fact, more or less to damage all parties interested in the cause."

With the exception of speculative landjobbers, we doubt very much whether the practice of opening the sales was calculated to damp the ardour of purchasers; but we strongly suspect that the 16th rule is calculated to damp very much the flow of business into the new court. What pious incumbrancer who has not his purchase money in his pocket, will be disposed to try a tribunal when the sale may be made at ten years purchase, and just produce sufficient to pay the incumbrancer before him? How could that rule be said to damp sales, when a purchaser, according to the practice of the Court of Chancery, could have his sale confirmed absolutely within twelve days after his purchase; was that too long a locus penitentiae for an undecided bidder to offer an advance of price, and has the rule worked well or ill for creditors?

In Tyndale v. Warre, (Jacob 525,) the biddings were opened on an advance of £600 upon £3,800. In Brookes v. Smith, (3 V. & B. 144,) upon an advance of 5 per cent. on £10,000, and where the purchase money is under £10,000 the amount of advance required is ordinarily 10 per cent. Now in these cases it is obvious to our view that the rule of the Court of Chancery worked well for the creditors. In the first case put, the person offering the advance was present at the sale, and it was objected that, having had the opportunity of bidding, he should not be allowed to displace the accepted bidder; but this objection was overruled by the court, and a hundred reasons may suggest themselves, why upon one day a bidder may not, in the babble of the auction room, wish to go as far as he would on another. He may not have mustered his resources, he may not have acquired a sufficient knowledge of the property, he may not —; but why suggest reasons which will occur to every one?

It is true the Commissioners have reserved the power of adjourning the sale, when the offer is clearly inadequate, "but this is a power"—we quote from Baron Richards—"which, I apprehend, we shall very seldom have occasion to exercise, and most likely, never shall exercise, except when we have reason to suspect something in the nature of fraud or contrivance in the case."

So that, apart from fraud, there will be no adjournment, and the inadequacy will not be per se, an element for adjournment, it must exist in conjunction with fraud. That adequacy is so purely arbitrary, and so purely in the breast of the Commissioners, that the power of adjournment, accompanied by the expression of the intended use of it, goes for almost nothing, and we can conceive many instances in which there will be no discoverable fraud, but, nevertheless, in which properties will go at an inadequate price, without the possibility of that price being enhanced, if the present rules and their exercise be continued.

We regret, as we have before stated, their adoption, because we think the Chancery rule intrinsically a good one, because an analogous one could have been made so stringent, as to have interposed almost no delay in the completion of the purchase, and because the new practice is calculated to induce the belief that the policy of the Act will be carried out with too stern a necessity. Even a respite of 48 hours, during which the bidding books might be kept open, would be a boon to the public, and a desirable power for the Commissioners.

Turning from this subject to another, we can conceive great injustice worked by the new Statute, except great caution be exercised by the Commissioners. By its 41st section it is enacted, that, "Where it shall be shewn to the Commissioners that a decree for a sale has been made by a Court of Equity, the Commissioners shall, if they see fit, without further inquiry, order a sale of the land or lease decreed to be sold."

Now it is notorious that decrees are frequently made by Courts of Equity where the title is defective, and in this enactment the difference of the constitution of the two courts has not been sufficiently kept in sight. A Court of Equity decrees a sale, but does not warrant title. A purchaser, to save himself hereafter, sees that all proper parties are bound, and this is the greatest possible protection to absent parties; but by the transfer of jurisdiction a defeasible title, without further inquiry, may now be made indefeasible, and we can therefore perfectly well understand cases in which decrees have been obtained for sale, but in which a supplemental bill would be necessary to pass a good title—we can well understand that in those cases parties having a decree will present their petitions to the new court, but we do trust for the prevention of fraud, for the prevention of injustice, orders for sale will not be made upon them "without further inquiry."

These are precisely the cases in which a strict inquiry should be made whether all proper parties were before the Court of Equity in the causes which have been transferred.

It would be a very singular state of things if it should turn out, that this statute, which was designed to extirpate the present race of incumbered proprietors, should, in many instances, be found a means of giving them back their properties discharged of half the pre-existing incumbrances; yet this is not at all an improbable or unlikely event. It may be effected thus: A friendly early incumbrancer may present his petition, and procure an order for sale, obtain leave to bid—the property just reaches his incumbrance at its present diminished value; the next day he reconveys to the inheritor, and takes a mortgage for the amount of his old, and now sole claim upon the lands.

In this point of view, the real sufferers will be the pious incumbrancers; and that class, in the present convulsion of national property, will require the exercise of extreme vigilance for the conservation of their perilled rights. In the first place, if we have not misinterpreted the rules, the property may be directed to be sold without notice to them, and in the next it may be sold at "a clearly inadequate value," if there be no fraud or contrivance.

Baron Richards' invitation "to those who intend practising in the court, to communicate freely with us, in case of any difficulty arising in their minds in regard to any of those rules," was likely to be so freely accepted, that their Honours would have been overwhelmed with questions; and, accordingly, the next day the invitation was limited to those questions arising out of, or relating to a petition before them.

And his Lordship gave suitors a piece of advice, in the latter part of which we cordially concur, "that, with regard to the construction of the Act, parties must rely upon themselves, or consult counsel."

The public are, by this time, tolerably well convinced of the truth of the old adage, "that the man who is his own advocate has a fool for his client."

Court Papers.

COURT FOR THE SALE OF INCUMBERED ESTATES.

Saturday, 27th Oct. 1849.

There was no business before the Court arising from petitions.

The Chief Commissioner, The Right Hon. Baron Richards said:—That most of the business of that court would be disposed of in the offices; that when petitions were lodged with their Secretary, it was the duty of the Commissioners to read them, and make such rules as they thought fit; that their Court business would not arise, until cause was shewn against the conditional order, either by the party himself, or some other person. That six petitions had been presented, on five of which rules had been made, and one would shortly be on the sixth; that it would not be necessary for the court to sit de die in diem, they had not business requiring it. The court would, therefore, adjourn till Friday the 9th of November, when they would sit in the court of Nisi Prius Exchequer. By a rule approved of by the Privy Council, if there was a necessity, the Commissioners had power to appoint an intermediate day. There had been some difficulty in finding a place for their sittings; their officers at present occupied the Court of Admiralty, and his chamber could be used as far as it would suit. The Board of Works had taken premises in Henrietta Street, which would be ready for our office business in a short time, and, until a court was prepared, the Commissioners would sit, after the offices were removed to Henrietta Street, in the Prerogative Court.

The second Commissioner M. Longfield Esq. said:—That the Commissioners were desirous of putting the public to the least possible inconvenience; that which, in the present instance, was of an inconvenience, if repeated might become so. It would be desirable to have the petitions framed with the greatest possible accuracy. In one of the petitions presented, the form of the petition by an owner for a sale, was mistaken; the petition stated that it was in the matter of W. Howard, &c. adopting the fictitious title prefixed to the form of our precedent. It was intended, in framing these forms, that the petition should be assimilated to them as nearly as was possible, but not to follow them in names and dates. In another petition the petitioner states himself to be owner, he being possessed only of a leasehold estate for 120 years, and seeks a sale as an owner of land. I have altered it to a petition by the owner of a leasehold. In another case where the petitioner is seized of an interest in an undivided third of an estate for lives renewable, he states himself to be possessed of the whole estate, describing it so as to the names, headrents, value. There is nothing to show that he was merely owner of a third, and that the creditors have only so much for their security. This may lead incumbrancers to believe their security adequate for their demands, it being in reality very inadequate. In another case there are two petitions for a sale of the same estate; one by a party who had the carriage of proceedings in Chancery; the other by a creditor. We think the estate could be sold to much more advantage, if the carriage of these proceedings were given to the creditor. In making orders we shall never consider the imaginary right of parties to have the conduct of their own suits; we will give the carriage to the party who will appear to be most likely to conduct the proceedings for the benefit of the incumbrancers; and in this view a great anxiety to have the conduct will not be a recommendation to us. A question has been asked as to the form in which we should wish to have documents made up for the purposes of our offices; we should prefer them bookwise; but if they have already been prepared otherwise for other purposes, we will not put parties to the expense of re-copying them.

Court was adjourned till Friday, 9th November. at Nisi Prius Exchequer.

PETITIONS PRESENTED TO FRIDAY, NOVEMBER, 2, 1849.

Name of Petition.	Owner.	Petitioner.	Solicitor.
In the matter of Joseph Walker,	Ib.	Joseph Walker and others,	Jackson and Bond.
John O'Connell and Morgan O'Connell,	Ib.	Patrick D. Moylan,	T. and D. Fitzgerald.
Robert D. Browne, M. P.	Ib.	P. C. Ingham,	James D. Meldon.
William Alexander W. Kerr,	Ib.	P. M. Foster,	Hardman and Miller.
Thaddeus O'Callaghan,	Ib.	Ib.	Ib.
Alexander O. G. Rose,	Ib.	P. D. Henderson,	Garde and Atkinson.
E. Garde, widow,	Ib.	James K. Bailey,	R. Miller.
W. Blake,	Ib.	James Driscoll and others,	R. C. McNevin.
James Balfie and R. Bodkin,	Ib.	R. Kerrison,	Cooke and Larkin.
J. Purdon Scott,	Ib.	Isabella Williamson,	J. W. Williamson
Thomas Doyle,	Ib.	Peter Henrion,	Thaddeus O'Callaghan.
George Keane,	Ib.	Thomas Keane,	Cullen and Kinton.
John Westropp,	Ib.	Michael Cullin,	Ib.
Charlotte Donellan,	Ib.	W. F. Eyre,	J. B. Kennedy.
H. Brabazon Brabazon,	Ib.	Hercules Sharpe and others,	W. Cullen.
William Biggs,	Ib.	John Waring,	Wardle and Stirling.
Richard H. Loringe,	Ib.	W. L'Estrange,	Garde and Atkinson.
Robert Haughton,	Ib.	Daniel Curtin,	Ib.
Lyacinth Darcy,	Ib.	Coots Carroll,	Joseph S. Moore.
Isaiah Alexander,	Ib.	Helen M'Manus,	R. Crookshank.

Chancery.Adjudged Causes.

Anderson v. Walker	Donnelly v. M'Clintock
Campbell v. Hackett	Ahern v. Daly
Lupton v. Stevenson	Lewis v. E. Charleville
Montgomery v. Stevenson	M'Creight v. M'Creight
Greene v. Stoney	Barton v. Phelan
Kelly v. Murphy	Stewart v. Marquis Donegal
Marquis Donegal v. Dunbar	Brabazon v. Lord Lucan
Kelson v. Lewis	O'Keeffe v. Lanigan
Verschoyle v. Hamilton	Maher & Lenigan v. Maher & Smith
Brooke v. Horner	Cantley v. Burke
Booker v. Murphy	Cane v. Lord Fitzgerald
Stuart v. Buchanan

Queen's Bench.Demurrers.

Bruce v. Bellis & others	Lowry v. Somerville
--------------------------	---------------------

Motion to set aside verdict.

Lynch v. Fitzgerald.

Nisi Prius, Monday 5, 12, 19.Common Pleas.Demurrers.

Knaggs v. Hunter	Davis v. Davis
------------------	----------------

Nisi Prius days, Saturday 3rd, Monday 12, 19.Exchequer of Pleas.Demurrers.

Cornelius M'Manns v. Bartholomew Delany & others.
 Executors James Mitchell v. Edmond Mooney.
 Charles Loddell v. William Leake.
 Edward Ward & others v. James Redmond.
 Alexander Boyle v. Thomas Farrell & others.
 Andrew Giffney and another v. Francis Synge.
 The hon. William Henry Hare v. Pierce Mahony.

Bills of Exceptions.

Anne Fitzgerald, administratrix of Patrick Fitzgerald, v. Samuel Anderson.
 Lessee Sir Robert Henry Gunning v. Henry Corr.
 Lessee Corporation of Drogheda v. Joseph Holmes.

Motions to set aside verdicts.

John Jack, lessee of Thomas Talbot & others, v. John Guilmartin.
 John Ruck v. Henry Brownrigg.
 John Horan, lessee of Edward Spaight Forritter, & another v. Luke Littleton.

Motion to set aside Non-suit.

Rev. Joseph Morton v. Bridget Mahon, administratrix of Rev. Edward Mahon.

Special case.

Samuel Keogh & others v. Michael Power.

Rejoinder of Nul Tiel Record.

Catherine Dillon, administratrix of Daniel Dillon, v. Michael Dillon.

Plea of Nul Tiel Record.

The Attorney-General v. John Killeen.

Nisi Prius days, Saturday, November 3rd, 10th, 20th.

This day published, 2nd Edition, price 14s.

A TREATISE ON THE LAW AND PRACTICE OF SCIRE FACIAS, ON JUDGMENTS, CROWN BONDS, AND RECOGNIZANCES, with an Appendix containing Forms of Affidavits, Writs, Pleas, and Replications.

By EDMUND MEARES KELLY ESQ., A. M. Barrister-at-law.
 Dublin: V. DELANY and SON, Law Library, Four Courts; and W. Benning and Co., Fleet-street, London.

Now ready price, 2s. 6d. by post 3s.

THE LAW OF JUDGMENTS as affected by the Statutes of the 12 and 13 of Victoria, with Introduction, Notes, and Index.

By ROBERT WM. OSBORNE ESQ., Barrister-at-law.
 Dublin: EDWARD J. MILLIKEN, Law Bookseller and Publisher, 15, College-green.

Just published, 1 Vol. 12mo. cloth, price 2s. by post 2s. 6d.

THE ACT further to facilitate the SALE OF INCUMBERED ESTATES IN IRELAND, (12 and 13 Vic. chap. 7.) with explanatory comments, the Rules and Orders under the Act, as confirmed by the Privy Council, and a General Index.

By JOHN LYONS ESQ., Barrister-at-law.
 Dublin: EDWARD J. MILLIKEN, Law Bookseller and Publisher, 15, College-green.

Just published, price 3s., by post 3s. 6d.

LAW OF DEBTOR AND CREDITOR IN IRELAND.

The new Act for the abolition of arrest for sums under ten pounds, and for the recovery of the possession of small tenements before Justice of the Peace, with a full Commentary, Index, Notes and Forms, adapted for the professional and trading classes.

By WILLIAM GERNON, Esq., Barrister-at-law.
 EDWARD J. MILLIKEN, Law Bookseller and Publisher, 15, College Green, Dublin.

A CARD.

CHARLES SHARPE cannot omit this opportunity, at the termination of another season, of returning his sincere thanks to the public (amongst whom he may number many of his warmest friends) for their kindness in having entrusted to him, within the last thirty-three years, various important and valuable libraries, as well as other kinds of property, for sale by auction, and for having so often testified their approbation of his manner of conducting their sales and settling their accounts. He begs to assure them that integrity and promptitude shall ever remain prominent features in his professional character; and he is, therefore, not without hope that he may continue for many years to experience that distinguished favor which he has hitherto enjoyed.
 Anglessea-street, November, 1849.

LAW LIBRARY OF THE LATE MATTHEW BAKER, ESQ. & C.

CHARLES SHARPE begs to announce that he will have the honor of submitting to Auction, at his Literary Sale Room, Anglessea-street, on Wednesday next, November 7th, 1849, and following days, the numerous and valuable Law Library of the late M. Baker, Esq. J. C., embracing every Book requisite for Practice at Law or in Equity. Amongst others as well as modern, the Statutes (ante and post union,) Black's Reports, &c., all in the best possible condition.

Sale to commence each day at three o'clock for the convenience of the Bar.

IN CHANCERY.

Hugh Boyd, executor of Isaac Warren, deceased, plaintiff.
 William Bailie, Rev. John Bailie, Robert Bailie, Hugh Campbell and James Carlow, and others, defendants.

PURSUANT to the decree made in this cause bearing date the 9th day of April, 1848, require all persons having claims and incumbrances affecting the mortgage lands and premises in the pleadings in this cause mentioned, that is to say, all that and those that part of the lands of Aunaghvaskey, containing 43 acres, 3 roods, 3 perches of the late Irish plantation measure, be the same more or less, situate in the upper barony of Dundalk, manor of Roseth and county of Louth, situate all that and those the lands of Trean, otherwise Tray, containing 17 more late Irish plantation measure, situate in the manor of Roseth and county of Louth aforesaid, the estate of the defendant William Bailie, to come in before me at my Chambers, Inns Quay, in the city of Dublin, on or before the 9th day of January next, and proceed to prove the same, otherwise they will be precluded the benefit of said decree.

Dated this 9th day of September, 1849.

For Master MURPHY,

E. LITTON.

Alexander Dudgeon, Plaintiff's Solicitor, 82, Talbot Street, Dublin.

All communications for the IRISH JURIST are to be sent, addressed to the Editor, with the Publisher, E. J. MILLIKEN, 15, COLLEGE GREEN. Correspondents will please give the Name and Address, in the columns of the paper cannot be coupled with answers to Anonymous Communications—nor will the Editor be accountable for the return of Manuscripts, &c.

Orders for the IRISH JURIST left with E. J. MILLIKEN, 15, COLLEGE GREEN, or by letter (post-paid), will ensure its punctual delivery in Dublin, or its being forwarded to the Country, by Post, on the day of publication.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION—(payable in advance):
 Yearly, 30s. Half-yearly, 17s. Quarterly, 9s.

Printed by THOMAS ISAAC WHITE, at his Printing Office, No. 6, FLEET-STREET, in the Parish of St. Andrew, and published at 15, COLLEGE GREEN, in same Parish, by EDWARD JOHNSTON MILLIKEN, residing at the same place, all being in the County of the City of Dublin, Saturday, November, 3, 1849.

THE Irish Jurist

No. 54.—Vol. I.

NOVEMBER 10, 1849.

Price { Per Annum, £1 10s.
Single Number, 9d.

The Names of the Gentlemen who favour THE IRISH JURIST with Reports in the several Courts of Law and Equity in Ireland, are as follows:—

Court of Chancery, including Bankruptcy Appeals.....	{ ROBERT LONG, Esq., and JOHN PITT KENNEDY, Esq., Barristers-at-Law.
Rolls Court.....	{ WILLIAM BURKE, Esq., and WILLIAM JOHN DUNDAS, Esq., Barristers-at-Law.
Equity Exchequer.....	{ CHARLES HARE HEMPHILL, Esq., and WILLIAM HICKSON, Esq., Barristers-at-Law.
Bankrupt Court.....	{ ROBERT GRIFFIN, Esq. and W. G. CHAMNEY, Esq. Barristers-at-law.

Court of Exchequer Chamber.....	{ JOHN BLACKHEAM, Esq., and A. HICKRY, Esq., Barristers-at-Law.
Queen's Bench, including Civil Bill and Registry Appeals.....	{ FLORENCE M'CARTHY, Esq., and SAMUEL V. PEET, Esq., Barristers-at-Law.
Exchequer of Pleas, including Manor Court and Registry Appeals.....	{ CHAS. H. HEMPHILL, Esq., and WILLIAM HICKSON, Esq., Barristers-at-Law.
Common Pleas.....	{ ROBERT GRIFFIN, Esq. and W. G. CHAMNEY, Esq. Barristers-at-law.
Admiralty Court.....	{ ROBERT GRIFFIN, Esq. and W. G. CHAMNEY, Esq. Barristers-at-law.

DUBLIN, NOVEMBER 10, 1849.

THE Commissioners for the Sale of Incumbered Estates held a public sitting yesterday, and disposed of some business; a full report of which, together with the list of the further petitions presented, will appear in our next.

THE importance of the recent statute for the Sale of Incumbered Estates,* and the natural anxiety pervading the public and professional mind as to its provisions and practical working induce us to resume its consideration.

In a previous number we stated that the inducement to purchasers were an indefeasible title, and no expense in investigating it.

It has been since intimated to us that we laid down these propositions much too broadly, that there is no case in which a purchaser can buy with safety without investigating the title, as there may be many instances in which the conveyance by the Commissioners will not pass one that is indefeasible. The argument is put thus: The Commissioners have a limited jurisdiction—they can only sell in certain specified cases—if they exceed their powers the excess is without authority, and any act done by them, unauthorized by the statute, is inoperative and void. By the 19th section, land is not to be deemed subject to an incumbrance, so as to warrant an application for a sale, except in certain enumerated cases; outside the defined limit the Act has no operation, and it is contended that a good title can only be passed when the incumbrance for which the land is sold is one of those defined in the statute. If this be so, the Act is rendered almost nugatory; thus, in every case, an investigation of title becomes necessary, the purchaser buys with more or less of risk, and the possibility of a bad title being given, shakes to its foundation the confidence of the public.

Let us state and test the argument. By way of illustration we select the following example, premising that land—adopting the distinction made by the Act between “land” and “lease”—is declared not to be subject to an incumbrance for the purpose of authorizing an application for a sale, except it shall affect the inheritance, or have been created by the owner of an estate of inheritance. Suppose an incumbrance to have been created by a devisee, believed to be absolute owner of the land, but who, on the true construction of the will under which he derives, had only a life estate, if the fee were sold for this incumbrance, which it did not affect, it is contended that the assurance under the Act would not bar the true owner of the inheritance? The statute dealt with the case of incumbrances which did affect the inheritance—not with those which did not. It gives absolute authority to the Commissioners in the former instance; it confers none upon them in the latter; and if they assume to exercise it, their conveyance is inoperative. It being clear that the jurisdiction is limited, the subsequent sections only apply to those cases which fall within the range of the statute. This is the key to their interpretation, and restrains the generality of their language. Thus the 23rd section enacts that “where a sale shall be made under this Act, the Commissioner shall ascertain the tenancies, &c.” the 24th, that “the land or lease (i. e. the land or lease subject to the provisions of the Act) shall be sold under the controul and direction of the Commissioners, &c. and the conveyance or assignment of the land or lease shall be made by the Commissioners under their seal,

* The Act further to facilitate the Sale of Incumbered Estates in Ireland, with Explanatory Notes. By John Lyons, Esq. Barrister-at-Law. Dublin: MULLIKEN.

&c.;" and the 27th that, "every such conveyance (i. e. of the land subject to the provisions of the Act) executed by the Commissioners upon the sale of land, shall be effectual to pass the fee-simple and inheritance of the land thereby expressed to be conveyed, subject to such tenancies, leases, and under-leases as shall be expressed or referred to therein as aforesaid; but save as aforesaid, and as hereinafter provided, discharged from all former and other estates, rights, titles, charges and incumbrances whatsoever of her Majesty, her heirs and successors, and of all other persons whatsoever." Those words, though extremely large, must be taken in connection with the 19th section, and apply only to the cases therein provided for—in which an indefeasible title no doubt is passed, and a good title is also always passed against incumbrancers, but not against owners of estates. To hold the opposite construction, would be to make the statute thoroughly confiscatory, and opposed to every principle of the British law; for thus, a man's inheritance might be sold by mistake, and he would be wholly remediless—it might be sold, and will be sold, fraudulently; and if the purchaser be not implicated in the fraud, and the Commissioners pass an indefeasible title, the defrauded inheritor will be without redress. Thus one man's estate may be sold for another man's debts, and a wholesale system of legal plunder accomplished by means of this statute.

We have thus endeavoured to state the argument; though not with the ability with which it might be put—though, we trust, with sufficient intelligibility to make it understood. It has been advanced on very respectable authority. Though a good deal impressed with its force, we cannot yield to it; but we thought it our duty to lay it before the public, as it unquestionably raises a doubt of great magnitude, and which should be set at rest as speedily as possible.

The latter part of the argument is altogether one of inconvenience. The policy of the legislature is oftentimes a key to the interpretation of a statute; and, in the present instance, we apprehend the Legislature meant to work as little private injustice as possible, consistently with the policy of giving "facility to the sale and transfer of incumbered estates in Ireland." With this object they created a new tribunal; invested it with extraordinary powers, for the investigation of all patent and latent rights and interests whatsoever; they intended to relieve the lands that were sold from all past debts; the purchaser from all past liability, or future risk. It is admitted that such, their intention, can be effected in those cases which fall within the jurisdiction of the Commissioners; but it is added that an enquiry is always necessary, by a purchaser, as to whether his case be, or be not within that jurisdiction. If such an inquiry were necessary, the absence of it would always involve a risk, and the security would only be a very modified one. All responsibility was intended to be shifted from the purchaser to the Commissioners; whether the statute has carried out that intention, is a subsequent question; and as to the comparative injustice of such a proceeding, we admit it. The measure was a political experiment, which sprung from a national necessity; with the machinery provided of a public court, and of public proceedings, to deal with a species of property, which had a tangible and visible existence, and every matter affecting which was one of publicity, and of record, all the probabilities were against much private injury being effected, and the case of one man's property being sold for another man's debt, if not absolutely hypothetical, was very unlikely.

But whatever may have been the intention of the Legislature the point must turn upon the express words of that intention in the statute, and its 27th section contains no restrictive words: "every such conveyance shall be effectual to pass the fee simple and inheritance of the land thereby expressed to be conveyed, discharged from all former and other estates, rights, titles whatsoever, and of all persons whatsoever;" and to guard against the case of a mistake on the part of the Commissioners, or an erroneous conclusion either as to the land, or an incumbrance upon it, affecting a purchaser, the 49th section provides "that every conveyance and assignment respecting land executed as required by this Act, and every order for partition, or for exchange, or for division or allotment made by the Commissioners under their seal shall for all purposes be conclusive evidence that every application, proceeding, consent and whatsoever which ought to have been made, given and done previously to the execution of such conveyance or assignment, or the making of such order respectively has been made, given and done by persons authorized to make, give, and do the same, and no such conveyance, assignment or order shall be impeached by reason of any informality." The point of the objection being that an unauthorised application might be made, is answered by the section which we have quoted; so far as the purchaser is concerned everything is declared to be in statu quo.

We have nowhere concealed our opinion that the statute is a great violation of the rights of property, sed ita lex est. That it confers an indefeasible title we believe to be the generally-received opinion, and to be that of the Commissioners, as we collect from the statement of Mr. Baron Richards.

Mr. Lyons also inclines to that interpretation, though he does not state it confidently: "It is presumed that even if the Commissioners have come to an erroneous conclusion relative to the title, and that in point of fact it is a defective or a bad one, the purchaser cannot be prejudiced, but he will have a good title as against all the world under the Act of Parliament."

It is a question on which there should be no doubt, and if there be a well-founded one it ought to be set at rest by a short supplementary Act; the influx of property into the new court is already great, and the consequences would be alarming if the received interpretation, to which the public faith is in some degree committed, were erroneous.

Mr. Lyons has started a question of some nicety on the construction of the 19th section. He observes, "Suppose a lessee for lives, renewable for ever, under-leases for a term of 500 years, and the under-lessee creates an incumbrance affecting the entire term, is such incumbrance within the meaning of the Act? It should seem not. The incumbrance in such case affects a derivative interest only, and is not created by the person entied to the entire estate." In such case, the lease for 500 years could not be sold under the statute, which exempts from its operation an incumbrance which shall affect a derivative estate or interest only, except created by the person entitled to the whole estate or interest.

We cannot arrive at the same conclusion as the commentator; three species of leases fall within the scope of the Act, a lease in perpetuity, (comprehending under-leases in perpetuity,) a lease for a term of not less than sixty years shall be implied, and any church or college lease. The word "derivative"—the word which has led to what we think a misapprehension—is applied to an estate or interest derived from each of these species of leases, depending on each, but yet less than the whole. Thus in the case of a lease in perpetuity, it is granted to A. and his heirs, and he limits the same lease to B. for life, that is a derivative estate; but if A. were to grant a lease to C. for 60 years, that is not a derivative interest in the sense used by the Legislature, it is a distinct leasehold interest of which C. is unqualified owner during its existence, and any incumbrance created by him would be an incumbrance, for which, in our judgment, that leasehold could be sold. If Mr. Lyons's construction of the word "derivative" is correct, no lease in Ireland could be sold; for in every sense every lease is derivative from a greater estate. If an owner in fee were to grant a lease for 99 years, that would be derivative from his fee; but yet we apprehend that Mr. Lyons would not intend that such a lease might not be sold. The estate is the same as to a lease created by the owner of a lease in perpetuity, owner of the fee, or owner of an estate tail. Enough for the purposes of the statute if an incumbrance affect a term of 60 years, and be created by the person entitled to the whole interest in the term. Thus, if the 500 years be limited to C. for life, remainder to D., both of whose interests are derivative; for C.'s incumbrance, a leasehold could not be sold, whilst for D.'s, as he was in possession, it could, as he was then possessed of the whole interest created by the statute—the object of the legislature being the sale of the entire interest in the subject matter of sale, and not a fragment of it. It may be suggested that the case of leases derived from the fee are not derivative within the meaning of the word as used in the statute, and that they are properly within its purview, as having been created by an "absolute" owner. But this is a slender argument, and the term of fifty years is confined, in the previous part of the section, to incumbrances on land, not on leases, and applies to cases where the absolute owner of an estate created mortgages for terms of years, or to similar cases.

The chief use of a commentary such as that of Mr. Lyons is that it contains the statutes and the orders in a collected and convenient form, and this title work, which is compiled with neatness and care, fulfils that use. Whilst the law and practice which are to be administered by the Commissioners are so new, the opinions of a text writer are indeed valuable as the result of thought, but they are frequently suggest difficulties than help to move them. The present work, however, very seasonably supplies the immediate wants of the profession.

Court Papers.

Chancery.

LIST OF CAUSES—MICHAELMAS TERM, 1849.

The following abbreviations are used to save space: R. H. Rehearing, P. P. Pleadings and Proof, R. M. Report and Merits, R. E. M. Report Exception and Merits, O. P. C. Order pro Confesso, R. J. C. Return of Judge's Certificate, B. A. Bill and Answer.

Reilly v. Fitzgerald, R H	Hagan v. Kirkwood, } P P O
Fraser v. Meredith, } R H	Same v. Molloy, } P C
Same v. Stewart, } R H	Johnson v. Tottenham, P P
Ritchie v. Cowan, P P for dis.	O P C
Cockburne v. Molloy, R M	Crilly v. Harding, P P
Jessop v. Clarke, } R E M	Slack v. Molloy, B A O P C
Same v. Same, } R E M	Duff v. Bunn, P P O P C
Gurney v. Oranmore, R M	Boyle v. Boyle, P P
Minchin v. Sleeman, R M	Hamilton v. Macartney, B A
Hutchinson v. Hutchinson, R E M	Hedges v. Aldworth, R E M
Givens v. Mesmons, R M	Nugent v. Archer, P P D
Byrne v. Carew, R M	Watson v. Giles, R M
Bevan v. Massey, P P O P C	Atkinson v. Loddell, P P
Cummins v. Reddy, R M	Esdaile v. Macan, R M
Hunter v. Earl of Limerick, R E M	Shelton v. Gerard, P P O P C
Et contra , R J C	Saunders v. Percival, P P O
Plunket v. M'Mahon, P P	P C
Chute v. M'Gillouddy, R E M	Courtney v. Wilson, P P O
M'Mahon v. M'Mahon, P P B A	P C
Coulson v. Williams, R M	O'Sullivan v. Sullivan, R M
Soden v. Bournes, R M	Roche v. Deasy, P P O P C
Hughes v. Power, } R E M	Bulst v. Tenant, R E M
Hughes v. Hughes, } B A	Collins v. Irwin, R E M
Allman v. Crofts, P P	Ormsby v. Earl of Limerick, P P O P C
Abbott v. Plunkett, P P O P C	Ormsby v. Same, P P O P C
Kenny v. Darcy, R M	Jones v. Bates, P P
Fitzpatrick v. Knaresborough, R E M	Moorehead v. Rutherford, P P
Vincent v. Lamphier, R M	B A O P & P C
Lupton v. Marshall, B A	Same v. Molloy, P P P A O P & P C
Montgomery v. Marshall, B A	Edgeworth v. Edgeworth, and other causes, R H P P O P C
M'Laine v. M'Dowell, P P	Whyte v. Whyte, P P
Dub. & Livpl. Steam Co. v. Austin, P P	Irvine v. Dane, P P
Pigott v. Glengall, P P	Cleary v. Stoney, P P
Young v. Glengall, P P	Pigott v. Burrell, B A
M'Dermott v. O'Connell, P P B A O P C	Aston v. Campion, P P
Walsh v. Wilson, P P	Twigg v. Pim, P P
Cormick v. Cormick, R M	Bolton v. Ormsby, P P B A O P C
Leatham v. Allen, P P	Mahony v. Mahony, P P
Ottley v. Mason, R H	Borough v. Butler, R M
O'Bierne v. Lodge, P P O P C	Davies v. Adams, R M
Murphy v. Figgis, R M	Decie v. Roche, P P
Small v. Lloyd, R M	Lord Carberry, v. Preston, P P
Smith v. Kearney, P P	Stopford v. Preston, P P
Heron v. Macnevin, P P	Hinds v. Hinds, P P B A O P C
Lealie v. Young, P P
Moriarty v. Mullins, R M

Now ready price, 2s. 6d., by post 3s.

THE LAW OF JUDGMENTS as affected by the Statutes of the 12 and 13 of Victoria, with Introduction, Notes, and Index. By ROBERT WM. OSBORNE ESQ., Barrister-at-law.

Dublin: EDWARD J. MILLIKEN, Law Bookseller and Publisher, 15, College-green.

Just published, 1 Vol. 12mo. cloth, price 5s. by post 5s. 6d.

THE ACT further to facilitate the SALE OF INCUMBERED ESTATES IN IRELAND, (12 and 13 Vic. chap. 77.) with explanatory comments, the Rules and Orders under the Act, as confirmed by the Privy Council, and a General Index.

By JOHN LYONS ESQ., Barrister-at-law.

Dublin: EDWARD J. MILLIKEN, Law Bookseller and Publisher, 15, College-green.

COUNTIES OF DUBLIN AND TYRONE.

BLESSINGTON ESTATES.Reduction of Reserved Price.

The attention of capitalists is directed to the sale of these estates, which will take place on the 23rd of November next. They are the most favourably circumstanced of any Irish estates ever offered for sale, being situated in the North of Ireland, in the centre of a Protestant county, with a thriving and industrious tenantry, where disturbances are unknown. The lands are let at such old and low rents that a large premium is commonly paid, on change of tenants, to the outgoing tenant. A reduction of upwards of 20 per cent. will be made on the reserved price at which these estates were offered for sale at former sales. The Freehold Ground Rents in Dublin, also for sale, are the most secure investment in Ireland.

Particulars may be obtained of Mr. ANDERSON, 2 King's Inns Quay, Dublin.

IMPORTANT SALES OF LORD BLESSINGTON'S ESTATES.

TO MANUFACTURERS AND BUILDERS.

IN CHANCERY.

Charles John Gardiner,
Plaintiff;
Margaret
Countess of Blessington and Others,
Defendants.

Lady Harriet
Countess of D'Orsay,
Plaintiff;
John Mitchell and Others,
Defendants.

Same,
Plaintiff;
James Scott Molloy,
Defendant.

Same,
Plaintiff;
James Scott,
Defendant.

And in the Matter of the Blessington Estates Act 2 Vic. c. 1.

PURSUANT to the final decree in these causes, bearing date the 20th of June 1845, and to said Act of Parliament, and to the order of the 20th of June 1845,

I WILL, on Thursday the 22nd day of November 1845, at one o'clock in the afternoon, at my chamber, on the Inns Quay, in the city of Dublin, set up and

SELL, to the highest and fairest bidder or bidders, all that and those parts of the

MANORS of Newtownstewart and Rath, that is to say, the Town and Lands of Newtownstewart, Deepark, Rakelly, Grange, and Crossballinree; the

TOWNLANDS of Carrigan, Gortinagan, Killynure, Dunsage, Corronary, Killybrack, Lagnabrad, Killymore, Aldaghall, Pubble, Upper Galles and Lower Galles; and also the payable out of the Lands of Lislap, Lurganboy, and Ballyny—all which manors, towns, and lands, and premises are situate in the baronies of Strabane and Omagh, in the county of Tyrone; and also all that and those parts of the Lordship of St. Mary's Abbey, and the Lands of the Grange of Clonliffe, in the county and county of the city of Dublin, and comprising

FEE-FARM RENT of £15 10s. 2d.

PLOTS OF GROUND AND PREMISES, situate in the following streets and places in the CITY AND COUNTY OF DUBLIN, viz.—Berkeley-street, Bohon-street, Blessington-street, Brittain-street, Campbell-street, Great Charles-street, Circular-road, North, Clonliffe, Cross-lane, Donnet-street, Denmark-street, Drumcondra-road, Eccles-wireet, Fitzgibbon-street, Upper Gardiner-street, Lower Gardiner-street, Lower Gloucester-street, Mary's Abbey, Marlborough-street, Mountjoy-street, Russell-street, Rutland-street, Richmond-street, Back-lane-street, St. Andrew-street, Summerhill, Paradise-row—otherwise Wellington-street, Pile-lane, and St. George's-place; and also that containing 100 feet in front to the quay, now called Bachelor's-walk, in the city of Dublin—all which said estates, manors, lordships, lands, hereditaments, and premises are particularly described in said decree, and Act of Parliament, and will be sold for the purposes in said Act of Parliament mentioned.

PIECE OF STRAND

Dated this 6th day of September, 1845.

E. LITTON.

MATTHEW ANDERSON, solicitor.

Two of the townlands mentioned in the foregoing posting adjoin the eastern division of the demesne of Mountjoy Forest, in the vicinity of Omagh; others are intersected by the mail-coach road from Dublin to Londonderry; but the greater number are situate around and in the immediate neighbourhood of Newtownstewart. They contain in all upwards of 9800 acres. Some of the townlands are beautifully situated, and in the very highest state of cultivation, and are all respectably tenanted. The town of Newtownstewart is situate on the west bank of the river Mourne or Strule, a little below its confluence with the Glenely river, which is a currier of various mountain streams. It is surrounded by town parks, which, for fertility and richness of pasture, cannot be excelled. It is a market and post town, distant about seven miles from Omagh, and seven from Strabane; it consists of six streets, and about 350 houses; it contains about 1600 inhabitants, and is well supplied with water, which is conveyed in pipes to the principal houses. This town offers very great inducements to an improving landlord, but particularly to one who would add the encouragement of manufacture to that of agriculture, for there cannot be found a situation presenting greater facilities for the erection and working of a manufactory than at Newtownstewart. The inhabitants are peaceable, well-conducted, and industrious. In the immediate vicinity there is a sufficient quantity of the best flax annually grown to keep the largest factory at work; and in the valley at the entrance into the town, (being part of the townland of Crossballinree, now also offered for sale), there is an eligible site for the erection of a manufactory on the verge of the river Mourne, commanding a never-failing supply of water to any extent. There is in the town a large and handsome church, besides several other places of worship for Presbyterians, Methodists, and Roman Catholics. The Londonderry and Enniskillen Railway, now completed as far as Strabane, will pass by the town. It is intended to sell in the same lot with the townland of Newtownstewart, the several townlands immediately surrounding it, viz.:—Grange, Deepark, Rakelly, and Crossballinree; so that the purchaser of the town shall not be dependent on any adjoining estate for turbary, townships, or land, but shall have within himself sufficient to secure fuel and fuel for all the inhabitants. The whole of this lot contains upwards of 2000 acres, and produces a present rent exceeding £1000 a-year but by Government Valuation it is worth £2500 a-year. There will be sold with the town.

ALL THE RIGHTS AND PRIVILEGES OF LORD OF THE MANOR.

The magnificent mansion and demesne of Baroncomber the seat of the Marquis of Abercorn, are close to the town; and there are within the townland, and in the immediate vicinity, the residences of several country gentlemen and opulent farmers. There are large and valuable freestone and freestone quarries within the lands comprised in the lot, and but a short distance from the town, which are capable of being easily, extensively, and profitably worked. On the whole, therefore, the purchase of these townlands and the adjoining townlands will have an estate rarely equalled within the same limits in a rural district for beauty of situation, completeness of arrangement, respectability of neighbourhood and of tenants, richness of soil, industry and good order of inhabitants, internal sources of improvement, and a water-power sufficient for the working of any machinery, and all under the control of the purchaser himself, as Lord of the extensive Manor in which Newtownstewart is situate, in which character he will be entitled to preside personally, or by his Deputy, in the Court of the Manor.

The Dublin lots now offered for sale comprise several of the most desirable sites for building that can be found on the north side of the city. They also comprise the extensive and beautiful demesne and mansion of Clonliffe, bounded on the north by the river Tolka, having all the advantages of immediate proximity to the city, without liability to any municipal taxes, or yet being as retired as if there were several miles distant from a town. The land is in a high state of cultivation. The house, offices, and gardens are in perfect order, and immediate possession can be given to the purchaser. The House lots in the city of Dublin are held for long terms of years, or for lives renewable for ever; and the rents reserved are clearly value ground rents, which, from the extent of buildings erected, will amount to the same as the certainty of the regular payment of the rents, and the tenants, and others interested in the premises will be enabled to redeem or extinguish the ground rents now payable thereon.

As the lands are to be sold under an Act of Parliament the purchaser can get immediate possession without the expense of investigating title. Maps of the various lands and premises to be sold can be seen at the office of Mr. Anderson (as below), who will be happy to give every information, personally or by letter, respecting the property.

For rentals, conditions of sale, and all further information and particulars, apply to Matthew Anderson, solicitor for Lady Harriet D'Orsay, having the carriage of the decrees and of the proceedings, under the Act of Parliament, and order for sale, No. 2, King's Inns Quay, Dublin, and also to Alexander Werthington, Esq., one of the Trustees under the Act, 20, North Frederick street; Alexander Norman, Esq., receiver of the Dublin Estates, 31, Upper Temple street; Henry Leslie Frend, Esq., receiver of the Tyrone Estates, Calverley, Moyra, and Colles, solicitors for C. J. Gardiner, Esq., Upper Marlborough-street; John Colles, Esq., solicitor for James Scott, Esq., 70, Talbot-street; Hugh Simpson, Esq., solicitor for Tyrone receiver, Aughooly; and Thomas Baker, Esq., Parliamentary Agent, 29, Spring Gardens, London.

MATTHEW ANDERSON, solicitor,
No. 2, King's Inns Quay, Dublin.

15 and 15 VICTORIA, CAP. 68.

C. ROEKE,

STAMP RETAILER AND LAW STATIONER.

Begs to inform Receivers, the Agents of Noblemen, Gentlemen, and Friends, &c., that notwithstanding the repeal of allowance in Receipt, she will continue to keep in stock as heretofore an assortment of Fine and Copperplate Printed Receipts, in Books and otherwise, of every date, which she will dispose of at a trifling additional charge. Special Forms, worked off from Plates, and forwarded with the required duties affixed to any part of the kingdom at the shortest notice.

74, DANE-STREET, DUBLIN.

JUST PUBLISHED,

THE LAW AND PRACTICE relating to the Sale and

Transfer of ENCUMBERED ESTATES in Ireland, as regulated by Statutes 12 and 13 Vic. c. 71, (the Encumbered Estates Act) with introduction, the Act, Explanatory Notes, Forms, the new General Bill re-regulating proceedings for Sale of Encumbered Estates, Schedule of Fees, and a very copious Index.

By JAMES O'DOWD, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.
London: JOHN CROCHFORD, Law Times Office.
Dublin: HODGES and SMITH.

All communications for the IRISH JURIST are to be left, addressed to the Editor, with the Publisher, E. J. MILLIKEN, at COLLEGE GREEN. Correspondents will please give the Name and Address, in the columns of the paper cannot be occupied with answers to Anonymous Communications—nor will the Editor be accountable for the return of Manuscripts, &c.

Orders for the IRISH JURIST left with E. J. MILLIKEN, at COLLEGE GREEN, or by letter (post-paid), will ensure its punctual delivery in Dublin, or its being forwarded to the Country, by Post, on the day of publication.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION—(payable in advance):
Yearly, 30s. Half-yearly, 17s. Quarterly, 9s.

Printed by THOMAS ISAAC WHITE, at his Printing Office, No. 25, FLEET-STREET, in the Parish of St. Andrew, and published at COLLEGE GREEN, in same Parish, by EDWARD JOHNSTON MILLIKEN, residing at the same place, all being in the County of the City of Dublin, Saturday, November, 10, 1845.

MISCELLANEOUS INDEX.

ARTICLES.

- On the object of The Irish Jurist, and the mode in which it will be conducted, 1.
- On the Act for the Sale of Encumbered Estates in Ireland, 2.
- On the Act to amend the Law of Savings Banks, 9.
- On the Irish Poor Law, 17.
- On the Encumbered Estates Act, 18.
- On the purchase by a receiver of an estate over which he is appointed, 26.
- On the case of O'Brien v. the Queen in error, 33.
- On the Encumbered Estates Act, 34.
- On the Irish Poor Law, 41.
- On the declinatory plea in the case of Smith O'Brien in error v. the Queen, 43.
- On the Irish Poor Law, 49.
- On amendments of the record at Nisi Prius, 51.
- On the Irish Poor Law, shewing the injustice of the law as regards the taxation of rent charges, 65.
- On the management of estates in the hands of receivers, 65.
- On the Bill to convert the renewable leasehold Tenure of Lands in Ireland into a Tenure in Fee, 73.
- On the case of Fulton v. Farran, which decides that a creditor who has obtained a charging order on funds in court may obtain the fund on motion without filing a bill, 74.
- On the Irish Poor Law, as to the unequal mode in which the different parts of Ireland are taxed, 81.
- On the administration of property under the control of Courts of Equity, 85.
- On the case of Lyster v. McNamara, which decides that in an ejectment for nonpayment of rent, it is only necessary to serve the tenants in possession, 89.
- On the orders under the Encumbered Estates Act, 91.
- On the Act for the Sale of Encumbered Estates, 97.
- On the payment of money into court, 99.
- On Queen's counsel, 105.
- On the jurisdiction of the courts of law over ecclesiastical livings, 107.
- On the Poor Law, as to the policy of rendering each estate responsible for the support of its own poor, 113.
- On the divisions of counties for holding Quarter Sessions, 131.
- On the case of the Queen v. Duffy, 129.
- On the law of settlement for the poor, 132.
- On the destitution of Connaught and its cause, 137.
- On the Statute of Limitations, 138.
- On the plantation of Connaught, 145.
- On the relation of landlord and tenants by instruments not under seal, 146.
- On the plantation of Connaught, 153.
- On the relation of landlord and tenant by instruments not under seal, whether there is any implied covenant as to the fitness of land for any particular purpose, 155.
- On the management of estates under the control of Courts of Equity, 161.
- On the production of documents, 162.
- On the plan of a commission for the sale of encumbered estates, 169.
- On the alienation by a married woman of a reversionary chose in action, 171.
- On the Bill for the Amendment of the Law of Bankruptcy, 177.
- On the question, whether in an action for malicious arrest,

ARTICLES, (continued.)

- in the absence of direct proof, malice can be inferred from mere negligence, 179.
- On the renewal of habere under the 9 and 10 Vic., cap. 111, 185.
- On the committee to inquire into the law of receivers, 193.
- Whether, in a sale of specific chattels, there is any warranty of title implied in the contract, 195.
- On the Encumbered Estates Act, 200.
- On the amended Poor Law Act, 203.
- On the renewal of habere under the 9 and 10 Vic., cap. 111, 209.
- On the effect of lodging money in court after writ served, but before declaration filed, 210.
- On the letter of Isaac Butt, Esq., on the Rate in Aid, 217.
- On the Irish Encumbered Estates Act, 219.
- On the Act for the Amendment of the Laws relating to Attorneys and Solicitors, 225.
- On the case of Delany v. Newland (1 Ir. Jur., 238), deciding that where a bill is tainted with fraud, the holder must show he gave value, 228.
- On the case of O'Brien in error v. the Queen, 233.
- On the employment of paupers under the Poor Law Acts, 235.
- On the practice of the Court of Exchequer in this country, by which the sheriff in an interpleader case obtains his costs, 236.
- On the Encumbered Estates Act, 241.
- On the unequal taxation of tithe rent charge under the Poor Law, 243.
- On the motion for an inquiry into receivers in Courts of Equity, 249.
- On the lien of a solicitor on papers, 257.
- On the Bill to Amend the Law of Judgments, 265.
- On making judgment creditors parties to suits in Equity, 267.
- On the alteration in the law of judgments, 273.
- On the Act for the Conversion of renewable Leases into Tenures in Fee, 275.
- On the alterations introduced by the House of Lords into the Encumbered Estates Act, 276.
- On bills of revivor for costs, 281.
- On the computation of time in the disposal of distresses for rent, 283.
- On the question, whether, for the purposes of pleading, the money counts are to be considered one, or several, 285.
- On the report of the committee on receivers on the alterations in the Judgment Bill, 293.
- On the case of Molony v. Nugent, deciding that a solicitor cannot be a receiver, 294.
- On the difference of opinion between the Master of the Rolls and the Masters in Chancery concerning the appointment of solicitors as receivers, 301.
- On the management of estates by receivers, 306.
- On the question, whether, in actions on written instruments, the description by an initial letter without any excuse for not setting it forth fully, is good cause of demurrer, 310.
- On the case of Crosbie v. Thompson (11 L. E. R., 404) which decided that evidence tantamount to an admission might be given in evidence, though not put in issue by the pleadings, 317.

ARTICLES, (continued.)

- On the law of interpleader and the affidavit containing the statement of the plaintiff's claim, 318.
 On the liability of plaintiffs in stayed suits to pay the costs of the defendants, 325.
 On the amended Poor Law Act, 333.
 On the amended Judgment Act, 341.
 On the Encumbered Estates Act, 349.
 On the letter of Lord Brougham, stating that there will be a digest of the criminal law, 353.
 On the letter of Lord Brougham on the preparation and alteration of bills, 357.
 On the alterations required in the law of landlord and tenant in Ireland, 361.
 On the effect of a release of a judgment over part of the lands of the consor, 365.
 On the new Irish Encumbered Estates Act, 369.
 On the rule of the Commission which prevents biddings being opened at advance of price, 389.
ATTACHMENTS, bill to alter law of, 245.
ATTORNEYS, article on the act for the amendment of the law of, 225.
BANKRUPTCY, bill for the amendment of, 187.
BAR.
 Call to the bar in Hilary Term, 1849, 108.
 Appointment of Queen's Counsel, Hilary, 1849, 117.
 Call to the bar, Easter Term, 1849, 196.
 Call to the bar, Trinity Term, 1849, 237.
BILLS.
 For the Amendment of the Law of Bankruptcy, 187.
 For the Sale of Encumbered Estates, abstract of, 227.
 For amending the Laws relating to Solicitors, 237.
 For Rate in Aid, 239.
 To protect Justices from Actions, 243.
 To alter the Law of Attachments, 245.
 To amend the Law of Judgments, 269.
 For the better Management of Estates under the Court of Chancery in Ireland, 351.
BROUGHAM, Lord, letter of, on criminal law, &c., 353-357.
BUTT, ISAAC, on the letter of as to Rate in Aid, 217; evidence of before Judgment Committee, 296.
CESS, GRAND JURY, act regulating collection of, 31, 37, 45.
CHANCERY, letter on the reform of, 250.
CHOSE in action, alienation by married women of, 171.
CIVIL BILL Appeals, Act regulating, 46.
CIRCUITS of the Judges, Spring Assizes, 1849, 117.
COMMISSIONERS under the Encumbered Estates Act, 311.
CONNAUGHT, articles on, 187, 153.
CONSTABULARY, Act to regulate, 150.
CONTAGION, Act to prevent, 221.
COSTS, revivor for, 281; liability of plaintiff in stayed suits to, 325.
CRIME, Act for prevention of, 14, 20.
CRIMINAL LAW, Act to amend, 102, 157.
CROWN and Government, Act for Security of, 26.
DEBT, Act regulating Law of Imprisonment for Payment of out of real Estate, 160.
DISTRESS, Act for relief of, 222.
DOCUMENTS, article on the production of, 162.
DUBLIN POLICE, Act regulating, 246, 251.
DUNNE, RICHARD, disbarred, 99.
ECCLESIASTICAL LIVINGS, jurisdiction of courts of law over, 107; Act to amend Law of, 47, 53.
EJECTMENT for nonpayment of rent, service article on, 69.
ELECTION PETITIONS, Act to amend Law of, 161, 190, 197, 220.
EVIDENCE—Extract from the evidence of M. Longfield, Esq., before the Poor Law Committee, 296.
 Of Isaac Butt, Esq., 298.
 Of J. A. Lawson, Esq., 305, 311.
 Of William Neilson Handcock, Esq., 370.
 Extract from the evidence of Sir E. Sugden before the Receiver Committee, 312, 320.
 Of the Right Hon. T. B. C. Smith, 322, 328, 335, 343.

EVIDENCE, (continued.)

- Of William Tighe Hamilton, Esq., 343, 347, 351, 353, 358, 362.
 Of William M. M'Clay, Esq., 363, 366.
 Admissions not put in issue may be given in evidence, 317.
FISHERY, Act for improvement of, 165, 173.
FRAUD, on the question whether, when a bill is tainted with, the holder must show he gave value, 226.
GENERAL ORDERS for the office of taxing Master of the Court of Chancery, 4.
 General orders pursuant to the 11th Vic., cap. 68, for better securing trust funds, and for the relief of trustees, 4.
 Collection of the general orders in Chancery since the year 1843, 67.
 General Orders in Chancery, Jan. 3, 1849, 3.
 General orders under the Encumbered Estates Act, 92.
 General orders of the 24th of June, 1842, in the Court of Exchequer, for the regulation of recognisances, and the duties of receivers, 148.
HABEAS CORPUS Suspension Act, 46.
HABERE, article on the renewal of, 165, 209.
HANDCOCK W. N., evidence of, on Poor Law, 370.
INCUMBERED ESTATES, articles on the first Act for the sale of, 2, 17, 34, 97.
 Article on the orders under, 91.
 General orders under, 92.
 Act for sale of, 104, 118, 127, 134.
 Articles on the second Incumbered Estates Act, 200, 246, 276, 349.
 Commissioners, 311.
 Proceedings of court, 373, 391.
 Officers under, 375.
INITIALS, on descriptions by, in actions on written instruments, 310.
INTERPLEADER, cost of sheriff in motion, 226.
 Article on law of, 318.
JOINT STOCK COMPANIES winding up of, 54, 62, 76, 84, 87, 100.
JUDGMENTS, article on the bill to amend law of, 263, 273, 341.
 Making judgment creditors parties to suits in Equity, 267.
JUSTICES BILL to protect from actions, 243.
 Act, to facilitate duties of, 53.
JURIST, IRISH, article on the object of, 1.
JUVENILE OFFENDERS, Act for punishment of, 16.
LAND, Act for purchase of, for Poor Houses, 30.
 Act to facilitate transfer of, 262.
LANDLORD and TENANT, on the relation of, by instruments not under seal, 146.
 Alterations required in the law of, 361.
LEASEHOLD TENURE, Bill for the conversion of, into a tenure in fee, 204, 211, 275.
LEASEHOLD TENURE, article on the bill to convert, 2.
LEGAL DIRECTORY, 67.
LESSEES of Tithe Rent Charge, Act enabling to deduct Poor Rate from rent, 158.
LETTER, containing observations as to the transfer of the equity jurisdiction of the Court of Exchequer to the Court of Chancery, 186.
 By Isaac Butt, Esq., on the Rate in Aid, 217.
 On the course pursued to supply the vacancy in parliament caused by the attainder of W. S. O'Brien, 264.
 On the reform of the Court of Chancery, 259.
 On the foundation of Legal Lectureships, 295.
 On the appointment of Solicitors Receivers, 303.
 On the appointment of the Commissioners, under the Incumbered Estate Act, 326.
 On Trial by Jury, 344.
 On the examination of persons accused of crimes, 334.
LIEN of solicitor on papers, 257.
LIMITATIONS, article on the Statute of, 130.
LOAN FUND, reproductive institution, Act dissolving, 253.
LONGFIELD, M., evidence of, before Judgment Committee, 296.

ARDS, report of, Committee on Irish Poor Law, 283.
 BONY, PIERCE, sworn in Clerk of the Crown, 99.
 BRIED WOMAN, alienation by, of reversionary chose in action, 171.
 NES, Act to amend law of, 29.
 NEY, article on the effect of lodging in Court, 210.
 Courts, whether one, or several, 285.
 GLIGENCE, on the question whether in an action for Malicious Arrest malice can be inferred from, 179.
 SIPRIUS, amendments in record at, 51.
 ATBS, Unlawful, Act to prevent administering of, 165.
 BRIEN v. THE QUEEN, article on case of, 33, 233.
 Declaratory Plea, article on, 43.
 SENGERS, Act to provide for carriage of, to North America, 22.
 UPERS, on the employment of, 235.
 TIONS under Incumbered Estates Court, 391.
 LICE DUBLIN, Act regulating, 246, 251.
 OR, Act to provide for burial of, 30.
 et, for protection of, evicted from dwelling, 103.
 OR LAW, report by Committee of House of Lords on, 263.
 Evidence of M. Longfield, Esq., before, 296.
 L Butt, Esq., 298.
 A. Lawson, Esq., 305, 311.
 William N. Handcock, Esq., before, 370.
 icles on, 17, 41, 49, 57, 85, 113, 132, 203, 235, 333.
 T OFFICE, Act to regulate money orders of, 164.
 SONS, Act to raise money for repair of, 47.
 LIC WORKS, Act to facilitate the completion of,
 5, 13, 30, 134.
 ARTER SESSIONS, on divisions of counties for, 121.
 EN'S COUNSEL, article on, 105.
 LWAYS, Act to give time for making, 21.
 EIN AID, Letter of Isaac Butt, Esq., on, 217. ill for, 239.
 RIVER, purchase by, 25.
 n the management of estates in hands of, 73, 308.
 icles on the Committee on, 193, 249.
 report of Committee, 287.
 ither a solicitor can be, 294, 301.
 EASE of a Judgment from part of lands of Conusor, effect of, 365.
 PORT of the Committee of the House of Lords on the Irish Poor Law, 283.
 PORT of the Committee on Receivers, 287.
 Of the Committee of the Society of Attorneys and Solicitors in Ireland, on the management of Estates by Receivers, with suggestions for the improvement of the present system, 304.
 VIEWS.
 be Act to Facilitate the Sale of Incumbered Estates in Ireland. By Hamilton Smythe, Esq., 11.
 be Act to Facilitate the Sale of Incumbered Estates in Ireland. By W. M. McCay, Solicitor, 11. be Act to Amend the Law of Imprisonment for Debt.
 By William Gernon, Esq., 35.
 Treatise of the Law of Property, as Administered by the House of Lords. By Sir E. Sugden, 115, 122.
 The Act further to facilitate the Sale of Incumbered Estates in Ireland, by John Lyons, Esq., 395.
 LMON, Act to prevent destruction of, 140.
 VINGS BANKS, on the amendment in law of, 9.
 Act to amend laws relating to Ireland, 271.
 ERGEANT AT LAW will not be heard in the Masters
 Office, 67.
 HERIFF, as to costs of, in interpleader motion, 236.
 LICITORS, Bill for amending the laws of, 237.
 LICITORS Lien, Article on, 257.
 ITS, Act enabling Ecclesiastical persons to compromise, 156.
 STATUTES ABSTRACTED.
 11th Vic. cap. 1. An Act to facilitate the Completion in certain Cases of Public Works in Ireland, 5-13.
 Cap. 2. For the prevention of Crime in Ireland, 14-20.
 Cap. 3. To give further Time for making certain Railways, 21.

STATUTES ABSTRACTED, (continued.)

Cap. 6. To make Provision for carriage of Passengers to North America, 22.
 Cap. 12. For the better Security of the Crown and Government of the United Kingdom, 28.
 Cap. 13. For amending the Law for the leasing of Mines in Ireland, 29.
 Cap. 17. To facilitate the completion of Public Works, 30.
 Cap. 25. To extend the Power of purchasing or hiring Land for the use of Workhouses in Ireland, and for providing for the burial of the Poor, 30.
 Cap. 26. To remove Difficulties in the appointment of Collectors of Grand Jury Cess, and to remove Doubts as to the Jurisdiction of the divisional Justices of the Police District of Dublin relating to the recovery of Poor-rates, 31-37.
 Cap. 28. To amend the Law of Imprisonment for Debt in Ireland, and to improve the Remedies for the recovery of Debts, and of the possession of Tenements in Cities and Towns, 37.
 Cap. 32. To facilitate the collection of County Cess, 45.
 Cap. 34. To amend the Acts relative to Appeals from Decrees and Dismissals on Civil Bills in the County and County of the City of Dublin, 46.
 Cap. 35. To empower the Lord Lieutenant or the Chief Governor of Ireland, to apprehend and detain until the 1st of March, 1849, Persons suspected of conspiring against Her Majesty's Person and Government, 46.
 Cap. 39. To facilitate the raising of Money by Corporate Bodies for building or repairing Prisons, 47.
 Cap. 40. To amend the Laws relating to the Ecclesiastical Unions and Divisions of Parishes in Ireland, 47-53.
 Cap. 42. To facilitate the performances of the Duties of Justices in England and Wales with respect to Persons charged with indictable Offences, 53.
 Cap. 45. To amend the Act to facilitate the winding up of Joint-stock Companies, 54, 69, 76, 84, 87, 100.
 Cap. 46. For the removal of Defects in the Administration of Criminal Justice, 102.
 Cap. 47. For the protection and relief of the Destitute
 Poor evicted from their Dwellings in Ireland, 103.
 Cap. 48. An Act to facilitate the Sale of Encumbered Estates in Ireland, 109, 116, 127, 134.
 Cap. 51. To provide additional Funds for Loans for Drainage, and other works of public utility in Ireland, 134.
 Cap. 52. To explain the Acts for preventing the destruction of Salmon, 140.
 Cap. 59. For the more speedy Trial and Punishment of Juvenile Offenders in Ireland, 140.
 Cap. 68. For extending to Ireland the Act for better securing Trust Funds, and for relief of Trustees, 142.
 Cap. 69. For repealing so much of the 23 and 24 Geo.
 3 as relates to the giving Satisfaction to the Parties injured, 143-149.
 Cap. 72. To amend the Acts relating to the Constabulary Force in Ireland, 150.
 Cap. 76. To enable Archbishops, Bishops, and other Persons in Ireland, to compromise Suits touching their Right of Patronage, 156.
 Cap. 78. For the further amendment of the Criminal Law, 157.
 Cap. 80. To empower Lessors of Tithe Rent Charge to deduct a Proportion of Poor-rate from Rent, 158.
 Cap. 81. For the further regulation of Steam Navigation, and for limiting in certain Cases the Number of Passengers to be conveyed in Steam Vessels, 159.
 Cap. 87. To extend the Provisions of the 11 Geo. IV. and 1 Wm. IV. cap. 47, to facilitate the payment of Debts out of real Estate, 160.
 Cap. 88. For regulating the Money Order Department of the Post Office, 164.
 Cap. 89. To amend the Act to prevent the administering unlawful oaths in Ireland, 165.
 Cap. 92. For the protection and improvement of the

STATUTES ABSTRACTED, (continued.)

- Salmon, Trout, and other inland Fisheries of Ireland, 165-173.
- Cap. 98. To amend the Law for the trial of Election Petitions, 181, 190, 197, 220.
- Cap. 105. To prohibit the importation of Cattle to prevent Contagion, 221.
- Cap. 106. To amend the 10 and 11 Vic. cap. 10, which rendered necessary certain Proceedings for relief of Distress in Ireland, 222.
- Cap. 107. To prevent Contagion amongst Cattle, 222, 246.
- Cap. 113. To amend the Acts relating to the Dublin Police, 246, 251.
- Cap. 115. To vest in Her Majesty the Property of the Irish Loan Fund Reproductive Institution, and to dissolve that Institution, 253.
- Cap. 120. To facilitate the transfer of Land, 262.

STATUTES ABSTRACTED, (continued.)

- Cap. 133. To amend the Laws relating to Savings Banks in Ireland, 271.
- Act further to facilitate the Sale of Incumbered Estates, 375.
- STEAM NAVIGATION, Act to regulate, 159.
- SUITS, Act enabling Ecclesiastical Persons to compromise, 156.
- TIME, computation of in disposing of Distress for Rent, 263.
- TITHE RENT CHARGE, on the unequal taxation of, 243.
- TITLE, article on the question whether, on a sale of specific chattels, there is any warranty of title implied in the contract, 195.
- TRESPASS, Judgment of Mr. Napier in the case of Pilsworth v. Grand Canal Company, 26.
- TRUST FUNDS, Act to regulate, 142.

THE IRISH JURIST.

VOL. I.—REPORTS.

CONTAINING

REPORTS OF CASES DECIDED IN THE SEVERAL COURTS OF EQUITY AND COMMON LAW.

WITH A DIGEST

OF THE CASES REPORTED IN THE FIRST TEN VOLS. OF THE IRISH LAW REPORTS, IN THE JURIST FOR THE YEAR ENDING MICHAELMAS, 1849;

AND

AN INDEX TO THE CASES IN EQUITY, REPORTED IN THE JURIST DURING THE SAME PERIOD.

DUBLIN:
EDWARD J. MILLIKEN, 15, COLLEGE GREEN.

MDCCCXLIX.

DUBLIN: PRINTED BY THOMAS L. WHITE, FLEET STREET.

JUDGES OF THE SEVERAL COURTS

DURING THE PERIOD OF THE DECISIONS REPORTED IN THIS VOLUME.

Chancery,

RIGHT HON. MAZIERE BRADY, C.

RIGHT HON. THOMAS BERRY CUSACK SMITH, M. R.

Queen's Bench,

RIGHT HON. FRANCIS BLACKBURNE, C. J.

HON. PHILIP CECIL CRAMPTON,

RIGHT HON. LOUIS PERRIN,

RIGHT HON. RICHARD MOORE.

Common Pleas,

RIGHT HON. JOHN DOHERTY, C. J.

HON. ROBERT TORRENS,

RIGHT HON. NICHOLAS BALL,

HON. JOSEPH DEVONSHER JACKSON.

Exchequer,

RIGHT HON. DAVID RICHARD PIGOT, C. B.

HON. RICHARD PENNEFATHER,

RIGHT. HON. JOHN RICHARDS,

RIGHT HON. THOMAS LEFROY.

Bankruptcy,

JOHN MACAN, ESQ., Q. C.

HON. PATRICK PLUNKET, Q. C.

Prerogative,

RIGHT HON. RICHARD KEATINGE, LL.D.

Consistory,

JOSEPH O. RATCLIFFE, ESQ., Q. C.

Admiralty,

JOSEPH STOCK, ESQ., LL.D., Q. C.

Attorney-General—RIGHT HON. JAMES HENRY MONAHAN.

Solicitor-General—HON. JOHN HATCHELL.

NAMES OF THE REPORTERS.

Chancery,

ROBERT LONG, ESQ., AND JOHN PITT KENNEDY, ESQ., BARRISTERS-AT-LAW.

Rolls,

WILLIAM BURKE, ESQ., AND WILLIAM JOHN DUNDAS, ESQ., BARRISTERS-AT-LAW.

Equity Exchequer,

CHARLES HARE HEMPHILL, ESQ., AND WILLIAM HICKSON, ESQ., BARRISTERS-AT-LAW.

Bankrupt Court,

ROBERT GRIFFIN, ESQ., AND W. G. CHAMNEY, ESQ., BARRISTERS-AT-LAW.

Exchequer Chamber,

JOHN BLACKHAM, ESQ., AND A. HICKEY, ESQ., BARRISTERS-AT-LAW.

Queen's Bench,

FLORENCE M'CARTHY, ESQ., AND SAMUEL V. PEET, ESQ., BARRISTERS-AT-LAW.

Common Pleas,

ROBERT GRIFFIN, ESQ., AND W. G. CHAMNEY, ESQ., BARRISTERS-AT-LAW.

Exchequer of Pleas,

CHARLES HARE HEMPHILL, ESQ., AND WILLIAM HICKSON, ESQ., BARRISTERS-AT-LAW.

Admiralty Court,

ROBERT GRIFFIN, ESQ., AND W. G. CHAMNEY, ESQ., BARRISTERS-AT-LAW.

TABLE OF CASES.

EQUITY.

	Page		Page		Page		Page
Abbott v. Abbott,	155	Cronin, Barry v.	397	Holmes, Tangney v.	125, 162	Molony v. Nugent,	332, 341
Ahearn, Bell v.	163	Cully v. Lucas,	344	Holmes, O'Keefe v.	78	Molloy v. French,	350
Alcock, Alston v.	282	Cunninghame, Daniel v.	36	Horne, Bagnall v.	33	Moore v. Marsh,	42
Allman, Crofts v.	1, 113	Daniel v. Cunningham,	36	Hornbrook v. Ware,	117	Montmorency v. Pratt,	315
Alston v. Alcock,	282	Darcey in re ,	212	Hort v. Bloomfield,	68	Montmorency, Levings v.	251, 285
Anderson v. N. and W. Railway,	11	Darley v. Hunter,	194	Hunt v. Hodges,	33	Morrissey v. Fitzpatrick,	225
Anderson v. Mulvany,	154	Delap v. Hall,	312	Hunter, Darley v.	194	Mulvany, Anderson v.	154
Att.-gen. v. Jackson,	177	Disney, Sherlock v.	127, 195	Hunter v. Lord Limerick,	273	Mulloy, Leech v.	50
Austen, Richardson, v.	20	Dickson ex parte ,	250	Hutchins v. O'Sullivan,	161, 325	Murphy v. Balfe,	218
Bagnall v. Horne,	33	Dogherty, Dorcus v.	220	Hutton, ex parte ,	34, 107	Murdock v. Murdock,	284
Baker v. M'Dermott,	162	Donegal v. Gregg,	201	Irvine, v. Rogers,	74	Murray v. Richardson,	73
Balfé, Murphy v.	218	Donovan v. Sweeney,	165	Irwin v. De Massey,	243	Nangle v. Nangle,	78
Barrington, Staunton v.	347	Dooley v. Harding,	330	Irwin v. Rogers,	17	Neabitt, Stamer v.	298
Barry, Townshend, v.	19	Dooner v. Dooner,	209	Jackson, Att.-gen. v.	177	Newry and W. Railway,	11
Barry v. Cronin,	297	Dorcus v. Dogherty,	220	Jackson, Kelly v.	233	Norris, Belas v.	267
Belas v. Norris,	267	Dower v. Roxane,	58	Johnstone, ex parte ,	132	Nugent, Geale v.	319, 361
Belcher v. Belcher,	266	Downing v. Hodder,	137	Jordan v. Grey,	315	Nugent v. Leyden,	139
Bell, in re ,	349	Dublin Archbishop of v. Trimleston,	49	Kelly, ex parte ,	1, 155	Nugent v. Piers,	211
Bell v. Ahearn,	153	Dublin and Dundrum Railway, Read v.	19	Kelly in re ,	329	Nugent, Molony v.	322, 341
Belmore v. Belmore,	217	Dundas v. Blake,	121	Kelly v. Bonyng,	3	Nugent v. Waters,	35
Bennett v. Bernard,	145	Egan, Bridge v.	43	Kelly v. Bannison,	17	O'Brien v. Bernard,	266
Bernard, Bennett, v.	145	Ellard v. Cooper,	27	Kelly v. Fox,	02	O'Brien, Molony v.	20
Besconet v. Waller,	150	Ellard v. Cooper,	27	Kelly v. Jackson,	233	O'Connell, Mahony v.	265
Bernard O'Brien v.	266	Elliott v. Elliott,	165	Kelson v. Lewis,	226, 243	O'Connell, M'Dermott v.	106, 330
Bennison, Kelly v.	17	Evans, Putland v.	68	Keogh v. Keogh,	226	O'Connor v. Malone,	177
Biggs, Fawcett v.	352	Farran, Fulton v.	66	Kennedy, ex parte ,	147	O'Ferrall L. and W. Railway, v.	193
Blake v. Comins,	330	Fawcett v. Biggs,	352	Kerr, Foster v.	57	O'Flaherty, Martin v.	345
Blake, Macnamara v.	317	Farrell, Phibbe v.	265	Kieran v. Corr,	9	O'Grady v. Glover,	153
Blake v. French,	66	Fitzpatrick, Morrissey v.	225	King v. Brownrigg,	81	O'Keefe v. Lanigan,	210, 328
Blake, Dundas v.	121	Fitzpatrick, Cochrane v.	10	Kirkwood v. Lloyd,	225	O'Keefe v. Holmes,	78
Blancy, ex parte ,	35	Fitzsimons, Guinness v.	357	Lanigan, O'Keefe v.	210, 328	O'Loughnane, Guirey v.	283
Blennerhasset, Lord Cork v.	164	Fivey, Seaver v.	258	Law, Leech v.	41	O'Sullivan, Hutchins v.	161, 325
Blessinton, Gardiner v.	250	Forbes, Loftie v.	352	Lawler, Harvey v.	283	Ogleby v. Campbell,	106
Bloomfield, Hort v.	68	Forbes, Hare v.	352	Lawler v. Lowry,	251	Ormsby, Weir v.	283
Bonyng, Kelly v.	3	Foster v. Kerr,	57	Lawson v. Griffin,	225	Orr v. Milliken,	217
Brabazon v. Lord Lucan,	116	Fox, Kelly v.	20	Leech v. Mulloy,	50	Osborne, Carr v.	2
Bridge v. Egan,	43	Fraser, Steele v.	139	Leech v. Law,	41	Oxmantown, Hackett v.	25
Browne, Tilly v.	258	French, Blake v.	66	Leyden, Nugent v.	139	Phibbe v. Farrell,	265
Browne, Campbell v.	267	French, Molloy v.	350	Lewis, Kelson v.	226, 243	Phillips, Hillas v.	41
Brown, Beg. v.	162	French, Stannus v.	299	Levinge v. De Montmorency,	251, 285	Piers, Nugent v.	211
Brownrigg, King v.	81	Fulton v. Farran,	66	Limerick & W. Railway v. O'Ferrall,	193	Portarlington, Prater v.	259
Bryan v. Richardson,	298	Galway, Clift v.	36	Limerick Lord, Hunter v.	273	Porter v. Vesey,	235
Burton Helsham, v.	164	Gardiner v. Blessinton,	250	Lindsay v. Lindsay,	218, 289	Potts v. Turnley,	57
Byrne v. Gardiner,	250	Gardiner, Byrne v.	250	Lodge, Stannard v.	221	Powell v. Powell,	234
Callaghan v. Callaghan,	42, 350	Geale v. Nugent,	319, 341	Lloyd, Kirkwood v.	225	Pratt, Montmorency v.	315
Campbell, v. Brown	267	Glover, O'Grady v.	153	Loftie v. Forbes,	352	Prater v. Portarlington,	259
Campbell, Ogleby v.	106	Graves v. Graves,	155	Lowry v. Lawler,	251	Putland v. Evans,	68
Carnegie, Coppinger v.	27	Grey, Jordan v.	315	Lucan, Brabazon v.	116	Ranfury, Vance v.	284
Carr v. Osborne,	2	Gregg, Donegal v.	201	Lucas, Cully v.	344	Rankin M'Grehan v.	2
Chichester, Smith v.	65	Green v. M'Clintock,	235	Macnamara v. Blake,	317	Read v. D. & D. Railway,	19
Church, Buskell v.	185, 259	Griffin, Lawson v.	225	Macmahony v. O'Connell,	265	Reeves v. Cox,	169, 193
Clary v. Cleary,	79	Guinness v. Fitzsimons,	357	Malone, O'Connor v.	177	Regina v. Browne,	162
Clift v. Galway,	36	Guinness in re ,	359	Massey, Irwin v.	243	Reilly v. Shell,	31, 226
Cochrane v. Fitzpatrick,	10	Guirey v. O'Loughnane,	283	Massey, Moore v.	42	Richardson v. Austen,	20
Collins, Roche v.	282	Hackett v. Oxmantown,	25	Martin v. O'Flaherty,	345	Richardson, Murray v.	73
Comins, Blake v.	330	Hall, Delap v.	312	Maturin v. Wilson,	281	Richardson, Bryan v.	298
Cooper, Ellard v.	27	Hamilton v. Synge,	201	M'Alpine v. St. George,	129	Roche v. Collins,	282
Coppinger v. Carnegie,	27	Hamilton v. Hamilton,	241	M'Clintock, Green v.	235	Roe, Sherlock v.	177
Cork v. Blennerhasset,	164	Harman, Scott v.	267	M'Dermott, Baker v.	162	Rogers, Irwin v.	17, 74
Corkers in re ,	316	Harvey v. Lawler,	283	M'Dermot v. O'Connell,	106, 330	Rowland v. M'Donnell,	195
Cork, in re Commissioners,	19	Harding, Dooley v.	330	M'Donnell, Rowland v.	195	Roxane, Dower v.	58
Corr, Kieran v.	9	Hare v. Forbes,	352	M'Grehan v. Rankin,	2	Buskell v. Church,	185, 259
Cox, Reeves v.	169, 193	Haseard, Steward v.	291	Meredith v. Creed,	210	Sandys, Whitelaw v.	150
Cox, Tomlinson v.	17	Helsham v. Burton,	164	Milliken, Orr v.	217	Scott v. Harman,	267
Creed, Meredith v.	210	Henry, Stafford v.	133	Molony v. O'Brien,	20
Crofts v. Allman,	113	Hillas v. Phillips,	41
		Hodder, Downing v.	137
		Hodges, Hunt v.	33

TABLE OF CASES.

	Page		Page		Page		Page
Scott v. Scott,	297	Staunton v. Barrington,	347	Trimleston, Archbishop		Walshe, Tighe v.	Page
Seaver v. Fivoy,	258	Steele v. Frazer,	139	of Dublin v.	49	Walshe v. Sheehy,	76
Sheehy, Walshe v.	76	St. George, M'Alpine v.	139	Turnley in re,	244, 257	Ware Hornibrooke v.	117
Sheil, Reilly v.	31, 226	Steward v. Hassard,	291	Turnley, Potts v.	57	Waters, Nugent v.	35
Sherlock v. Disney,	127, 195	Sweeny, Donovan v.	165	Vance v. Ranfurley,	284	Waters, Wyse v.	130
Sherlock v. Roe,	177	Syngé, Hamilton v.	201	Vesey, Porter v.	235	Weir v. Ormsby,	263
Smith v. Chichester,	65	Tangney v. Holmes,	125, 162	Voghan in re,	250	Whitelaw v. Sandys,	130
Stafford v. Henry,	133	Tighe v. Walsh,	36	Walker, Williams v.	331	Wilson, Maturin v.	301
Stamer v. Nesbitt,	298	Tilly v. Browne,	258	Wall in re,	1	Williams v. Walker,	331
Stannard v. Lodge,	221	Tomlinson v. Cox,	17	Waller, Bessonnet v.	150	Wyse v. Waters,	130
Stannus v. French,	299	Townshend v. Barry,	19

LAW.

Ackland v. Grant,	60	De Burgo v. Gabbett,	276	Kean v. Strong,	333	Potter, Broadbent v.	264
Agricultural Cattle Insurance Co. v. Cupen,	354	De Clifford v. Ejector,	271	Kelly v. Shaw,	292	Prendergast v. Glengall,	68
Allingham v. Walker,	119	Delacour v. Murphy,	46	Kelly, Clarke v.	294	Purcell, lessee Parsons v.	213
Anderson, Bennett v.	245	Delany v. Newland,	238	Kelly, Holt v.	118	Quin, Midland Railway v.	200
Aylmer v. Conlan,	21	Dempsey, Fennell v.	64	Kennedy, Reade v.	127	Reade lessee v. Kennedy,	127
B. & B. Railway, Falls v.	303	Develin, Carroll v.	22	Kerr, King v.	261	Regina, O'Brien v.	160, 249
Ballina Poor Law Guardians v. Walshe,	70	Dillon, Castlereagh Union v.	229	Kershaw v. Lindsay,	31	Regina v. Darcy,	207
Baldwin v. Irwin,	215	Doe v. O'Brien,	128	King v. Kerr,	261	Regina v. Duffy,	81, 167, 190
Baker lessee v. Hart,	247	Dore v. —, —,	271	Kinnears, v. Evans	128	Regina, Gogarty v.	203
Barker v. Figgis,	22	Dowling lessee v. Graves,	38	Lacey, Fitzgerald v.	110	Regina, Martin v.	50
Batt, Close v.	256	Duffy, Regina v.	81, 167, 180	Lambert, Clannmorris v.	267	Regina v. Mitchell,	4
Batcock, Cole v.	331	Dunlop, M'Neil v.	269	Lidwell, Waters v.	45	Regina v. Simson,	200
Behan, Hickman v.	80	Evans v. Figgis,	109	Lindsay v. Going,	276	Regina v. Sugden,	58
Belfast Corporation v. Tisdall,	206	Evans, Jeffrys v.	151	Lloyd, Butler v.	37	Regina v. Thompson,	207
Bennett v. Sandheim,	215	Evans, Kinnears v.	128	Lloyd, Kane v.	206	Regina v. —, —,	236
Bennett v. Anderson,	245	Eyre, Mandeville v.	269	Lucan, Castlebar Union v.	142	Reilly v. Jessop,	7
Berkley, M'Evers v.	299	Falls v. B. & B. Railway,	303	Luscombe v. Blake,	248	Reynolds v. Faulkner,	164
Blake, Green v.	271	Faulkner, Reynolds v.	164	Lyndsay, Kershaw v.	31	Richardson v. Newenham,	204
Blake, Luscombe v.	248	Fay v. Morphy,	22	Lyons lessee v. Wilkinson	270	Ritchie, Smith v.	253
Booth in re,	68	Fennell v. Dempsey,	64	Macan, Hunter v.	12	Roche v. O'Brien,	157
Brady v. Rotherham,	246	Figgis, Scully v.	16	Mandeville v. Eyre,	269	Rooney, Daly v.	196
Brazier, Swallow v.	238	Figgis, Barker v.	22	Martin v. Regina,	50	Rotherham, Brady v.	246
Broadbent v. Potter,	264	Figgis, Evans v.	109	Maxwell, Middleton v.	198	Sandheim, Bennett v.	215
Browne v. Browne,	70	Fitzgerald v. Lacey,	110	M'Evers v. Berkley,	209	Scully v. Figgis,	16
Brownrigg v. Cruikshank	212	Fitzgerald v. Coates,	64	M'Evoe, Smith v.	236	Sharp v. Shearman,	15
Brassington, Vance v.	8	Gabbett, De Burgo v.	276	M'Kenna v. Harnett,	232	Shaw, Kelly v.	292
Burns, Hobson lessee v.	227	Glengall, Prendergast v.	69	M'Kenna, Grubb v.	288	Shearman, Sharp v.	15
Bulfin, Mitchell v.	143	Gogarty v. Regina,	203	M'Neil v. Dunlop,	269	Simson, Regina v.	200
Butler v. Lloyd,	37	Going, Lindsay v.	276	M'Neil v. M'Neil,	16	Skinnars, Murray v.	39
Campion, Healey v.	24	Good, Harris v.	216	Middleton v. Maxwell,	198	Swallow v. Brazier,	238
Carroll v. Develin,	22	Grant, Ackland v.	80	Midland Railway v. Quin	260	Smith v. M'Evoe,	236
Castlereagh Union v. Dillon,	229	Graves, Dowling v.	38	Mitchell, Regina v.	4	Smith v. Ritchie,	253
Castlebar Union v. Lucan,	142	Graydon v. Clannricarda,	301	Mitchell v. Bulfin,	143	Stevenson v. Stevens,	39
Carmichael v. W. and L. Railway,	186, 285	Green v. Blake,	271	Mulhallen, Hely v.	32	Stevens, Stevenson v.	39
Clannmorris v. Lambert,	267	Grubb v. M'Kenna,	288	Murphy, Fay v.	22	Stevens v. Strangeman,	150
Clannricarda, Graydon v.	301	Hall v. Thorpe,	238	Murray, Hopkins v.	48	Strangeman, Stevens v.	150
Clarke v. Kelly,	294	Harnett, M'Kenna v.	232	Murphy, Delacour v.	46	Strong, Kean v.	333
Clarke, Wildridge v.	151	Harris v. Good,	216	Murphy, Cronin v.	231	Sugden, Regina v.	50
Close v. Batt,	256	Harte, Baker lessee v.	247	Murray v. Skinnars,	39	Swallow v. Brazier,	238
Coates, Fitzgerald v.	64	Hayden v. O'Ryan,	264	Murtagh v. Crawford,	14	Taylor v. Cruise,	203
Cochrane v. Holden,	60	Healy v. Campion,	24	Newenham, Richardson v.	204	Thompson, Regina v.	297
Cole v. Batcock,	331	Hely v. Mulhallen,	32	Newland, Delany v.	238	Thorpe, Hall v.	236
Colquhoun v. Nolan,	263	Hobson lessee v. Burns,	227	Nevins v. Phelan,	166	Tisdall, Belfast Corp. v.	206
Collins, Walker v.	232	Holden, Cochrane v.	60	Nolan, Colquhoun v.	463	Vance v. Brassington,	8
Conlan, Aylmer v.	21	Holt, Hill v.	57	O'Brien, Doe v.	128	W. and L. Railway, Carmichael v.	198, 285
Crawford, Murtagh v.	14	Hobson lessee v. Burns,	227	O'Brien, Roche v.	157	Walker, Allingham v.	119
Cronin v. Murphy,	231	Holden, Cochrane v.	60	O'Brien v. Regina,	160, 249	Walker, Wrixon v.	223
Cruise, Taylor v.	263	Holt, Hill v.	57	O'Donnell v. W. and L. Railway,	126	Walker v. Collins,	232
Cruikshank, Brownrigg v.	212	Holt v. Kelly,	118	O'Ryan, Hayden v.	264	Walshe, Ballina Union v.	70
Cupen, Agricultural Insurance Company v.	354	Hopkins v. Murray,	43	O'Grady, Peacock lessee v.	363	Watters v. Lidwell,	45
Daly v. Rooney,	196	Horner v. Willocks,	136	Orpen, Bank of Ireland v.	206	Waterford and Limerick Railway O'Donnell, v.	126
Dankert lessee v. Wilson,	141	Hunter v. Macan,	12	Parsons lessee v. Purcell	213	Willocks Horner v.	196
Darcy Regina v.	207	Jeffreys v. Evans,	161	Peacock, lessee v.		Wilkinson, Lyons v.	270
		Jessop, Reilly v.	7	O'Grady,	263	Wildridge v. Clarke,	161
		Jones v. Pope,	7	Phelan, Nevins v.	166	Wilson, Dankert v.	141
		Jordan v. Ejector,	240	Pope, Jones v.	7	Wrixon v. Walker,	223
		Kane v. Lloyd,	208

COURT OF CHANCERY.—EASTER TERM.

IN RE CHRISTOPHER WALL.—April 15.

Practice—Privilege of Bankrupt surrendering from arrest.

A Bankrupt is privileged from arrest under sec. 136 of the 6 Wm. 4, c. 14, only when actually "coming to surrender," and therefore where a Bankrupt returned from Liverpool on the 20th inst., with the intention of surrendering on the 24th inst. was arrested on the 23rd—the Court refused to discharge him.

Stephens, B. moved, that the bankrupt be discharged from custody, under the following circumstances. From the affidavits it appeared that the bankrupt, in March last, proceeded to London on private business, and that he left London on the 15th of the same month for Liverpool, for the purpose of completing some family arrangements; that on the 18th he saw Saunders's paper, wherein he was declared bankrupt; that being of opinion from the statements in the said paper, that he was bound to surrender on the 21st, he left Liverpool on the evening of the 19th inst., to be in time; that having arrived in Dublin on the 20th inst., he took up a temporary residence with a Mr. Price, formerly a clerk of the bankrupt, with the intention of surrendering on the first day of surrender, which he afterwards learned from the Commissioner's order was the 24th of March; and that early on the morning of the 23rd, (being the day before his surrender) he was arrested under a Fiat from the Lord Chief Baron, founded on the affidavit of one Bowyer, who was the petitioning creditor. The affidavit further stated that Bowyer and one Taylor, who had obtained a verdict against the defendant in the court of Exchequer, and to which verdict the defendant had taken exceptions, were virtually the same parties, and that the bill on which the Commission issued was obtained collusively.

COUNSEL submitted that the bankrupt was entitled to his discharge, as being privileged under the 136 sec. of stat. 6 W. 4, c. 14, and cited (Cooke Bank. Law. 135), and Kenyon v. Solomon, (Cowp. 156.)

Fitzgibbon, Q.C. with Craighton, contra.—The whole question is one of privilege. The case in Cowper is in our favour. In the present case the bankrupt was lying by from the 21st to the 24th. The act says "coming to surrender;" therefore to be privileged from arrest he must be actually on the way. Ogile's case, (11 Ves. 556.)

LORD CHANCELLOR.—This motion must be refused. The words of the act are "coming to surrender." The bankrupt may have returned from Liverpool with the intention of surrendering; but he is not privileged from arrest if he thinks proper to remain at large afterwards. I am bound to suppose, in the absence of any statement as to when he received the summons, that he was served on his arrival from Liverpool. There was ample time given him to have called upon the Commissioners before the 24th, to accept his surrender. This privilege from arrest cannot be claimed except bonâ fide. On the same grounds, if the surrender was a month later, he might have claimed exemption. As another branch of the case remains over, I will reserve the costs of this motion.*

EX PARTE KELLY.—June 11.

Practice—Application pending error—Oath prescribed by 4 Geo. 4, c. 61.

Where a quo warranto had been brought in the Queen's Bench, to try the right to an office in the Court of Chancery, and the question decided in favour of the Relator, and a writ of error was issued on that decision.—Held that the Relator was not admissible to the office pending the writ of error.

This was an application on behalf of the petitioner Kelly, the relator, in Reg. v. Sugden, that he might be admitted to the office of assistant registrar of the court, or at least might be permitted to take the oaths required by the 4 Geo. 4, c. 61, notwithstanding the writ of error issued in Reg. v. Sugden.

The Attorney-General, with whom was Corbett, appeared for petitioner.

Tombs and Hamilton Smythe for respondent, Henry Sugden. They cited Reg. Rel. Kinahan v. Mayor of Dublin, (Jebb v. Burke, 39, S. C. 4 Ir. L. Rep. 147;) Marston v. Halls, (2 Mee. & W. 60.)

Corbett replied.

LORD CHANCELLOR.—I have no doubt whatever that this case is governed by that of Reg. v. Mayor of Dublin. This is the same case as if the petitioner had gone to the court of Queen's Bench for a mandamus. If this had been an inferior court, he would have applied to that court to suspend the proceedings. Till the writ of error is disposed of, the right of Mr. Kelly must be considered a question still pending, and it is not for me to pronounce an opinion on it one way, or the other. I could not grant this application, without superseding the operation of the writ of error. As to admitting Mr. Kelly to take the oath prescribed by the 4 Geo. 4, which is as follows: "I, A. B. do solemnly swear, that I will, to the best of my knowledge, skill, and judgment, perform such of the duties of assistant-registrar of the court of Chancery in Ireland, as I shall personally execute, and that I will well and faithfully pay every deputy, &c. &c. and that I will, in all things relating to my said office, conduct myself according to the rules and regulations which shall from time to time be in force for the regulation of such office and of the business thereof,"—it is quite plain that he can-

* Sec. 136.—"And be it enacted, That the bankrupt shall be free from arrest or imprisonment by any creditor in coming to surrender, and after such surrender, during the 42 days, and such further time as shall be allowed him for finishing his examination, provided he was not in custody at the time of such surrender; and if such bankrupt shall be arrested for debt, or on any escape warrant in coming to surrender, or shall after his surrender be so arrested within the time aforesaid, he shall upon producing the summons under the hand of the Commissioner, to the officer who shall arrest him, and giving such officer a copy thereof, be immediately discharged; and if any officer shall detain such bankrupt after he shall have shown such summons to him, so signed as aforesaid, such officer shall forfeit to such bankrupt, for his own use, the sum of five pounds for every day he shall detain such bankrupt, to be recovered by action of debt in any Court of Record at Dublin, in the name of such bankrupt, with full costs of suit."

not take that oath without being de facto registrar. I do not understand this proposal of swearing in an officer as it were de bene esse. As to costs, the application is the same as in Reg. v. Mayor of Dublin, and must be treated as governed by the same law. Motion refused with costs.

ROLLS COURT.

GEORGE CARR, BY W. P. CARR HIS NEXT FRIEND,
v. OSBORNE.—June 22.

Receiver—Person of weak mind—No commission of Lunacy.

The Court will grant a receiver upon answer, where a person not an idiot, or lunatic, but of weak mind, files a bill by his son and next friend without a commission of lunacy having issued, the property being small.

The Attorney-General is not a necessary party to such a bill.

In this case the bill was filed to recover the arrears of an annuity of £50 per annum, charged upon the lands of the defendant. The plaintiff was described as George Carr, of —, being a person of unsound mind and feeble understanding, but not an idiot or lunatic, by William Carr, his son and next friend. The bill stated that the plaintiff was not a lunatic, but a person whose memory had become weak from advanced age and other causes. The usual accounts and a receiver were prayed. The defendant in his answer admitted the title of the plaintiff to the annuity, but submitted that the said George Carr, for more than a year last past, has been, and now is of unsound mind, and a proper subject for a commission of lunacy; that no such commission had issued for the protection of his estate, or person, and that there was no person capable of giving a valid discharge for said annuity, if the same were paid, and that a payment made to the said pretended next friend of the said George Carr, would not protect defendant against being obliged to pay the same over again in the event of a commission of lunacy against the said George Carr being hereafter issued; and that the rights of the said George Carr are now, and were at the time of filing of said bill, in consequence of his said lunacy, vested in the Crown, until the same shall be delegated by a commission of lunacy.

Brewster, Q.C. with J. W. Dean, moved for a receiver.—In such a case as the present the Lord Chancellor would not grant a commission; the plaintiff having no other property but this £50 per annum. Cited (Shelford on Lunacy, 216); Steed v. Calley, (2 My. & Keen. 52); Conduit v. Soane, (5 My. & Cr. 111.)

Christian, Q.C., with E. Trevor for the defendant. The defendant up to this time has been in no default, as there is only one year of the annuity in arrear, and it is admitted that the plaintiff has been for a longer period of unsound mind. The proper course should have been by information at the suit of the Attorney-general. (Shelford on Lunacy, 215.) If the Court were even of opinion that at the hearing a receiver should be granted, they will not interfere summarily on motion at this stage of the proceedings.

MASTER OF THE ROLLS.—The bill is filed in this case by the son and next friend of a person not an idiot or lunatic, but of weak mind, praying a receiver for the arrears of an annuity. I find that the case of Eyre v. Wake, (4 Ves. 795), has been followed by Lord Cottenham in the very recent case of Conduit v. Soane. Following these authorities, and bearing in mind that a commission of lunacy would swallow up two or three years maintenance, I will grant the order for a receiver. With regard to the objection that the Attorney-general should be a party, I find Lord Redesdale lays down that such a bill as the present is maintainable. (Mit. Eq. Pl. 32.)

M'GREHAN v. RANKIN.—June 23.

Practice—Conveyance to purchaser—Heir at Law out of jurisdiction.

The Court has no jurisdiction under the 28 Geo. 3, c. 35, to order the Master to execute a conveyance to a purchaser, where the heir of the donor is a minor, resident out of the jurisdiction.

Hunter, on behalf of the purchaser, applied for an order on the Master to execute the conveyance of the lands decreed to be sold in this cause.

The bill was filed by a judgment creditor against the heir-at-law and administratrix of the donor to raise the amount of the judgment. The affidavit stated that the "heir at law was a minor, and resided out of the jurisdiction, somewhere in North America."

COUNSEL submitted that under the 28 Geo. 3, c. 35, s. 1, the Court had jurisdiction to grant the application.

July 5.—The MASTER OF THE ROLLS on this day, having commented on the distinction between this case and Prendergast v. Eyre, (Lloyd & G. T.S. 11,) decided that the Court had no authority to order the Master to execute the conveyance.*

* 28 Geo. 3, c. 35, s. 1, Enacts, "That in such cases as his Majesty's Court of Chancery, or his Court of Exchequer hath or have decreed or ordered, or shall decree or order, a sale of any lands, tenements, or hereditaments, or of any term or interest therein, and conveyances thereof, to be made to or for the purchaser or purchasers thereof, in case any difficulty shall arise respecting the execution of any deeds or conveyances by any proper and necessary party or parties to such deed or conveyance, the party or parties interested in having such deeds or conveyances executed, may apply by motion or petition to such court respectively, stating such difficulty, whereupon such court shall and may inquire into the same; and in such case shall appear that any necessary party or parties to such deeds or conveyances, bound by such decree or order as aforesaid, and who ought by virtue thereof to execute the same, cannot be found, or by being out of the reach of the process of the court, cannot be compelled in the usual and ordinary way to obey such decree or order as aforesaid, or such order as the court shall make for executing such deeds and conveyances, whereby the title of such purchaser to the lands, tenements, or hereditaments, or any term or interest in the same, may be rendered defective, the said court of Chancery in cases in that court, shall and may order one of the Masters of the said court, and the said court of Exchequer shall and may order the Chief Remembrancer of the said court to execute all such deeds and conveyances as aforesaid."

EQUITY EXCHEQUER.—TRINITY TERM.

KELLY v. BONYNG AND OTHERS.—June 5 and 6.

Purchase by Receiver.

A Receiver, during the life-time of the father, purchased a younger child's portion, not payable until the father's death, but which was charged on the estate over which the Receiver was appointed; there was no evidence of under-value. On bill filed after 13 years, by the inheritor, who, during the interval had been principally out of the jurisdiction, against the personal representative of the receiver, the Court set aside the purchase.

The bill in this case was filed to set aside the purchase by a receiver of a charge on the estate over which he was appointed. The facts were—Patrick O'Kelly the elder, on the marriage of his son Patrick O'Kelly, settled his estates on himself for life, remainder to his son for life, remainder to the first and other sons of Patrick O'Kelly the younger, in tail male, subject to a term of 500 years, to secure a portion of £1,500 for his younger children, not to be raised till the death of Patrick O'Kelly the younger. By the settlement, a power was reserved to Patrick O'Kelly, the elder, to charge the same estates with £2000 for his younger children, Mary, William, and Lucinda O'Kelly. In 1809, on the marriage of Lucinda with a person named M'Inerheny, Patrick O'Kelly, the elder, settled on them a sum of £666 13s. 4d., being their portion of the £2000 reserved for his younger children, Patrick O'Kelly, the younger, had three children by his marriage—Mary, Ann, and the plaintiff. In 1824 M'Inerheny and wife filed a bill to raise their portion of the £2000; to this bill Patrick O'Kelly the younger, the plaintiff; and his sisters Mary and Ann, (both of whom had married), were defendants. In 1825, Pierce Carrick was appointed receiver in that cause, and in 1833, purchased the reversionary interest of Mary and Ann, and their husbands, in the £1,500. In 1835, the estate was sold, subject to the £1,500. Patrick O'Kelly, the younger, died in 1843, leaving the plaintiff his heir at law. Pierce Carrick died in 1846, having appointed the defendant, Bonyng, his executor, who proved the will. In 1846, the plaintiff filed his bill against the defendant Bonyng, the personal representative of the receiver, and the defendant, Kelly, the purchaser of the estate, praying that the £1,500 might be decreed to be well charged on the purchased lands, and that the plaintiff might be declared entitled to the £1,500, on payment of the purchase money, with interest to the personal representative of the receiver.

Green, Q.C., Fitzgerald, Q.C., and Mockler, for the plaintiff.—There is no dispute as to the facts of the case; it is admitted that the defendant, Bonyng, purchased the charge, as the trustee of Carrick, the receiver, and with his money, and that he is his personal representative. There is no principle of law more clearly established than that which prohibits a party acting as agent to purchase for his own benefit a charge on the property of his principal. The receiver of the court purchasing an interest in the estate over which he is appointed, is in this position, and consequently is incapable of retaining his purchase. Anonymous, (1 Salk. 155);

Boddington v. Lady Langford, (MSS. T. T. 1845, Canc.)

Henn, Q.C., and Creagh for the defendant, Bonyng. The cases cited only establish the general principle, that agents or trustees cannot purchase from their cestui que trust—a rule which must be taken in connection with another equally well settled, that the cestui que trust must within a reasonable time exercise the option allowed him of setting aside the sale. Cambell v. Walker, (5 Ves. 678); Kilbee v. Sneyd, (2 Mol. 214.) The reason of the rule against purchasing is, that the trustee has means of acquiring a knowledge, which ought to be applied for the benefit of his principal; the leave of the court is therefore necessary to validate the purchase. Alvon v. Bond, (Flan. & Kel. 196.) The present case does not involve that mischief; it is a mere incumbrance, which is a fixed quantity, and the purchase of which cannot prejudice the owner of an estate liable to it. If the receiver were a mere stranger, he would be entitled to the full benefit of his purchase, ex parte Lucas, (6 Ves. 628.) Then does the receiver hold a fiduciary character, with respect to the creditors of the estate? If not, no injury can be done, no more than if the charge were purchased by a stranger. This case possesses a further peculiarity; it must, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, be admitted that the receiver gave full value at the time of his purchase; the charge was not capable of being raised till after the death of Patrick O'Kelly, the younger, and if he had lived to old age, the purchase might have been a bad one. In Boddington v. Lady Langford, there was evidence of under value.

Christian, Q.C., and Maloy, appeared for other parties.

J. D. Fitzgerald, Q.C., with Mockler, in reply.—It has been contended that the plaintiff, by his acquiescence has deprived himself of relief. In all the authorities acquiescence has been treated merely as evidence that the relation has been abandoned. Morse v. Royal, (12 Ves. 374.) In the present case the inheritor was out of the jurisdiction. With respect to the question of purchase, the case stands on grounds different from those of purchases outside the court; it cannot be too distinctly announced, that officers of this court shall not deal with property under their charge. (Richards, B.—A receiver purchasing a judgment over which he was appointed, would not be permitted to retain it.) Here he is appointed over the life estate and inheritance, and has derived thence peculiar means of knowledge. Robinson v. Pett, (8 P. W. 249, note); Williams v. Springfield, (1 Vern. 476); Morret v. Paske, (2 Atk. 51)—Lefroy, B. Lord Hardwicke, in Morret v. Paske, said that Williams v. Springfield was a creditor's case, and had never been acted on. The decision there was, that "where there were subsequent incumbrances or creditors in the case, then a man that buys in a prior incumbrance shall be allowed only what he really paid, though there was in truth a greater sum due." (Storey on Agency, p. 199, sec. 210); ex parte Bennett, (10 Ves. 385.)

Pigot, C.B.—The Court is of opinion, that upon the settled principles of law the plaintiff is entitled to a decree; the familiar language of the authorities is, that no man should be suffered to hold a position which would require him to serve two masters, a principle the Court feels itself strictly bound to enforce. To apply it to the present case, the receiver, the admitted purchaser of the charge, was not either a trustee, or an agent in the ordinary acceptation of the term, but he held the position of a person appointed by the Court for the general management of the property, in whom a large degree of confidence was reposed, if then he were to purchase incumbrances affecting the estate, and that he were sanctioned in so doing, what would be the position in which such a privilege would place him? Suppose a receiver purchasing incumbrances; it would be his direct interest to represent the estate to be as unproductive as possible, in order to purchase at perhaps a nominal value; to allow a receiver to do this, or to place him in a position to do it, would be creating in his mind a desire to benefit himself at the expense of the owner of the estate. In the present case a distinction was taken, that the value of the reversionary interest was doubtful; that was certainly so, but, it appeared to the Court that it would be inconsistent to limit the application of so important a principle, that though it was improbable that the reasons he had referred to would operate as to reversionary interests, cases might arise in which a receiver intending to purchase would be interested in depreciating their value, the Court should not give an opportunity for the existence of such a state of things, and would, therefore, adhere to a rule which would prohibit the purchase of any incumbrance. The defendant's counsel suggested another defence, that there had been an acquiescence. If that had been proved, the party acquiescing would undoubtedly be bound by it. That was not the case; the plaintiff never interfered, nor was he in any way privy to the proceeding instituted in 1838; he was not represented either by counsel, or attorney, was out of the jurisdiction the greater portion of the thirteen years which had elapsed since the purchase, and the commencement of the present suit, and his interest only accrued in 1848. For these reasons the Court was of opinion that the plaintiff was entitled to relief.

PENNEFATHER, B.—The principle as to purchases by trustees and assignees is clear. It was with reference to receivers the question before the Court arose, and to these, Sir Edward Sugden, C. in a case before him analogous to the present, extended that principle; that decision applied strongly to the present case, although it was a purchase of a charge not affecting the life estate, as it involved the principle the Court was called upon to uphold, namely, that a receiver should not be placed in a position which might induce him to make an estate appear incumbered for self-interested motives. To allow him to purchase would clearly give him that opportunity. There was one part of the case which struck him much, not on the principle of acquiescence, but that a party impeaching a transaction should not lie by and take his chance of the purchase turning out advantageous or otherwise, a doctrine always applicable to purchases of reversionary interests. The plaintiff here, however, does not appear to have had this view in contemplation.*

LEFROY, B. said, that cases involving a fiduciary character admitted of no doubt, the difficulty in the present case was to find a sound principle upon which the Court could carry out the same doctrine. He thought the Court had been supplied with such in the judgment of Lord Eldon in ex parte Bennett. There could be no doubt but that a receiver might injure property, if he was placed in a position to take advantage of circumstances, by lending money, or purchasing incumbrances; Lord Eldon's judgment referred to the case of an officer filling a situation in the court of Bankruptcy, and he had furnished the Court with a rule on which it might act, his Lordship, page 397 of his judgment says: "Upon the assignment, the Commissioners take from the assignees to themselves a covenant with all convenient speed, to use their utmost endeavours to recover and get in the estate, and to dispose of it for the most money, and to account, with a great variety of other covenants, the question would be very singular to be agitated between the Commissioners and assignees in these cases; to ascertain whether there was a breach of this covenant, whether the assignee had sold for the best price, and with all convenient speed, the estate being sold to the Commissioner—does not the duty of the Commissioner require him, at the instigation of the creditors, or even without it, to rest his view upon this most substantial question, whether the period is come, at which, according to the Acts of Parliament, the assignees ought to have collected the effects, and to make a dividend, and payment of the surplus? That is a duty the due execution of which cannot be hoped, if the Commissioners are to involve themselves in private pecuniary views, and interests, with reference to the property; if, for instance, the Commissioners, as is usual, take conveyances, the payment to be at a future day; are they to blame the assignees for not having sold the Commissioners for the money as purchasers?" It was quite clear that the receiver could not be allowed to purchase any part of the estate under his management, would the Court allow him then to purchase an incumbrance affecting it, which would personally give him an interest in that property, and thus tempt him to exercise the knowledge acquired through his official capacity for his own, and not the benefit of the estate; on the authority of Lord Eldon, he was of opinion the Court should not warrant their officer in such a purchase, the Court should therefore set it aside.†

QUEEN'S BENCH.—EASTER TERM.

QUEEN v. MITCHEL.—May 8 and 10.

Indictment—Nolle Prosequi—Plea in abatement—Demurrer—Discontinuance.

Indictments for sedition—after the bills were found, a Nolle Prosequi was entered by the Attorney-General, and Informations filed for the same offence—Plea in Abatement to the first information that the Indictment was still pending—De-

* Richards, B., was absent during the argument.

† See Champion v. Rigby, 1 Russ. & My. 539, S.C. on appeal, 9 L. Jou. n. s. 211 Chas. Held, that a purchase for full value by a solicitor from his client was good.

demurrer—Held that the pendency of the Indictment was no answer to the Information.

Like plea to second Information—Replication that there was no indictment pending. Held that the plea being bad, an informality in the replication could not be taken advantage of.

The demurrer by the Crown to the plea concluded praying Conviction, and the replication prayed final Judgment. Held that there was no discontinuance.

Semble—There can be no discontinuance by the Crown.

Indictments for the publication of a seditious libel in the form of a letter to the Lord Lieutenant, and for the publication of a certain article in the paper called the United Irishman, entitled "Striking Terror." After the bills had been found by the Grand Jury, Pleas in abatement were filed, "That one of the Grand Jury was a Town Councillor, and disqualified from serving on any juries except Commissions of Assize, and Gaol Delivery." The indictments were then withdrawn by the Crown, and ex officio informations filed for the same offences. Plea to the first information, That the Court ought not to take cognizance of the information, in as much as on the 15th day of April last, a bill of indictment for the same offence had been presented to the Grand Jury and duly found, that the traverser had been arraigned upon this indictment and proceedings had thereon, that on the 26th day of April the Attorney General came into Court and entered a Nolle Prosequi, to that indictment, that John Michel, against whom the indictment had been found, was the same person against whom the information had been filed, and that it was the same offence for which the indictment had been preferred and the information filed.—Demurrer by the Crown.—Joinder in demurrer.—To the second information. Plea in abatement, stating the pendency of the indictment. Replication by the Crown, that on the 26th day of April a Nolle Prosequi, had been entered to the indictment, and further proceedings stayed thereon. Demurrer: that the Attorney-General did not by this replication traverse the matters set forth in the plea, nor plead in confession or avoidance.—Joinder in demurrer.

J. Perrin, in support of the demurrer by the Crown to the first plea.—A plea of indictment pending is no plea to an information for the same offence, even if it is a good plea the indictment has been put an end to by the nolle prosequi, (2 Hale, P. C. cap. 34, s. 1.) which has the effect of quashing an indictment as well as an information, (Com. Dig. information A; Bac. Abr. information A.) (Hawkins, cap. 26, sec. 63.) lays it down, that "a suit on a penal statute actually depending may be pleaded in abatement," that alludes to qui tam informations only, Sir W. Withipole's case, (Cr. Car. 147), Swan v. Jeffries, (Fost. 105-6, S.C., 18 St. Trials, 1198); Reg. v. Goddard, and Carleton, (2 Lord Raym. 920.) In a prosecution by the Crown the Court will not interfere, the Attorney-general can enter a nolle prosequi, and need not come into court for that purpose. King v. Strachan, (3 Burr. 1565); King v. Mayor of Plymouth, (4 Burr. 2090.) The pendency of a former indictment is no bar to sending up another. Queen v. Burnby, (5 Q.B. Rep. 348); King v. Webb, (3 Burr. 1468); King v. Alexander, (Archbold Crim. Pl. 72-8; 1 Chitty Crim. law, 461); King v. Doctor Purnell, (1 W. Bl. 37.) Even if a plea of indictment pending is good, the nolle prosequi puts an end to any further proceedings upon the indictment. In the year 1801 a nolle prosequi was entered by the Attorney-General Lane, and an information filed for the same offence, also in 1812, Plumer, Attorney-General entered a nolle prosequi upon an ex officio information, and filed another information for the same offence. If the king, by his Attorney-General, enter a nolle prosequi, he cannot after proceed. King v. Pickering, (Hardress 83); Goddard v. Smith, (1 Salk. 21, S.C.; 6 Mod. 261; Hard. 126; 1 Sand. 207, note.) This plea is so framed that it is doubtful whether it is in bar or abatement.

Holmes, with Sir C. O'Loughlin, in support of the plea. The question in this case is whether the Attorney-general can proceed by ex officio information having already proceeded by indictment, whether he has not thereby lost his privilege, this demurrer is also bad in form, it concludes in bar while the plea is in abatement, that is a discontinuance, and the Crown is therefore out of court. The demurrer instead of praying judgment of respondent ouster, concludes by praying judgment, and that the traverser may be convicted; this amounts to a discontinuance. Carter v. Davis, (1 Show. 255, S.C.; 1 Salk. 218; 2 Sand. 210 N. 2; Com. Dig. Pl. w. 2); Alice v. Gale, (10 Mod. 112); Bowen v. Shapcott, (1 East. 542); Biss v. Harcourt, (Carth. 187, 59, S.C. 3 Mod. 231.) The rule is the same in both civil and criminal cases, and where there is a discontinuance no judgment will be given on the demurrer. Cochrane v. Fitzpatrick, (8 Ir. L. Rep. 187.) As to the form of the plea, whether the substance is in bar, or abatement, the Court must hold it to be in abatement, if so pleaded. Alice v. Gale, (10 Mod. 112); Madina v. Sloughton, (1 Ld. Raym. 593.) It is the commencement and conclusion of a plea which determine the nature of it. Godson v. Good, (6 Taunt. 587.) The matter of this plea is in abatement, "That cognizance ought not to be taken of the matter unless by indictment by the oaths of twelve men," it is the same as a plea of privilege. Challand v. Thornley, (12 East, 544.) An ex officio information is not so constitutional a proceeding as an indictment, and there is no precedent of an Attorney-general proceeding by a good and valid indictment, and afterwards filing an information for the same offence, for in the Rattle and Bottle case the bills were ignored, and the Attorney-General then proceeded by information.

Attorney-General in reply.—The cases relied upon by the counsel for the traverser are all civil cases founded on that in Shower, and do not apply, no matter what the prayer of the demurrer is, the Court will give the right judgment, but the demurrer concludes properly, and is according to the forms which have been in use from the earliest times. (1 Went. pl. Abatement, 24.) In the case of the Queen v. O'Connell there was a demurrer, similar to the present, and the prayer was for judgment of conviction, a nolle prosequi has no greater effect than a non suit which does not prevent the Crown from proceeding for the same offence. Goddard Smith, (6 Mod. 262.)

J. O'Hagan, in support of the demurrer to the replication of the Crown.—In this case a plea in abatement has been filed; the Attorney-general by the form of the replication, has treated the plea as one in bar, and has thereby worked a discontinuance. Besides the plea avers "that the indictment is still pending," and this averment is neither traversed nor confessed, nor avoided. Bourne v. Taylor, (10 East. 189); Taylor v. Cole, (8 T. R. 292.) The replication by the Crown is also bad as being argumentative. It states the indictment is not pending as a nolle prosequi had been entered. If the Attorney-general means to deny the pendency of the indictment, he should have replied Nul Tiel record. The replication is therefore bad in that respect. Bourne v. Taylor, (10 East. 189); Knight's case, (2 Ld. Raym. 1014); Green v. Watts, (1 Lord Raym. 274); Green v. Purdon, (2 H. and Br. 277; 8 Cobbett's, St. Tr. 284–50); Gould v. Lasbury, (1 Cr. M. & R. 254.) An information never can be filed pending an indictment for the same offence, and the indictment having been commenced, and being a higher proceeding should have been proceeded with.

Attorney-General and J. Perrin, contra.—In (4 Chil. Crim. Law.) there is a precedent of a replication similar to the present. The Crown could not have pleaded Nul Tiel record, as upon the trial the record could have been produced; besides, even if the replication is bad, we are entitled to fall back on the plea, and if that cannot be supported we are entitled to judgment on the whole case, and the authorities already cited are sufficient to show that a plea such as this is no answer to the information. Withipole's case is decisive on that point.

O'Loghlen, in reply.—The plea is in abatement, and the replication in bar, that is a discontinuance; there is a double discontinuance by the Crown, by the replication in this case, and by the demurrer in the other. The Attorney-general should have either traversed, and introduced new matter with an absque hoc, or confessed and avoided, but neither of these courses has been taken. This indictment is in full force notwithstanding the nolle prosequi. King v. Benson, (1 Sid. 420.) Therefore the plea is good; a nolle prosequi has the effect of putting an end to an information, but not to an indictment. The Attorney-general can only let the party go without a day, the effect of which is that new process must be issued before the party can be proceeded against. Goddard v. Smith, (6 Mod. 262.) In cases of appeal, the pendency of one appeal is a complete answer to another. (Hawk 23, sec. 126.) It is laid down that an indictment shall not abate, for it is the king's suit. King v. Robinson, (1 W. Bl. 542.)

May 10.—BLACKBURN, C.J.—In this case an information was filed by the Attorney-general. A plea has been put in, to the effect that the Court ought not to take cognizance thereof, because an indictment was preferred against the traverser in this court, for the same offence, and after certain proceedings the Attorney-general entered a nolle prosequi; that the traverser is the same person who was indicted, that the offence is the same, and that according to the law of this realm he ought to be free from answering before any court, except upon indictment, or presentment, which he is ready to verify, and prays judgment. To this plea the crown has demurred; that the matters averred thereby are not sufficient, and concludes by praying judgment of conviction. This is objected to as informal, and a discontinuance. The Attorney-general contends that the plea is bad, and if so, we are bound to give judgment according to the whole right. The question is, whether a plea of indictment pending is a bar to an information for the same offence. Now there is neither the authority of any case, nor the opinion of any judge in support of this; on the other hand, there are authorities which shew that this plea is bad. In Sir W. Withipole's case, (Cro. Car. 147,) it is laid down that this is no cause of plea, for when a traverser is not acquitted, or convicted he may be arraigned, and there are several other authorities to the same effect, (2 Hals.) In Hawkins, c. 34, Pleas in Abatement, there is a most explicit statement of the law; the word information in the passage cannot mean informations for a misdemeanour, for qui tam informations are meant, and the chapter upon them is referred to, and there can be no manner of doubt that this passage is a distinct authority against this plea. The case of Swan v. Jeffrey, (Foster's C. Law, 104), decided in 1701, was an indictment for murder; a second was found, and to it, was pleaded the pendency of the first; upon demurrer the court held that the plea of autrefois arraign was no plea. In the case of the King v. Stratton, (Douglas, 239,) it was held that the pendency of another indictment for the same offence cannot be pleaded, as it may be in an information for penalties. Without doubt the authority of the principles laid down in Hals, Hawkins, and Foster shew that this plea is not maintainable. There is an objection taken to this demurrer, that the plea is in abatement, but that the demurrer concludes by praying judgment, not of respondens out, but of conviction, and the case of Biss v. Harcourt, (3 Mod. 281) is relied on. Now it is to be observed, that all the cases in support of this proposition are cases of civil actions. It is plain that a party pleading in abatement can call for such judgment only as the plea demands; but the question in this case is, whether the prayer of judgment of conviction, in the first case upon the demurrer, and in the replication in the other, is a discontinuance. I question whether in pleading there can be any discontinuance on the part of the crown; but as to whether it is, or not, there is no case to shew that it is; there are two to shew that it is not. In Hardress, 504, in a quo warrant it was moved in arrest of judgment that there had been a discontinuance, for issue was not joined by the crown, and it is laid down that before judgment there is no discontinuance in the king's case, (Com. Dig. Tu Plead, W.2.) But supposing there may be a discontinuance, we are to consider how the precedents and authorities are on that subject, and I find that demurrers to pleas in abatement always conclude with prayer of final judgment. Queen v. O'Connell, King v. Taylor, (3 B. & Cr. 52; 2 Saund. 210, note m.) These authorities are quite decisive; we are bound to give judgment on the whole record in favour of the crown. In the second information the defendant demurred to the replication. In this case also, we consider there ought to be judgment for the crown. As to the form of the replication, it is manifest that is of no moment, if the plea is bad. It is to be observed this plea alleges matter on which issue may be taken; and I apprehend the Crown is entitled to pray final judgment, as it may be so entitled if issue were joined. Medina v. Stanton (Lord Raymond, 594); Biss v. Harcourt, (Carth. 137.) Judgment was there given for the defendant, because the plea was good, in this case it is bad. In Bonner v. Hall, (Lord Raymond, 338,) in the replication judgment was demanded for the plaintiff, and damages; it was admitted the plea was ill, and being so, the replication was attacked on the ground of discontinuance, and the case of Biss v. Harcourt relied on; but Lord Holt said, "This case differs from Biss v. Harcourt, for there the plea was good, and then when the plaintiff replied new matter, he should have made his conclusion accordingly; but where the plaintiff traverses the plea in his replication, and offers an issue, he may pray judgment de debito et de damnis, because if it be tried, peremptory judgment ought to be given, but in this case the first fault is with the defendant, for the plea is ill." Every word of this judgment is applicable to the present case; the first fault is with the defendant, as the plea is bad. On all points of this case, therefore, it is our opinion, that by the authorities all doubt is removed, and the traverser must plead forthwith.

EXCHEQUER OF PLEAS.

REILLY v. JESSOP.—May 26 and 30.

Pleading—Bill of Exchange—Indorsement by firm.

Declaration by the indorsee of a bill of exchange against the acceptor. The first count averred "for that whereas Hugh F., carrying on business under the name, style, and firm of F. & Co., made his bill of exchange in writing, and directed the same to the defendant, and thereby required the defendant to pay the DRAWERS, or THEIR order, £—two months after the date thereof; and then proceeded to aver that the said H. F. then and there indorsed the same to the plaintiff—Held sufficient on special demurrer.

ASSUMPSIT.—The first count of the declaration was as follows: "For that whereas heretofore to wit, on &c., at, &c., Hugh Ferguson, carrying on business under the name, style, and firm of Ferguson & Co., made his bill of exchange in writing, and directed the same to the defendant, and thereby required the defendant to pay the drawers, or their order, £—two months after date thereof," &c. The averment of the indorsement to plaintiff was as follows: "And the said Hugh Ferguson then and there indorsed the same to the plaintiff," &c. Special demurrer to this count on the ground of its being repugnant and insensible, and disclosing on the face of it no sufficient cause of action.

Rollstone for the demurrer.

The court having observed that there was no junior counsel retained on behalf of the plaintiff, declined to hear the case argued.

May 30.—J. D. Fitzgerald, Q.C., and F. Smith for the plaintiff, contended that the count was sufficient. Bass v. Clive, (4 Camp. 78, S.C. 4 M. & S. 13.) The declaration here is at most, ungrammatical, and that is not sufficient to vitiate it. (O'Connor v. Fiely, argued in this court on the 13th of June, 1845.) In that case the declaration was by indorsees against acceptors, and the promise was laid in these words—"and the defendants promised the plaintiffs (in the plural) to pay him." The court overruled the demurrer. There is no repugnance here; it is consistent with this averment that the pleader followed the words of the instrument, and that Hugh Ferguson was the sole member of the firm of Ferguson & Co. The case of Ball v. Gordon, (9 M. & W. 845,) has no application to this case; besides it was overruled in Tigar v. Gordon, (9 M. & W. 346).*

Rollstone contra.—Bass v. Clive does not apply. (Pigot, C.B.—The question, there, did not turn upon the pleadings. Pennefather, B.—On the supposition that Hugh Ferguson was the sole member of the firm of Ferguson & Co., there is no inconsistency, for he might have drawn the bill as alleged, and made it payable to the firm, in which view the use of the plural would be correct.) But even on that supposition the declaration is insufficient; for an instrument by one member of a firm passes no property, unless made in the name of the firm, of which there is no averment.

PROOR, C.B.—It is a rule of pleading, that ambiguous expressions must be taken most strongly against the pleader; but there is another rule equally well established, that if the ambiguity can be explained away by reasonable intendment, the Court will adopt that intendment. My brother, Pennefather, has suggested a view which removes the apparent inconsistency. Judgment for Plaintiff.

JONES v. POPE.—June 14.

Demurrer—Indorsement on bill—No time.

Declaration on bill of Exchange—The Indorsement stated "the said defendant indorsed to the plaintiff" omitting "then and there."—Held, on special demurrer, that time being a material traversable fact, the omission of it vitiated the declaration.

ASSUMPSIT.—This was an action brought by the indorsee of a bill of exchange against the indorser. The averment of indorsement was as follows: "And the said A. B. then and there indorsed the same to the defendant, and the said defendant indorsed the same to the plaintiff." Demurrer—that there was no venue, or time alleged when and where the defendant indorsed the bill to the plaintiff, and also that the said averment deviated from the precedent and forms prescribed by the judges.

Curtis for the demurrer.—There is no venue laid. (Pennefather, B.—If there is a venue in the margin it suffices.) Waiving that ground of demurrer, the declaration is bad, as not laying any time. This is a material traversable averment, and must be laid with day, month, and year. R. v. Holland, (5 T. R. 607); Comyn's digest pleader.

* Before Pigot, C.B. and Pennefather, B.

c. 19; Ring v. Roxborough, (2 Cr. & J. 418); Bowdell v. Parsons, (10 East. 359.)

Lawson with Harris in support of the declaration.—We do not dispute the general proposition contended for on the other side; but there is a time sufficiently alleged here. The word "there" in the averment that drawer indorsed the bill to defendant, may be carried on so as to overrule the averment objected to. The two averments are coupled with "and"—the et non of the old pleaders. (Pigot C. B.—How do you distinguish this case from that of Potter v. Ryan? (Smythe 22) This case turns on the grammatical construction of the sentence. Counsel also referred to (Comyn's digest pleader, c. 19); Denison v. Richardson, (14 East. 291); Skinner v. Gunton, (1 Saund. 229 a); Harden v. Magennis, (6 Ir. L. Rep. 345.) As to the second ground of demurrer, there is no form prescribed by the judges for indorsees against indorser. (Pennefather, B.—We do not go so much on the ground of its deviating from the judge's forms, as of its violating the rules of pleading.)

Cur. adv. vult.

Pigot, C. B. now delivered the judgment of the Court.—We are reluctantly obliged to give judgment for the defendant in this case. The plaintiff derives title as indorsee of a bill of exchange, and the averment in the declaration is, "And the said A. B. then and there indorsed the same to the defendant, and the said defendant indorsed the same to the plaintiff." In the latter averment, neither time or place are laid. No allegation of place is necessary, but this being a material traversable fact, must be laid with certainty of time. It is too late now to question a rule, which has prevailed so long, and has been recognised in all the authorities from Cro. Jac. and Cro. Car. to the most recently reported cases. So stringent were the rules, as to time and place, that the legislature had to interfere, and the statute of Jeofails became necessary to relax them. By the statute of Anne the strict rule as to place was in part abrogated, and as a further modification of these rules, the "then and there" were let into the averments of the pleader. Recent decisions have sanctioned the omission of "place," because of the venue in the margin, but no similar indulgence has been extended to the omission of time; on the contrary, the very recent cases of Ring v. Roxborough, and Bowdell v. Parsons, referred to in argument, shew the disinclination of the courts to deviate from this rule. But it is said that we are at liberty to continue the "then and there" in the preceding averment, and incorporate them with the allegation complained of; and to sustain that view counsel has referred us to a case in Comyn's digest pleader, c. 19, p. 47. That was a case of trespass, quare cluivum fragit, and upon looking at it, it seems impossible to apply that construction here. In trespass all the statements are coupled with the continuando, and are thereby referred to the same point of time; and that was the decision of Webb v. Turner, (2 Strange, 1095.) The judgment in that case indicates the principle of that class of authorities. The different averments in that case cannot be severed, as they must necessarily be in the present. The decision in Wilson v. Chambers (Cro. Car. 202) shows very strongly the stringency of the rule. That case was in Trover, and the Court held that the finding, as well as the conversion must be laid with time. That case is as fresh now as it was at the period of its decision. But there is a distinct authority in this country, in support of this demurrer—the case of Potter v. Ryan in the Common Pleas. Looking to the averments in that case, and the judgment, no two cases can be more like than that and the present. But it is said that Potter v. Ryan has been overruled by the later case of Barden v. Magennis, (6 Ir. Law Rep. 7.) The later decision turned on the omission of "place," and followed the case of Welland v. Brown, (1 Hayes & Jones, 46.) Demurrer allowed.

VANCE AND ANOTHER, EXECUTORS OF FALLS, v. BRASSINGTON.

Scire Facias by the Executors of the Cognisee, The defendant was called on to shew "wherefore the plaintiffs should not have execution against him," according to the form of the recovery, without an allegation that the plaintiffs did so "as executors;" Profect of Letters Testamentary was made. Held sufficient on special demurrer.

Scire facias.—On a judgment in debt by the Executors of the Cognisee against the Cognisor, the scire facias followed the ordinary form. The statement objected to being as follows: "And the said plaintiff, after the death of the said cognisee, duly proved said will in the Court of Prerogative in Ireland, and obtained probate thereof, yet execution of the said judgment for the debt and damages aforesaid as yet remains to be done, as from the said Andrew and John, executors as aforesaid we have received information. And we being willing that what is right and just in our court should be done, and a due execution, command you, as we formerly commanded you, that by honest and lawful men of your bailiwick, you make known to the said defendant, that they may be before our Barons of the Exchequer at, &c., on &c., to shew if she have or know anything to say for herself wherefore the said Andrew and John ought not have execution against her for the debt and damages aforesaid, according to the form of the aforesaid recovery, &c.," concluding with profer of the Letters Testamentary. Special demurrer, on the ground that the defendant was called upon to shew cause why the plaintiffs should not have execution of the said debt and damages in their own right without naming them as executors.

Butt, Q. C. with Mills, for demurrer.—The objection on which we rely is that the scire facias does not contain any proper averment to shew that the plaintiffs bring the writ in their representative capacity. The scire facias must be construed as a declaration, Malcomson v. Gregory, (1 H. B. 15.) Laverty v. Duffin, (AL & Na. 29.) In a declaration by executors the omission of "as" is fatal, Henshall v. Roberts, (5 East. 150.) An. (1 Dow. P.C. 97. and notes.) Errors of Frevor v. White, (1 Dow. N.S. 586.) In debt on judgment by the executor of cognisee, the executor must show that he was in his representative capacity, the judgment being a duty which accrued in the testator's life-time. Counsel also referred to (Ferguson's forms, 232.)

Shagoy, contra.—One case only need be referred to as maintaining the scire facias, Hanington v. Cairnes, (5 Ir. L. Rep. 333,) where precisely the same objections were taken and overruled. (Pennfather, B.) That case appears to have been rightly decided, the plaintiffs could not sustain the scire facias, except as executors, and in making proferet they established their title.)

Butt, in reply.—It has been held not to be sufficient for a plaintiff to term himself executor, it must appear that he sues as executor, McSweeney v. Longfield, (2 H. B. 194.)

PENNFATHER, B.*—A scire facias is only to be regarded as a declaration in a qualified sense—the object of it is to bring a third party into privity with the record of the judgment. The form here pursued has had the sanction of half a century, and it would be most injurious to the cause of justice to adopt the strict analogy of declarations in writs of scire facias. The demurrer must therefore be overruled.

COURT OF CHANCERY.

KIERAN v. CORR—October, 21.

Practice—3 & 4 Vic. c. 105—Sale subject to incumbrances.

In a judgment creditor's suit under 3 & 4 Vic. c. 105, a sale may be decreed, subject to incumbrances, which plaintiff is not entitled to redeem.

The bill in this cause was filed to raise the amount due on a judgment of Easter Term, 1822, obtained by the testator of the plaintiff, against the defendant, Henry Corr. It prayed an account and sale, offering to redeem such incumbrances as the Court should think proper. It appeared that by an indenture of the 27th of Aug. 1797, Henry Corr had conveyed a portion of his lands to trustees, to the use of himself for life, and after his decease upon trust to provide an annuity for his intended wife, who was dead at the time of filing the bill, and by sale or mortgage to raise the sum of £1000 for the children, if any, of the then intended marriage, to be paid to them in such shares as Henry Corr should appoint. It also appeared that some of the defendants held incumbrances which affected the entire lands of H. Corr, amongst them Lord Lorton, who had a judgment of Trinity Term, 1827, and Maria Corr, who had one of Michaelmas Term, 1810, both against Henry Corr. The defendant, Henry Corr, by his answer, and at the bar insisted on the benefit of the saving in favour of creditors and purchasers, contained in the 3 & 4 Vic. c. 105, s. 22. The same objection to the bill was also taken by the children entitled to the charge of £1000.

Christian, Q. C. and F. W. Walshe for the plaintiff. Kirman v. Portarlington, (8 I. E. R. 593,) does not apply, as there was there no offer to redeem. Even if not entitled to redeem, Carlton v. Farlar, (8 Beav. 525,) decides that the defendant's interest may be sold, subject to incumbrances. Noote v. Marlborough, (3 M. & C. 407,) Crofts v. Pos, (1 Jones, 50.)

Hughes, Q. C. for the defendants, the children of Henry Corr, objected to being redeemed, the time for raising and paying the portions not having arrived, and for H. Corr contended that no sale subject to an incumbrance could be made consistently with the policy of the 3 & 4 Vic. c. 105, s. 22.

Walter Burke for defendant, Maria Corr; Burroughs for Lord Lorton.

F. Walshe for plaintiff, submitted to redeem them.

LORD CHANCELLOR.—The plaintiff has admitted he can have no relief against the younger children. I must dismiss the bill against them. The next question is, can the estate be sold subject to this charge upon it? I have no difficulty, in point of principle, in selling the estate subject to this charge. We all know that it is the every-day practice out of Court, to buy estates subject to incumbrances; why should they not be so sold, under the orders of the Court? As a matter of prudence, a sale of this sort may be questionable, but is not impracticable. The plaintiff is not entitled to redeem the charge in favour of the children, he must therefore sell the lands comprised in the settlement of 1797, subject to that incumbrance.

ROLLS COURT.

IN THE MATTER OF THE COMMISSIONERS OF WIDE STREETS, CORR, AND THE ACT OF 3 GEO. 4, c. 85—June 14, and 16.

Statute of Limitations—Mortgagor—Acknowledgment in writing.

An acknowledgment by the Mortgagor, in writing, of the payment of interest on a mortgage, and not signed by him. Held sufficient, within the 40th sec. of the 3 & 4 W. 4. c. 27, to take the case out of that statute.

This case came before the court on objections to the Master's report. The facts were, That by indenture of the 1st of Feb. 1815, Robert Creed mortgaged certain premises in the city of Cork to Alicia Creed for £500, with interest at 6 per cent. Interest on the mortgage was paid by the mortgagor, up to the 1st day of Feb. 1827, which appeared by a memorandum in the handwriting of the mortgagor, but not signed by him, which was as follows: "On the 1st of Feb. and 1st of Aug. in every year, I pay my sister Alicia the sum of £15, being the half year's interest on £500, the above is paid to the 1st of Feb. 1827." Alicia Creed died on the 8th of June, 1829, having devised the mortgage to the petitioner, Elizabeth Creed, save £100 bequeathed to the mortgagor. The Commissioners of Wide Street in Nov. 1846, being desirous to purchase these premises, empanelled a jury to ascertain their value, as directed by the 3 Geo. 4. c. 85, who found the value of the premises as comprised in the Indenture of 1st of Feb. 1815, to amount to £—, and that the claimants for same were the petitioner in respect of the said mortgage, and the mortgagor. The mortgagor by his discharge said he had never made any payment on foot of the mortgage for principal, or interest since Feb. or March, 1826, or for two years previous to the death of Alicia Creed, and that all persons were barred by the statute of Limitations from recovering said mortgage, and that no acknowledgment in writing of the right to said mortgage was given by him, or his agent to any person entitled to receive said mortgage, and to give a receipt for the same as agent of such person within 20 years next before the 1st day of Jan. 1847. The Master, by his report, dated the 1st day of January, 1848, found that Elizabeth Creed was entitled, on foot of the mortgage, to the sum of £461 for principal and interest, from the 1st of Feb. 1827. To this report the mortgagor objected, on the grounds, that no sufficient evidence was laid before the Master to authorize him to report that the interest on the mortgage debt was paid up to and for the 1st day of Feb. 1827, and that the right of Elizabeth Creed to recover the claim on said mortgagee was barred by the 40th sec. of the 3 & 4 W. 4. c. 27.

* Pigot, C. B., Richards and Lefroy, B.B. were absent.

Chatterton, for Elizabeth Creed, the petitioner.—The objection to the Master's report is, That there was no acknowledgment in writing as required by the 40th sec. of the 3 & 4 W. 4. c. 27. The question is, whether a payment, proved by a document in the handwriting of the debtor, but not signed by him, is sufficient to take the case out of the statute of Limitations. There are two distinct modes of taking the case out of the 40th sec. each complete in itself, and not to be governed by the other. The first is, "Unless, in the mean time, some part of the principal money, or some interest thereon shall have been paid." The second, "Or some acknowledgment of the right thereto shall have been given in writing, signed by the person to whom the same shall be payable, or his agent to the person entitled, or his agent." The cases of Bailey v. Ashton, (12 Ad. & Ell. 493,) Maghee v. O'Neil, (7 M. & W. 531,) and Eastwood v. Saville, (9 M. & W. 615,) decided upon Lord Tenterden's Act, and which were relied upon in the office, cannot be applied to the construction of this, the objects and language of which are wholly different; the words in the former are "no acknowledgment or promise by words only." Frost v. Bengough, (1 Bing. 266,) and College v. Horn, (3 Bing. 119,) were also referred to.

Hughes, Q. C., for the mortgagor, in support of the exceptions.—There is nothing in the document to show that it was written after 1827, and therefore if evidence at all, it is evidence of a payment to 1827, and is therefore not within twenty years. Ld. Tenterden's act, and the 3 & 4 W. 4. c. 27, were passed to remedy the same evils, and the words in which the debt was secured does not alter the danger that was contemplated. Cited Willis v. Newham, (3 Y. & J. 518.)

Chatterton in reply, submitted that the Court could not be called on to presume that this payment was made in advance, and cited Dowling v. Foxall, (1 B. & Beat. 193,) and Bodkin v. Vesey, (1 Jones, Ex. 139.)

July, 16.—MASTER OF THE ROLLS.—In this case there was a memorandum in the handwriting of the mortgagor, Robert Creed, of his having paid interest on a mortgage of Feb. 1816, up to the 1st of Feb. 1827. The memorandum was not signed, and the question arises, whether it is sufficient evidence of payment within the 40th sec. of the 3 & 4 W. 4. c. 27, to take the case out of that statute. The decisions cited in support of the objections, have all been decided under the 9 Geo. 4. c. 14. Willis v. Newham establishes that a verbal acknowledgment of the payment of part of a debt is not sufficient to take the case out of that statute. Supposing Willis v. Newham to be law, the question arises, whether the language used in 9 Geo. 4. is similar to the words of the statute of Limitations. I think the distinction taken is well grounded, that the clauses in the 40th sec. are distinct and separate, and that there are no grounds whatsoever to graft one upon the other. An acknowledgment of the right must be in writing, signed by the party to whom the same is payable, or his agent. But with respect to the fact of payment, I must consider the evidence with regard to the rules of common law, and therefore overrule these objections, with costs.

EQUITY EXCHEQUER.—TRINITY TERM.

COCHRANE v. FITZPATRICK.—June 20.

Practices—Receiver—Chancery jurisdiction.

If a receiver be appointed in a plenary suit in Chancery, the court of Exchequer will restrain a receiver, appointed in a petition matter in the latter court, from interfering further with the land over which he was appointed, till the Chancery suit be concluded.

Otoay moved that the receiver appointed in the petition matter be discharged. A prior creditor having filed a bill in Chancery, the Master of the Rolls directed a receiver to be appointed in that court, when the receiver in this was discharged.

Pennycuik, J. contra.—The court of Chancery has no jurisdiction to remove the receiver here. If good cause for his retention can be shown, the order in Chancery must fail. Bruce v. Bruce, (6 Ir. Eq. Rep. 214); Mills v. Mills, (9 Ir. Eq. Rep. 1.) Counsel was instructed to shew cause in Chancery, but by reason of some fatality, was unable to attend. It still is in my power to shew a state of facts which would prove the necessity of retaining him here. The prior creditor has possession of a fund more than sufficient to pay him.

PENNYFATHER, B.—Conformably with the opinion I formerly gave, I think that where a receiver is appointed in a plenary suit, by a prior creditor, the receiver in a petition matter must be discharged.

RICHARDS, B.—The cause, if any, should be shewn in Chancery. There is great difficulty in not allowing the competent court to adjudicate on the equities of the parties; the Master of the Rolls has given his opinion, and we have not the power of contradicting it.

LEFROY, B.—The court, where the suit is instituted, can best deal with the case; parties can be added, and by a consent, justice can be administered for all, and the clashing of jurisdictions prevented. If the court of Chancery had ordered that the petition creditors should consent, or that he should be restrained from proceeding in this court, there would be no doubt as to the mode of proceeding. This amounts virtually to that. The order of the Master of the Rolls is a courteous mode of saying that an order to discharge the receiver here should be granted, in pursuance of his order. Instead of discharging our receiver, it will be better to restrain him, as supposing a sufficient portion of land sold in the court of Chancery to pay off prior debts, it might be convenient to allow the receiver to act with respect to the remaining portion.

*Per Cur.—Let the receiver account, and be restrained from further interference, and on accounting, let him have his costs.

ANDERSON v. NEWRY AND WARRENPOINT RAILWAY COMPANY.—June 27.

Injunction—Railway Company entering without leave, or Lodging Money in Bank.

Where a Railway Company having agreed to purchase lands, entered and carried on their works without the leave of the vendor; or having lodged in Bank, or paid the purchase money—The court granted an injunction to restrain them until the money be paid.

This was an injunction suit against the Newry and Rostrevor and Warrenpoint Railway Company. The bill, after setting forth the title of the plaintiff to certain lands, and the formation of the Company by their act of incorporation, and the Company's clauses, Land clauses, and Railway clauses acts, stated, That on the 10th October, 1846, a notice, signed by the directors, and the solicitor of the Company, was addressed to the plaintiff and others, to the effect that the Company would require, and that it was their intention to purchase and take for the purposes of said Railway, certain lands (describing them, and referring to the plans lodged in office of the clerk of the peace, &c.) a portion of the lands which were the property of the plaintiff—That the plaintiff was anxious to facilitate the defendants in the purchase of said lands, and for that purpose empowered Mr. Dobbin, his solicitor, to treat with the Company—That it was ultimately agreed between plaintiff's solicitor, and the solicitor of the Company, that £1000 should be given for the estate and interest of the plaintiff in the lands required by the Company—That the Company proceeded to acquire a title to the said lands, by the verdict of a jury inquisition, and judgment thereon—That in pursuance of the warrant of the Company, the sheriff summoned a jury for the 7th of May, 1847, who, on the 13th of the same month, in presence of the solicitors for the parties concerned (plaintiffs and defendants), awarded to the plaintiff, in respect of said premises, the sum previously agreed upon—That no judgment had been signed by the sheriff on the said inquisition—That by a letter dated the 24th of May, 1847, the solicitor of the Company requested plaintiff's solicitor to furnish him with a concise abstract of plaintiff's title, as he was anxious to save the Company costs, and merely wanted such information as would enable him to prepare a proper conveyance—That on the 25th of the same month, plaintiff's solicitor furnished the required abstract—That no reply was given thereto till the 4th of July following—That some time in the month of June in the same year, the Company, without the knowledge or permission of the plaintiff, or his solicitor, entered and took possession of said lands—That plaintiff had done no act, or other thing, to sanction or acquiesce in said possession—That on the 2nd of July, in the same year, plaintiff's solicitor wrote to the solicitor of the Company, offering any further information in his power—That after much delay a case on behalf of the Company was laid before counsel, in the month of February, 1848, by their solicitor, and that counsel advised that the money should be paid into court—That the solicitor of the Company told plaintiff's solicitor, in a personal interview, that he was ready to pay the money to the plaintiff or his trustees, and would that night write to London to procure payment thereof—That on the 24th of February, plaintiff's solicitor wrote to the solicitor of the Company, remonstrating on the non-fulfilment of his promise; to which the solicitor of the Company replied on the 26th, "I did really write to London at the time I told you, as to the purchase money in this matter, and sent a copy of the opinion; upon reading which it is not unlikely the directors reckoned on further delay. I now send you a copy of case and opinion of counsel, from which you will see that the trustees of Mr. Anderson's settlement (meaning the plaintiff) could not give the Company a legal discharge for the purchase money; and if this be so, I would, on the part of the Company, advise that interest at 5 per cent. be paid Mr. Anderson" (the plaintiff)—That until the receipt of this letter, plaintiff was not apprised of the contents of said opinion—That plaintiff having declined this offer, his solicitor, on the 24th of March, 1848, wrote to the solicitor of the Company, requiring him to pay the purchase money, with interest thereon, from the date of the inquisition, at 5 per cent. to the plaintiff, or otherwise to lodge the same in bank, pursuant to the provisions of the Land consolidation clauses act—That the tenants of the said purchased lands had refused to pay their rents without an abatement in respect of the land taken by the said Company—That the Company since their entry had made various works, ditchings, &c., with a view to the completion of said Railway, and had otherwise dealt with said lands without the sanction or acquiescence of plaintiff. The bill then prayed that the Company might be ordered and decreed to deposit in the Bank of Ireland, in the name, and with the privity of the accountant-general of the court, the sum of £1000, to be placed in pursuance of the provisions of the lands clauses consolidation act, to the credit of the plaintiff, and forthwith pay to the plaintiff lawful interest from the first day of May, 1846, to the day of lodgment, and that the said Company, their agents, servants, and workmen be, in the meanwhile, restrained by injunction from digging, cutting, &c., the said land on which they have entered, or from proceeding with any work on said lands, or from spoiling, or holding possession, or entering thereon, &c.

The defendants admitted the agreement, and the finding of the inquisition stated in the bill; but the affidavit stated that shortly after the inquisition, the Company, through their solicitor, applied for liberty to enter into possession, on lodging the purchase money in a private bank, in the names of mutual trustees—That no reply was given to that application, and believing that the parties interested, even without the lodgment of the money, would have no objection, the Company—having settled with all other parties—entered into possession, and carried on their works from that time to the present—That they had made considerable advances, and would be much injured if an injunction were to issue—That counsel had given an opinion that a valid title could not be made without certain releases being made, and that it was hoped arrangements could be made to obviate the necessity of lodging the money—That the plaintiff and his solicitor knew the Company were in possession, and that the Company would not have entered, if they had been aware of the plaintiff's objection.

* Before Pennefather, Richards, and Lefroy, B. B., Pigot, C. B., at Nisi Prius.

Warren, Sergeant, with M'Mechan, for the plaintiffs.—The defendants have in no respect complied with the provisions of the act of parliament. The 38th section of the 8 Vic. c. 18, requires all companies to pay to the vendors, or lodge in bank to their credit the amount of the purchase money agreed upon. In the present case the defendants, without the plaintiffs knowledge or consent, entered on the land, and commenced their works. Under such circumstances, a court of equity will grant an injunction where irreparable mischief will happen, although the wrong doer may also be liable in trespass. Crockford v. Alexander, (15 Ves. 138.) Our remedy at law, in the present instance, is deficient and difficult to be attained. (Pennefather, B.—Alexander v. Crockford was decided on the ground that the waste was irreparable; the court there exercised a very proper interference. Is there any case where an injunction has been granted on the ground that the purchase money was not paid?) In Hyde v. Great Western Railway Company, (1 Rail. C. 280), the court, on an ex parte motion, granted an injunction restraining the company from proceeding with their works, until payment of the purchase money, they having entered without leave. The principle of courts of equity is to aid the provisions of the legislature, by preventing the company from exceeding the power given them. The plaintiff does not seek to undo what has been done, but merely to restrain them from committing further injury. The Company entered without leave, and there has been no acquiescence in that possession. The 89th sec. imposes a penalty of £25 each day, for the entry the Company admit they have made, and this court will restrain by injunction what a court of law will repress by penalties. They referred to Armstrong v. Waterford and Limerick Railway Company, (10 Ir. Eq. Rep. 60); Colman v. East Counties Railway Company, (4 R. C. 524); Rigby v. Great Western Railway Company, (4 R. C. 75); Jainay v. Lucan and Ely Railway Company, (4 R. C. 615); Innocent v. North Midland Counties Railway Company, (1 R. C. 256); Attorney-General v. Manchester and Leeds Railway Company, (1 R. C. 45.)

Hughes, Q. C., with R. Moore, contra.—If the Company have entered illegally, they are trespassers, and as such the plaintiff has his legal remedy against them. No irreparable waste has been committed in this case. Deere v. Guest, (1 M. & Cr. 516); Sandys v. Murray, (1 Ir. Eq. Rep. 29), (Drury on Injunctions, 164.)

PENNEFATHER B.—I do not think there is any force in the objection as to acquiescence, which can be only material when its effect is to encourage a party to do that, which he would not otherwise have done. The Company in this case do not pretend to resist the payment of this demand, and they admit the rights of the plaintiff. How then can they assert that they have suffered in having been permitted to do that which they would in any event have done? The question comes to this—Can a Railway Company, having taken possession of land under the provisions of the legislature, set themselves up as trespassers, for the purpose of resisting the jurisdiction of this court, and contend that they are at liberty to enter and dig up another person's land, without his consent or having paid for it? When I consider the nature and constitution of these companies, that their incorporation renders them inaccessible to law process—that they are prohibited from taking possession, except on certain terms—that in this case the Company has not denied the justice of the demand—it appears to me a strong case for the interference of this court. I will grant an immediate injunction to be dissolved on the money, with interest at 5 per cent. being lodged in bank, and notice thereof given to plaintiff's solicitor, and the costs of the motion being paid.*

QUEEN'S BENCH.—MICHAELMAS TERM.

HUNTER v. MACAN.—November 3.

Demurrer—Letters of Administration—Insistent Date.

A declaration by an Administratrix stated a debt to the intestate, and a promise to pay him in his lifetime, laying the day on the 14th of April, 1845. The letters of administration were afterwards stated to have been granted to the plaintiff, "since the death of the intestate, on the 21st December, 1844." Held on special demurrer, that this date was repugnant, and if rejected, the declaration would be bad, for want of alleging the day, on which a material fact had taken place.

ASSUMPSIT by the plaintiff, administratrix of Arthur Hunter, deceased. "For that whereas the defendant on the 14th of April, 1845, at &c. was indebted to the said Arthur in his lifetime, &c." in the common form. "Yet he hath disregarded his promise, and hath not paid any of the said monies, or any part thereof, to the said Arthur in his lifetime, or since his death to the said plaintiff, to whom since the death of the said Arthur, on the 21st of December, 1844, administration of the intestate's goods was granted, to the damage of the plaintiff as administratrix of £300." Profert of the administration, in form aforesaid. Demurrer, showing for cause, that the said defendant promised to pay the said Arthur Hunter, the several sums of money in the said declaration mentioned on the said 14th of April, 1845. Whereas it appears in and by the said declaration, that letters of administration had been and were granted to the said plaintiff of the estate and effects of the said Arthur Hunter on the 21st of December, 1844, &c.

Dis. with him Napier, Q.C. in support of the

* Pigot, C.B., Richards, and Lefroy, B.B. were absent.

demurrer.—The question raised by this demurrer, has been already decided by the Court of Exchequer in England, in the case of Ring v. Rosbrough, (2 Tyr. 468). Where it was held, on special demurrer, that the date of the letters of administration was repugnant and inconsistent, and if it could be rejected, the declaration would be bad, for not alleging the day on which a material and traversable fact had taken place. It is impossible to distinguish that case from the one now before the court.

T. O'Hagan and T. K. Lowry, in support of the declaration. The repugnancy relied on is, that the day upon which the promise is alleged to have been made, is subsequent to that afterwards laid as the date of the letters of administration; but, in assumpsit, the day upon which the promise is laid in the declaration is not material, and may be rejected, Inkersalls v. Samms, (Cro. Car. 180); Hanbury v. Ireland, (Cro. Jac. 618). (Moore, J.—You have averred that the intestate sold goods in 1845, and that letters of administration were granted to the plaintiff in 1844.) Perrin, J.—Administration granted in a man's lifetime is void.) An administrator is entitled to sue from the time of the death of the intestate, Thorpe v. Stallwood, (6 Scott, N.R. 715); Foster v. Bates, (7 Jur. 1093); Patten v. Patten, (Al. and Nap. 493). (Blackburne, C. J. Quoad the property, undoubtedly, the title of the administrator refers back to the death of the intestate.) The first date is right, and we can reject the second, Hughes v. Williams, (2 C. M. & Ros. 351); Skinner v. Andrews, (1 Saund. 169). (Perrin, J.—In Skinner v. Andrews, the date was averred under a scilicet, here there is none.) (Moore, J.—There being no scilicet, we are bound to take it that the intestate was alive on the day stated in the declaration, namely, the 14th April, 1845, it being averred that the intestate on that day sold goods.)

Napier, Q.C. was not heard in reply.

BLACKBURNE, C. J.—The allegations in this declaration are plainly inconsistent. The defendant's promise is stated to have been made to the intestate on the 14th April, 1845, and the letters of administration to have been granted to the plaintiff on the 21st December, 1844, and these dates are not laid under a videlicet. Ring v. Rosbrough is exactly in point. The demurrer must be allowed.

Judgment for defendant.

EXCHEQUER OF PLEAS.—TRINITY TERM.

SHARP AND OTHERS v. SHEARMAN.—May 22, and June 2.

Demurrer—Executors—Omission of Profert—Costs.

A Declaration containing only the money counts, and commencing and concluding in the usual form by an Executor, but omitting profert of the letters testamentary—Held bad on general demurrer, on the grounds, that though the other counts might be upheld as disclosing causes of action personal to the plaintiffs, the count on an account stated could only be sustained by them in their executorial capacity—therefore there was a misjoinder.

Held that the special demurrer on the ground of the omission of profert taken by the defendant to the entire declaration was too large.

The ground of general demurrer not having been noted in the paper books, no costs of demurrer were allowed.

Assumpsit.—On the common counts by the plaintiffs, "as Executors." The declaration stated the several causes of action, to have accrued to them "as Executors," the promise in the conclusion and breach followed the same form. There was no profert of the letters testamentary. Special demurrer on the ground of omission of profert.

Lynch, with Curtis, for the demurrer. This declaration is clearly bad, it is quite settled that the omission of profert in a declaration by executors, is a good ground of special demurrer. It will be contended on the other side, that the words "as executors," may be struck out as surplusage, as it was not necessary for the plaintiffs to sue in their executorial capacity. Admitting that as to the other counts, it does not hold good as to the count on the account stated. (Pennefather, B.—If you can shew any count necessarily requiring profert the declaration is bad.) Jenkins and Us v. Plombe, (6 Mod. 93,) decided that an inimul computasset between a testator and defendant is not a cause of action personal to the executor; Ashby v. Ashby, (7 B. & C. 444). (Pennefather, B.—If you can shew that there is a misjoinder of causes of action, the declaration is bad on general demurrer.) Webb & Us v. Cowdell, (14 M. & W. 820) is pari passu with this case, there such a declaration was held bad for misjoinder. Cowell & Us v. Watts, (6 East. 405); Corner v. Shew, (3 M. & W. 350.)

Harris in support of the demurrer.—It appears on the face of this declaration that the plaintiffs had a good cause of action, without resorting to their executorial capacity. The cases of Crawford v. Whittall, (1 Dougl. 4, note) and Ellis v. Bowen, (For. 98) are conclusive, that in such a case profert is unnecessary. As to the count on an account stated, the plaintiff might have sued on it in his own right. (Williams on Exor. 514); Needman v. Croke. (Freeman, 538.) (Lefroy, B.—Do those authorities go beyond this, that the plaintiff has his election to sue either in his personal right, or as executors?) The demurrer here is too large, being to the whole declaration, and the defendants admit all the counts to be good, except that on an account stated. (Pennefather, B.—But here is a misjoinder, which is fatal on general demurrer.) That point is not noted, and defendant cannot therefore now rely upon it.

Lynch in reply.—Had we relied on the misjoinder, the plaintiffs would have contended that though the other counts in the declaration might be sustained by the plaintiffs in their personal capacity, yet as they profess to declare as executors, their is no misjoinder. (Pennefather, B.—If your objection as to misjoinder must be waived, your case fails, as the demurrer is too large, being to the whole declaration.) Our case is that there is no misjoinder, the plaintiffs declaring as executors throughout, and concluding accordingly; and therefore profert is necessary.

PER CUR.—The case referred to (Webb & others

v. Cowdell,) governs this—the demurrer, therefore, must be allowed; but as the defendant has not complied with the practice of the court requiring him to note the points for argument on general demurrer, let the plaintiffs be at liberty to amend, and let there be no costs as to the demurrer.*

MURTAGH v. CRAWFORD.—June 13 and 16. Statute of Limitations, (9 Geo. 4. c. 14.)—Acknowledgment in writing by co-contractor.—Evidence. An acknowledgment by one maker of a joint and several promissory note, indorsed on the note, that interest had been paid thereon. Held not to be evidence against his co-contractor, either as an acknowledgment of the fact of payment, or, after the indorser's death, as an entry made by a deceased person against his interest.

This was a motion to change the verdict had for the plaintiff into a non-suit, in pursuance of the leave reserved. The action was Assumpsit by the payee against the surviving maker of a joint and several promissory note, as follows:

"Twelve months after date, we jointly and severally promise to pay Mr. William Murtagh of Liscunnal, the sum of £100 sterling, with interest at 6 per cent. per annum, until paid, for value received on account.

"Dated 8th day of Dec. 1838. C. Crawford.
James Lee, (present). J. Crawford."

The defendant pleaded the general issue, and the statute of Limitations. At the trial before the Lord Chief Baron, in the sittings after Hilary Term, 1847, the plaintiffs offered the following indorsement on the note as evidence to take the case out of the statute of Limitations: "Interest on the within bill has been paid to the 8th of Dec. 1844, therefore it is good for six years more from this date, and I will give a renewal as soon as my son John comes to the country. (present,) James Lee. C. Crawford." The defendant's Counsel objected to this evidence, on the grounds, that as an acknowledgment against a co-contractor, it was expressly excluded by the 9 Geo. 4. c. 14, s. 1, and secondly, it was not evidence of the fact of payment. The learned Chief Baron admitted the evidence as an entry made by a deceased person against his interest; but reserved liberty to the defendant to move to enter a nonsuit, if the Court should be of opinion that it ought not to be admitted in evidence.

Brewster, Q.C. with Napier, Q.C. and J. Robinson.—The question rests entirely on the admissibility of this memorandum, as evidence of payment of interest. The acknowledgment must be signed by the party to be charged with the debt, and the signature by an agent is not sufficient. Bayley v. Ashton, (12 Ad. & El. 493,) Clarke v. Alexander, (8 Scott, N. R. 147,) Eastwood v. Saville, (9 Mee. & W. 615.) If the fact of payment be proved aliunde, an acknowledgment, not signed, is admissible to shew that fact has been correctly proved. Bevan v. Gething, (3 Ad. & El. N. C. 740.) But it is settled that there must be proof of actual payment, and that no mere acknowledgment of the fact will suffice. Willis v. Newham, (3 You. & Jer. 518.) Maghee v. O'Neil, (7 Mee. & W. 531.) Waters v.

Tompkins, (2 Cr. M. & Ro. 722.) (Taylor on Ev. 727.) Waugh v. Cope, (6 Mee. & W. 824.) Ashby v. James, (11 M. & W. 542.) Hyde v. Johnson, (2 Bing. N. C. 776.) Moore v. Strong, (1 Bing. N. C. 441.) Bowley v. Power, (Hayes and Jon. 368.) Bateman v. Pinder, (3 Q. B. 574.)

S. Ferguson, and O'Hagan, contra.—The question is whether a written acknowledgment of payment by a deceased joint contractor will take the case out of the statute with respect to the survivor. A written acknowledgment of the debt by a joint contractor undoubtedly is within the Act. The question in Willis v. Newham rested wholly on its being an oral statement, there is consequently no analogy between that case and this. (Lefroy B.) No acknowledgment however solemn will take the case out of the statute as against the co-contractor.) No solemnity of acknowledgment of a debt will do so. This is a solemn written admission of the fact of payment; the judgment of Baron Garrow in Willis v. Newham is rested wholly on the ground of its being a loose verbal statement—no court has yet decided that the law applicable to oral statements of payment is to be extended to written acknowledgments of payment. The obiter dictum of Tindal, C. J. in Clarke v. Alexander is no decision. In Maghee v. O'Neil, (7 M. & W. 535,) Lord Abinger, speaking of Bayley v. Ashton, (12 A. & E. 493,) says, "If the question were res integra, and the Court, for the first time, were called on to put a construction on the Act, I should certainly say, that the mode of payment of principal or interest, was left by Lord Tenterden's Act to be proved as at common law." In Maghee v. O'Neil, (7 M. & W. 531,) Parke, B. expressed his opinion that the cases had gone too far. Seeing the reluctance with which the courts have adopted Willis v. Newham, this Court will be slow to apply it to the present case, if there be a real distinction. The oral admission of payment relied on in that case is absent from this, the words of the Act are, "That no joint contractor shall lose the benefit of the said enactments, (21 Jac. c. 16, and 4 Anne, c. 16, Eng.) or either of them so as to be chargeable in respect, or by reason of any written acknowledgment or promise, made and signed by any other." But "that nothing therein was to lessen the effect of any payment made by any person," leaving the evidence of payment to be made as before the passing of the Act. In Waters v. Tompkins, the Court admitted an oral admission in order to show to what account the wife had paid the money. Bevan v. Gething, (3 Q. B. 740.) Moore v. Strong, (1 Bing. N. C. 441.) (Pennefather, B.)—Undoubtedly where payment is proved aliunde, oral evidence may be given to show upon what account it was paid.) The proviso of the section is clear, "That nothing shall lessen the effect of any payment," here the debtor has put into words the payment he admits he has made. The view the Court is inclined to take, will create a strange anomaly—this indorsement, if made by a deceased stranger against his own interest would be evidence against the defendant; is the plaintiff to be in a worse position because this admission of payment has been made by a deceased co-contractor? The question is whether from the terms of the indorsement you should consider it as taking the case out of the statute. The manifest intention of the deceased contractor was to give evidence against himself for six years. Curr. vult adv.

* See Blakeley v. Smallwood, 6 Q. B. Rep. 538.

June 16.—PIGOT, C.B. now delivered judgment. The question is, whether the indorsement on the note in this case will take the debt out of the statute of Limitations. The plaintiff's counsel rested their arguments on two grounds, First, that being an acknowledgment of payment it was evidence against the surviving contractor; and Secondly, that being an entry made by a deceased person against his interest, and containing an admission of the payment of six years interest, it was evidence of the fact of payment. This case was endeavoured to be distinguished from Willis v. Newham. The words of the Act on which that question arose were, "That nothing therein contained shall alter, or take away, or lessen the effect of any payment, of any principal, or any interest, made by any person whatsoever," and the Court distinctly ruled that evidence of payment could not be made by a parol acknowledgment of the fact, but there must be evidence of actual payment. The evident import given to the word, acknowledgment, so as to take a case out of the statute, is, that it must be an admission of a subsisting debt, or instead, there must be evidence of the fact of payment. In this case we are called on to give effect to a written acknowledgment of the payment of interest, although it is conceded that such an acknowledgment of the debt by the same co-contractor would not take the case out of the statute as against the other. It was contended that the mischiefs relied on in Willis v. Newham did not exist here, and that the courts have struggled against the doctrine laid down in that case; and that the words in the subsequent part of the section, as to joint contractors, are to receive the same construction as those in the preceding; and, that the indorsement in this case contained two distinct things, first, an acknowledgment of the debt, and secondly, of the payment of interest. Although the two are coupled in some degree, it is impossible not to adopt the construction of the Act given by the Court in Willis v. Newham. The consequence is that this acknowledgment does not take the case out of the statute. On the second ground I entertained considerable doubt; the words of the statute are, "that one co-contractor is not to be made chargeable by reason only of any written acknowledgment made or signed by any other, provided that nothing herein contained shall alter, or take away, or lessen the effect of any payment, of any principal, or interest by any person whatsoever;" from this it appears that an acknowledgment, in order to have the effect of taking the case out of the statute, must be in writing, but that the mere fact of payment, if proved, will be sufficient. From the cases, I take this to be such an entry, as far as regards the party making it, as would make the endorsement evidence against the whole world. It doubtless was written for the purpose of taking the note out of the statute, and contains two statements, one against, the other in favour of the interest of the person making it. The authorities, Williams v. Graves, (8 Car. & Pay. 592,) Turner v. Cross, (2 Stra. 826,) Clarke v. Wilmot, (1 You. & Col. V. C. 53,) Pickering v. Bishop of Ely, 2 You. & Col. V. C. 258,) clearly establish, that when an entry is partly for, and partly against interest, so much as is against may be used in evidence. This indorsement would then be evidence against the deceased contractor if alive; and the question then is, has it against the co-contractor the same effect as in other cases? I am of opinion, giving the Act its full operation, that this indorsement cannot be relied on to take the case out of the statute as against the co-contractor, although it would be evidence against strangers.

PENNEFATHER, B.—The Act 9 Geo. 4. cap. 14, contains two provisions, the first respecting promises made by the party himself; with regard to that it is express that no parol acknowledgment shall be sufficient to take the case out of the statute. The second applies to joint contractors, and is, "that no promise or acknowledgment by one, shall have the effect of taking the case out of the statute with respect to the other." There is an exception, that a payment by the party who has made the promise, or by his joint contractor, will take the case out of the statute. The question then is, what is evidence of payment? It appears to me, considering both the words of the Act, the decisions thereon, and the object of the Legislature, that the fact of payment must be proved by evidence aliunde, that is, that parol, or written acknowledgments of payment by the joint contractor are not sufficient evidence of that fact, it must be proved by evidence different from the acknowledgment, otherwise the statute is wholly got rid of. If the acknowledgment of the debt be insufficient, it appears to me that the acknowledgment of the payment is likewise so; it was the object of the Legislature to protect one joint contractor from the acts of his co-contractor. This view is in accordance with all the decisions, therefore, without considering whether an acknowledgment against the parties own interest would not be in some cases evidence, I am of opinion this verdict must be set aside.

RICHARDS, B.—The Court in expounding this statute, must work out the objects of the Legislature. The language of the Act is express, that no parol acknowledgment of the debt shall be sufficient to take the case out of the statute of Limitations. In Willis v. Newham the Court held that no admission of part payment would take the case out of the statute. That authority is binding in the present case. It was contended that as the fact of payment might be proved by a parol statement, that this indorsement being a written statement of that fact, when taken in connection with, and identified by the document itself, was written evidence of the fact of payment. I am clearly of opinion that it is no more than a parol acknowledgment by a co-contractor, and consequently will not take the case out of the statute. It was then argued that this indorsement being an entry by a deceased co-contractor against his interest, is admissible as evidence of a part payment. If I could make up my mind that this entry was admissible for that purpose, I should have some difficulty in saying that it would not take this case out of the operation of the statute. I think it is not an entry against the interest of the writer, and therefore not admissible.

LEFROY, B.—I cannot conceive how this case can be taken out of the statute by this promise. The Act treats of two classes of persons, first of individuals—with them we have nothing to do; secondly, of joint contractors; the words are, “that nothing herein contained shall alter, or take away, or lessen, the effect of any payment of any principal, or interest made by any person whatsoever.” It is clear that one joint contractor cannot be made liable to a debt by the written acknowledgment of his co-contractor; the fact of that acknowledgment being against the interest of the co-contractor cannot make any difference: will then an acknowledgment of payment? Generally speaking, such an acknowledgment would be admissible as against third parties, here it is not so, because the statute has expressly forbidden it. If the Court were to agree to the plaintiff’s argument, it would be arriving at a means of taking this case out of the statute as against the co-contractor. Verdict set aside.

MICHAELMAS TERM.

SCULLY v. FIGGIS. ELLIS v. FIGGIS.—Nov. 3.

Practice—Interpleader Act—Costs of Sheriff.

The court will not allow the Sheriff the costs of his application under the Interpleader Act, unless there has been gross neglect on the part of the other parties; but where an execution creditor waives in court his claim upon the goods seized, being already apprised by affidavit, of the justice of the other party’s demand, the court will allow the Sheriff and the claimant the costs of their attendance that day against the execution creditor.

Costs, on behalf of the Sheriff of the county of the city of Dublin, applied for a rule that the claimant and execution creditor should interplead. The affidavit stated that a Fi Fa, at the suit of the plaintiff Scully, had been delivered to deponent on the 11th of September, under which he seized a large quantity of furniture and other effects, lying in the Custom-house stores, and pointed out to him by the execution creditor as the property of the defendant. On the 14th of September, the Sheriff was served with a notice by the Trustees of the defendant’s marriage settlement, claiming as the property of defendant’s wife, under the trusts of the settlement, the greater portion of the effects seized. Under these circumstances, the sheriff applied for the protection of the court.

J. A. Curran, appeared for the trustees.

R. Armstrong, for the execution creditor, admitted the title of the defendant’s wife, and waived all claim to that portion of the effects which belonged to her.

PIGOT, C.B.—If so, you should have withdrawn your claim long before this, and not have put all parties to the expense of coming before the court for what might have been as well done out of it.

Costs for Sheriff.—We are entitled to our costs. Scales v. Sargeson, (4 Dow. P. C. 331); Cotter v. Bank of England, (3 M. & Scott, 180. The execution creditor has taken it upon himself to point out to the sheriff the goods to be seized, and if the sheriff had not seized them, he would have been liable to an action.

PIGOT, C.B.—If an execution creditor points out to the sheriff goods which he knows at the time not to belong to the defendant, and the sheriff then comes here for protection, we can understand how he should be entitled to his costs. But if the sheriff, acting bona fide, is under the impression that the property belongs to the defendant, and if the execution creditor acts under a similar impression, neither of them is to blame, and it is not a case for visiting any party with costs. We are of opinion, however, that the sheriff is entitled to the costs of his attendance here to-day—that attendance having been rendered necessary by the pertinacity of the execution creditor in not withdrawing his claim when he ascertained the rights of the claimants, and in that respect the sheriff stands on the same footing as the claimant, and both are entitled as against the execution creditor to the costs incurred since the 5th day of October, when the rights of the claimants were ascertained.

MACNEIL v. MACNEIL.—Nov. 3.

Practice—Enlarging time for making an award under 3 & 4 Vic. c. 105, s. 63.

The court has jurisdiction under the 3 & 4 Vic. c. 105, s. 63, to enlarge the term for arbitrators making their award after the time has expired, even though the deed of submission contains a clause empowering the arbitrators to extend the term from time to time.

J. Pennafather moved, on behalf of the plaintiff, to enlarge the time for making the award under the following circumstances. A declaration had been filed, in Michaelmas Term, 1846—the cause of action being to the amount of £26,000, and involving complicated accounts. It was agreed to refer the matter to arbitration. After the time for making the award expired, the arbitrators on consent, extended the time to August. It appeared that various delays occurred, chiefly on the part of the defendant, who, when that time expired, refused again to enlarge it. Counsel relied on 3 & 4 Vic. 105, s. 63.

Hickey contra.—The court has no jurisdiction to enlarge the time under the section referred to. That section does not apply to cases where the power is reserved by the deed of submission to the arbitrators to extend the period from time to time. The deed of submission contains full powers to the arbitrators to extend the time for naming their award, and the act applies only to mere naked deeds, which are without any such provision. Lambert v. Hutchinson, (2 M. & G. 859); Doe v. Powell, (7 Dow. P. C. 539.)

Pennafather in reply.—Under the 63rd section, the plaintiff, having signed the submission, has no power to proceed, unless the court extends the time; and therefore if the court has no jurisdiction, his claim is effectually barred. (Lefroy, B.—That is not so, for the restriction on the plaintiff’s proceeding continues only while the submission is pending.) But this very point has been expressly ruled. Carberry v. Newenham, (7 M. & W. 378); Lake v. Richardson, (12 Jur. 473.)

PIGOT, C.B.—That authority enables us to dispose of the case at once. In almost every deed of submission there is a similar clause, empowering the arbitrators to extend the time, and if we were too narrow the operation of this section, as contended for, it would be in effect to render the section inoperative.

LEPROY, B.—I confess, if this matter were res integra, I should be disposed to agree with Judge Patterson, that the court has no jurisdiction in cases like the present; but there are two later authorities the other way; and though I cannot see my way to the construction of the act of parliament, I can see it very clearly to follow those authorities.

COURT OF CHANCERY.

KELLY v. BENNISON.—Oct. 25th.

Evidence—defendant in similar interest with plaintiff—6 & 7 Vic. c. 85.

The evidence of a defendant, who might have been made a co-plaintiff, is admissible for the plaintiff under the provisions of the 6 & 7 Vic. c. 85.

The testator in the cause devised certain lands to his daughters Rebecca Matilda, and Anna Maria Sproule, the latter, in the testator's lifetime, being about to marry the defendant, Morgan, the testator, by a codicil to his will, settled her portion of the land to her separate use; after his death Rebecca Matilda married the plaintiff Harpur. The bill was filed by the plaintiff Kelly as the trustee of Mrs. Harpur, against the defendant Bennison, who had been the agent of Mrs. Morgan and Mrs. Harpur over these lands, for an account of the rents and profits received by him in that capacity. Mrs. Harpur and her husband were plaintiffs, and Mr. and Mrs. Morgan defendants. Mrs. Harpur and Mrs. Morgan took as tenants in common under the will. To prove the reception of the rents and profits of the lands by the defendant Bennison, the evidence of James Morgan, the husband of Mrs. Morgan, was tendered by the plaintiffs and objected to.

Monaghan, Att.-G. with Christian, Q. C. and F. L. Smith, for the plaintiff, cited Wood v. Rowcliffe, (6 Hare, 183.)

Green, Q. C. with Martley, Q. C. for the defendant, Bennison, cited Monday v. Gayer, (1 D. & G. and Mon. 182.)

LORD CHANCELLOR.—I will receive this evidence on the authority of Wood v. Rowcliffe decided by Sir James Wigram, V. C., I think less harm will be done, by receiving than by excluding it, but if the parties wish I will give them an opportunity of sending it, if they be so advised, to obtain the opinion of the highest tribunal on the construction of this Act. When I consider its language and intention, I can put no other construction on it than that of V. C. Wigram. It applies to proceedings both at law and in equity. If the section stopped at the word "respectively" in the first part of the proviso, the effect of that might have been to exclude the practice of this Court with respect to the examination of parties to the record as witnesses. But to prevent that operation it is provided "That in courts of Equity any defendant to a cause pending in any such court, may be examined as a witness on behalf of the plaintiff, or of any co-defendant in any such cause, saving just exceptions." If it stopped there, there would be more difficulty, but it goes on to say "And that any interest which such defendant so to be examined may have in the matters, or any of the matters in question in the cause, shall not be deemed a just exception to the testimony of such defendant, but shall only be considered as affecting or tending to affect the credit of such defendant as a witness." Now what interest could a defendant have in matters in the cause when examined for the plaintiff? It cannot mean an interest to defeat the plaintiff's case, for in that case the evidence would be receivable against the party who examined him. It must mean an interest similar to that of the plaintiff. Then, if we admit the evidence of a defendant in a similar interest, where can we draw the distinction? In the present case, although the witness has not an interest in the actual monies to come to the plaintiff, he has an interest on the same side as the plaintiff, for the bill prays the payment to him, or to his wife which is the same thing, of monies to be found due on taking the account prayed in the bill; but I cannot read the Act in any way save as read by Sir J. Wigram. Perhaps if a case like this had been suggested to the Legislature, they would have prevented any such arrangement of the record, to use no harsher term, being made available for the purpose of admitting evidence which would have been excluded by its natural and proper frame. But the case not having been provided for, and the authorities upon this point being balanced, I will give the preference to V. C. Wigram's construction—I shall receive this evidence.

IRWIN v. ROGERS.—Nov. 14.

Evidence—Stat. 6 & 7 Vic. 85—Co-Defendant. A defendant claiming under a deed impeached by the bill, may be examined in support of that deed on behalf of co-defendants.

This was a bill filed to set aside, or declare revoked, a voluntary conveyance by which, amongst other provisions an annuity of £20 per annum was granted to the defendant Byrne. Byrne was examined on behalf of Catherine Hopkins, another defendant, in support of that conveyance.

J. D. Fitzgerald, Q. C., with F. Fitzgerald, offered the depositions of the defendant Byrne.

Brewster, Q. C., with Christian, Q. C. and Drury, opposed the admission of this evidence. This is, in fact, the defendant being examined for himself. When your lordship decided Kelly v. Bennison, Clark v. Wyburn, (12 Jur. 613), was not cited.

LORD CHANCELLOR.—The proviso as to courts of Equity overrules all the prior saving. If the act be defective, Parliament alone can remedy it. As I said in Kelly v. Bennison, I must take the words as I find them. I will receive this evidence.

ROLLS COURT.

TOMLINSON v. COX.—Nov. 3.

Demurrer—Misjoinder—Parties—Departure—Amendment.

A bill against an executor, to carry into execution the trusts of a will, and for payment of an annuity thereby granted, stated that an agreement had been entered into by the defendant with one E. R., by which he was to pay the said annuity, and that certain premises had been assigned to secure the same. That after the death of E. R., S. M. R. procured from defendant an assignment of said premises. The defendant by his answer stated, that the annuity had been assigned to him by the plaintiff. The bill was then amended, and prayed this assignment should be declared fraudulent and void. Held upon demurrer that the case made by the amended bill was no misjoinder, nor was there any departure from the case made by the original bill, it being competent for a plaintiff to put forward facts which avoid the defence. Held also, that upon the statements in the bill S. M. R. was not a necessary party, although she might be so when the evidence came to be read at the hearing.

The bill stated that John Tomlinson, the testator in the cause, by will bearing date the 30th May, 1835; bequeathed to the plaintiff Patrick, as much of his personal property as would purchase an annuity of £60; and by a codicil, appointed the Rev. William Cox (the defendant) sole executor. That the testator died on the 29th of June, 1835. That the will was duly proved by the defendant, and that plaintiff was informed that the defendant had entered into an agreement with one Edward Richardson, whereby Richardson was to pay said annuity to the plaintiff, and as a security for payment had assigned certain houses to the defendant. That on the 13th of December, 1837, after the decease of said Edward Richardson, Sarah Maria Richardson his widow obtained an assignment of said houses, and that some small sums had been paid on account of the annuity. The bill prayed that the trusts of the will of John Tomlinson might be carried into execution. That an account might be taken of the sums due to plaintiff. That the defendant might admit assets, or that an account might be taken of the personal estate and effects of the testator, and his assets applied in a due course of administration. The defendant in his answer, stated, that by an indenture dated the 17th of April, 1837, and made between plaintiff of the one part, and defendant of the other; the plaintiff assigned the said annuity to the defendant, who, in consideration thereof covenanted to pay for the board and lodging of the plaintiff. The answer also set forth an account as between plaintiff and defendant, by which a large balance appeared to be due to the latter. The bill was then amended, stating that the annuity given to the plaintiff was in said will directed not to be sold or disposed of by him, as from infirmity of vision and understanding, plaintiff was without knowledge of the world. That the defendant had applied to his own use, the money received from Sarah Maria Richardson. That the plaintiff was induced to execute the assignment to defendant by fraud, and that the same was void, having been obtained by a trustee for his own benefit, and in violation of the testator's will. The amended bill then prayed, that the said indenture of the 17th day of April, 1837, and the said account might be declared void as against the plaintiff; and that notwithstanding said indenture of assignment, and the account, that the plaintiff might be declared entitled to said annuity, and that the defendant might be compelled to pay, and to secure to him an annuity of £60 per annum, pursuant to the directions contained in the will of the testator, John Tomlinson. To the amended bill, the defendant demurred. "For that the relief sought by the bill, to carry into execution the trusts of the will of John Tomlinson, and the accounts and directions therein prayed, and the further relief sought by the amended bill, that the indenture of the 17th of April, 1837, and the account set forth in defendant's answer, should be declared fraudulent and void, appear to relate to several and distinct matters, and which ought not to have been joined together, and that Sarah Maria Richardson should be a party to the said bill, inasmuch as it is stated therein, that she obtained the re-assignment in bill mentioned. That the case made by the amended bill was a departure from that in the original bill, inasmuch as the defendant is there sued as executor, whereas in the amended bill he is sued as trustee."

Martley, Q.C. and Dobbs for demurrer.—In its original form, the bill was simply that of an assistant, praying for payment of his annuity; by the amended bill a totally different case is made, and relief is sought against the defendant as trustee. The bill prays that the assignment to him from his cestui que trust may be set aside, this is a clear misjoinder, Salvidge v. Hyde, (5 Mad. 146); Comptel v. Mackay, (1 My. & Cr. 619); Ward v. Duke of Northumberland, (2 Anstr. 469). The bill states that the annuity was reconveyed by the defendant to Sarah Maria Richardson, now she must have been aware that the relationship of trustee and cestui que trust existed between the plaintiff and defendant, and if the defendant was not able to pay this annuity, she could be decreed to pay it, she is therefore a necessary party to the amended bill.

Hughes, Q.C. and H. Smythe, in support of the bill, cited Darcy v. Beytagh, (F. and K. 481) on the point of multifariousness.

MASTER OF THE ROLL.—The bequest to the plaintiff directed that the annuity was not to be sold, or disposed of by him, as from imperfect vision and understanding he was without knowledge of the world, so that on the face of this pleading, the trusts which Mr. Cox as executor undertook to carry into execution, and the incapacity of the plaintiff with respect to want of knowledge of the world are clearly set forth, yet with full knowledge of this fact, the executor fraudulently and by misrepresentation—such being the statement in the will, which, on the argument of this demurrer I am entitled to assume to be true—procures to himself a conveyance of this annuity. In the amended bill there is no departure from the case made by the original bill, it merely gets rid of the defence set up by the answer, and if a fraudulent instrument be set up, it is competent for the plaintiff, by amendment, to put forward any facts that will avoid the defence. I am entitled to look to the answer, for the purpose of ascertaining if it has overruled the demurrer; but I can only look to it for that purpose, and I must take the statements in the amended bill, with respect to the assignment to Sarah Maria Richardson, without regard to those contained in the answer. The argument on the part of the defendant is, that the trusts of the will have been fulfilled by the purchase of the annuity by him, and that if the plaintiff accepted of this arrangement in satisfaction of his legacy, it deprives him of his right to it. I do not consider that the existence of this second instrument amounts to a satisfaction of the plaintiff's claim under the first, there were some dealings between him, Richardson, and the defendant, when the annuity was purchased, but this does not seem to have been with the assent of the plaintiff, and I cannot conceive how the trusts of the will can be considered as fulfilled by this transaction to which the plaintiff was no party. I do not see, therefore, any facts on the face of this will, to shew that these trusts have been carried into execution, and if not, there is no ground for the objection of misjoinder, as to the objection for want of parties, putting out of consideration any passage read to me from the answer. I find no statement in the bill, to shew that Mrs. Richardson is a necessary party, the course taken by the defendant is very incorrect, for I am forced to decide this demurrer, knowing there are other facts in the case, but which being contained in the answer are not properly before me, besides the prayer of the bill is simply to carry into execution the trusts of the will, and no relief is prayed against her. I do not now offer any opinion, as to whether, when the answer is read, Mrs. Richardson may not be a necessary party, but upon the vague statements in the bill I do not think she is.—Demurrer overruled.

TOWNSHEND V. BARRY.—Nov. 6.

Practice—Appointment of a receiver.

Pending a creditors' suit; a petition was presented by a judgment creditor, a defendant in the suit, for a receiver over the lands in the pleadings mentioned. Held, that the pendency of the suit was not sufficient cause against the appointment of the receiver, and that the petitioner was entitled to his costs.

Sherlock in this case shewed cause against a conditional order for the appointment of a receiver. The petition was presented on the 12th of June last, on the 7th of March previous, a bill had been filed for a receiver over the same lands. To this suit the defendant was a party, and had been served with notice of the proceedings. It is not stated in this petition that the cause was pending, nor is there any allegation that it was not properly conducted; A consent was entered into, in the suit, that if the answers were not filed before the 20th of October, the bill should be taken as confessed, and a receiver appointed, and accordingly on the 4th of November, the answers not having been filed, the bill was taken pro confesso and a receiver appointed over these lands. The petitioner should have informed the court, that the suit had been instituted.

C. Kelly, contra.—The answers were not filed on the 19th June, when the petition was granted, and we had no means of compelling the plaintiff to proceed in the cause.

MASTER OF THE ROLLS.—I do not think I can refuse the costs of this petition; when a suit is pending, if another creditor should file a bill, I could not stay proceedings until a decree is obtained, it would be very desirable that some alteration should be made in the practice. In the incumbered estates act, there is a provision, I believe, that pending any proceedings under it no suit can be instituted. I must, however, take the case as I find it. The only order I can make is to extend the receiver already appointed in the suit to the petition matter.

READ V. DUBLIN, DUNDUM, AND RATHFARHAM COMPANY.—Nov. 7.

Practice—Evasive answer—Side bar rule to elect.

If a plaintiff proceeds at law and in equity, a defendant cannot, immediately after a short or evasive answer, enter a side bar rule, calling on the plaintiff to elect, such a rule is entered at the peril of the defendant, and if upon exception the answer is found not to be full, the rule will not be effectual.

This was a motion shew cause against a side bar order to elect entered by the defendant. The bill in this case was filed, to compel the specific performance of an agreement, for the sale of certain premises. On the 7th of April, 1848, the defendants filed their answer, to which the plaintiff excepted for insufficiency, on the 13th of June a further answer was filed, and on the same day a side bar rule was entered by the defendant, that the plaintiff should elect whether he would proceed at law, or in equity. On the 16th of June, notice of motion was served by the plaintiff, to set aside this order for irregularity, and on the same day, notice of exception to the second answer was served. This exception was allowed, and a further answer put in, before the notice of the 16th of June came on to be moved; on that motion his Honor directed that the plaintiff should be at liberty to serve a notice of motion, and shew cause against the side bar order; instead of serving this notice, the plaintiff, by mistake,—served notice of an application for a reference to the master, to enquire whether the case was a proper one to put the plaintiff to his election.

Brewster, Q.C. with H. West.—The practice in England is to enter a side bar rule. That the plaintiff shall elect within eight days after serving notice, (1 Dan. Ch. Pr. 791). The practice in this country, as settled by Hollyer v. Hodges, (9 I. E. R. 37), is to enter a rule forthwith after answer, that the plaintiff shall elect in eight days, this rule is to be entered at the peril of the defendant, and if the answer should be insufficient, the rule is a nullity, for until full answer, it is impossible for the plaintiff to know whether he will elect. In the present case, if no further answer was put in, the case would be as if there were none, how then can it be said, that because a party afterwards files an answer, the side bar rule is to be continued as if the answer was full in the first instance.

Butt, Q.C. and T. Darley, contra.—A sufficient answer is now filed to support this side bar order, according to the case of Hollyer v. Hodges, there is no condition annexed to the entry of the rule.

The notice is irregular, by the notice of 29th July, plaintiff asks for a reference, and complies with the side bar order, and if this order is now set aside, he would be entitled to enter it again without any objection. This is a clear case to put the party to his election, the proceedings at law and equity are for the same matter.

MASTER OF THE ROLLS.—The former practice in England having been found inconvenient, was altered by the general orders of 1839, since adopted in those of 1845. At the end of eight days after answer, a defendant may now enter an immediate rule calling on the plaintiff to elect. The question I had decided in Hollyer v. Hedges, was, whether the side bar rule to elect could be entered in eight days after answer, or was to be postponed for six weeks, the time the plaintiff had to except, and there was no case on the books in which the point had been expressly decided, and I considered it more convenient to make the practice here and in England as nearly in conformity as possible, but it never was intended that a party was to be at liberty to put in an evasive answer, and call upon the plaintiff to elect. The plaintiff should not be obliged to do so, until he sees what defence is made. A defendant ought to know if answer is short, and, whether it is or not, the rule is taken, at the peril of the defendant. I will not now decide whether it is necessary to enter a new side bar rule for the effect of the notice of motion by the plaintiff's calling for a reference is to treat the answer as sufficient, and it would not be reasonable to allow an amendment of that. On this notice of motion for the purpose of setting aside this rule, which raises the real question between the parties, I will act upon the plaintiff's own construction of the order, and treat it as if the eight days commenced upon the 9th of July. I will make the order of reference in the words of the case of Mills v. Fry, (3 Ves. & B. 9,) and after the report I will dispose of the costs of the motion. It is not necessary to decide whether a second side bar order is necessary, that objection having been waived.

RICHARDSON v. ANSTEN.—Nov. 13.

Practice—Receiver.

A bill filed to raise the amount of a judgment was taken pro confesso; motion for a receiver granted, although the bill did not pray for a receiver.

Johns moved for a receiver.—The bill in this case was filed to raise the amount of a judgment and had been taken, pro confesso, against John Ansten, the principal defendant. An answer had been filed by him since the order was made.

Pitt Kennedy, for John Ansten, the inheritor.—This motion should be refused; there is an answer on the file, and if it is not regular the plaintiff should apply to have it taken off for irregularity.

Cheyne for M'Carthy, a mortgagee.—In this case a receiver cannot be appointed as the plaintiff does not pray one by his bill.

Johns.—The case of Malcolm v. Montgomery, (2 Moll. 500,) decides that it is not necessary to pray for a receiver.

Kennedy.—The case of Meredith v. Wise (1 Moll. 26, note,) decides the contrary.

MASTER OF THE ROLLS.—In this case I must grant a receiver. The bill prays for a sale, and the inheritor has no right to oppose the application; as for the mortgagee, it will be for his benefit to secure the rents.

MOLONY v. O'BRIEN.—Nov. 13.

Practice—Witness—Re-examination.

Where by mistake of the examiner, a witness was not examined to two interrogatories, a re-examination was allowed after publication had passed, and the cause was set down for hearing.

Gayer, Q.C. applied that Mr. Rolleston, a witness for the plaintiff, might be examined as to two additional interrogatories, publication having passed. By mistake of the examiner, the witness had been examined to the eighth and ninth interrogatories only, and the error was not discovered till after publication had passed, on the 2d of October. On the following day the cause was set down for hearing, and, on the 24th of October, notice of the present application was served. A consent had been prepared by the plaintiff, but the defendant had refused to sign it.

Gayer, with H. Richards.—This is a proper case for the court to permit the witness to be examined. If the mistake originated with the examiner, it is the duty of the court to grant the application, Paine v. Curtis, (1 Yo. Ex. C. 343).

J. Greene contra.—It is stated that the witness told the examiner that it was not necessary that he should be examined to those interrogatories; and, although this is denied by Mr. Rolleston, the examiner should be sent for to ascertain how the fact is; this was the course adopted in Ingram v. Mitchell, (5 Ves 297.) In all the cases in which a re-examination has been allowed, it has appeared by affidavit that the depositions have not been seen.

MASTER OF THE ROLLS.—In this case the plaintiff and his solicitor are free from all blame. The list of witnesses was handed to them, and amongst them Mr. Rolleston, who was to be examined to the tenth and eleventh interrogatories; his not being examined was clearly a mistake. I consider the case of Ingram v. Mitchell does not apply. This application does not require any authority in support of it. I have no hesitation in making the order, except so far as the notice seeks costs against the examiner; for in a case such as this I will be slow to make the officer pay costs. The examiner, however, should be careful not to take any directions from the witnesses, for, if any witness refuses to answer, it is the officer's duty to report the matter to the court, and the witness would be liable to attachment. I cannot make the defendant pay costs because he would not sign the consent, however, I will not give him any costs of appearing on the motion.

KELLY v. FOX.—Nov. 14.

Practice—Witness—Order pro confesso.

A defendant against whom an order has been made to take the bill pro confesso, may be examined as a witness on the part of the plaintiff.

This was an application on behalf of the plaintiff for liberty to examine a defendant against whom the bill had been taken pro confesso.

Pilkington.—There is no direct authority in support of this motion, but it falls within the principle of the rule as laid down by Lord Langdale, in the case of Holmes v. Mayor of Arundel, (4th Beav. 155, 335.) By allowing the bill to be taken pro confesso, the defendant in point of fact admits the truth of the allegations contained in it, and it cannot now in any way affect him to be examined as a witness to those statements.

MASTER OF THE ROLLS.—I have made one order of this kind since I sat here, and I then felt the difficulty of there being no authority on the point; however, as I consider this application falls within the principle of the case referred to, I will make the order.

EQUITY EXCHEQUER.—Nov. 7.

In the matter of A. B. seeking to put in suit the libel bond entered into by C. D., (late proprietor of —) and E. F., G. H., for the recovery of the damages and costs recovered by the said A. B. against the said C. D., for the printing and publishing of a libel of, and concerning the said A. B. in said paper.

Practise—Course of proceeding under 1 W. 4, c. 73, s. 3. Under the above act the court will only grant a conditional order in the first instance, which must be served on the Attorney-general.

Edward Galway moved for liberty to put in suit the libel bond of C. D. and his sureties, under 1 W. 4, c. 73, s. 1. The affidavit stated that A. B. had obtained, as of Trinity Term, 1848, a judgment in the Queen's Bench against C. D., late proprietor of a certain newspaper, for £500 damages and costs, in an action for libel against C. D. That A. B. had issued a Fi. Fa. accordingly, and there was a return of nulla bona; that defendant had no goods or chattels to satisfy the condition, and that deponent had received letters purporting to have been written by the defendant, stating that the defendant was unable to satisfy the judgment, and that deponent believed defendant to be in insolvent circumstances, and the amount of judgment would be lost unless the libel bond was put in suit against C. D. and his sureties.

PER CURE.—Take a conditional order, to be served on the Attorney-general, C. D., and the sureties.

QUEEN'S BENCH.—MICHAELMAS TERM.

ATLIMER V. CONLAN.—Nov. 7.

Pleading—Covenant against Alienation—Penal rent—Liability of assignee—11 Ann. Ir. c. 2.

Declaration stated, that J. K. covenanted with G. A. not to assign certain premises, without his consent in writing, and in case of such assignment, that it should be lawful for G. A. to re-enter, "or to charge J. K. double the reserved yearly rent." Held on special demurrer, that the assignee of J. K. was not liable upon the covenant, as set forth in the declaration.

COVENANT by lessor against assignee of lessee. Declaration stated that by indenture of release bearing date, &c., "the plaintiff demised certain lands to one John Kelly, his heirs and assigns, for a term of two lives and 21 years, at the yearly rent of £70, payable half yearly. "The declaration then stated a covenant "by the said John Kelly, his heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns, that he or they should not during the said term demise, or assign the said lands without the consent in writing of the said plaintiff, his heirs, or assigns, and in case such letting or agreement should be made, that the lease was to be void, and that it should be lawful for the plaintiff, his heirs or assigns, to re enter upon the demised premises, or to charge the said John Kelly double the said reserved yearly rent, to be recovered in like manner as the said reserved yearly rent, at the option of the plaintiff." The declaration then stated, "that John Kelly devised his interest in the premises to the defendant and died; that the defendant entered, and that such assignment was made without the consent in writing of the plaintiff. By virtue of which said premises, the plaintiff became entitled to double the said reserved yearly rent." The defendant demurred, and assigned for cause; First, that it appears upon the said declaration, that the double rent in the declaration mentioned, was to be charged against John Kelly, and not against his assignees; secondly, that according to the terms of the said indenture, the said John Kelly alone was to be charged with the said double rent.

Joinder in demurrer.

Kernan and J. D. Fitzgerald, Q.C. in support of the demurrer.—The declaration in this case, does not aver, that a covenant was entered into by the assignee himself, or by any one on his behalf. It is a rule of pleading, that all those parts of the contract, which are material for the purpose of enabling the court to form a just idea of what the contract actually was, should be stated with certainty and precision, Blakey v. Dixon, (2 Bos. and Pull. 321); Andrew v. Whitehead, (13, East. 102) The declaration states a covenant to charge John Kelly, and not the assignee of John Kelly; the plaintiff was bound to aver in his declaration a covenant on the part of the defendant. The assignee is not liable upon the lease as stated in the declaration; in fact no breach is averred, and it is not stated for what time the double rent was to last.

Hamilton Smythe, and Napier, Q.C. contra.—It must be admitted, that it ought to appear in the declaration, that the covenant was entered into on behalf of the assignee. The covenant is clearly binding upon John Kelly, his heirs, executors, and administrators, and the assignee becomes liable by the operation of the 11th Ann. Ir. c. 2, s. 6, enacts "that all and every person and persons, who, from and after the 25th of march, 1712, shall take any assignment of all the residue of any term of years, or life or lives, their executors or administrators, shall be liable to all the covenants whereunto the lessees, their executors, and administrators, were liable by or by virtue of the said leases," a statute peculiar to this country. The legal effect of the lease is to charge the lessee, and the assignee is charged by force of the statute. If, therefore, the assignee is liable to all the covenants, the assignee's liability is co-extensive with the lessee's, Earl of Lucan v. Gildea, (2 Hud. and Br. 635). This statute came under the consideration of this court the case of Grogan v. Magan, (Al. and N. 366; s. c. 2, Jones, 307), and it was there held, that the statute made the assignee liable to all the covenants contained in the lease, to which the lessee was liable. It is for the court to construe the covenant. (Moore, J.—We have not the materials to enable us to construe the covenant, you might have set out the deed in hæc verba. Blackburne, C. J.—Have you not rendered it ambiguous, to say the least of it, by the manner you have pleaded the deed, is it sufficiently certain?) In Tatem v. Chaplin, (2 Hen. Bl. 133, the assignee was held bound though not named; Cockson v. Cook, (Cro. Jac. 125), is to the same effect.

J. D. Fitzgerald Q.C. was not called on.

BLACKBURNE, C. J.—We think the special demurrer well founded; we are not at liberty to put any other construction upon this contract than what is set out upon the pleading, and reading it simply as we find it, are to decide upon the meaning of the covenant. John Kelly, the lessee, binds himself not to assign the premises, unless with the consent in writing of the plaintiff, the lessor, and in the event of a particular breach of this covenant, the parties have provided, that it shall be lawful for the lessor to re-enter, or to charge John Kelly with double the rent; are we to infer that this was to charge John Kelly, his heirs, executors, and administrators? The words John Kelly stand here alone, and it is quite possible that the party may have intended only to charge John Kelly; there is nothing in law to prevent his entering into such a contract. We give no opinion as to whether this penal rent was to be payable during the term.

Judgment for the defendant.

FAY V. MORPHY.—Nov. 8.

Taxation of costs—Fees to counsel.

This was an application on behalf of the defendant, that the officer may be directed to review his taxation, on the ground, that, in taxing the plaintiff's costs, as between party and party, he allowed the fees of the three counsel of the inner bar, engaged in the case, and disallowed the fee of the counsel of the outer bar.

Wright in support of the motion, submitted that as it was indispensable that a member of the outer bar should be employed, the officer in taxing the costs, ought to have included his brief, and should not have allowed the fees of the three Queen's counsel.

J. D. Fitzgerald, contra.—The taxing officer, in his report, has certified, that from the importance of the trial, and the number of witnesses examined, he did not consider that the fee, paid to the third Queen's counsel was too large for the junior counsel employed in the case, and he therefore increased the fee on his brief to that sum.

Per Curiam.—We cannot accede to the principle upon which the officer has acted. According to the course of the court, the plaintiff would have had a right to charge for a counsel of the outer bar, and the officer when taxing the costs, ought to have included his brief, and only allowed the fee marked thereon. We do not say that the officer would have acted wrong, if, in the exercise of his discretion, he had also included the briefs of the three counsel of the inner bar. Let the brief held by the junior counsel in this case, be produced before officer, and let the amount be reduced to the fee marked thereon.

LESSEE CARROLL v. DEVELIN.—Nov. 10.

Practice—11 & 12 Vic. c. 28—Arrest.

The plaintiff is entitled to issue a capias ad satisfaciendum for the costs of an ejectment, where they exceed £10, although nominal damages are included in the judgment.

Townsend MacDermott, on behalf of the lessor of the plaintiff, moved that the officer of the court be directed to issue the writ of Ca Sa in this case. It was an ejectment on the title in which the plaintiff obtained judgment, and the costs had been taxed to £55. The damages being nominal (6d.) The officer refused to allow the execution to issue, alleging that under the 11 & 12 Vic. c. 28, sec. 1, the defendant could not be arrested where the sum recovered by the plaintiff, exclusive of costs, was under £10. Counsel contended that the officer's construction of the act could not be sustained; the latter clause of the first section provided that no writ, or process to arrest a party for costs should issue, where they did not exceed £10. The first clause could not have been intended to apply to the case of an ejectment where the Ca Sa issues substantially for costs, the damages being only nominal. The construction attempted to be put upon this section is quite inconsistent with the policy and objects of the act, and would lead to results never contemplated by the legislature.

MOORE, J. having conferred with the other members of the court—Order granted.

EXCHEQUER OF PLEAS.

BARKER v. FIGGIS AND ANOTHER.

Bill of Exchange—Averment of Indorsement by Firm—Ball v. Gordon, 9 M. & W. overruled.

The declaration alleged that "A. B. directed his bill of Exchange to certain persons trading under the name, style, and firm of F. & Co., &c., and that the said certain persons trading under the name, style, and firm of Figgis and Co., accepted the same." Held on special demurrer a sufficient description of F. & Co. as acceptors.

ASSUMPSIT on a bill of Exchange.—The declaration stated—"And whereas also one A. B., on the day of, &c., (venue), made his bill of exchange in writing, and directed the same to certain persons trading under the name, style, and firm of Messrs. F. and Co., and thereby required the said certain persons trading under the same name, style, and firm of Messrs. F. & Co. to pay to the order of the said A. B. £200 on the 8th day of Sept. inst., and the said certain persons trading under the same name, style, and firm of Messrs. F. & Co. then and there saw and accepted the same, and the said period has now elapsed, and the said A. B. then and there indorsed the said bill to the said defendants, and the said defendants then and there indorsed the said bill to the said plaintiffs, and the said certain persons trading under the name, style, and firm of Messrs. F. & Co. did not pay the said bill, although the same was presented to them on the day when it became due, to wit, on, &c., at, &c., of all which the defendants then and there had due notice. Demurrer, because it was not stated who the said certain parties trading under the name, style, and firm of Messrs. F. & Co. are by name, or whether they have any Christian, or surnames, and that they ought to have been described by their baptismal, or surnames, and that it is not averred by what name, or style the said acceptors accepted the said bill, or who, by name, accepted it, or that it was accepted under the style of a co-partnership or invoice.

Mockler for the demurrer.—This declaration is clearly bad on the authority of Ball v. Gordon, (9 M. & W. 345). There is no averment that the bill was directed to them, or accepted by them, or by their style and firm. It is consistent with this count that the acceptance on the bill disclosed the different names of the persons composing the firm of Figgis & Co. Here is no averment to dispense with the rule of pleading that the Christian names and surnames of persons mentioned in the pleadings must be set out in full. Applemans v. Blanche, (14 M. & W. 154); Esdaile v. Maclean, (15 M. & W. 277), Stephens on Pleading, p. 353, 2d edit.; counsel also cited Whitwell v. Bennett, (3 B. & P. 559); Le Sage v. Johnson, (Forrest 23); Stephens on Pleading, 329, 4th edit. The case of Tigar v. Gordon (9 M. & W. 347) is distinguishable, for there it is averred that the endorsement was made by and under the name of the firm. (Lefroy, B.—Suppose a bill directed to an individual under a particular name, and an averment that he accepted it, would it not be intended that he accepted it under that name; so, where it is averred that certain persons were carrying on business under a certain style, and accepted the bill, is it not tantamount to an averment that they accepted it under that style.)

Wm. F. Darley contra.—In this case it was not necessary to the plaintiff's right to recover as against the defendant, to state any acceptance at all. The cases relied upon in the other side were those of declarations against acceptors. The case of Tigar v. Gordon was affirmed in Smith v. Ball, (10 Jur. 946); Williamson v. Johnson, (2 D. & R. 281).

Prior, C.B.—It is a rule of pleading that all persons must be described by the names by which they are known, individuals by their Christian names and surnames, peers by their titles of dignity, so trading companies must be described by the names under which they are known to the world. I do not quite understand Lord Abinger's reasoning in Ball v. Gordon. Curr. adv. vult.

Prior, C.B.—In this case a demurrer has been taken to the declaration. The objection is, that the acceptors are therein described "as certain persons trading under the name, style, and firm of Figgis & Co." without averring that they are so described on the face of the bill, and counsel for the demurrer rests his case on that of Ball v. Gordon. The objection there seems to have been that the Christian names of the parties should have been set out in full, and the general description of M'Leod & Co. was insufficient. The view which Lord Abinger took of the case appears from this passage in his judgment:—"The difficulty is this, that it is possible the persons using the name of M'Leod & Co.

may have drawn bills, and used another name or names." That appears to have been the only ground of difficulty suggested, and the plaintiff was allowed to amend. In Tigar v. Gordon the declaration stated that—"certain persons by and under the name, style, and firm of Gordon & Son indorsed the bill," and the averment was upheld. Baron Parke in his judgment in that case, as reported in 1 D. N. S. 656, refers to the form of the pleading in Ball v. Gordon, and states that, according to his experience, the declaration in Ball v. Gordon was sufficient." I refer to that observation because I think it most important to abide by the settled forms, and even though there may be an objection on strict principle to that form, yet it ought to be maintained. I have looked into Bailey on bills—a book of the highest authority, from the high position and reputation of the author—and I there find a precedent in exact conformity with what Parke B. stated to have been his recollection, and he gives the form of a count in an action on a foreign bill, and recommends the very averment to be struck out—of the absence of which defendant complains here—and approves of the form adopted in Ball v. Gordon. For that reason, and because this form has the sanction of long practice, I, for one, am unwilling to deviate from it, and, according to my own experience, it was usual to adopt the form of averment which occurs in Ball v. Gordon. In the older editions of Chitty on Pleading (2d vol. 106, Ed. 1825,) the alternative form is found. The expression "trading, &c." was that employed in Bass v. Clive, and Williamson v. Johnson, and conforms to the opinion of Parke, B., as stated in Tigar v. Gordon. These cases were reviewed in the recent case of Smith v. Ball, (10 Jur. 946). The declaration there stated "that certain persons under the name, style, and firm of C. & Co. drew their bill of exchange, and the defendant accepted the same, and the said C. & Co. then endorsed the same to the plaintiff." With the exception of the dicta in Ball v. Gordon, there is no authority calling upon us to pronounce this declaration bad. It is quite in analogy to treat as a sufficiently certain description the commercial names which parties assume, and to adopt a different view would be to fashion rules, and establish precedents in contradiction to the ordinary dealings of mankind. I have been informed that the Court of Common Pleas* have recently decided this very point, and that in two cases this form of pleading has been upheld on demurrer. It is of the utmost importance to the administration of justice that there should be uniformity in the practice of the courts. I am therefore of opinion that the demurrer in this case must be overruled.

PENNEFATHER, B.—I quite concur with the opinion of the Lord Chief Baron. The fair intendment is that the bill was drawn, and indorsed in the name of the firm. The case of Ball v. Gordon cannot be regarded as a decision on the point, and even if it were, I should not be disposed to bow to it.

LEFROY, B.—Concurred.

Judgment for Plaintiff.

* Southey v. Magan, 10 I. L. Rep. 250.

HEALY AND ANOTHER v. CAMPION—Nov. 4.

Pleading—Assumpsit—Replication de injuriâ.

To an action by indorsee against the maker of a promissory note, the defendant pleaded, "That the note was not indorsed to the plaintiffs until after the sum had become due, and that at the time the said note became due it was in the hands of the payee, and, whilst the payee continued to hold the same, and before the commencement of this suit, the payee was indebted to the defendant in the sum of £17 3s. 3d. for the use and occupation of a certain house of the defendant, &c., and that an account was settled and stated between payee and defendant, such account including said note, and the said payee had credit in such account for the full amount of the said note, of all which the plaintiff had full notice, and was well aware and informed that the said note remained in the hands of the said payee to secure the balance due to him on foot of the account. The declaration then averred an indorsement without consideration, after the note became payable. Replication de injuriâ.—Held on demurrer to the replication, that the plea disclosed matter of excuse, as between the plaintiff and defendant, and that de injuriâ was properly replied.

ASSUMPSIT by the plaintiffs as indorsees of a promissory note against the maker. Plea—"And as to the said supposed promises and undertakings in the said first count of the said declaration mentioned, save as to £30, parcel of said monies in the first count mentioned, that the note was not indorsed to the plaintiffs until after the same had become due and payable, according to the tenor and effect thereof, to wit, &c., and that at the time the said note became due and payable, according to the tenor and effect thereof, the said note was in the hands of the payee thereof, and after the said note became due, and whilst the payee continued to hold the same, and before commencement of this suit, &c., the said payee was indebted to the defendant in the sum of £17. 3s. 3d. for the use and occupation, &c. (Following common form of plea of set off). And that an account on the day and year, &c., was stated and settled between them respecting such accounts and debts, including the said note, and the said payee then and there had credit in such account for the full amount of the monies then due and claimable upon and in respect of the said note, and the amount or balance then found to be due to the said payee on foot of said note, deducting thereout the monies so as aforesaid due and owing to this defendant, amounting to the sum of £30 of the monies in first count mentioned, of all which the plaintiffs then and there had full notice, and were then and there well aware and informed that the said note remained in the hands of the said payee to secure the balance so as aforesaid found to be due to him on foot of the account so as aforesaid stated and settled between the payee and the defendant, and for no other purpose whatever." Averment of indorsement after note became payable, and that there was no consideration for the indorsement, and as to the said sum of £30, parcel of the said monies, the defendant confessed the action of the plaintiffs, and averred his readiness and willingness to pay the same.

Replication de injuriâ.—Special demurrer on the ground "that the replication de injuriâ was inapplicable to a plea in assumpsit, and, at all events, was bad in this case, as the plea did not consist of matters of excuse, but in discharge of so much of the sum originally secured by the said promissory note, and the monies founded thereon as are not by the said plea confessed."

James Green for demurrer.—Gave up the objection as to the applicability of the replication de injuriâ to the action of assumpsit. (Pigot, C.B.—That point cannot be argued, it is quite settled.) Waiving the first ground of objection, the replication in this case is at all events bad. The facts disclosed on the plea amount to discharge, not to an excuse. (Pigot, C.B.—The proposition in law is, that the replication de injuriâ is only proper in cases where the plea is in excuse, and not in discharge of the action. The plea in substance avers that only a portion of the money was due on the note when it was indorsed to the plaintiff, and that the residue was satisfied and discharged.) Jones v. Senior, (4 M. & W. 123.) The case made by the plea is, that since the bill arrived at maturity a portion of the money secured by it was paid off, which is matter in discharge only. Crisp v. Griffith, (2 C. M. & R. 159.) It avers that after the breach such a dealing was had as to discharge the action. Barnes v. Price, (1 C. B. 214) (Pigot, C.B.—This being an action on a negotiable instrument, the contract is to pay the payee or order, that is, in effect, to pay the plaintiff as indorsee. This contract is admitted by the plea, and, in excuse of its fulfilment, a certain transaction is stated. Here is no immediate dealing between the plaintiff and defendant, therefore there could have been no discharge as between them, but only an excuse, arising from dealings had between the payee and maker. There could have been no discharge here, as the breach was not completed between the plaintiff and defendant at the time of the transaction disclosed by the plea, as it is averred that it took place before indorsement).

Michael J. Fitzgerald contra.—The sole question is, whether this is a plea in excuse. The case of Mitchell v. Cragg (2 Dow. R.N.S. 252, S.C. 10 M. & W. 367,) is precisely in point; at all events, the plea here is bad in substance, so that the plaintiff is entitled to judgment on the whole record. The account disclosed by plea cannot discharge the debt without a release. Mayor of Scarborough v. Butler, (3 Levinz. 237.) Counsel also referred to Lanes on Assumpsit, 646; Byles on Bills, 122.

Pigot, C.B.—The court are of opinion that the replication here is proper, and that the demurrer cannot be sustained. Independent of the authority of Mitchell v. Cragg, the court cannot hold that the transaction, as disclosed by the plea, was any thing beyond mere matter of excuse as between the parties to this action. The plaintiff sues as indorsee, and no cause of action accrued to him, or no breach could have been committed, as far as he is concerned, until after indorsement, therefore no transaction prior to that could operate as a discharge as between him and the defendant, and is therefore only matter in excuse.

Demurrer overruled.

* Coram Pigot, C.B., Lefroy, B.

COURT OF CHANCERY.

HACKETT v. OXMANTOWN.—June 22nd, 23rd.

Will—Construction—Vested interest—Codicil—Limitation over.

Bequest to A on attaining 21, or marriage, provided it were with consent; to B C and D in similar terms; further bequest to A and the others of the residue, with cross remainders, if any should die under age and unmarried. Held that A having married under age, without the consent required, was unmarried within the meaning of testator.

By codicil, in case of marriage without consent, the specific legacies were revoked, and it was directed that the interest only of such legacy should be paid to the legatee for life marrying without the required consent, and after the death of the legatee, they should go and be paid to, and for the use and benefit of all and every the child or children of the legatee marrying without consent, the same to be equally divided, to and among them share and share alike, if more than one, and to be paid to such children at 21, or marriage. Held vested interest in a child dying under 21 and unmarried.

The question in this case arose wholly on the construction of the will, and second codicil of William Hackett the testator, after a direction to call in all money due, on bills, bonds, or notes, and to invest the same in government or bank stock, he bequeathed the fund so created to his trustees and executors, "upon trust out of the said fund, to pay my eldest daughter, Eliza, the sum of £10,000 on her attaining her age of 21 years, or on the day of her marriage, if the same shall occur before she be of the age of 21 years, provided it be had with the consent of my said trustees, or the survivor of them, but not otherwise, and I do hereby direct my said trustees, to pay out of the interest of the said sum of £10,000, the annual sum of £200 for my said eldest daughter's support, maintenance, and education, till she attain her age of 21 years, or day of marriage, as aforesaid, the surplus, or residue of the interest of the said sum of £10,000, in the meantime, as the same shall become due, to be invested in the manner herein before mentioned for the use and benefit of my said eldest daughter, till she shall attain her age of 21 years, or day of marriage with such consent as aforesaid, and to be then paid to her." He in similar words bequeathed similar gifts of smaller sums to younger daughters, and some legacies, and then proceeded "As to all the rest, residue and remainder of my estate, whatsoever and wheresoever, and of what nature and kind soever; I do hereby give and bequeath the same to my said daughters, Eliza, Mary Anne, Bedelia, and Sarah, share and share alike, and in case any of my said daughters shall happen to die before her or their attaining the age of 21 years, and unmarried, then I direct that as well the portion herein before bequeathed to her, as also her share of the said residue so bequeathed as aforesaid, shall go to and be divided, share and share alike, between the survivors of them, and that on the death of two or more of them before the age of 21 years, and unmarried, the portion and portions, and share and shares of her or them so dying, shall in like manner survive and accrue to the survivor or survivors, or other, or others of them, share and share alike, and that the surviving and accruing shares and portions shall in like manner be liable in similar events to the like right of accruing by survivorship; and in case all my said daughters but one shall die under the age of 21 years, and unmarried, then the whole of such residue to go solely and absolutely to such surviving daughter, her executors, administrators, and assigns." In a second codicil, the testator gave the following directions, "In case any or either of my said daughters, shall before their respective ages of twenty-one years, intermarry with any person or persons, against or without consent of my said trustees, or the survivor of them, then, and in such case, the interest only after the rate of $\frac{3}{4}$ or 4 per cent., of such daughter or daughters, portion or portions, so marrying without such consent aforesaid, shall be paid to her or them during her or their respective lives, for her or their respective sole and separate use and benefit, exclusive of any husband, and that upon the death of the said daughter or daughters so marrying without such consent as aforesaid, the portion or portions so given or intended for such daughter or daughters, shall go and be paid, to and for the use and benefit of all and every the child or children of such daughter so marrying without such consent as aforesaid, the same to be equally divided to and among them, share and share alike, if more than one, and to be paid to such child or children, at his, her, or their respective age or ages of twenty-one years, or day or days of marriage, which shall first happen together with interest for the same, at the rate aforesaid, from the time of their respective mother's death until the same should become payable and paid, any thing in the said will to the contrary notwithstanding." The testator shortly afterwards died. His daughter Eliza, married the defendant, Pounden, without consent, and died under twenty-one, leaving one child, who also died under age, and unmarried. The defendant, Pounden, claimed the whole legacy, and the residuary share bequeathed to Eliza Hackett, both under a settlement executed after his marriage, by order of the court, and as administrator of his deceased child. The question was, whether Eliza Hackett, or her child, or either of them, were entitled absolutely to the legacy, and the residuary share of the testator's property.

Gayer, Q. C. Christian, Q. C. and H. Hamilton, for the plaintiff relied on, Dillon v. Harris, (4 Bli. N. S. 329), Machell v. Winter, (3 Ves. 236, 543), Hanson v. Graham, (6, Ves. 239), Leake v. Robinson, (2 Mer. 363), Chaffers v. Abell, (3 Jur. 577), this case is adverse, but counsel endeavoured to distinguish it. Davies v. Fisher (5 Beav. 201), Bataford v. Keble, (3 Ves. 363), Murray v. Tancred, (10 Sim. 465), Puleford v. Hunter, (3 Bro. C.C. 416), Bull v. Pritchard, (1 Russ. 213), Roper on Legacies, last edition, 577, Austen v. Halsey, (13 Ves. 125), Knight v. Cameron, (14 Ves. 389), Bright v. Rowe, (3 M. and K. 316.)

Warren, Sergeant, with Burroughs, for defendant, Pounden, Butler v. Lowe, (10 Sim. 317), Skey v. Barnes, (8 M. 335), Vise v. Stoney, (1 Dr. & Warr. 337), Watson v. Hayes, (9 Sim. 500), Vawdry v. Geddes, (1 Russ. & My. 208), Jennings v. Newman, (10 Sim. 219), Thornhill v. Hall, 2 Cl. & Fin. 22, Stackpoole v. Beaumont, (3 Ves. 91), Barker v. Lea, (T. & R. 413).

THE LORD CHANCELLOR, after reading the will and codicil as above, proceeded:—The codicil makes this very prudent provision, that, if any of the daughters should marry under age, and without consent, that she should have only the interest of the fund for the remainder of her life, and, on her death, it should go to her children, payable at twenty-one, or marriage. It is important to see the direction of the will as to the investment of the property. It directs the trustees to call in all sums owing to the testator, and to invest them in government securities, or bank stock, so as not to leave them on uncertain security. The question resolves itself into this: is the direction to pay so incorporated with the description of the persons to take, that they must answer that description before they are entitled to receive. The codicil says:—And in case any, or either, of my four daughters shall, before their respective ages of twenty-one years, intermarry with any person or persons against, or without the consent, of my said trustees, or the survivor of them, then, and, in such case, the interest only, after the rate of $3\frac{1}{2}$ or 4 per cent, of such daughter's portions or portion, so marrying without such consent, shall be paid to her or them during her or their respective life or lives, for her or their respective, sole, and separate use and benefit." Now, as I take these words, they do not mean that the trustees are to cut down the interest, but they are merely a description of the interest which the trustees would probably receive on the investment directed. There is no discretion given to the trustees, and the words are not restrictive. The codicil then proceeds—"And that upon the death of the said daughters or daughter so marrying without such consent as aforesaid, the same was to be equally divided amongst their or her children, share and share alike, if more than one, and to be paid to such child or children at his or their respective age or ages of twenty-one years, or day or days of marriage, which shall first happen, together with interest for the same after the rate aforesaid, to go, and be paid to, and for the use and benefit of all and every their children, &c." There is here nothing restricting the time when these portions were to vest in the children. Having directed how the money was to go to them, he then directs how it is to be paid. I can make in this way a clear interpretation without incorporating the time of payment with the gift itself; in fact, it is nothing but the common case of a legacy given to be paid at twenty-one. Skey v. Barnes is very like this case; it is if anything stronger, the words there were: "to go to, and be equally divided between them, share and share alike, the portion or portions of such of them as shall be son, or sons, to be paid at his or their respective ages of twenty-one, and the portion or portions of such of them as shall be daughter or daughters, to be paid at her or their respective ages of twenty-one, or days of marriage first happening." In Machell v. Winter, there were many special circumstances; in the first place, a certain provision, by way of maintenance, only was to be paid to the children. The words there were:—"The shares of her said grandsons, with the interest or accumulations thereof, after a deduction for their maintenance and preferment, to be paid to them respectively on their attaining their ages of twenty-one years, and the share of her said grand-daughter, with the interest or accumulation thereof, at the age of twenty-one, or day of marriage, which should first happen." Further, in that case there was the important clause of limitation over, which does not occur in the present will. In Davies v. Fisher, the trust was of a residue "to pay the income thereof unto Wm. Davies the younger, and, from and after his decease, in trust for the children of Wm. Davies the younger, as they severally attained the age of twenty-five years, equally to be divided between them if more than one, and, if but one, then the whole to such one child, the income to be applied during their respective minorities, by the guardian for the time being, of their children or child for their respective maintenance, support, and education." That was held to be a vested interest in the children, and in the direction to apply the whole interest, giving evidence of the intention. But indeed all the cases shew that a direction to pay interest marks an intention to vest the principal. In Parker v. Golding (13 Sim. 418), the direction was to pay the interest "to and for the education, maintenance, and support of all her children until they shall attain the age of twenty-one years, and then the principal to be equally divided amongst her said children." That was held to be a legacy vested in the children dying under twenty-one, and that was stronger than anything here. From the first the legacies in this case seem set apart for different legatees, but I do not think it depends on that; there is nothing to satisfy me that the time of payment is so incorporated with the gift as to make the legacy contingent. I do not know whether the intention of Hackett may be defeated or not by this construction; his only intention appears to have been to prevent improvident marriages, and I cannot construe the will by the state of facts which has arisen subsequently to the death of the testator. With reference to the share of the residue, my impression is in favour of the claim of the residuary legatees to that part. The codicil does not refer to anything more than the portions which be distinguished expressly from the share of the residue, having in the will contrasted these two shares, and therefore the distribution of those shares must depend on the construction of the will. The shares of the residue are given to the daughters without restriction, in the words of gift. It lies on those who seek to restrict them, to show how they are cut down by anything in the will. We must not endeavour to find an intention not expressed in the will, but we must find the sense in which the testator uses words. He had given a portion to this lady, either on attaining twenty-one, or marrying with consent, but not otherwise. There being no gift over of this portion in the consent, he now creates one by disposing of the residue, and directs that, "As to all the rest, residue, and remainder of my estate ———, I do hereby give and bequeath the same to my said daughters Eliza, Mary Anne, Bedelia, and Sarah, share and share alike, and, in case any of my said daughters shall happen to die before her or their attaining the age of twenty-one years and unmarried, then I direct that as well the portion hereinbefore bequeathed to her, as also her share of the said residue so bequeathed as aforesaid, shall go to and be divided, share and share alike, between the survivors of them." Now, if that be taken to mean unmarried generally, there is this consideration, one-fourth of the portion, under this residuary bequest, will go to her, although he directed none at all to go to her unless she married with consent. Taking it so, if the question depends upon this portion of the will, the word unmarried must be taken to mean not married so as to derive a benefit under the will. There is nothing in this will to say that the word unmarried in the same sentence meant two different things; I therefore think it meant not married with consent. This decree appears to me consistent in this respect with the will. I think this share of the residue did not pass by the codicil, but, passing by the will, is governed by the sense of the word unmarried shewn by the will. Therefore, in the events which have happened, the administrator of this lady is not entitled to any portion of the residue.

ROLLS COURT—Nov. 4.

COPPINGER v. CARNEGIE.

Practice—Injunction—Costs.

In a possessory suit for an injunction, the rule that costs of suit are not given, does not apply to the costs of the motion shewing cause; and, if the cause is deemed insufficient, the defendant becomes liable to pay the costs of the motion.

In this case a conditional order for an injunction had been obtained by the plaintiff.

Berkeley now shewed cause.

His Honor having disallowed the cause shewn with costs.

Berkeley—The case of Chatterton v. Whyte. (1 L. E. R. 200,) decides that in injunction cases costs are never given against the defendants in possessory suits, as the proceeding is favourable to landlords.

Hughes, Q. C.—It is only in cases in which no cause is shewn against the conditional order that costs are not given against the defendant, but if the plaintiff is put to the expense of making affidavits, in case the conditional order is made absolute, costs will be given against the defendant. In Chatterton v. Whyte the words of the Master of the Rolls are, "seldom or never," therefore there is a discretion in the court.

Nov. 20.—MASTER OF THE ROLLS—I have made inquiry as to the practice upon this point, and have ascertained that as to the costs of suit, the plaintiff never gets them under any circumstances. It is in conformity with the rule laid down in Howard's Equity Exchequer, 318, under the head of possessory bills.—"If the defendant, being served with the injunction, delivers up the possession, or ceases giving fresh disturbances, there is an end of suit, and in this case the plaintiff has no costs. That leaves undecided the question as to the costs of the motion, in the event of the defendant shewing cause which is disallowed. It has been the practice of this court that if a party does not come in to shew cause, there are no costs against him; but, if the defendant files an affidavit, he then becomes liable to the costs of the motion, and this does not disturb the rule, that in injunction suits there are no costs in the cause. It is not necessary for me now to decide what are properly costs of the motion, and what costs in the cause. That question I shall decide, if necessary, upon an application for a reference to the Master to review his taxation; I may, however, state for example, that counsel's fee for drawing the bill could not properly be considered costs of the motion. I consider it would be very unreasonable—if a defendant chooses to put an affidavit on the file, and afterwards is not able to support his case—that he is not to pay any costs, and I now decide the case in conformity with the frequent practice of the court, to disallow the cause shewn with costs.

Rule—Disallow cause with costs.

EQUITY EXCHEQUER.—TRINITY TERM.

ELLARD v. COOPER AND OTHERS.

Marshalling Assets—Period at which sufficiency of personal fund is to be ascertained.

The criterion as to the time from which to calculate the misapplication of the personal assets is when the specialty debts have been paid, and not the testator's death.

THE bill stated that the plaintiffs in December, 1833, had filed their bill in the Court of Chancery against William Cooper, John Turner Cooper, and Samuel Cooper, being three of the defendants in the present cause, as executors of a person named Austen Cooper, charging that one Letitia Burke had by her will, dated 11th day of April, 1808, bequeathed a sum of £400 to the plaintiff's father, and £100 to plaintiff, and charged the same on all her real and personal estate, and appointed Samuel Cooper the elder, and Austen Cooper, her executors and trustees. That plaintiff's father died in 1828, and that plaintiff, as his only child, became entitled to the said legacy of £400, and obtained letters of administration to him. That Austen Cooper alone proved the will of Letitia Burke, and possessed himself of all her estate, real and personal. That Austen Cooper had died in August, 1830—that the defendants, William Cooper, and John Turner Cooper, and Samuel Cooper the younger, proved his will, and that administration, de bonis non, to the said Letitia Burke had been granted to the plaintiff, and prayed an account of the personal estate of Austen Cooper, and an account of Letitia Burke's freehold estates, and that if Austen Cooper should be found to have misapplied the personal estate of the said Letitia Burke, his executors might be directed to make good the same out of his assets. A decree to account was pronounced in that cause on the 26th day of April, 1838, declaring the plaintiff entitled to the legacies of £400 and £100, and on the 29th of June, 1842, the Master made his report, finding that Austen Cooper had received out of the real and personal estate of the said Letitia, a sum amounting in the whole to £5641 15s. 11d. That of this sum, he had duly administered about £2955 5s. 3d. and that there was then owing to the plaintiff on foot of these said legacies a sum of £1218 14s. 6d. That the said Austen Cooper, at the time of his death was seized in fee of certain freehold lands in the counties of Dublin and Donegal, and that his executors had received of the personal estate of Austen, and of the produce of the sale of the lands in Donegal £22,027 17s. 6d. and had expended in the due administration of their testator's assets about £15,249 12s. 6½d. By a final decree in the Chancery cause pronounced the 27th November, 1842, the said John Turner Cooper and Samuel Cooper were ordered to lodge in bank the sum of £3,029 15s. 8d., being the sum ascertained to be due by the said Austen Cooper, on foot of the estate of the said Letitia Burke, and it was declared that in default thereof the plaintiffs should be at liberty to enforce payment of their demand out of the real and personal estate of the said Austen. That John Turner Cooper and Samuel Cooper had not lodged the money in bank pursuant to this decree. That a person named William Cooper, a defendant in the present suit, filed his bill in the Court of Exchequer against the said John Turner Cooper and Samuel Cooper the younger, for the purpose of raising an equitable mortgage, made the 19th of November, 1819, to secure the payment of £10,000 to the plaintiff in that suit. The Remembrancer, on the 14th day of Jan. 1843, in the latter cause made his report, and found that £10,143 8s. 9½d. was due to William Cooper on foot of his mortgage, and that John Turner Cooper had in his hands a balance of £7,528 7s. 5½d., of the assets of the said Austen unapplied or misapplied, and the said Samuel Cooper the younger, as devisee of the said Austen, had received the proceeds of a house amounting to £770, and, as executor of the said Austen Cooper, the sum of £210 18s., amounting in all to the sum of £980 18s., and, that by a final decree pronounced in the cause of Cooper v. Cooper, on the 6th of February, 1843, the defendant, John Turner Cooper, was ordered to lodge in court the sum of £7528 7s. 2½d., and Samuel Cooper the sum of £210 18s., and that the said sums should be applied towards payment of the sums reported due, for principal, interest, and costs, on foot of two judgments obtained against the said Austen, and of the sum found due to the plaintiff in Cooper v. Cooper, on foot of his equitable mortgage; and, in default thereof, the real estate of the said Austen was directed to be sold, and the proceeds applied in payment of the said two judgments, and the said mortgage. That by an order made the 24th day of June, 1843, the plaintiff in the present suit, being also plaintiff in the Chancery cause of Ellard v. Cooper, was permitted to come in and prove her demand in the Exchequer cause of Cooper v. Cooper. That John Turner Cooper, and Samuel Cooper, not having complied with the decree of February, 1843, the freehold estates of the said Austen Cooper were set up for sale. That by an order of the 9th of February, 1844, leave was given to the plaintiff in the present cause to intervene in the cause of Cooper v. Cooper, and notice of all future proceedings taken in the latter cause was directed to be given to her. That a considerable portion of Austen's personal estate, and also of the produce of those denominations of his real estate which had been sold pursuant to his will, had been applied to disburse the interest due on the said equitable mortgage of William Cooper, and that several judgments obtained against the said Austen had been also paid out of his personal estate. The present bill charged that the plaintiff was entitled to have her demands, which were proved against the said Austen Cooper, on foot of the assets of the said Letitia Burke, received by her, paid out of the freehold estates of said Austen Cooper, to the extent to which his personal estate had been applied in discharge of the interest on the said mortgage, and in payment of the said judgments. The bill also charged that the said John Turner Cooper had misapplied the assets of the testator to the amount of £———, and the defendant, Samuel Cooper the younger, to the amount of £———, and prayed to be entitled to the benefit of the proceedings had, and accounts taken, in the suit of Cooper v. Cooper, and for an account of what was due to the plaintiff on foot of the said legacies of £400 and £100, and of the other debts of the said Austen, and, that if it should appear that the whole of the personal estate of the said Austen should have been exhausted, then that the plaintiff and the other simple contract creditors of the said Austen, should be declared entitled to stand, pro tanto, in the place of the said William Cooper, the mortgagee, and of the judgment and specialty creditors of Austen, whose demands had been satisfied out of his personal estate. The will of Austen Cooper contained the following clause. After reciting the said equitable mortgage: "Now, I do hereby charge all my said estate of Kinsealy with payment of all and every sum of money which at the time of my decease I may owe to my said brother, (the original mortgagee); and, to avoid any question between my said sons, John Turner Cooper, and Samuel Cooper, of apportionment of said debt, I hereby order and direct that as between my said sons, and all in remainder to them, each of the said two divisions of said lands shall bear and pay one full moiety of said debt; and both divisions of the said lands nevertheless being, so far as regards the security of the said debts, chargeable with the entire thereof. And I hereby further declare, and my will is, and I hereby order and direct, that my personal estates and other funds hereby provided in aid and augmentation thereof, for payment of my general debts, be first applied in payment of all my other debts, and that the residue or surplus of the said funds, if any, may be applied in the next place, so far as the same may extend, in or towards payment and satisfaction of the said debt to my said brother, in exoneration, as far as same may be, of the said lands of Kinsealy."

In April, 1846, a decree to account was pro-announced, and the Remembrancer reported that £3,577 was due to the plaintiffs, and a sum of £3,634 to the Commissioners of Charitable Donations and Bequests; that a sum of £518 15s. 2d. of the assets of Austen had been applied, by John Turner Cooper, to pay the interest on certain judgments against Austen; and a sum of £2221. 1s. 5d. to the said William Cooper, on foot of interest due on the said mortgage, and that more than enough had been received by the defendants, John Turner Cooper and Samuel Cooper, from time to time, out of the mortgaged lands, to keep down the interest.

Warren, Serjeant, with O'Brien, Q. C., and Maley, for the plaintiffs, relied on the general rule as to marshalling assets, and the clause in the will of Austen Cooper.

Brenster, Q. C., W. Smith, Rolleston, and P. W. Walsh, appeared for the other parties.

The following cases were cited and commented upon during the argument:—Wilson v. Fielding, (2 Vern. 763, S.C. 10 Mod. 426); Hazlewood v. Pope, (3 P. W. 323); Gibbs v. Ougan, (12 Ves. 415); Putnam v. Bates, (3 Russ. 188); Aldrich v. Cooper, (8 Ves. 388); Prowse v. Abington, (1 Atk. 482); Gillespie v. Alexander, (3 Russ. 138); Dyos v. Dyos, (1 P. W. 305); Busby v. Seymour, (7 Ir. Eq. Rep. 433); Marsh v. Russell, (3 My. & C. 30); Pollexfen v. Moore, (3 Atk. 272); Kiernan v. Fitzsimons, (3 Ridgway, P. C. 16).

PENNEFATHER, B.—This case involves at least one question not previously determined. It now comes before the Court, on report unexcepted to. The case made for the plaintiff, is, that in as much as the personal assets of Austen Cooper had been to a certain extent applied in discharge of his specialty debts, the plaintiff is entitled to stand in the place of the specialty creditors, and onerate the reality to the extent to which it had been previously exonerated by the payment of the specialty debts out of the personality. The claim is based, not only on the general rule of equity, that when one creditor has two funds for the payment of his demands, and another only one, and he with the two takes that to which alone the other is entitled to resort, that then the latter shall stand in the place of the former, but it is also rested on the special provisions of Austen Cooper's will, especially the clause in the latter part of it, providing "that if any portion of the personal estate should be applied in discharge of the mortgage; the simple contract creditors should be recompensed out of the real estate." It appears to us, that the case of the interest, paid on foot of the judgment, is not embraced in that clause, and as to that portion of his demand the plaintiff must rest on the general rule of equity alone, so that the sums paid on account of the interest due on foot of the mortgage, and on foot of the judgment, do not stand on the same footing. The defendants insist, in the first place, that the plaintiff had no right to file her bill in this court, but ought to have proceeded in Chancery to sequestration on the decree obtained there against the real estate of Austen Cooper; secondly, that this debt, as to the reality, is barred by the statute of limitations, and partly that by the report in the cause of Cooper v. Cooper adopted here, at the death of the testator, his personal estate was found sufficient to pay, not only the interest on the specialty debts, but all his simple contract debts, and if that fund was subsequently reduced by the executors, or if they have committed a devastavit, the general rule of Equity to which I have adverted does not apply, as, if the fund was originally adequate at the time of the testator's death, its subsequent deficiency does not entitle the plaintiff to resort to the real estate. It is argued on the other hand, for the plaintiff, that no matter at what point of time the deficiency occurred, whether by failure of a security, or devastavit by executors, yet if the specialty debts had gone to exhaust the personal assets, the general equity would arise. The view taken by the Court, on the point, differs from both these positions. The time of the testator's death is not, in the opinion of the Court, the period at which to ascertain the state of the personal fund, in reference to the payments made out of it; the time is, that of the payment of the specialty debts, and if at that period the personality is sufficient to answer the interest on the specialty debts, as well as the simple contract debts, in that event, the heir is not to suffer by the devastavit of the executors. It is urged by the defendant, that if the personal estate be exhausted before the specialty creditors were paid, the heir ought not to be liable, for that in effect would be to make the heir responsible for the executors; but, as, if there had been a wasting of the personal estate by the testator himself in his life-time, the devisee could not complain; so if the wasting be by the executor, the appointee of the testator, on the same principle, the heir cannot complain, and the simple contract creditor is entitled to his equity. The principle is this, that if the specialty creditor exhausts the fund to the prejudice of the simple contract creditor, the simple contract creditor shall stand in his place, that is, if he exhausts the assets to the prejudice of the simple contract creditor at the time that he is paid, or in other words, if at that moment he leaves enough to satisfy the simple contract creditor's demand, then the latter has no right to complain, for it is by his own negligence that he fails to realise his claims and that is the principle of all the cases. This is the true principle, a principle, indeed, for which we have failed to find any express authority; but there are expressions and dicta found in reported cases, which fully warrant our conclusion. The personal fund cannot be said to be exhausted, if enough is left at the time of the discharge of the specialty claims. The question is between the heir and the simple contract creditor, whether the heir shall be obliged to pay twice over the same sum. The principle the court acts upon is more agreeable to the general principles of equity than either of the above extremes, namely, either taking into account the state of the personality at the time of the testator's death, as contended for by the defendant, or at any or every subsequent period, as insisted on by the plaintiff. This distinction applies to the payments made on foot of the interest on the judgment. In this case, it appears on the face of the report, that the personal fund was not at the time of such payment adequate to pay that interest as well as all the simple contract creditors, to that extent, at all events, the plaintiff is entitled to stand in the place of the judgment creditors, and that being a payment to reduce the interest, not the principal of the debt, must be considered as a sum paid not carrying interest; on the principle, that the estate in the hands of the heir is not benefitted by the reduction of the interest; with regard to the interest on the mortgage, that stands on a different ground and besides, it depends on the particular clause of the will to which I have adverted. The testator might undoubtedly have subjected his estate to such payment, and if so, the will creates a term of years to guard against the defalcations of the executors, but each moiety of the estate was to bear the defalcation of the executor to whom it was devised, and not that of the other, and it is limited to the life estate of the respective devisees, that is to say, the moiety of John Turner Cooper is amenable for his default, and so of Samuel. John Turner Cooper's default, which is very great, is thrown upon his moiety. There is no default on the part of Samuel Cooper, and the interest in the house in Merrion-square, referred to in the pleadings, is the only assets in his hands. Then comes the latter clause of the will—it begins by reciting the debt to his brother, Samuel Cooper, the equitable mortgagee, and proceeds, "I do hereby charge all my estate with the payment of all the money which I owe to my brother at my decease, and as between my sons and all in remainder to them, both shall have a moiety of my real estate, each being chargeable with the whole of the said debt, and I further devise, that my personal estate be first applied in payment of all my other debts, and the residue of the general fund be applied in satisfaction of the mortgage," thereby directing that the personal estate should not be applied in discharge of the mortgage, unless there was a surplus after payment of the simple contract debts. Thus, if a part has been paid towards relieving the mortgaged estates; the mortgaged estate must reimburse the simple contract creditors, and this would carry the right of the plaintiff beyond the trust fund, and give her by the express desire of the testator a right to come on the real estate. Now it appears, that a sum of £2900 has been applied in exoneration of the real estates, contrary to the directions of the testator. This was clearly a misapplication of the funds, and would entitle the plaintiff to come on the real estate, but as it was a payment on account of interest, the plaintiff is not entitled to calculate interest upon it. It then remains to consider, whether there are sufficient facts in the report, for the court to ascertain whether, at the time of payment, there was a deficiency of personal estate, and that payment was made to the prejudice of the simple contract debts; if the devastavit was committed before the time of payment, or if the fund became at that time deficient, by the payment of the specialty creditors, the simple contract creditors are entitled to stand in their place. The case comes on, upon a report unexcepted to, not reserving any particular question for our consideration, we will construe the report in reference to the prayer of the bill, and will not encumber parties with further inquiry as to the alleged laches of the plaintiff, in not carrying into effect the Chancery decree by sequestration; that course would seem to have been vain. A receiver had been, long previously to that decree, appointed over the estates in this court, and a sequestrator would have no power to disturb him. Besides, from the frame of that cause, there was no opening left for raising the question as to the marshalling of assets, and thus that ground of objection fails. As to the question raised on the statute of limitations, the simple contract debts were established against the executors, and the debts of the specialty creditors existed against the estate, and if the specialty creditors took that which was the legitimate fund for the simple contract creditors; it does not lie in the mouth of the heir to say, that the simple contract creditor must not stand in the place of the specialty creditor, his estate having been exonerated to that extent.

RICHARDS, B.—If there were no funds available to pay the simple contract debts after payment of the specialty debts, no default should operate on the executor with the amount of the personal assets so properly applied, but, if at the time when the specialty debts were paid, the executor in consequence of his having wasted the personal assets, were unable to make them available for the benefit of the simple contract creditors, or if it were not sufficiently shewn, that there were then sufficient assets to pay the simple contract debts, then an enquiry should be directed as to their sufficiency, and if sufficient, he is guilty of a devastavit, if not, the specialty creditors have got the fund properly, and it is not possible to charge the executor with the deficiency.

LEMMOT, B.—This is a question of great difficulty, and the inclination of my mind has changed during the progress of the cause. The authority of Lord Clare has been relied on to shew that the rule of marshalling assets, is only properly applicable at the death of the party whose assets are to be marshalled, and if there be then assets to pay the simple contract debts, the rule does not apply, no matter what may be the course of subsequent events, that is said to have been a mere obiter dictum, and from the authorities, it appears to me, that proposition cannot be maintained. If there be no sufficient assets at the time of the testator's death, no right of marshalling between the creditors can arise. If there be a sufficiency, or the fund be then able to pay the debts and fail afterwards, the simple contract creditors are not to bear that loss. It is said, that as the loss arises in this case from the default of the appointee of the testator a common depositary for all parties, that the loss should not fall upon the heir in preference to the simple contract creditor, that there being two innocent parties, the loss must remain where it falls, that because the simple contract creditors have a right to be paid out of the assets of the testator, is no reason that the heir at law should make good a deficiency occasioned by the default of the executor. In my opinion, the default of the executor can make no difference, the heir is a surety for the proper application of the personal estate. The specialty creditor has two funds for his security, but looks to the personal estate as the primary one. The question is one of principal and surety, and, if so time be given to the principal, on his failure the surety must pay. The heir-at-law is a mere surety pledged in the second degree only; it is his duty to see the creditors paid, if he wishes to be secure: as surety he may undoubtedly call on his principal to pay, but, if he remain quiescent, he must take the consequences on himself. The true criterion whether the simple contract creditor shall have a right to marshal is not the state of the funds at the testator's death, but whether there were funds at any time. In Aldrich v. Cooper, Lord Eldon lays down the rule to be "whether the specialty creditors have exhausted the personal assets." If the criterion were the state of the assets at the testator's death, the rule would not be stated to be generally applicable to the case of an abstraction by one creditor to the injury of another. The case of Polluxin v. Moore, (3 Atk. 372), appears to me an explicit authority to shew that the period of death is not the criterion. The decree of Lord Hardwicke, stated in the note, is, "that an account be taken of the personal estate of the testator come to the hands of his executor, &c., and of all his other debts, legacies, and funeral expenses; and, if such personal estate of the testator be not now sufficient, &c. the deficiency to be made good out of the purchased estate;" there is a peculiarity in this case, that the person committing the devastavit was both heir-at-law and executor. I do not think that makes any difference; the authorities appear to me sufficient to outweigh the dictum of Lord Clare in Kearnan v. Fitzsimon, and clearly establish the principle that the time of death is not the true criterion. In the present case the assets were quite sufficient at the time of the testator's death, and I am quite prepared to say on the facts of this case, whether the time be that of the testator's death, or the application of the personality in satisfaction of the specialty debts, at whichever time the funds became insufficient to pay the simple contract debts, then the right of marshalling arose.

REILLY v. SHERIL. BOUVERIE v. SHERIL.—Nov. 18.

Practice—Costs—Set off.

The court will not allow a claim for costs to be interfered with by any set off between the parties not actually arising in the cause, although the set off arises in another suit concerning the same matter.

In this case by an order bearing date the 14th of July, 1848, Mr. Peebles, a defendant in one of the causes, was directed to pay to Jane O'Brien and Elizabeth Pigott, two other defendants in the same cause case, the sum of £19 2s. 4d. costs. By order bearing date, the 26th of November, 1845, and made in a cause of Pigott and others v. Peebles, Elizabeth Pigott had been directed to pay to Mr. Peebles the sum of £133 11s. 3d., and it was stated by applicant, that the suit of Pigott v. Peebles was concerning the same matters in litigation in the present causes.

Andrew Vance, on behalf of Mr. Peebles, moved that Eliza Pigott and Jane O'Brien might be restrained from enforcing payment of the £19 2s. 4d. under the order of the 4th of July, 1848, offering to set off against Eliza Pigott's portion of the demand, a part of the sum directed to be paid by her, by the order of November, 1845, and against Jane O'Brien's moiety, certain debts sworn to be due by her to Mr. Peebles. Counsel relied on Shine v. Gough, (2 B. & B. 33), McDonald v. Grady, (Hayes 47).

Rollston contra, cited Wright v. Mundie, (2 Sim. & Sta. 266).

Vance.—The costs which were not allowed to be set off in that case were costs at law.

PER CURIAM.—We can make no distinction on that account. It is now settled, upon the fullest consideration, that no equities can be allowed between parties, by way of set off, except those arising in the same suit, however, under all the circumstances, we will not give costs of the motion.

QUEEN'S BENCH.—MICHAELMAS TERM.

KERSHAW v. LINDSAY.—Nov. 6 & 10.

Lodging money in Court—Undertaking for costs—New rule.

Where a defendant paid money into court, and the plaintiff, after taking the money out, proceeded to trial, and a verdict was had for the defendant, Held, that the plaintiff had dissented himself to the costs which he had incurred up to the time of the payment into court by the defendant.

This was an application on the part of the plaintiff, that the officer might be directed to tax the costs, incurred by the plaintiff up to the time of the entry in the Master's book, of the payment of money into court by the defendant. The facts of the case sufficiently appear in the judgment of the court.

Hayes, for the motion.

E. M. Kelly, contra.

The following cases and authorities were cited and commented on in the course of the argument:—Baile v. Cazelet, (4 T. R. 579); Littleton v. Cross, (4 B. & C. 117); Murdock v. Shirley, (Al. & Nap. 53); Stodhart v. Johnson, (3 T. R. 657); Stevenson v. Yorke, (4 T. R. 10); D'Arcy v. Kirwan, (5 Stew. L. T. 2628); Crosby v. Olorenshaw, (2 M. S. 385); Portley v. Beckington, (6 Taunt. 158); Greene v. Coughlan, (1 Jones. 289); Jeffs v. Smith, (4 Taunt. 196); Wilton v. Place, (9 Bos. & Pul. 56); Lorck v. Wright, (8 T. R. 486).

Cur. adv. vult.

Nov. 10.—BLACKBURN, J. C. now delivered the judgment of the Court. In this case an important question has been raised upon the construction of the 34th general order of Easter Term, 1834; which directs, that "on payment of money into court, the defendant shall undertake, by the rule, to pay the costs; and in case of non-payment, to suffer the plaintiff in taking the money out, either to move for an attachment, on a proper demand and service of the rule, or sign final judgment for nominal damages." The plaintiff in this case brought an action to recover a sum of £47 12s. 2d., and served notice of trial, for the sittings after Trinity Term, which were to commence on the 17th of June last. On the 12th of May, the defendant obtained a side bar rule to lodge £21 1s. 6d. in full of the plaintiff's demand, and on the 23rd May lodged that sum, but omitted to make an entry of the lodgment, in the Master's book until the 15th of June. The plaintiff having drawn out the money, and proceeded to trial, when a verdict was had for the defendant. The plaintiff now claims to have the costs, incurred up to the time of the entry in the Master's book; but we are all of opinion, that the Court of Exchequer* has put the correct construction on the rule, and that the plaintiff by going to trial, lost his right to the costs incurred prior to the time of the lodgment. We will therefore say, no rule on the motion, and an addition will be made to the general order, explaining, that the payment of costs by the defendant, will only be in those cases, where the money lodged in court shall be accepted by the plaintiff in full satisfaction of his demand.

MOORE, J.—A rule will also be made by the court to the effect, "that for the future, no order shall be given for liberty to lodge money in court, to the credit of the cause after plea pleaded, without the special order of the court, or a judge upon application for that purpose."

Motion refused without costs.

EXCHEQUER OF PLEAS.—Nov. 4.

HELY ADMINISTRATOR OF HELY v. MULHALLEN.

Pleading—Repugnancy of Dates—Omission of time in material averments.

A declaration stated the time of the defendant being indebted to the plaintiff's intestate in his lifetime, and of his making the promise, to be the 1st day of January, 1845, and stated the time of the grant of letters of administration to the plaintiff to be the 20th June, 1844. Held on special demurrer, that the averments were inconsistent, and that none of the allegations of time could be rejected as surplusage.

ASSUMPSIT by the plaintiff as administrator. The declaration contained the common money counts, and averred that the defendant, on the 1st day of January, 1845, at (venue, &c.) was indebted to J. H. in his lifetime, &c., and the breach was as follows, "yet the defendant hath disregarded his promise, and hath not paid any of the said monies, or any part thereof, to the said J. H. in his lifetime, or to the plaintiff since the death of the said J. H., to which plaintiff, after the death of the said J. H. on the 20th day of June, in the year of our Lord 1844, letters of administration were granted, &c. Special demurrer on the ground that the dates were repugnant and inconsistent.

Hickey for demurrer. It is quite settled that a time must not be laid, which is intrinsically impossible and repugnant. The very point in dispute here is decided in the case of Ring v. Roxborough, (2 Cr. & Jer. 418, S. C.; 2 Tyr. 468.) That case affords an a fortiori authority as the time there was laid under a videlicet. Counsel also relied on Dennis v. Richardson, (14 East. 291; Stephens on Pleading, 44;) Hunter v. Macan, (1 Ir. Jur. 12;) decided on the authority of Ring v. Roxborough, and that the latter case had also been recognised and acted upon in this court in the recent case of Jones v. Pope (1 Ir. Jur. 8).

Matthew O'Donnell contra. Though it is necessary to lay each traversable fact with a certain time, it is not necessary to lay the day, month, and year. If we strike out the repugnant dates here, we have an averment that defendant was indebted in the life time of J. H., and that after his death letters of administration were granted to the plaintiff. Ring v. Roxborough, cannot be considered law, and is overruled by the case of Hughes v. Williams, (2 C. M. & R. 331.) (Pigot, C.B.—That case is distinguishable from the one before the court—the omission of the date of the letters of administration was there held immaterial, the fact of their having been granted being properly laid.) Counsel also relied on Burton v. Nancolas, (11 Moore 552; 1 Chitty Pl. 5th edit. 264;) Assignee of Cullen v. Mahon, (1 Jones, 135,) "after," or "postea" is a sufficient allegation of time. Comyn's Digest Pleading, c. 19, 47, Hargraves v. Rogers, (Strange, 632.) The use of the videlicet would not avoid the repugnance, if any there were, Arnold v. Arnold, (3 Bing. N.C. 81); Spyer v. Thelwall, (2 Cr. M. & R. 692); Coxon v. Lyon, (2 Camp. 307 n.); Scott v. Wedlake, (7 Q.B. 776.)

Pigot, C.B.—We have ascertained that the Court of Queen's Bench has decided the very point raised here, so that it becomes unnecessary for us to state the grounds of our judgment, as we shall decide in conformity with that authority. Independently of that, however, we should have followed the decision of Ring v. Roxborough, as being directly in point. The case of Hughes v. Williams does not displace that authority; on the contrary, it establishes that the fact of the grant of letters of administration is a material averment in order to satisfy the court that the ordinary who granted them had jurisdiction. It thus being a material traversable fact, must be laid with time, and that time should not be repugnant or impossible. It has been over and over again decided, from Rex v. Stevens, (5 East. 244), to the present day, that you cannot reject time from a material averment, in order to obviate the objection of repugnance.

LEROY, B.—We are here called upon to upset a rule of pleading which is, at all events, as old as the time of Lord Coke, namely, that a count must be certain to a common intent, that is, must be laid with time and place. It was distinctly laid down in Ring v. Roxborough, that each traversable fact must be laid with time and place, and that the fact of granting the administration is a material averment.

Demurrer allowed, liberty to amend.

* Napier, amicus curie, had informed the Court, that the Court of Exchequer had lately decided, that the plaintiff by proceeding to trial, had disentitled himself to the costs.

COURT OF CHANCERY.

BAGNALL V. HORNE AND ADAMS.—Nov. 15th.

Practice—97th General Order—Evidence.

The 97th General Order, allowing documents to be proved by affidavit, does not apply, when the existence of the instrument is denied in a defendant's answer.

The bill in this case was filed, to raise the arrears of an annuity charged upon certain lands in the King's County. The annuity had been assigned to the plaintiff by the original grantee, for the payment of a debt, and against whom, as well as the inheritor, the bill was taken pro confesso. The defendant, Adams, who was a mortgagee of the inheritor, by his answer denied upon belief the execution of the assignment to the plaintiff, alleging that the grantee told him he never executed it.

Wm. Smith, for the plaintiff, proposed to read an affidavit made by one of the subscribing witnesses to the deed of assignment to the plaintiff to prove the execution of that deed, pursuant to the 97th general order.

Christian, Q. C. with Kernan for the mortgagee, objected that the assignment could not be proved by affidavit, as he, by his answer, disputed its existence, and cited Joly v. Swift, (8 Jones & Latouch 126); Barfield v. Kelly, (4 Russ. 355); Pomfret v. Windsor, (2 Ves. Senior. 472); Brace v. Blick, (7 Sm. 619.)

Wm. Smith, with E. M. Kelly in reply.—The cases cited, only apply where the deed is impeached. The mortgagee here has merely put the plaintiff to proof of the existence of the deed, by stating his belief, that it was never executed. Besides the defendant, Adams, has no right to make this objection, as the bill has been taken as confessed against the assignor of the annuity.

Christian, Q. C.—The defendant, Adams, is not precluded from making this objection. (Lord Chancellor.—If the bill was not taken pro confesso against the assignor, I should feel no difficulty in ruling with you, but such being the fact, is the question now open to you?) The plaintiff's right against the mortgagee, depends upon his proving the execution of the deed. The mortgagee would be entitled to examine the witnesses, if produced, notwithstanding the bill being taken pro confesso against the assignor. And if it appeared upon the cross examination, that in fact the deed was never executed, or was not executed when the bill was filed, the bill ought to be dismissed with costs.

LORD CHANCELLOR.—Let the cause stand over, with liberty to the petitioner to prove the deed by depositions, the mortgagee to be at liberty to examine the witnesses. The plaintiff to pay the costs of the day.

HUNT V. HODGES.—Nov. 16.

Waste—Jurisdiction.

The erection of a building, even of small size, for a purpose foreign from that contemplated on the demise of the lands on which it is built, is waste in the contemplation of a Court of Equity.

By a lease for lives, renewable for ever, of 22nd

Sept. 1720, part of the lands of Miltown were demised to Edward Allen at a penal rent for each acre tilled, and a covenant by the lessee to "repair the houses then standing on the premises, and all improvements made and to be made." By lease of the 2d May, 1763, the representative of the original lessee demised about fifteen acres of the above-mentioned lands to Perceval Hunt, for lives renewable. The representative of Hunt, by lease of the 2d May, 1785, demised fourteen acres of this land, with a house and garden thereon, to James Drought, for lives renewable. This lease contained a covenant "to repair the premises, and all improvements then made, or that should thereafter be made thereon," and a power of surrender at the end of every three years on giving six months' notice. The plaintiffs were the representatives of Hunt's interest, and the defendant Hodges of Drought's interest. The bill charged, amongst other acts of waste, that the defendant, about the beginning of 1843, "changed and altered the stable-yard, and one of the gardens attached to the dwelling-house, and built upon the site of the yard and garden a lead factory, and large furnace, and also several buildings for casting leaden pipes, and also built a very large chimney over the furnace." This was admitted by the answer, except that the chimney was stated to be only 39 feet high. The bill prayed, among other things, an injunction to restrain the defendant from continuing the lead factory or works, or from manufacturing sheet lead or lead pipes on the premises. It appeared that the furnace was very small, not more than fourteen feet square.

Monahan, Atty-Gen., Martley, Q. C., with Hunt and Tottenham for the plaintiff, cited Hunt v. Browns, (1 Sa. & Sc. 178), overruling Calvert v. Gason, (2 Sch. & Lef. 561); Coffin v. Coffin, (6 Madd. 17); Elliott v. Watkins, (1 Jones, 308); 7 Com. Dig. B. 2.

Green, Q. C., Fitzgibbon, Q. C., with F. Fitzgerald, for the defendant, referred to Coppinger v. Gubbins, (9 Ir. Eq. Rep. 304); City of London v. Greyme, (Cro. Jac. 182); Cole v. Greene, (1 Lev. 309, Sc. 1 Mod. 95); Young v. Spencer, (10 B. & C. 145); Farrant v. Thompson, (5 B. & Al. 829); Lambert v. Lambert, (2 Ir. Eq. Rep. 210); Brace v. Taylor, (2 Atk. 253.)

LORD CHANCELLOR.—This case has been much complicated, by both parties arguing as if it were a question of nuisance. If that were so, I would send it to be tried by a court of law. The parties have gone from that question to one totally different. Whether in a mere matter between landlord and tenant, this court ought to interfere to restrain the erection, or if they have been erected to restrain the use of buildings not tending to the improvement of the lands, with respect to the character in which they were demised. When a case of such alteration occurs, this Court will most likely leave the landlord to his remedy at law. This case is different, the buildings have nothing to do with the enjoyment of the premises, and have no connection with them. The question then is, when parties hold premises, such as these, and want to erect on them distinct buildings for purposes distinct from those for which the lease was granted, this Court will interfere with such erection. By the old law, which does not seem to me in any way obsolete, to change any part of a demised building, is accounted waste, and the erection of buildings different in character from those demised, is waste. This was called a trivial charge, but Mr. Hunt ably met that, by showing that it was a continuing waste. The Case of Bury v. Barry, (1 Ja. and W. 658), shows the doctrine on that point. In that case the Lord Chancellor says, "I admit, also, that a small degree of waste—I do not say the smallest—manifesting an intent to do more, will be sufficient for the Court to act upon, but it will look at it in the manner in which the subject is viewed by the courts of law, and there the extent of the waste done is considered very material. There is an authority at law, where a verdict having been found for the plaintiff, judgment was entered up for the defendant, on account of the extreme smallness of the damages, Harrow School v. Alderton, (2 Bos. and Pul. 86). A Court of Equity will in this follow the law. I recollect one case where the subject of complaint consisted of some acts which were not waste, together with others that certainly were, namely, the pulling up a few young oak plants, they were so small that they were brought into court annexed to the affidavits, and there the injunction was refused." He then goes on "In this case, when the plaintiff has permitted his father to go on for five or six years, and suffered him to commit waste under the notion that he was making improvements; and when it is admitted, that upon the filing of the bill he desisted, though I am ready to say, that if another tree be cut down, if any act of waste be done in future, the plaintiff shall have an injunction, and though I do not mean to sanction the acts that have been done, yet under the form in which this application is made, I cannot grant it." And again "As to the elm trees, it seems that six or eight have been lopped, but it is sworn by four or five affidavits, in contradiction to one, that they stood on so small a piece of ground, that it was necessary to take off some of the branches, that the other trees might grow, the value of the cuttings is £1 4s., and they have been employed on the fences." Then taking the law to be so, is this a case for an injunction. I repeat again, that if any recent act were done, showing that the party intended to commit spoil and waste, the Court would give an effectual prohibition. Now I cannot say whether a jury in this case would give damages, but a court of law would say, that this without doubt was waste. We have an act, which is waste at law, established so as to manifest an intention to continue it. It is small, but still it is waste and on this ground I have no doubt, that the plaintiffs, who certainly insist on a very rigid measure of justice, are entitled to the exercise of an old jurisdiction of this Court. I must grant relief so far as it is prayed in respect of the factory. The form of the decree is a matter to be arranged, but I do not apprehend that there will be much difficulty on that point, the plaintiff is entitled to an injunction to stop any further use of the building. I cannot refuse this measure of relief, if I did, what is to prevent the defendant from covering the whole premises with factories of a similar size?

ROLLS COURT.—Nov. 22.

EX PARTE HUTTON, IN THE MATTER OF THE INCUMBERED ESTATES ACT.

Incumbered Estates Act—Suit Pending—Case.

A bill was filed for a sale of lands, and a decree pronounced, directing that the plaintiff should redeem a prior incumbrancer within six months, or the bill should stand dismissed as against him. After the expiration of the six months, the prior incumbrancer, not having been paid off, presented a petition under the Incumbered Estates Act. Held that the suit was pending within the meaning of the 67th sec. of the act, and the petition was informal, as it did not state that the consent of all parties to the suit had been obtained, and the petition should have prayed that the suit should be stayed. The suit having become obsolete by the plaintiff's neglect in not complying with the decree. Semble, the plaintiff would not in such a case be entitled to costs against the inheritance.

THIS was a petition under the Act for the sale of incumbered estates. It appeared that by indenture bearing date the 1st of Nov. 1833, the lands sought to be sold were mortgaged to a Mr. Hutton, who was the first incumbrancer on them, and in possession of the title deeds. The same lands were subsequently mortgaged by Young, the owner, to a person named Leslie, who filed a bill of foreclosure in which suit Mr. Hutton was made a party; and, by a decree, dated the 19th day of January, 1844, the plaintiff was directed to redeem the petitioner's demand within six months from the 19th of Nov. 1847—being the date of the report ascertaining the sum due—or the bill to stand dismissed as against the prior incumbrancer, but the plaintiff did not redeem within the time limited.

Hutton for the petitioner.—Upon the 19th of May, the bill in the cause of Leslie v. Young stood dismissed as against the petitioner, and this case does not come within the 67th sec. of the act, for the suit is at an end for all purposes of foreclosure, redemption, and sale, as the court will not direct a sale of an equity of redemption. Besides, a consent to this petition has been signed by the petitioner for the plaintiff in the cause of Leslie v. Young.

Butt, Q. C., for the plaintiff in the cause of Leslie v. Young.—It is impossible to make any order on this petition, for, by the 67th sec. of the Incumbered Estates Act, no petition can be presented for a sale during the pendency of any suit unless with consent of the parties. The consent of the plaintiff is the only one which has been obtained; besides, a sale can be had in the cause of Leslie v. Young, if Mr. Hutton consents, and expense and delay to all parties will be avoided.

Norman, for Young, the inheritor.—If the estate is not made liable to double costs, I have no objection that a sale should be had under the petition.

MASTER OF THE ROLLS.—The suit of Leslie v. Young having been instituted for a sale, the petitioner, who was a prior incumbrancer, and a party in that suit, stands upon his rights, and insists on being redeemed, although, had he submitted to a sale, he would have been the very first person paid out of the proceeds. The six months given to redeem expired in May last, and the petitioner now asks me to do what he might have done, but would not consent to, in the suit; for, if there had been any defect in that suit, it could have been remedied by supplemental bill. By the 67th sec. it is provided, that where any suit for foreclosure or sale has been commenced before the 1st of July, 1848, no petition shall be presented unless with the consent of the parties competent to consent to the dismissal or staying of the suit, and every such consent shall be stated in the petition. I do not say that a party would be turned round if the petition did not contain that statement, and he was in a position to say that he has the consent of all parties necessary; but the effect of this act is now sought to be got rid of by the argument that this provision does not apply where the suit, having been dismissed, is not pending so far as the petitioner is concerned. If that were so, every creditor who happened not to be before the court, would be entitled to apply under this act, although there was a suit actually pending for a sale of the very same lands, and by this means the provisions of this section would be defeated, the object of which was to prevent double proceedings. I do not now say whether I may not, under the subsequent provisions of the section, have jurisdiction to make an order staying proceedings where the parties do not consent, but every person in the suit should have notice of that order. As to the costs for the plaintiff, I do not think there is any ground for fixing the inheritance with the cost of proceedings which have been rendered abortive by his means, for the act provides that the court may give directions for staying such suit, and respecting the costs thereof and otherwise, as it shall see fit. The object of the legislature is to prevent costs, and it would have been much better to have allowed the proceedings to go on in the suit of Leslie v. Young, where all the expense had been incurred. I will make no order on this petition in its present form, but will give leave that the prayer may be amended by praying that the proceedings may be stayed in the suit of Leslie v. Young. I am unwilling that any technical objection should be allowed to interfere with the working of this statute.

NUGENT V. WATERS.—Nov. 24.

Receiver—Writ of Error—Supersedeas.

A Receiver will not be appointed under the 5 & 6 Wm. the 4th c. 55, pending a Writ of Error on a judgment at law, although the petition be presented before the issuing of the Writ of Error, and security for costs be not entered into, the plaintiff in error being the plaintiff in the court below. A Court of Equity will not entertain the question of irregularity in proceedings at law.

In this case, Nugent the petitioner, who had been defendant at law, obtained judgment for costs on a demurrer to a scire facias in the Court of Common Pleas, and on that judgment, presented a petition for a receiver, under the 5 & 6 Wm. 4, c. 55. After the petition had been presented, a writ of error issued on the judgment of the Common Pleas. A conditional order for the appointment of the receiver, had been made, against which the respondent now shewed cause.

Miller, S. B.—This conditional order cannot be supported, for the writ of error is a supersedeas of the judgment, even though no bail in error has been entered into. The plaintiff in error having being plaintiff below, Stephenson v. Higginson, (Black. Dun. & Os. 37,) 1 Arch. Prac. 487, 2 Saund. R. 101, n.)

Molesworth, contra.—The writ of error is not according to precedent, and therefore is bad. Nut-ton v. Carlow, (10 Mod. 283,) shews how formal a writ of error must be; according to Smart v. Taylor, (1 Price 312), if the writ be defective, it is no supersedeas; besides the writ of error has not been returned to the Court of Error, and therefore has ceased to act as a supersedeas, Wickstead v. Bradshaw, (Hob. 116,) anon. (6 Mod. 221); Dow v. Clark, (1 Crom. & M. 160.)

THE MASTER OF THE ROLLS.—I do not see any difficulty in this case. The case of Ball v. Ball, (Smith & Bat. 221,) decided by the King's Bench, is an authority on some of the points, for there the habere having been taken out and executed, immediately after judgment, and before a writ of error issued, the court granted a writ of restitution. It has been decided by the Court of Exchequer, in Stephenson v. Higginson, that the case of a plaintiff in error, who has been plaintiff in the court below, is not within the statute of 1 Geo. 4, c. 68, and I have no hesitation in following that case. The case of Ball v. Ball is exactly in point with the one now before me, for in the present case, the petition was presented before the writ of error issued, and in that the habere had been absolutely executed. But even if this case were within the statute, Ball v. Ball decides, that a writ of error is a supersedeas till a rule of bail has been entered and served. I shall not decide upon the irregularities which have been urged against the proceedings at law, it has been often decided, that in this Court, proceedings at law must be taken to be regular, till set aside. I will allow the cause, but without costs, because the petition had been presented before the writ of error issued.

IN THE MATTER OF THE ACT TO FACILITATE THE SALE OF INCUMBERED ESTATES IN IRELAND, EX-PARTE, LORD BLANEY.—Nov. 29.

Incumbered Estates Act—Trustees—Notice—Construction—Contract.

Upon a petition under the Incumbered estates act, for a sale of lands, vested in trustees, to the use of petitioner for life, then to preserve contingent remainders, remainder to the first and other sons of petitioner in tail male, remainder to petitioner in fee, there being no children of the petitioner. Held, that the trustees, as representing unborn issue in tail, ought to have notice of the proceedings, also, that a contract for a sale freed from a jointure, without consent of the jointress, was null and void. Semble this act will be construed strictly according to the letter.

This was a petition under the incumbered estates act. It appeared by indenture, dated the 24th day of June, 1796, that the lands sought to be sold, were limited to the use of Thomas Andrew, Lord Blaney, father of petitioner for life, and (subject to a jointure of £1500, late currency, for Lady Blaney,) to his first and other sons in tail male. By indenture, bearing date the 13th day of March, 1826, the lands were conveyed to J. Alexander and the Rev. R. Alexander, their heirs and assigns, to the use of Thomas Andrew, Lord Blaney, for life, and after the determination of that estate to the use of trustees, to preserve contingent remainders, and upon trust after the decease of Thomas Andrew Lord Blaney, to pay Lady Blaney, an annuity of £1500, late currency, as her jointure, and subject thereto, to raise £20,000, as portions for younger children, then to the use of petitioner for life, then upon trust to support contingent remainders, and after the decease of petitioner to use of his first and other sons in tail male with remainder to petitioner in fee. Thomas, A. Lord Blaney, died in 1834, and at the time, the petition was presented, Lord Blaney was unmarried, and under the limitations of the deed of 1826, possessed of a life estate in the lands, with remainder to himself in fee. Previous to the petition being presented, a contract had been entered into for a sale of the estates, discharged from the jointure of Lady Blaney.

Brewster, Q.C. and Alexander Norman for petitioner.

MASTER OF THE ROLLS.—The contract in this case is a nullity, a tenant for life, such as the petitioner, has no right to sell unless under the act, and a jointure is not an incumbrance within the meaning of it. Lady Blaney's consent must therefore be obtained, also this is a proposal to sell the estate of unborn issue, and I cannot make an order of reference without notice to the trustees, who represent them. These trustees have the legal title in them.

Norman.—The 53d section would seem to give jurisdiction; it gives power to release the portion of lands sold, from charges not being incumbrances under the act; and, under the 49th & 50th sections, the surplus money is to be invested in the funds, or in the purchase of lands to be settled to the same uses as the land sold. In the present case there will be a large surplus.

MASTER OF THE ROLLS.—The words of the act are plain, I will not put a fanciful construction upon it. You must serve notice on the trustees, and I will let this petition stand over till Saturday week, that you may obtain the necessary consent.

Rollestone.—This is an application for liberty to substitute service of subpoena. A decree for a tenant in tail has been born in India, his father, an officer, serving in that country, and also a defendant, and has appeared in the cause, we now seek service of the subpoena upon the father's son, may be deemed good service upon the son, as in a recent case in the Court of Chancery, a son of an officer in the East India Company's service was allowed by serving him in another cause.

PER CURIAM.—In dealing with a minor, we cannot travel out of the act of parliament, the son must be served in India by his father, the father being verified by the commanding officer of the regiment.

CLIFT v. GALWAY.—Nov. 19.

HONAN, Petitioner, GALWAY, Respondent.
Judgment Creditor—Petition for Receivership—Suit Pending.

Where a receiver has been appointed in a judgment creditor, who is a notice party, might obtain full relief in the suit, and petition, and applies to have the receiver appointed to the matter of his judgment, he shall be allowed the costs of the petition, although the circumstances of the suit are such as to create suspicion of collusion between the plaintiff and defendant in the suit.

In this case a bill had been filed by a judgment creditor of the defendant, praying an account, it appeared that the solicitors for the defendant were partners, and, before the bill was filed, a cousin of the defendant had been appointed receiver upon consent. The petitioner subsequently obtained an order extending this receiver to the petition, but the question of costs was to stand over.

John Pennefather moved that the petitioner might be at liberty to pay the costs of his petition.

Rollestone contra.—The petitioner dismissed with costs.

PER CURIAM.—In this account, the petitioner is at the peril of the filing of the bill, and the petitioner is to render an account again.

EQUITY EXCHEQUER.—Nov. 17.

TIGHE v. WALSH.

Practice—Substitution of service—Parties out of Jurisdiction

In the case of a minor, the court will allow service of subpoena out of the provisions of 4 & 5, Wm. 4, to be applied with.

Hickey, contra.—This application is too late. At the moment the two months expired, the defendants were in quasi contempt, they should have filed their answer, accompanied by a notice that they did so, to avoid prejudice to this application. Mannix v. Mann, (5 I. E. R. 190). He also cited Eyre v. Eyre, (Saunders & Scully, 653); Prior v. White, (Ibid. 361). The precise point has been ruled in the Master of the Rolls in Whyte v. Maguire, (Ibid. 1847, unreported).

PERFATHER, B.—The position of the defendant is analogous to that of a defendant at law, where the time for pleading has expired, the plaintiffs are too late. We think the practice, as settled by Honour the Master of the Rolls, a very good one, and must therefore refuse the motion with costs; besides, we have ascertained from the Register that Baron Richards has already decided this at the same way.

QUEEN'S BENCH.—MICHAELMAS TERM.

BUTLER AND ANOTHER V. LLOYD.—Nov. 4.

Interpleader act, 9 & 10 Vic. c. 64—Costs of suit—Reference to the Master—Sheriff liable in neglect.

Where a sheriff made a seizure of sheep, under a writ, and, an adverse claim being set up, applied for relief under the interpleader act; the court ordered an issue, and directed the sheriff to retain the sheep until the determination of the trial.

A verdict having passed for the claimant, he brought an action against the sheriff, for injury alleged to be sustained by the seizure of the sheep.

The court stayed this action, and referred it to the Master, to ascertain whether any deterioration was caused to the sheep by the neglect of the sheriff; to take an account of the sheriff's expenses, and to strike a balance between the charges of the sheriff and such loss.

The court directed the costs of the issue to be paid by the claimant by the execution creditors.

The sheriff of the County of Roscommon, having on the 6th of March last, under a writ of fieri facias, at the suit of the above named plaintiff, taken the above named defendant, taken in execution certain sheep, and a notice of claim having been served upon him, on behalf of the Rev. John Armstrong, the sheriff applied for relief under the interpleader act, and the several parties having appeared on the 20th of April, to maintain their respective claims, the court thereupon directed an issue, in which the claimant was to be plaintiff, and the execution creditors, defendants; the question on the trial to be, whether the sheep seized were the property of the claimant or the defendant, and the sheriff was directed to retain the sheep until the determination of the issue. The trial took place at the sittings after Trinity Term, before the Lord Chief Justice, and a verdict having been given for the claimant, the court, on the 29th of June, made an order, directing the sheriff to return the sheep to him.

Naper, Q.C. with J. T. Ball now, on behalf of the sheriff, moved that the expenses which he had incurred in feeding and keeping the sheep, from the 6th of March, to the 29th of June, might be paid to him, either by claimant or the execution creditors, and for his costs.

Martley, Q.C. and O'Driscoll, on the part of the execution creditors, contended that the sheriff was not entitled to the costs of his original application to the court, and that it would be unjust to ask the execution creditors to pay for the keep of the sheep.

Macdonagh, Q.C. and Close appeared on behalf of the claimant, and moved that the sheriff or the execution creditors, might be directed to pay to the claimant the costs of the order of the 20th of April, the costs of the issue, and a sum of £143 14s. being the loss sustained by him, by reason of the seizure of the sheep, or that the claimant might be at liberty to proceed in the action already commenced by him against the sheriff.

THE COURT made the following order.—It is ordered, that with respect to the application for costs, the plaintiffs in this cause do pay unto the Rev. John Armstrong the costs of the order of the 20th day of April last, and also the costs of the said issue, and that the sheriff do not have any costs of the original order as against the plaintiffs in this cause, and as to the present motion, no costs to any of the parties, and with respect to the said action, so brought against the said sheriff; it is ordered, that all further proceedings therein be stayed, and that it be referred to the Master of this Court to take an account of the reasonable cost and charges, to which the said sheriff is entitled, for feeding and keeping the sheep up to the time when the title to them was ascertained, and on the other hand, to ascertain whether any deterioration was caused to the said sheep by the neglect or mismanagement of said sheriff, and the amount of such deterioration, and to strike a balance between the said charges by the sheriff and such loss or deterioration. And it is further ordered, that the party against whom the officer shall find such balance, the said sheriff, or the said Rev. John Armstrong, as the case may be, shall pay unto the other party the amount of such balance forthwith, upon the confirmation of the Master's report.

HILL V. HOLT.—Nov. 20.

Practice—Bill of particulars—Amendment notice.

This was an application to have plaintiff's bill of particulars amended. It was an action of assumpsit. The declaration contained the money counts, and an account stated. The bill of particulars merely stated, that the action was brought "to recover the sum of £52, being for money lent, and on amount stated," to this there was no date. There was no affidavit sworn, or notice of motion served.

Coates for defendant, contended that this bill of particulars being merely an echo of the declaration, was clearly a contempt of the rule of court, and therefore did not require an affidavit, or notice of motion, Brown v. Watts, (1 Taunt. 354). A side bar rule might have been obtained, if no bill of particulars had been served.

Moore, J. on consulting with the officer, made the order.

EXCHEQUER OF PLEAS.—Nov. 8 & 22.

JOHN JACK, LESSEE OF DOWLING v. GRAVES.

Will—Construction.

Bequest of a term of years as follows:—"I also leave to T. D., my brother, one-third of the quarry field during his life, also the house that stands next in the lower field, but, at his death, said land and house to go to his son T. D. during his natural life, and after, by his last will, to his wife and children." T. D. the younger died intestate. Held that the legal estate in the term did not pass to the wife and children, but was vested in the personal representative of the testator.

THIS was a motion for a new trial of an ejectment tried before Chief Justice Blackburne at the last Spring Assizes for the Queen's County. The evidence was, that a person named John Carroll, being possessed of certain premises in Maryborough for an unexpired term of 999 years, made the following bequest of his interest in the term:—"I also leave to Thomas Dowling, my brother, one-third of the quarry field during his life, also the house that stands next in the lower part of said field, but, at his death, said land and house to go to his son, Thomas Dowling, during his natural life, and after, by his last will, to his wife and children." After the testator's death, John Campion and Henry Holbrook, the executors named in his will, obtained probate, and assented to the bequest to the Dowlings. Thomas Dowling the elder, and Thomas Dowling the younger, after the death of the testator, let the premises for which the ejectment was brought, and which were a portion of the lands comprised in the testator's will, to the defendant for 900 years, from the 31st of May, 1833. Thomas Dowling the elder died in 1834, and Thomas Dowling the younger died intestate in the same year, having survived his wife, and leaving two children, both of whom were alive at the time of bringing the ejectment. Both the testator's executors having died, administration de bonis non, &c. of the testator was granted to William Dowling, the sole lessor of the plaintiff. Under these circumstances, it was contended by the defendant's counsel that, according to the true construction of the testator's will, the legal estate vested in the children of Thomas Dowling the younger on the determination of the life estates, and that the lessor of the plaintiff was not entitled to recover. The judge having reserved liberty to the defendant to move accordingly, and a conditional order having been obtained.

MacDonogh, Q. C., with Hamilton Smythe, now shewed cause.—The sole question in this case is, whether the legal estate vested in the children of Thomas Dowling the younger after his death. Under the limitations of the will, Thomas Dowling the younger took either a simple power, which has not been executed, or a power in the nature of a trust, and, as there has been no appointment, the property would in Equity vest in the objects of the power, but, in law, would revert to the personal representative of the testator. The administrator must be regarded as a trustee for the children. There was no assent given to the limitation to the wife and children. (Lefroy, B.—It is quite decided that the assent of the executors to the bequest to the tenant for life, serves as an assent to the remaindermen.) The Attorney-Gen. v. Potter, (5 Beavan, 169,) shows that that doctrine is not universal, but is modified by the circumstances of the case. (Lefroy, B.—In that case there must have been a limitation of the estate after the estate for life, and prior to the vesting of the estate in remainder.) The assent of the executors to the life estate could not cure here, as, until T. Dowling the younger's death, it was contingent who should take, and in what shares. The administrator should be regarded as a trustee for the children, and the latter should resort to a court of Equity for a declaration of their rights. Harding v. Glyn, (1 Atkyns, 469); Brown v. Higgs, (8 Vesey 574); Birch v. Wade, (3 V. & B. 198); Burrough v. Philcox, (5 M. & C. 92). The disposition here comes within the authority of D. of Marlborough v. Godolphin, (2 Vesey Sen. 75).

Green, Q. C., and J. T. Ball, contra.—The jury have found that the executors assented to the bequest. There cannot be a partial assent. (Pigot, C. B.—It is quite settled that if A. bequeaths a chattel to B. for life, with remainder to C, and the executor assents to the life estate to B, his assent accrues to the benefit of C. The Att.-Gen. v. Potter went on this ground, that the executor's assent could not come to the remainderman without diverting the executor of the estate which the testator had provided for the payment of the legacies.) Here is an express estate to the children on the face of the will. There are two classes of cases, first, where all the legal estate vests in the first taker, with a power to dispose of it in remainder, and secondly, where the tenant for life has only the limited estate, with a power of selection and distribution. In the former class the remaindermen take only an equitable estate; in the latter, the legal estate vests in them on the death of the tenant for life. The case of D. of Marlborough v. Godolphin, has been pronounced to be doubtful by Sir E. Sugden. Sugden on Powers, 2d vol. 181; Mason v. Lyberty, (M. S. Trinity, 1834); Brown v. Pearce, (6 Sim. 257). The will should be read as if it were—"To Thomas Dowling the second for life, and then to his wife and children, as he should appoint." No case similar to the present has as yet been decided in a court of law. All the cases cited for the plaintiff are bequests of money, and so could not come under the consideration of a court of law. The case of Brown v. Higgs is distinguishable. No express estate for life was there given to the first taker, but the entire legal estate, with a trust superinduced. Our construction of the will is, that the estate was given to the wife and children, as joint tenants in remainder, subject to be divested by the execution of the power.

Cur. adv. vult.

Nov. 22.—Pigot, C. B.—The question involved in this case, reduces itself within a very narrow compass; several authorities have been cited to the court, but none of them precisely applicable. In a case like this, depending on the construction of a particular clause in a will, it is impossible to decide on remote analogies. The words of the will are: "but at his death, said house and lands to go to his son, Thomas Dowling, during his natural life, and after, by his last will, to his wife and children." The question is, whether this clause constitutes a distinct gift to the wife and children, with a power of distribution among them, or merely confers on the donee a power of appointment between the wife and children; on the best consideration that I have been able to give to these words, I am of opinion, that the testator did not intend an estate to pass by his own will, when he expressly directs it to pass by that of another, and that the legal estate is consequently vested in the administrator, the lessor of the plaintiff.

LEROY, B.—I fully concur in the opinion of my Lord Chief Baron, and the view taken by the court seems confirmed by the subsequent clause of the will. The question is simply this, did the testator intend the property to pass by way of limitation, or as his nephew's will should direct, or in other words, as expressed by the Lord Chief Baron, did he intend that an estate should pass by his own will, when he in express terms directs that it should pass by that of another. I freely assent to the proposition, that if the testator's intentions were, that the wife and children should take by limitation, the assent by the executor to the bequest of the term to the tenant for life, would enure to transfer the interest therein to the remaindermen, but that argument assumes, that the remaindermen took a legal interest, under the words, and "after by his will to his wife and children," i.e. to go by his will to his wife and children, whereas, in the very next clause, we find the testator unequivocally leaving certain lands to his nephew, with a condition superadded, that he should not dispose of them but by his will, words clearly indicating a power, and an intention that it was, through the medium of that power, the objects of the testator's bounty were to take. Again, the next clause of the will indicates the same intention, and applying the principles "noctitur à sociis," where we find two clauses, distinctly contemplating the exercise of a power it affords a strong inference, that by the third clause in question, the testator intended, that the objects of the bequest should also take through that medium, and not by way of limitation. Now, though the effect of this construction at law is, that the object cannot take anything in case of a non-execution of the power, it is different in equity, when the power is given in such terms as to impose a duty on the donee, and evinces an intention that the objects of it should be benefited. According to Brown v. Higgs, and that class of cases, a Court of Equity will relieve from the effect of such non-execution. In this case there is an intimation sufficiently strong, that the wife and children should not be ultimately defeated by the omission of the donee, or in other words, the power here is clothed with a trust, and a Court of Equity will give them the same benefit as if they took by limitation, though at law they cannot take any estate. The cases referred to in argument, distinctly establish these propositions. (His Lordship referred to Duke of Marlbo- rough v. Godolphin; Sugden on Powers, 6 Edit. vol. ii. 177, et seq. Crossing v. Crossing, ibid.) On these principles, the objects of the power here, though they cannot be held to have taken any interest at law, and the legal estate in the term is vested in the administrator, yet they would be clearly entitled to relief in a Court of Equity, and there the administrator would be held as a trustee for the wife and children. It is satisfactory to reflect, that in deciding this case according to the strict rules of law, the Court at the same time meets the substantial justice of the case.*

No rule on the motion.

STEVENSON V. STEPHENS.—Nov. 21.

Practice—Judgment as in case of a non-suit—Remanet, Collier v. Jones, overruled.

Where a record has been left a remanet at Nisi Prius, and no proceedings taken for three years, the court will not grant liberty to the defendant to enter up judgment as in case of a nonsuit.

Skellon moved for liberty to enter up judgment, as in case of a nonsuit, a notice of trial had been served by the plaintiff for the sittings after Hilary Term, 1845. The trial was afterwards postponed to the next ensuing sittings, but in consequence of the non-attendance of jurors, the case was left a remanet, and no further proceedings taken. Counsel rested his application on the case of Collier v. Jones, (1 H. & B. 321), and Ham v. Gregg, (6 B. & C. 125).

PENNEFATHER, B.—Your application appears, not only against the authorities, when carefully distinguished, but also against the express words of the statute. The case in the Queen's Bench must have been decided without due consideration of Ham v. Gregg. You must have a trial by proviso.
No Rule.

MURRAY V. SKINNERS.—Nov. 22.

Promissory note—Failure of consideration—Admission of parol evidence.

In an action by the payee, against the maker of a promissory note, payable twelve months after date, a witness was examined, who stated that the plaintiff had given £50 as a portion to the defendant's wife at her marriage, and on that occasion the note was given by defendant, on the understanding, that if the defendant's wife survived the marriage for twelve months, the gift of the £50 should be absolute and the note should not be put in suit. Held on a motion for new trial, that such evidence was admissible as not varying the written contract, but shewing a failure of consideration.

ASSUMPSIT by the payee against the maker of a promissory note, payable twelve months after date. On the trial before the Chief Baron, at the sittings after last Trinity Term, the brother of the defendant having been asked the circumstances under which the note was given, stated; that in 1841, the plaintiff had promised to give £50 to his niece on her marriage with the defendant, and on the latter event taking place, the note, payable twelve months after date, was given with a distinct understanding, that it was only to be paid by the defendant, in case his wife (the plaintiff's niece) did not survive the marriage twelve months. The witness, also stated in reply to a question from the court, that the £50 in the promissory note, was the £50 given as the niece's portion. The counsel for the plaintiff objected to the admission of this evidence as going to qualify and vary a written contract, but the objection was overruled, and the jury found for the defendant.

* Before Pigot, C.B., and Lefroy, B. Pennefather, and Richards, B. B. were in the Court of Delegates.

Butt, Q.C. and Armstrong, R., now moved that the verdict might be changed into a verdict for the plaintiff, or for a new trial, on the ground that the parol evidence was inadmissible, as qualifying the contract expressed on the face of the note. This is not the case of a want of consideration or a failure of consideration. The promise, according to the note, was to pay in twelve months at all events, but the defendant seeks to shew by parol that the promise was to pay only in the event of the wife dying within that time. It is admitted that the defendant got the £50, and suppose the wife had died within twelve months, could defendant insist that there was a failure of consideration, Moseley v. Hanford, (10 B. & C. 729); Woodbridge v. Spooner, (3 B. & Al. 233); Hoare v. Graham, (3 Camp. 57); Free v. Hawkins, (8 Taunton. 93.)

Charles Kelly, contra.—The evidence went to shew failure of consideration. In all the cases cited on the other side, the contingency might or might not have happened before the note became payable, here the event must necessarily have taken place, before the maturity of the instrument or not at all, Foster v. Jolly, (1 C. M. & R. 70, S. C. 5 Tyr. 239); Rawson v. Walker, (1 Starkie 361); Free v. Hawkins, (8 Taunt. 92); Solly v. Hinde, (2 C. & M. 516; S. C. 4 Tyr. 306; 2 Phillips Ev. 756.) A failure of consideration may be relied upon between the primary parties as much as the total absence of it.

R. Armstrong in reply.—When we speak of the consideration for a note or bill, the question is, did any money pass from the payee to the maker, and if money did pass, then it cannot be said that there has been a failure of consideration. (Pennfather, B.—Do not the facts given in evidence, really go to shew that here was no consideration for the note? There was no other consideration for this note, but the £50 to be repaid in a certain event, and to secure that repayment the note was passed. If the evidence goes to shew, that the event did not happen, and that, therefore, there should have been no repayment, did it not go to shew that there was no consideration for the note? In one case cited by Mr. Kelly, a note was given, payable on demand, with an agreement, that the payee should act as executor, and evidence was let in to shew that he declined to act as such, and was therefore disentitled to recover.) In that case no money moved from payee to maker. (Richards, B.—not the testimony objected to, merely evidence of the true consideration for which the note was given? The party was to owe the money if particular event happened, that event did not happen, and therefore no debt was contracted by the maker.)

PIGOT, C. B.—We are all of opinion that the verdict had for the defendant should not be set aside. It is extremely important, no doubt, to guard against any invasion of the rule that parol evidence should not be admitted to vary the purport of a written contract, but on the authorities, this distinction is clearly established, that although parol evidence cannot be received to vary or qualify any written instrument, yet a defendant may shew the want or failure of consideration in a case like the present, though his proofs may involve an admission of the agreement. In the argument I referred to a class of cases which serve to illustrate strikingly the distinction, I mean cases where evidence is admitted to shew that a bill has been accepted for the accommodation of the drawer, which frequently involves the admission of parol evidence, and, if any authorities were wanted for this proposition, a single one is to be found in Pike v. Sweet, (Dunne, Lloyd, Mercantile Cases, 159, S. C. 1 M. & C. 226); where it might be argued that in that case evidence was admitted to control the contract which the instrument imported. Yet Lord Tenterden held that the evidence went, not to control the contract, but to shew the relation between the parties at the time of the passing of the note. Solly v. Hinde applies, as going to distinguish testimony which tends to establish the non-existence of a consideration, and that which goes to control or qualify the written contract. In the case the instrument imported a promise to pay at all events, yet an agreement was admitted to shew that the note was not to be put in suit in a particular event, but was to be paid only on a contingency, and such an agreement was received, not as qualifying the contract, but shewing a failure of consideration. In the case before the court, the evidence went to shew that the £50 was a gift, in case the defendant's wife survived the marriage twelve months, and it appears that she did so survive. If it were a gift, it is clear that there was no consideration for the note. The evidence objected to only goes to shew, that in the events which happened it turned out to be a gift, and that therefore there was a failure of consideration. On this principle we are of opinion that the evidence was properly admitted.

Motion refused with costs.

ERRATA.—Page 12, for sec. 36, 8 Vic. c. 10, read s. 36. Page 17, for De G. & Mun. read De G. & Man. Page 18, on the twelfth line in the judgment of the Master of the Rolls, read bill for will; and in the 19th page, in the same judgment, in the 16th line from the top of the page, read bill for will.

COURT OF CHANCERY.

LEECH v. LAW.—Nov. 7 & 8.

Registry Act—Priority—Bankrupt.

A registered mortgage has priority over the subsequent certificate of appointment of assignees duly enrolled.

his cause came before the court, on exceptions to the Master's report, by the defendants, Hugh W. Henry Milner, and Thomas Atkinson assigns, of Joseph Beale a bankrupt. The first objection was to the Master's report of priority of mortgage due on foot of a deed of the 9th of September, 1837, by which Joseph Beale, conveyed to William Beale, certain premises upon trust, to indemnify the defendant, Richard Garret, against liabilities incurred for the bankrupt, on which Garret subsequently was compelled to pay considerable sums. This deed was not registered. Joseph Beale became a bankrupt in April, 1842, and the certificate of the appointment of the assignees was registered 20th June, 1842. The Master reported priority to the deed. To this report the assignees excepted.

Green, Q.C. with Darley for the exception, cited, v. v. Alsop, (5 B. & Ald. 142); Anon (Dea & Chitt. 349); Warburton v. Loveland, (6 Bli. 1); Mitford v. Rochfort (8 I. E. R. 284. 2 J. & L. 1); Butcher v. Harrison, (4 B. & Ad. 129, S.C.; 1 & M. 677); 3, 4, Vic. c. 110, s. 46.

Brewster, Q.C., with F. Walsh, for the defendant, Richard Garret, cited, Jones v. Gibbons, (9 B. & Ad. 407); Mitford v. Mitford, (1b. 87, see page 40); Saunders v. Leslie, (2 B. & Bea. 509 see page 315); Loveland v. Ivis, (1 H. & Bro. 3).

Darley in reply, referred to Drury v. Ham, (Atk. 95); Sumpter v. Cooper, (2 B. & Ad. 223); ex parte Coles, (1 Dea. & Chitt. 100); Latouche v. Conway, (1 Sch. & Lef. 137.)

LORD CHANCELLOR.—It seems strange, that a question should have occurred for the first time under the late bankrupt act, as a similar question might have arisen, as the law previously existed. I should wish to look a little more carefully into the cases which have been referred to. The question seems to be, what does the act give to creditors, whether it is not merely the property which the bankrupt can honestly dispose of.

Nov. 8.—LORD CHANCELLOR.—I shall overrule the exception. The case of Sumpter v. Cooper, (2 B. & Ad. 223), gives me some difficulty, as it seems opposed to the general bearing of the other cases, and is expressly so, to the case of Jones v. Gibbons, (9 B. & Ad. 407); Ex parte Coles, (1 Dea. & Chitt. 100), appears to be an authority against the assignees, but the statement of the case shows that the question may have been determined, on the ground of an equitable mortgage, not admitting of registration. Regarding Doe v. Alsop, which was a contest between a subsequent deed; the case which most affects the question, is Sumpter v. Cooper. But that case was decided on another point, and Jones v. Gibbons was not mentioned, but the judgment seems to be on the assumption that an unregistered deed is void. In that case, the marginal note is, "a debtor deposited the title-deeds of his houses with his creditor as a security, and afterwards executed an assignment of his interest in the houses to the same party, but this instrument was never registered, pursuant to the statute 7 Anne, c. 20. The debtor afterwards became bankrupt, and the assignment of his effects, under the commission, was duly registered, the assignees brought an action against the creditor for the rents of the houses, which he had received from the time of the assignment made to him by the bankrupt. Held, that although this instrument was void, the rents which the defendant, being the equitable mortgagee, had received, could not be taken out of his hands by virtue of the registered assignment under the commission." In the statement of the facts, it is said that the assignment took place under circumstances which formed a strong case of fraudulent preference, and the instrument was never registered. Then at the trial, the Lord Chief Justice directed a non-suit, reserving liberty to the plaintiff to move to enter a verdict in their favour, if the court should think the equitable mortgage unavailable. It is clear, that fraudulent preference could not have been an ingredient in the case, if it were, that question should have gone to the jury to determine. It is not easy to see what view the court took of the point, the registry act was cited by the counsel, Campbell, (I believe afterwards Lord Campbell,) who contended that the equitable mortgage was merged by the assignment, that even if subsisting, it was void for want of registration, and was not available at law, and assumes all along that the assignment was void; he also cited Doe v. Alsop, no one seems to contradict him, and the Court, thus entirely passing by the deed itself, says, "we are of opinion that the non-suit was right, the defendant was the equitable mortgagee of the bankrupt's moiety of the premises, and having received the whole of the rents, he would have an equitable right to retain them against the bankrupt, if he had remained solvent, or he has the same right against the assignees, who can only recover that to which the bankrupt was both legally and equitably entitled; as to the statute of Anne, we think it cannot apply to the case of an equitable mortgage, it refers only to the registration of deeds, and where there is merely a lien or equitable mortgage, created by the deposit of deeds, there is no instrument to be registered." This case appears to go against the whole current of authority, though there is a good deal to be said on the subject, particularly when we consider the case of Warburton v. Loveland, (6 Bli. 1). I do not know whether the assignees may not think it worth while to have a case sent to a court of law, but my present impression is with the current of authority. (The assignees having declined to take a case.) I cannot well get out of the case of Sumpter v. Cooper, except on the ground of its not having been fully argued, but I am forced by the general bearing of the cases to overrule this exception.

ROLLS COURT.

HILLAS v. PHILLIPS.—Nov. 17.

Practice—Substitution of Service—Decree.

The Court will, under special circumstances, permit substitution of service of a decree and memorandum under the 104th General Order.

This was an application to substitute service of a decree and memorandum under the 104th General Order, and a subpoena for costs.

L. Morgan.—On Sunday the 5th of November, the plaintiff served the defendant personally by handing him a copy of the decree and subpoena, but this being irregular, on the following day the plaintiff went to the house of the defendant, whom he saw in the parlour, plaintiff went to the window, and shewing defendant the decree, posted a copy on the outside of the window. In Daniel's Ch. Pra., Vol. 2, p. 1025, it is laid down that under the old practice substitution of service of a decree has been allowed, and that probably now, under special circumstances, the court would permit the decree to be served on the solicitor.

MASTER OF THE ROLLS.—You may take the order, serving a copy through the post-office.

MOORE v. MARSH.—Nov. 21.

Injunction—Care-taker—Refusal to give up Possession.

Where a person was put into possession of a gate-house as care-taker, and, after several years, refused to deliver possession to the owner. Held that a bill for an injunction will lie.

The bill was filed for an injunction to put the plaintiff in possession of a gate-house occupied by the defendant, and stated that in the year 1819, Daniel Moore, deceased, hired the defendant as a servant, and put him into the gate-house as care-taker, and that the defendant never was a tenant; that Daniel Moore by his will demised the beneficial interest in the premises to H. Moore, with the remainder to Wm. Moore. That after the decease of the testator, probate was granted to William Moore and Robert Molyneux. That William Moore, as executor, paid the defendant his wages up to February, 1848, and also gave him a gratuity. That William Moore discharged Marsh, but did not require him to give up possession of the gate-house. That in August, 1848, an agreement had been entered into with a Mr. Belas for an assignment of the premises, including the gate-house, that Mr. Belas called upon Molyneux to give him possession, which was demanded from Marsh, but refused. That Marsh threatened to resist any attempt to remove him by force. That plaintiff was reluctant to assert his right to take possession, as it might lead to a breach of the peace.

Martley, Q. C.—This is a case in which this court should exercise its authority. Biddulph v. Molloy, (2 I. E. R. 228); Sherrock v. Chartres, in note to Biddulph v. Molloy; Edgeworth v. Edgeworth, (2 Bro. P. C. 27, Tomlin's ed.; Furlong, L. & T. 210. (Master of the Rolls—The passage referred to is that of the determination of a tenancy; in the present case there never was any tenancy. I wish to know has this proceeding ever been applied to a case of lawful entry and forcible detainer, where the relationship of landlord and tenant does not exist.) In the case of Biddulph v. Molloy, the tenancy had determined, that was a case of forcible detainer, and the relationship of landlord and tenant did not then subsist, and it cannot make any difference whether the original possession is lawful or not. This is a proper case for an absolute order.

MASTER OF THE ROLLS.—In Howard's Equity Exchequer, it is laid down, p. 318, "If a defendant refuse to give possession, the plaintiff shall, upon affidavit of service of the injunction and of the detaining the possession, have an injunction to the sheriff, except the defendant will justify his right to the possession." I will make the order in the terms of Biddulph v. Molloy, and will grant a conditional order, to be made absolute unless cause shewn.

CALLAGHAN v. CALLAGHAN.—Nov. 27.

Receiver—Ejectment—Leave of the Court.

Where an ejectment was brought against lands over which a receiver had been appointed, upon application to the Court the proceedings will be stayed, and, in every such case, leave of the Court to bring an ejectment should be obtained; and, if the receiver has funds in hands, he will be compelled to pay the costs incurred by non-payment of the rent.

This was an application on behalf of Walter Morrough, the receiver in the cause of Callaghan v. Callaghan, that the proceedings by ejectment, brought by J. Hunt, the receiver in the causes of Gage v. Ld. Audley, and Nelligan v. Ld. Audley, for non-payment of rent, should be stayed, the said Walter Morrough undertaking to pay one year's rent, inasmuch as said ejectment was brought without any formal demand for the rent, and also without leave of the court.

It appeared that in May, 1848, W. Morrough, who had been appointed receiver in the cause of Callaghan v. Callaghan, was extended over the lands of Castlehaven, against which the ejectment had been brought, and the rent of which was payable to Mr. Hunt, the receiver in the cause of Gage v. Ld. Audley, and Nelligan v. Ld. Audley, upon the passing of his account in the month of May, 1848, there being a large arrear due upon this estate, the Master refused to allow Mr. Hunt poundage. Shortly after this, Mr. Hunt caused a statement of facts to be laid before the Master, who directed an amended statement to be filed at the receiver's expense, which was accordingly done on the 24th of June, and the Master, by his report, directed ejectments for non-payment of rent to be brought against the lands.

Brewster, Q. C., with whom was R. Deasey, now moved to have these proceedings stayed, the leave of the court not having been obtained, and relied on the cases of Cocker v. Tempest, (7 M. & W. 502); Jefferies v. Sheppard, (3 B. & Ald. 686). There should have been a demand, McIntosh v. Heydon, (R. & M. 363).

Hughes, Q. C., and Hunt, contra.—The case of Townshend v. Somerville, (1 Hogan 99) decides that an application need not be made to the court for liberty to proceed in ejectment proceedings until the habere is about to be executed.

MASTER OF THE ROLLS.—I have a clear authority to deal with this case. Even if the case of Townshend v. Somerville, in Hogan's Reports, be law, the parties were not aware, at the time the ejectment was brought, that there was a receiver under this Court, and it is a fair principle that an application should be made for liberty to bring the ejectment, for the Court will direct the receiver to pay off the rent, and, if it appears that at the time the ejectment was brought, he had funds in his hands, will compel him to pay the costs. I do not go so far as to hold that a landlord is to be tied up if there are no funds, nor do I apply the very technical principle of issuing an attachment in every case where proceedings are instituted without leave. It does not appear there was misconduct on the part of any one in the case before me, as, from the circumstances of the estate, and the time of his appointment, it could not be supposed that the receiver had sufficient funds for payment of the head landlord; and an order was made by the Master in the case of Nelligan v. Lord Audley, directing proceedings by ejectment to be taken. If this report of the Master had been copied and forwarded to Mr. Morrogh, the result would have been, that, in a month or six weeks, Mr. Hunt would most probably have had his rent paid, and the expense of these ejectments avoided. This was an error on the part of Mr. Hunt, who appears, however, to have acted most fairly in the discharge of his duty as receiver since the year 1833. Nothing can more strongly illustrate the necessity of not depending on conversations in matters of business; for Mr. Morrogh states he received no intimation of the Master's order, while Mr. Hunt states that he apprised him of it; if a notice had been served this would have been avoided. I have full power to deal with this case, and I consider that the leave of the Court should have been obtained. If a party serves ejectments, and wantonly incurs costs, I will make him pay them, and, if I had the slightest idea that these proceedings were instituted for the purpose of incurring costs, I would make Mr. Hunt pay every farthing of them. However, he was bound to comply with the Master's directions, he was in a manner under pressure, I do not wish therefore to visit him with the consequence of a mere error of judgment. I would not be justified, however, in throwing these costs upon the funds in the cause of Callaghan v. Callaghan, and Mr. Morrogh was quite right in making this application. I will direct the proceedings to be stayed, with costs, and that Mr. Hunt shall have credit for the costs in passing his account.

BRIDGE v. EGAN.—Dec. 2.

Sale—Plaintiff—Liberty to bid—Carriage of Decree.

Upon a sale under a decree, plaintiff was allowed to bid, and also to retain the carriage of the proceedings; the only other solicitor in the cause having upon a former sale raised objections to the title, and obtained a purchaser's discharge.

This was an application on behalf of the plaintiff that he might be at liberty to bid for the land set up to be sold in this cause, without prejudice to an order bearing date the 26th day of Nov. 1846, by which the carriage of the proceedings was restored to the plaintiff's solicitor.

Drury.—On the 6th of May, 1846, there was an order made in this cause giving liberty to the plaintiff to bid, and directing that the carriage of the proceedings should be transferred to John Hunt, solicitor for the defendant Egan. After the lands were sold, Mr. Hunt raised objections to the title, and the purchaser was discharged. The carriage of the proceedings was then taken from Hunt, and restored to the plaintiff, who, in order to remove the objections, filed a bill, and obtained a decree, under which the lands were again set up to be sold. The plaintiff is the only creditor, and the only other solicitor in the cause except the one acting for the receiver, was concerned for the former purchaser, and, by raising objections to the title, caused considerable expense to the estate.

MASTER OF THE ROLLS.—Under these circumstances I will make the order.

QUEEN'S BENCH.—MICHAELMAS TERM.

HOPKINS v. MURRAY.—Nov. 15.

Action on the Case—Breach of Duty—Liability of Assignee.

H., a lessee of certain premises, assigned her interest to D., who assigned to M. In neither of these deeds was there a covenant to pay the rent. M., while in possession, suffered a year's rent to be in arrear. B., the lessor, recovered this rent from H. in an action of covenant. H. subsequently brought an action on the case against M., founded upon a breach of duty; Held that H. was entitled to recover from M., in this form of action, the rent which she had paid to B.

DECLARATION stated, that before the committing of the grievances thereafter mentioned, to wit, on the 26th April, 1828, at, &c., by an indenture made between John Blennerhassett, of the one part, and the plaintiff of the other part, certain premises therein described were demised to the plaintiff, her heirs and assigns, for the lives of three persons therein named, two of whom were then in being; at the yearly rent of £105; and the plaintiff thereby, for herself, her heirs and assigns, covenanted to pay the said reserved yearly rent on the days and times therein appointed for the payment thereof, of all which the defendant had notice. The declaration then proceeded to say, that the plaintiff being so seized of the said premises, afterwards, and before the committing of the grievances by the said defendant, as thereafter mentioned, to wit, on the day and year last aforesaid, at, &c., at the request of the defendant, all the estate and interest of the plaintiff of and in the demised premises, with the appurtenances, was duly assigned to the defendant, to hold to the defendant, his heirs and assigns, from thenceforth for and during the said term of three lives, subject to the rents reserved by the said indenture of release, and to the performance of the covenants therein contained on the part and behalf of the plaintiff, her heirs and assigns. By virtue of which assignment the defendant entered into and used the said demised premises, and was seized thereof for the said term, and continued so seized thereof for a long space of time, to wit, from thence until the 1st April, 1848, to wit, at, &c., whereupon it then and there became and was the duty of the defendant, as such assignee of the said demised premises, from the time of the assignment thereof to pay the rent and perform the covenants in the said indenture contained, on the part of the plaintiff, her heirs and assigns, to be paid and performed for and during so long a period during the said term as he, the defendant, should remain seized of the demised premises, as such assignee, as aforesaid. Nevertheless, the plaintiff says that the defendant, not regarding his said duty in that behalf, but contriving, &c., to injure the plaintiff in this behalf, did not, nor would after he became seized of the said demised premises, and after the time of the assignment thereof to him, and during the time he remained seized of the said demised premises, as such assignee thereof, and during the said two subsisting lives, pay the rent received, by and perform the covenants contained in the said indenture of release on the part of the plaintiff, her heirs and assigns, as aforesaid; but, on the contrary thereof, hath hitherto wholly neglected and refused so to do, and hath permitted a large sum of money, to wit, the sum of £105, being one year's rent of said premises due and ending on the 1st November, 1847, to remain due and unpaid, contrary to the said covenant. The declaration then proceeded as follows:—By reason whereof, and of the said breach of covenant, the said John Blennerhassett, in Michaelmas Term, in the 11th year of the reign of her present Majesty, in the Court of Exchequer, impleaded the plaintiff in a plea of breach of covenant for the damages sustained on the occasion of such breach of covenant, as aforesaid; and such proceedings were thereupon had in the said action, that afterwards in Hilary Term, in the 11th year of our lady the now Queen, it was by the said court considered that the said John Blennerhassett should recover, and the said John Blennerhassett recovered against the plaintiff £128 19s. for his damages, as well by reason of the said breach of covenant as for his costs and charges about his suit in that behalf expended. By means of all which said several premises the plaintiff was forced and obliged to pay, and afterwards, to wit, on, &c., at, &c., did actually pay the said sum of £128 19s., so recovered against her, as aforesaid, and was necessarily put to and incurred certain costs and charges, amounting to £21 9s. 8d., in and about her defence in the said action at, &c., of all which the defendant had notice, to the plaintiff's damage of £200. Plea—Not guilty. At the trial before the Lord Chief Justice, at the sittings after Trinity Term, 1848, the plaintiff, after proving the original lease, gave in evidence a deed of assignment from the plaintiff to one Daniel, dated the 29th April, 1828, and an assignment from Daniel to the defendant, dated the 10th June, 1828. In neither of these deeds was there a covenant to pay the rent. The plaintiff also examined John Blennerhassett, who proved the defendant to have been in possession, and to have paid rent. The defendant's counsel then objected that the plaintiff had failed to shew any right to maintain this form of action, and called for a nonsuit.

The CHIEF JUSTICE declined to nonsuit, and directed the jury to find for the plaintiff for £150, with leave to the defendant to move to enter a nonsuit, or to reduce the amount of the verdict to £96 16s.

On a former day in this term, Martley obtained a rule Nisi, pursuant to the leave reserved at the trial; against which,

Tomb, Q.C., and Macdonough, Q.C., now shewed cause. The case of Burnett v. Lynch (5 B. & C. 589) establishes the principle upon which an action on the case lies. Abbott, C.J., when delivering judgment in that case, says:—"I think that a duty did arise when the defendant accepted the assignment of the lease, subject to the performance of the covenants, and that as a breach of that duty has been committed, a special action on the case may be maintained;" and in a previous part of the same judgment he says, "It is true the defendant entered into no express covenant, or contract, that he would pay the rent and perform the covenants, but he accepted the assignment subject to the performance of the covenants." In Humble v. Langston (7 M. & W. 530), Parke, B., says:—"The assignee of a lease becomes liable to the lessor for the performance of all the covenants which run with the land; and the lessee is also liable, in the nature of a surety as between himself and the assignee, for the performance of the same covenants, during the continuance of his interest as assignee; the consequence is, that a duty is imposed on the assignee, at common law, to perform the covenants during that time, for which an action on the case will lie." This duty arises from the relation between the parties, for the effect of the assignment is, that the lessee becomes a surety to the lessor for the assignee, who, as between himself and the lessor is the principal, bound, whilst he is assignee, to pay the rent and perform the covenants running with the estate; and the surety, after paying the debt and discharging the obligation to which he is liable, has his remedy over against the principal, Wolveridge v. Steward (3 Tyrw. 658; 3 M. & Sc. 561). There is here a privity of contract, but we are not obliged to argue the case in that point of view, for the defendant is liable, if he undertakes a duty, to perform it: the action is founded, not upon a contract, but upon a duty (see the cases collected in Fur. L. & T. 482). The verdict is for rent and the costs of a demurrer, but we seek to sustain it only for the amount of the rent.

Martley, Q.C., and Close for the defendant.—We admit that unless we can distinguish this case from Burnett v. Lynch, the plaintiff must succeed. That case, however, is put distinctly on the ground of a duty arising from privity of contract whereas here there is not a suggestion that there is either privity of contract, or privity of estate. Burnett v. Lynch was the case of assignor and assignee; there was there an assignment of the estate, and that interest passed to the assignee, subject to the payment of the rent; he had induced the mind of the assignor to believe that he would pay the rent. There can be no liability on the part of the assignee, unless it rests on contract, and no principle has been shown to the court why the remote assignee should be held liable. (Blackburne, C. J.—The second assignee is legally liable to the head landlord, and, upon his default, the lessee becomes liable; in equity and justice the principal debtor is the assignee, he is primary liable.) The declaration only states an assignment from the plaintiff to the defendant. (Moore, J.—The point for argument is, whether, admitting the authority of Burnett v. Lynch to be law, as respects lessee and his immediate assignee, it applies to a remote assignee.) Burnett v. Lynch is founded upon contract, and not upon a duty; there was an understanding between the parties at the time they entered into it, it was a legal contract, and the assignee was liable during the time he had the legal estate. None of these ingredients exist in the case now before the court. The decision in Wolveridge v. Steward, was reversed in the Court of Exchequer Chamber. (1 Cr. & M. 645). [The following cases were cited in the course of the argument—Mayor v. Steward, (4 Burr. 2440); Keppell v. Bailey, (2 M. & K. 517); Atkins v. Sealy, (Al. & N. 359); Grattan v. Diggles, (4 Taunt. 766).]

MacDonough, Q. C. in reply, was directed to confine himself to the form of the action.—It was competent for the plaintiff to have declared either in tort or assumpsit, and to have described her cause of action either as founded on a breach of duty, or on a breach of promise implied by law from that duty. The assignee in possession is liable to the head landlord, and the lessee, if compelled to pay the rent, may recover it back from the assignee in an action of assumpsit for money paid to his use. Sions v. Evans (Peake's Add. Cas. 94). In Marszetti v. Williams, (1 B. & Ad. 424,) Lord Tenterden, C. J. says, "The plaintiff in Burnett v. Lynch might have declared as for a breach of contract. It is immaterial in such a case whether the action in form be in tort or in assumpsit," and Taunton, J. at page 426 of the same case, observes—"The form of the declaration, whether it be in tort or assumpsit, makes no substantial difference, nor can it be any real ground of distinction whether the foundation of the action be an express or an implied assumpsit." In Burnett v. Lynch, Littledale, J., remarks—"Where from a given state of facts, the law raises a legal obligation to do a particular act, and there is a breach of that obligation, and a consequent damage, there, although assumpsit may be maintainable upon a promise implied by law to do the act, still an action on the case founded in tort is the more proper form of action."

He was stopped by the Court.

BLACKBURNE, C. J.—This is an action on the case brought by the plaintiff to recover damages from the defendant for his breach of duty in not paying the rent reserved in the lease, and which the plaintiff in consequence was obliged to pay. The facts of the case may be explained in a few words. The plaintiff assigned all her interest in the premises to a person, who assigned to the defendant, and in neither of these assignments is there any covenant which would give a remedy for the breach now before the court. What then is the state of these parties? The defendant occupied the premises, and was legally bound to pay the rent; it was emphatically his duty to do so, his interest was a beneficial one, and he ought to be liable to the burthens. The plaintiff was also liable, though deriving no enjoyment from the possession of the premises; both were liable upon one and the same covenant; the plaintiff was liable, because she had contracted under seal; the defendant was liable in point of law, he was also liable in point of conscience and duty. The case is similar in principle to that of joint obligors in a bond where they have equally received the money, and each can bring an action for the money paid for the use of the other, if the entire has been paid by one; they are both liable upon the same contract, and for the same amount, and each is circumstanced precisely as the parties now before the court. The only question remaining for consideration is, had the plaintiff a right to recover the money which she paid by compulsion, in this form of action, or ought she to have sued the defendant for money paid to his use, and Burnett v. Lynch is an authority to shew, it is optional with the party either to sue upon the implied assumpsit, or for the breach of duty.

CRAMPTON, J.—This is an extremely clear case. The action is not founded upon a contract express, but upon a breach of duty—a duty to exonerate the lessee under whom the party derives, and if Burnett v. Lynch be law, it rules the present case. The only distinction attempted to be made, and for which no foundation exists, was, that the action in Burnett v. Lynch was against the first assignee, whereas here it is against the second. The authorities referred to by Mr. MacDonough remove all difficulty; and establish that the party has open to him the alternative to sue in assumpsit or in tort; and it may further be collected from them, that an action on the case, founded on a breach of duty, is more proper than an action of assumpsit, founded upon the breach of a supposed promise.

PERRIN and MOORE, J. J., concurred.

Rule discharged.

COMMON PLEAS—Nov. 25.

WATERS & LIDWELL.

Practice—Plaintiff in Error—Costs—

1 Geo. 4, c. 68.

A Plaintiff in error, who was plaintiff below, cannot be compelled to give security for costs.

This was an application to quash a rule obtained by the defendant in error, that the plaintiff in error should give bail in error.

S. B. Miller, for the plaintiff in error, contended that the statute, 1 Geo. 4, c. 68, s. 8, did not contemplate the case of a plaintiff in error who had been plaintiff below. That the words of the statute were "that no execution shall be stayed, &c., unless plaintiff in error shall be first bound by recognizance, &c., to satisfy and pay if such judgment shall be affirmed, the debt, damages, and costs clearly meaning the defendant below only, as these words could not apply to the plaintiff below, against whom costs only are awarded. He cited Stephenson v. Higginson, (Bl. D. & O. 37).

Molesworth contra.—The plaintiff in error ought to give security for costs. There is a direct conflict between the Courts of Queen's Bench and Exchequer on this point, and the question is, which should be followed. In the case of Dawson v. M'Entyre, (3 Ir. Law Rep. 443,) the Court of Queen's Bench decided that plaintiff in error, having been plaintiff below, should give security for costs. The case of Stephenson v. Higginson, in the Exchequer, was decided on the authority of O'Connell v. Mansfield, said to have been decided in this Court but not reported, and of some English cases. I have spoken to all the counsel engaged in O'Connell v. Mansfield, and they have informed me that the point was not decided in that case. As to the English cases, they were decided on the words of the English statute, 3 Jac. 1, c. 8, which is different in its terms from the Irish act, as remarked by Perrin, J. in Dawson v. M'Entyre. In the English act there is a preamble which states as the reason for passing the act, the delay occasioned in recovering debts, and is only conversant with delay of debts, and that may be very well held to apply only to the case of defendant below being plaintiff in error, but the language of the Irish act is general, "no execution shall be stayed by any writ of error in any case whatsoever, unless the plaintiff in error," &c., and Burton, J. mainly relies on that in Dawson v. M'Entyre. As to the argument derived from the combination of words "debt, damages, and costs," by adopting that the Court would be driven to exclude from the operation of the statute all actions of tort, and many actions of contract, where damages only are given, and that consequently, even with respect to defendants below being plaintiffs in error; no security for costs could be claimed unless "debt, damages, and costs" had been awarded against them. Those words, therefore, must be construed to mean debt, damages, or costs, according to the nature of the case.

PER CURIAM.—On the authority of Stephenson v. Higginson, we will quash the rule for bail in error, but as there has been a conflict of authority, we will give no costs.

Motion granted.*

EXCHEQUER OF PLEAS.—Nov. 24–25.

DE LA COUR v. MURPHY.

Suggestion of Breaches, 3 Wm. 3, c. 9, s. 8—Effect of Clause in Warrant of Attorney to Contravene Statute.

A warrant of attorney contained the following clause:—"It shall be lawful to and for the said R. D., his heirs, executors, administrators, or assigns, to issue one or more execution, or executions, upon the judgment, or judgments, to be entered upon these presents, for so much money as shall remain uncollected, or unpaid, to the said R. D., by the said defendant, without filing a suggestion of breaches, or taking any other or further legal proceedings to obtain such execution, or executions, further than the judgment, or the judgments, to be entered up as aforesaid."

* See Nugent v. Watters, ante p. 35.

The court refused to give effect to this stipulation, and set aside an execution issued on this judgment, without a suggestion of breaches as required by 3 Wm. 3, c. 9, s. 8.

The facts of this case were as follows: the defendant having been appointed a deputy barony cess collector in the county of Cork, had, with his sureties, passed the usual bond with warrant of attorney, duly to collect the rates and to account with the plaintiff. The bond was conditioned that the defendant should well and faithfully collect all such public money as he should, by the warrant of the plaintiff, be authorized and required from time to time, to collect in said barony and pay the same to the plaintiff weekly, and every week as he should collect the same, and complete each and every of such collections, and pay the full amount thereof, and of each of them, to the plaintiff, at, &c., one week before the first day of each ensuing annum. The warrant of attorney contained the following clause, on which the present question turned:—"That it shall and may be lawful to and for the plaintiff, his heirs, executors, administrators, or assigns, to issue one or more execution, or executions, upon the judgment, or judgments, to be entered upon these presents for so much money as shall remain uncollected or unpaid to the plaintiff, by the defendant, without filing a suggestion of breaches, or taking any other or further legal proceedings to obtain such execution, or executions, further than the judgment, or the judgments, to be entered up as aforesaid." The plaintiff, in accordance with this authority, issued an execution upon the judgment entered on the bond and warrant, without suggesting breaches.

Joshua Clarke now moved, on behalf of the defendant, to set aside the execution and subsequent proceedings, on the ground that there was no suggestion of breaches, as required by the 3 Wm. 3, c. 9, sec. 8. It is quite settled now, that a judgment entered on a bond and warrant of attorney is within the 3 Wm. 3, c. 9, s. 8, and breaches must be suggested, Stratton v. Codd (9 Ir. L. Rep. 1). This statute has been held peremptory and remedial, and passed for the benefit of the defendant. (Lefroy, B.—The object of the statute was to enable the obligee to issue executions toties quoties, and if you issue only one execution under the proviso in the warrant, the judgment would be satisfied.) The case of Hurst & others v. Jennings (5 B. & C. 650) is analogous to the present one. It has been also held that the parties cannot, by express agreement, dispense with the legal obligation to issue a scire facias, Heath v. Brindley, (2 A. & E. 365). This statute is for the benefit of defendants, as previously to its enactment, the practice was to issue execution for the entire amount of the judgment.

Leahy, contra.—This statute is for the benefit of the plaintiff, to enable him to issue successive executions, according as there are breaches. The clause here is frequently inserted in warrants of attorney (9 Bythewood 567). The case of Hurst v. Jennings does not apply; the authority to dispense with a scire facias being by deed and not by the warrant. Besides, the contrary was decided in Morris v. Jones (2 B. & C. 242); S. C. 3 D. & Ry. 603; counsel also cited Gorman v. Hinks (Batty, 527).

Clarke, in reply.—It is quite settled that this statute is compulsory, though the term may is used instead of shall, Roles v. Rosewell (5 T. R. 538); Hardy v. Bern (ibid. 636). (Pennfather, B.—The question is, assuming the act to have been passed for the benefit of the defendant, has he, by his own contract, waived that benefit? Suppose that after judgment obtained, a defendant were to consent to have execution issued for a given sum, could this covenant be such as the court could not give effect to? If the execution were a mere irregularity, it might be waived; but it seems to me to be something more.) This court has set aside a plea of confession, no writ having been issued, such practice being against public policy. (Pennfather, B.—That decision went on the grounds that such a plea of confession amounted to a cognovit, and required to be attested by an attorney, under 1 & 4 Vict. c. 105. Since the passing of the statute of William, the act of 6th Anne, c. 7, s. 1, became law, requiring the plaintiff to mark the execution with the sum due, and in default thereof, subjecting him to heavy penalties. That statute obviates the mischief contemplated by the act of William, and removes many of the difficulties; and if the 6th of Anne were law in England, it might, perhaps, supply an answer to the reasoning of Judges Buller and Kenyon, in the case of Roles v. Rosewell.) The statute of William must be construed as if the question were raised immediately after its enactment. In mortgages, where the right of redemption has been barred by the contract of the parties, even a Court of Equity has refused to give effect to the agreement, as contravening public policy. Such as agreements to dispense with the taxation of costs.

Curr. adv. vult.

Nov. 25—Prior, C. B.—The point upon which his application exclusively rests, is, that the warrant of attorney, on which judgment has been entered, contains a provision that the plaintiff in the judgment, should be at liberty to issue execution for so much money as was uncollected, or unpaid, without filing any suggestion of breaches, pursuant to the 3 Wm. 3, c. 9, s. 8. The condition of the bond is, to perform two duties; first, duly to collect the county cess, and secondly, to pay it over when collected; and the question shortly is, can the stipulation in the warrant of attorney operate to take away the effect of the statute? It has been decided ever since the case of Roles v. Rosewell, that notwithstanding the terms of it, this statute must, according to the plain intention of the legislature, be treated as mandatory; and that it is not merely discretionary with, but compulsory on the plaintiff to suggest breaches. The Judges to whom the case of Hardy v. Bern (5 Term Reports, 636) was referred by the Lord Chancellor, take the following view of the act:—"It is apparent to us that the law was made in favour of defendants, and is highly remedial, calculated to give plaintiffs relief up to the extent of the damage sustained, and to protect defendants against the payment of further sums than what was in conscience due; and also to take away the necessity of proceedings in Equity to obtain relief against an unconscientious demand of the whole penalty, in cases where small damages only had accrued. We are of opinion that it is not in the power of the plaintiff to refuse to proceed according to that statute, in cases within the provisions of the section we have been referred to, but that he must assign the breach of the covenants for which he proceeds to recover satisfaction. And if the defendant plead to issue, and the cause goes to a jury for trial, the jury upon trial for such cause must assess damages for such of the breaches assigned as the plaintiff, upon the trial of the issues, shall prove to have been broken." If the case rested here, I should be of opinion that the words of the act being mandatory, and framed for the benefit of defendants, its policy must be taken to have been, to impose an obligation on the parties which they could not, by any act of theirs, evade. The legislature seems to have thought that it was not advisable for parties to be compelled to resort to a court of Equity, and accordingly instituted a mode of proceeding which did not previously exist; and the legislature having directed this mode of proceeding by obligatory words, those words must be complied with. The Court of King's Bench applied this principle in the case of Hardy v. Bern. The case of Hurst v. Jennings (5 B. & C. 650) was one of a bond and deed collateral. The latter recited the bond, and contained a stipulation that it would be lawful for the plaintiffs to commence an action upon the bond, and proceed to judgment thereon, whenever they should think fit, and that they should be at liberty at any time, according to their will and pleasure, to issue one or more execution, or executions, upon the judgment, as they might be advised. It appears to me that the contract by which the defendant consented that the plaintiff should issue executions at their own will and pleasure, amounts to the present case; for, if the plaintiffs might have issued executions at their will and pleasure, they might clearly have done so under the terms of the contract, without any suggestion of breaches. The application to set aside the execution was granted in that case, on the ground of the contract being an evasion of the statute. And Abbott, C. J. there observes—"This is a contrivance to defeat another wholesome statute, namely, 8 & 9 Wm. 3, c. 11 (English Act), which requires the assignment of breaches in actions upon bonds conditioned for the performance of covenants and agreements." And Littleale, J. in giving judgment, says—"If this case does not fall within the words of the statute of William, still it is an evasion, and the court has power to set aside the execution on that ground." If, then, the proceedings were set aside there as being an evasion of the act of parliament, this is a much stronger case, as here is a document expressly avoiding the statute and in direct violation of it. But it is said that the present question is analogous to that raised in the case of Morris v. Jones (3 D. & R. 603) where it was held that an execution might issue on a judgment after a year and a day without revivor by scire facias, when the warrant of attorney contains a stipulation to that effect. The report of that case does not give the judgment at any length, but the difference between it and the present is plainly indicated in subsequent authorities. The distinction is that the statute of Westminster was rather in aid of plaintiffs than defendants. Thus in Hiscocks v. Kemp (3 A. & E. 676) the court deal with the objection as to issuing executions without a scire facias; but they do not there decide that it was competent to the parties by agreement to violate the act, but they refer to the terms of it, and put upon it a construction precisely the opposite of that which the statute of William has received, namely, that the statute of Westminster was for the benefit of plaintiffs rather than defendants. It has been also suggested in the course of the argument that by the 6th of Anne the plaintiff was bound, at his peril, to indorse the amount claimed on the back of the execution, and that therefore the statute of William is no longer so necessary for the protection of the defendant as it was originally found; but, besides that, the statute of Anne was passed subsequently to that of William, and consequently cannot affect the construction to be put upon the latter; it does not afford any means of ascertaining the amount of the executions in the present instance, as the bond is here conditioned for the due collection of the cess, the necessity for ascertaining, by a verdict of the jury, the breaches on which plaintiff relies, exists here. The mischief guarded against by the statute was the hardship of seizing goods, or issuing a ca. sa., without any means being afforded of ascertaining the extent of the plaintiff's demand. That the defendant here might resort to a court of Equity is quite plain; to obviate the necessity for which was the main object of the statute, and this case appears to be as much within the mischief as if the contract in question had been entered into immediately after the statute of William, and before that of Anne.

PENNFATHER, B.—I fully concur with my Lord Chief Baron. The nature of the security, and its object, have been fully considered; and, however great the inconvenience which may arise from the necessity to assign breaches in the present case, we must decide the question upon the general principles of law. The condition of the bond here is, not merely to pay over the sums collected, but also to collect the cess with due diligence; and the breach complained of may be the non-collection, and thus the damages be very uncertain. Therefore, whatever inconvenience might have been removed by the statute of Anne, in cases where the bond is conditioned for payment of money, and the obligor knows whether the execution is overmarked or not, that statute does not remedy the inconvenience, where, as in the present case, the damages are unascertained. For my own part, I should doubt very much if the statute of Anne does not go far to vary the effect of that of William; but that case is not now before us, and therefore it is not necessary to pronounce any opinion upon it; but I quite agree that in the present instance the proceedings ought to be set aside.

RICHARDS, B.—I concur in the judgment of the court. I will not say that this agreement had in it anything positively illegal. Such an arrangement as the present might, in many cases, be found extremely convenient and conducive to public advantage. There are many cases where subordinate officers are called upon to pass such bonds, and the necessity for filing a suggestion of breaches might create delay and difficulties in enforcing the remedies upon such judgments, and therefore I was at first disposed to struggle against holding an assignment of breaches necessary in this case; but, on more mature reflection, I have come to a different conclusion. If this were a dealing out of court, the parties might, perhaps, avail themselves of this arrangement; but where the plaintiff seeks to enforce his rights under the process of the court, it is not competent to him to rely on a previous arrangement to waive the act of Parliament by which such proceedings are regulated. To allow this, would be, in many cases, to open a door to oppression; because the plaintiff, by this arrangement, constitutes himself the arbiter of the amount of damages. But it is urged that a court of Equity is open to redress this grievance; but it has been held that one of the objects of this act was to prevent the necessity of resorting to an equitable tribunal; and if such a course were sanctioned, how great an opening would we be making for litigation; how impossible would it be to discharge the general business of the court if we were called upon to determine upon affidavits the extent of the breach committed and damages actually sustained.

LEFROY, B.—I concur in the judgment of the court. In my opinion, a defendant cannot bind himself to waive the provisions of this statute. There is a maxim of law—"Quilibet potest renunciare juri pro se introducto." That maxim, however, does not apply to cases of this species. Courts of law apply it to rules which confer a right upon parties, not to rules and laws which are intended to afford protection from the abuse of a privilege which the party has, in the first instance, been the means of giving. This statute has in view to protect a man from the consequences of his own act. The policy of the act is to guard against the oppressive use of a power which a party gives against himself when he enters into a penal bond. Courts of Equity act on this principle in cases of mortgages, where an attempt is made to bar the right of redemption by the agreement of the parties, and refuse to give effect to such a contract. So when the legislature has taken precautions to guard against the oppressive use of a power given by a party's own act, the court should not suffer him to contravene this act. This is not a jus pro se introductum. This contract would be one violating the principle of the act of Parliament, and a contract to violate the law cannot be a valid one. Besides this reasoning on principle, we have an authority almost precisely in point. As to the argument rested on the effect of the statute of 6 Anne, it does not appear to obviate the difficulty; for if the parties, by their contract, could evade the act of William, they could, on the same principle, by contract get out of the provisions of the act of Anne.

Motion granted without costs.

ROLLS COURT.

BISHOP OF DUBLIN, Plaintiff.—THOMAS, LORD TRIMLESTON, RICHARD FARRELL AND THREE, Defendants.—June 12.

BISHOP OF DUBLIN, Petitioner.—THOMAS, LORD TRIMLESTON, Respondent.—3 and 4 Vic. 105, sec. 27.

Decree against two for the payment of costs is joint and several, and the registering of such decree, under the 3d and 4th Vic. c. 105 sec. 27, does not alter its effect.

A decree declared "that the defendants A and B should pay to the plaintiff his costs of the suit when taxed and ascertained." Held that the effect was not necessarily to establish contributions in moieties between the parties. But the apportionment of contribution will depend upon the special circumstances of the case.

Costs in Equity are not in the nature of damages but of a debt.

A case came before the court on a motion to set aside a decree against the appointment of a receiver of the defendant's lands, under the decree in the case of the Archbishop of Dublin v. Lord Trimleston and others. The bill in the cause had been to recover certain chief rents, payable out of the estates of Lord Trimleston, to the Archbishop of Dublin. The defendant, Richard Farrell, made a party as executor of the late John Trimleston (who had been tenant in fee of the property in question). The final decree in the suit, was pronounced on the 9th of February, 1846, and declared, "that the defendants, Thomas Lord Trimleston and Richard Farrell, do pay to the Plaintiff his costs of this cause, when the same shall be taxed and ascertained." The costs had been taxed and certified to the amount of £421 18s. 2d. The plaintiff demanded the whole of this sum from Lord Trimleston, the respondent. Lord Trimleston refused. The petitioner had obtained a conditional order for a receiver on the 22nd of February, under the provisions of the 27 s. of the 3 and 4 Vic. c. 105. The respondent, Lord Trimleston, served a notice on the petitioner, and Mr. Farrell, as co-defendant, submitting that the conditional order be discharged, on payment of one moiety by the said respondent, or that upon the respondent paying into court, or to the petitioner, the sum of £421 18s. 2d., the proceedings in the said petition might be stayed, and that Richard Farrell be directed forthwith to pay to the respondent one moiety of the petitioner's taxed costs in the cause, or that the respondent be at liberty to proceed in the name of the petitioner, as petitioner in the cause for the recovery of said moiety, against the defendant Richard Farrell.

Baldwin, Q.C. with Christian, Q.C. for Lord Trimleston, contended that as the decree was joint, and as Lord Trimleston had tendered his moiety, Mr. Farrell was clearly liable for the remainder, and cited (Beames on costs 117,) and (2 Fowler's Ex. 299.)

Radcliff, Q.C. with Gayer, Q.C. for the Archbishop. The Archbishop is not to be expected to take upon himself the apportionment of the costs, he having obtained a decree against both of the defendants for his costs. The decree in point of law is a joint and several order to pay costs, Ex parte Bishop (8 Ves. 333; 3 Dan. C. P. 91); the plaintiff therefore may proceed for the whole against both or either.

Hughes, Q.C. with F. Walsh, and James Farrell for the defendant Richard Farrell. The present application on the part of Lord Trimleston against his co-defendant, Mr. Farrell, is unsustainable; in the first place, it seeks that Mr. Farrell should contribute a moiety. If Mr. Farrell is liable to contribute, that liability must be measured by his interest in the subject matter of the suit, and, also by the line of defence taken by him in the cause. The cases of contribution in Equity, proceed upon the assumption, that the parties stand in aquali jure, Harley v. O'Flaherty. (Lloyd Gould, T. P. 208). The interest of Mr. Farrell, is less than that of Lord Trimleston. In his fiduciary character he could not admit the plaintiff's right whilst contested by the principal defendant, but did not, with Lord Trimleston, file a discharge in the Master's Office, or take exceptions to the report. The right to contribution can only be enforced by a plenary suit, and not on an interlocutory application, where the court cannot look into the equities between the parties as to the amount of their respective contributions, Ex parte Wilmshurst, (1 Glyn. Jam. p. 4, confirmed an appeal Id. 244). In Pitt v. Bonner, (You. & Col. V.C. 670), contribution was decreed on the consent of the parties, but except on consent it can only be enforced by bill in Equity, or action at law. Another principle is, that costs in Equity are in the nature of damages, Lord Trimleston has no claim to enforce contribution Corporation of Burford v. Lenthall, (2 Atk. 551,) Attorney-Gen. v. Wilson, (1 Crn. & Phil. 1).

Christian, Q.C. in reply—The decree of the 9th February, 1846, gives the same relief against both, and costs against both; Mr. Farrell cannot be considered a mere nominal defendant, as his answer is similar to that of Lord Trimleston. The effect of the decree was to establish contributions between parties in moieties, and in such a case, a reference to the master is unnecessary. This is a petition for a receiver on foot of a joint decree, at law it was necessary that the execution and elegit should be joint; the same necessity arises in the case of a receiver, which is an equitable execution.

MASTER OF THE ROLLS.—I am of opinion the Archbishop is entitled to retain this receiver. There is no doubt that in respect of a joint judgment, proceedings must be taken against all parties liable, I will therefore, if pressed, give liberty to the petitioner to amend. With regard to the question whether a decree against two generally for the payment of costs, is to be considered on the same footing as a joint judgment, I find in (3 Daniel, c. p. 9) the case ex parte Bishop cited as establishing that such an order is joint and several, and that in a case where one party had absconded, proceedings against the other were held valid. If that be the nature of the decree previous to the passing of the 3 and 4 Vic. c. 105 s. 27, which gives decrees the effect of judgments, I am of opinion that the act does not alter the nature of the decrees, but that the proceedings given thereby, must still be consistent with the previous state of the law. I see no ground why Mr. Farrell should pay a moiety of these costs; although he may be liable to a portion, as Lord Trimleston was not beneficially entitled to the assets of the testator. I do not think that the principle of their being no contribution between wrong doers applies to the case of costs in equity, they are not in the nature of damages, but of a debt. With regard to the objection raised by Mr. Farrell, that Lord Trimleston could only obtain contribution by a plenary suit; it may be a matter for the consideration of his counsel, whether in the event of such a suit being instituted, Mr. Farrell would have to pay the costs if Lord Trimleston succeeded in recovering any sum. I will disallow the cause shown, and on the parties so desiring it, give a reference to the master, to report what are the respective proportions of the costs which ought to be paid by Lord Trimleston and Mr. Farrell respectively. The costs to be reserved till the return of the report.

LEECH v. MULLOY.—Nov. 24.

Receiver—Priority—Creditors—Trustees.

A trustee, having permitted his cestui que trust to remain in possession of the trust estate, was sued in an action of covenant by the landlord for rent due by the cestui que trust. Held, that the trustee was entitled to be repaid the amount of rent advanced by him, in priority to other creditors of the cestui que trust who had obtained a receiver over the trust estate.

This was an application that the receiver might be directed to pay to the trustee the sums advanced by him under the following circumstances. A person named Price, being a trustee of a leasehold estate, allowed his cestui que trust to remain in possession of the trust estate; the rent being unpaid, the landlord sued the trustee on the covenant in the lease, and who was in consequence obliged to pay the amount claimed. The cestui que trust having confessed several judgments, his creditors obtained a receiver over the leasehold interest.

Fitzgerald, P. applied that the receiver might be directed to pay to the trustee the sums advanced by him. The trustee was clearly liable on the covenant, and was entitled to recover from his cestui que trust, so he has an equal right against the creditors, for he must be considered as in the place of a trustee for them.

Ince, contra—Price cannot be considered as a trustee for the creditors, and, as such, claim in priority to their demands; he must be left to his remedy against his cestui que trust.

Nov. 25.—MASTER OF THE ROLLS—On considering this case, I think John Price, the trustee, was liable, under the covenant, to pay the rent due to the landlord; and there is a case, 1 Beavan 112, Close v. Wilberforce, which shews that as between the trustee and his cestui que trust, the trustee has a right to be paid the amount advanced by him. Then the question arises as to priority between the trustee and the creditors of the cestui que trust. I do not think the creditors have a better equity, the trustee has the legal title, and having at least an equal equity, I think that the receiver must pay the trustee in priority to the other creditors.

Some inaccuracies having crept into the reports of the cases of Hillas v. Phillips, and Callaghan v. Callaghan, decided in this court and reported in the last number, the orders in those cases are inserted reported.

It is the earnest desire of the Editors, and that of the gentlemen who favour them with reports, to be minutely accurate; the anxiety to be both concise, and rapid, unfortunately caused the present inadvertence, but the utmost vigilance shall be exercised to prevent any error in future. In the case of Moore v. Marsh it is right to observe that his Honor, although he granted the conditional order, expressed his desire that it should be understood he did so in the full of the plaintiff, and in order that the question might be again, and guarded himself from deciding that such a bill was sustainable.

Callaghan v. Callaghan, Nov. 27.—Let Mr. Morgan, the receiver in the cause of Callaghan v. Callaghan, within ten days from the date of this order, pay to Mr. J. Hunt the receiver in Gage v. Lord Audley and Nelligen v. Lord Audley, the sum of £— being the amount of all the due out of the lands of Castlehaven, to the 1st of Jan. 1848, after deducting the poor-rate, and thereupon let proceedings in the ejectment for non-payment of rent stay, without costs, and declare that said Mr. Morgan is entitled to his costs of the motion, as part of his costs in the said cause of Callaghan v. Callaghan, and declare the said J. Hunt the receiver, in the said cause of Gage v. Lord Audley, and Nelligen v. Lord Audley, is entitled to the costs properly and necessarily incurred in said ejectment proceedings, same having been taken under the directions of the Master, and also for his costs of appearing at this motion in said causes, in which he has been appointed receiver, and no rule on the rest of said motion.

Hillas v. Phillips, Nov. 17.—Morgan moved that his service already had be deemed good. Court—He is so, transmitting a copy of this order, directed to said Phillips, through the post office.

QUEEN'S BENCH.—MICHAELMAS TERM.

MARTIN IN ERROR v. THE QUEEN.—Nov. 12—18.

Indictment for felony, 11 & 12 Vic. c. 12—Form of Caption—Interest of Juror in goods of Felon.

Where the caption of the indictment stated that "it was presented on the oaths of good and lawful men of the county of the city, &c." omitting the words "sworn" and "charged." Held that the caption not being a pleading, this error was sufficiently certain.

Held also, that it being stated in the caption that it was presented by "good and lawful men &c." (naming twenty-three) was a sufficiently certain averment that the indictment was found by "twelve good," &c.

Held that an indictment need not state the printings and publications therein stated to be felonious, they being merely evidence of the felonious intent, and requiring no innuendo.

Where a corporation were entitled by grant to the chattels of felons convicted within their boroughs. Held that it was not a good ground of challenge that the juror was a burgess of the city, and interested in the goods of the felon, the goods being vested entirely in the Council on trust for the citizens.

Held also that it was not a good ground of challenge leage, that the juror being a rate-payer, and liable to be rated to the borough-rate, was interested in goods of the felon, inasmuch as this interest, depending on several contingencies, was too remote.

Sentence directing the prisoner to be transported beyond the seas, without specifying any place. Held good, the 30th Geo. 3, c. 32, vesting in the Lord Lieutenant the power of fixing the place of transportation.

The prisoner was indicted for felony under the 11 & 12 Vic. c. 12, at a commission of Oyer and Terminer, held at Dublin on the eighth of August, 1848. The caption was in the following form:—

“County of the City of Dublin to wit. Be it remembered that at an adjournment of a commission of Oyer and Terminer, and general gaol delivery, holden in and for the county of the city of Dublin, at the Sessions House, Green-street, in the said county of the city of Dublin, on Tuesday, the eighth day of August, 1848, in the twelfth year of the reign of our sovereign lady Queen Victoria, &c., before the right honourable Jeremiah Dunne, Lord Mayor of the city of Dublin, the Right Hon. David Richard Pigot, Chief Baron of her Majesty's Court of Exchequer, and the Hon. Richard Pennefather, one of the Barons of her Majesty's Court of Exchequer, &c. It is presented on the oath of good and lawful men of the body of the said county of the city of Dublin, whose names here follow (naming them) in manner and form following, that is to say”

The indictment consisted of fourteen counts. The first twelve stated at length the various articles which were alleged as overt acts in support of the felony.

The thirteenth count stated, that the said John Martin “feloniously did compass, imagine, invent, devise, and intend to depose our said lady the Queen from the style, honour, and royal name of the imperial crown of the United Kingdom.”

The fourteenth stated that the said John Martin “feloniously did compass, imagine, invent, devise, and intend to levy war against our said lady the Queen, within that part of the United Kingdom called Ireland, in order, by force and constraint, to compel her to change her measures and counsels.”

Both these counts stated the intention to carry into effect these objects, by publishing divers printings in divers numbers of the Felon newspaper, but did not set forth the printings.

Plea—Not guilty.

When the jury were being sworn, the prisoner challenged William Duff, one of the jurors, because “he says that the city of Dublin hath been, from the time whereof the memory of man runneth not to the contrary, and now is, a body corporate; and that by a certain charter granted to the then Mayor and Commons of the said city of Dublin, by our late lord King Henry the Fifth, &c., the said King Henry the Fifth granted to the said Mayor and Commons of the said city of Dublin, that they, their heirs and successors, should have all and all manner of goods and chattels of felons and fugitives condemned and convicted within the said city of Dublin, and the liberties thereof,” &c.

To this challenge the crown demurred, joinder in demurrer, and judgment against the challenge. Verdict of guilty on all the counts.

Sentence—“That the said John Martin, for the said felony above specified and charged, be transported beyond the seas for the term of ten years from the eighth day of August.”

Error was brought on the judgment, and the following points were noted for argument:—

1st. That the caption of the indictment is bad, inasmuch as it does not appear thereby when or where the grand jury therein mentioned were sworn, or what jurisdiction they had to find said indictment; whereas it should have appeared by said caption that the said grand jury were sworn in the presence of the court, and were sworn and charged to inquire for our lady the Queen, and the body of the county of the city of Dublin; and that the caption is also defective, inasmuch as that it does not expressly aver that the indictment was found upon the oaths of twelve good and lawful men.

2nd. That the several counts in the indictment are bad for uncertainty, the two last counts for not setting forth the printings therein mentioned, and the other counts for not expressly averring that the printings published by the prisoner were “felonious” printings, expressive and declaratory of the previously charged compassing and imagining, and that they were published of and concerning her Majesty the Queen, and the crown and Government of the United Kingdom, “and” of and concerning some felonious or traitorous design then on foot, or intended to be taken; in fact, that the counts are bad on arrest of judgment, for not charging the publication of the printings with a “colloquium,” and an express averment that they imported the alleged compassings.

3rd. That the challenge to the juror, William Duff, was a good challenge, and should have been allowed.

4th. That the sentence of transportation here pronounced is bad, as it varied from the sentence of transportation prescribed by the statute introducing transportation as a punishment, and which requires a place not in Europe to be named by the court as the place to which the convict is to be transported.

Sir C. O’Loghlin and Holmes for the plaintiff in error. The objections in this case are fourfold; the first relates to the form of the caption of the indictment; the second to the indictment itself; the third, to the disallowance of the challenge to the juror; and the last, to the form of the sentence. As to the first objection, we contend that the caption should have gone on to shew that the grand jury were sworn in the presence of the court, and that they were sworn and charged to inquire for our lady the Queen, and the body of the county of the city of Dublin; and that the indictment was found by twelve lawful men of the city of Dublin. It should appear in the caption that the grand jury were sworn to inquire for the Queen and the body of the county (2 Hale, P. C. 167; 2 Hawk. Book 2, c. 25, s. 126; Anon. 1 Vent. 60); Res v. Morris (2 Keble, 671); Res v. Halliday (3 Salk. 187). We admit this objection would not be good if the indictment was found in the Queen's Bench, but it is otherwise when found in an inferior jurisdiction, Rex v. Farre (1 Keble, 629). It ought to appear when and where the grand jury were sworn, Davidson v. Moscrop (2 East. 56); Rex v. French (2 Keble, 58); Rex v. Turnith (1 Mod. 26). The words jurati and onerati may be intended at trials at Nisi Prius, but not so in indictments, Rex v. Gakes (1 Keble, 101). All the precedents in cases of high treason contain the words which we say are necessary, Poster's Crown Law, 4; Hardy's case (24 St. Tr. 231), Stone's case (25 St. Tr. 1158), O'Connor's case (26 St. Tr. 1202); Frost's case, 1839; Weldon's case (26 St. Tr. 230); Rex v. Hinchy (Batty, 512). As to the form of the indictment, we admit we are bound to shew that all the counts are bad, for if any one be good the judgment can be sustained. One objection applied to twelve out of the fourteen counts in the indictment, and the last two counts are clearly bad, being too general; the writings should have been set forth. Where words or writing form part of the corpus delicti, they ought to be set forth in the indictment, Twine's case (9 St. Tr. 819); Zenobio v. Antell (6 Term. R. 162); Lloyd's case (2 East. P. C. 1122); Rex v. Howe (1 Strange, 699); Rex v. Cheere (4 B. & C. 902). Upon principle, the indictment should set forth the words; for unless they are, how could the party plead autrefois acquit. The 11 Vict. c. 12, expressly enacts that the words should be set forth in the informations, where a party is charged with open and advised speaking; and s. 7 provides, that if a party is indicted for treason, he can plead that he was tried for felony, and how could he do that unless the words were set forth? This statute has taken a clear distinction between open and advised speaking and other acts of high treason. The twelve first counts are bad. The true nature of the crime is the compassing to do certain acts, the doing so by certain acts, and the setting forth these compassings. The two first ingredients are expressed, but the third is wanting. No rule is more settled than that all the facts which constitute the crime should be set forth in the indictment. We contend that there should be the words "of and concerning our lady the Queen and the crown," &c. The word "felonious" ought to have been set forth to every material part of the offence, Rex v. Nicholas (7 Car. & P. 538); Regina v. Green (1 Cr. & Dix. C. C. 77). The printing here is part of the offence, and therefore it should have averred that the printing was felonious. The finding of a jury will not aid the matter, Rex v. Knight, (3 Salk, 186); judgment of Lord De Grey in Rex v. Horne (Cowp. 682); Rex v. Marsden (4 M. & Sel. 164). The crown will probably rely on 9 Geo. 4, c. 54, but that statute did not intend to deprive the defendant of a substantive objection, Rex v. Martin (8 Ad. & Ell. 681). The crime in high treason consists of the compassing, and therefore the writings need not be set forth, for they are the evidence. The challenge to the juror ought to have been allowed (3 Coke Litt. 459). The juror himself has no direct interest, because it is the corporation that is entitled, but we aver that the juror is a member of the corporation, and we shew that the corporation is by charter entitled to the forfeiture of a felon's goods, and we further aver that the juror is liable to be rated to the borough rate. Where a corporation is party to a suit, or immediately interested in it, no member of it can be a witness, and any objection that goes to the competency of a witness is a good objection to him, as a juror. The law is more jealous as to jurors, and an objection considered too remote in the case of a witness, would not be considered so in the case of a juror. Coldfield v. Wilson, (1 Vern. 254); Dowdswell v. Nott, (2 ibid. 317); Heuketh v. Braddock, (3 Burr. 1847). And what would be a good objection in a civil case, will be good in a criminal case. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 48, s. 2. This conviction could be used by the corporation as evidence against the crown. We shew that the corporation is interested in the property of the person, and therefore the juror who is a member of that corporation cannot be a witness or juror. At the time of the challenge the juror was liable to a borough-rate. The corporation have the power to levy a borough-rate whenever the borough fund is deficient. We shew that the juror had a direct personal interest in the conviction of the prisoner, because, if the borough fund should be insufficient, he is immediately liable to be rated. The goods of felons go to make up the borough fund, and the juror was therefore directly interested in the increase of the borough fund. A party may be a good witness in a case, though not a good juror. Reg. v. Wills, (6 Mod. 30). Parties interested cannot be admitted as witnesses. Att.-Gen. v. Wigham, (1 P. W. 600); Barret v. Stoak, (1 Mod. 74); Reg. v. Hornsey, (10 Mod. 150); Orsden v. Palmer, (2 B. & Ad. 236). The sentence is bad, the court not having specified a particular place not in Europe. The Lord Lieutenant and council only possess the privilege of changing the place, when properly named; the court cannot add to, or diminish, the sentence appointed by the law. In England the sentence of transportation is general, and the place ought not to be named; Rex v. Kenworthy, (3 D. & Ry. 173); in Ireland, on the contrary, the sentence must indicate the place to which the prisoner was to be transported. The crown will rely on the 11 & 12 Vict. c. 78, which enables a court of error to pronounce a proper judgment, where an improper judgment was given below, but this statute cannot apply to cases where the judgment below was pronounced under a discretionary power. Section 5 only gives a power to pass a new sentence, not to amend the old one; this statute only applies to cases where but one sentence, and that a capital one, could have been pronounced. The act did not receive the royal assent until the 31st of August last, whereas the prisoner was tried and convicted on the 8th of August, and the writ of error was applied for, and allowed, previous to the 31st of August. The act has not a retrospective operation.

Perrin for the Crown.—The form of the caption of the indictment in this case is taken from that in Weldon's case, (26 St. Tr. 26). The caption states, "It is presented on the oath of good and lawful men of the city of Dublin." In the case of the King v. Morgan, (1 Ld. Raym. 710,) these words were made use of, and Holt, C. J., held there was occasion for the words "jurati et onerati," and same was decided in the Queen v. Gray, (5 I.L.R. ; The King v. Gray-Cus, (Sir T. Jones, 180); r. v. Ambler, (2 Keble, 59); Reg. v. O'Connell, (7 t. 261); and in 1 Chitty Crim. Law, 834). It is said that the number of the grand jury who did the bill should be stated. In none of those was that done. It is also contended that it is not d that the jurors were sworn before the court, the Queen v. O'Connell, is decisive to show such an averment is not necessary. As to the as of the indictment, the 13th and 14th are l. Thistlewood's case, (33 St. Tr. 697 & 701); dy's case, Emmet's case, (2 St. Tr. 1098 and t). Thistlewood's case was brought under the

Geo. 3, and the act, 11th & 12th Vic., on b these proceedings are founded, is precisely e words of the former act. The 6th and 12th ts are framed similarly to those for high on; and those matters, which it is contended, ld be stated in the indictment, are entirely the jury. The charge against the prisoner g the intention to depose the Queen, is plainly orth. The 9 Geo. 4, c. 54, ss. 31 and 32, make tments which follow the words of the act of iament good and sufficient. (Cox. Ed. of act rotection of Crown and Government, note, p.

King v. Marsden, (4 Maul & Selwyn, 164). argued that the word "traitorous" not being rted before the word "printing," is a reason holding those counts to be bad where the intent rged is shewn by the printing, but none of the edents are so, and the reason for introducing entire of the articles is, that as each and every appeared to bear on the intent charged, it was ossible to separate them. The next objection ie form of sentence, and the Queen v. Cummins, ster Term, 1845,) was relied on as an authority, the Chief Justice in giving judgment in that s, stated the ground for reversing the judgment i entirely the non-allowance of a peremptory llenge. The ground of error in the sentence in ay's case was, that the sentence did not state t the party was transported to any place beyond seas. 26 Geo. 3, c. 24, requires transportation some place out of Europe, but that act is coued to the specific case of persons who take and ep forcible possession. The 30 Geo. 3, c. 32, ables the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland to fix the lony to which the convict is to be sent. After mence the Lord Lieutenant has the entire conol of the prisoner. 38 Geo. 3, c. 70, and 5 eo. 4, c. 84, were the statutes upon which the ecision in Cummins's case was founded. The ractice in England is different. The 5 Geo. 4, 81, directs that the court shall sentence the pri-oner to be transported beyond the seas. If the rgument of Sir C. O'Loughlen, that the judge must ame the colony, but Lord Lieutenant may change ie place, be well founded, the course of practice i Ireland for more than one hundred years, and ie opinions of all the eminent judges who pre-ed must have been erroneous. The next objec-on, is the only one of any weight. We admit a juror has any substantial interest in the con-iction of the prisoners, it is a good ground of hallenge; but this juror had not any claim whatsoever to any of the goods of the prisoner. If the ground of challenge was good, neither a sheriff nor a juror could be found within the city of Dublin to try a felon, and since the time of Henry V. there has been no legal conviction. The challenge is defective in many respects. It states the charter was passed in the time of Henry V., but does not state the exact time. This was not a general grant of the goods of felons, but a grant of those goods within the city of Dublin. The court has judicial knowledge that the bounds of the city are altered since the time of this charter, and it is not averred the goods were within those ancient bounds, which, at that time, constituted the city. There is no allegation to show that this juror was a member of the same corporation—which might have been done by showing the succession—nor is there an allegation that the corporation created by the 3 & 4 Vic. c. 108, were ever entitled to, or received or used the goods forfeited under this charter. There is no allegation that the lord mayor or burgesses ever made use of this right, which is a necessary averment, inasmuch as if they have not done so, the right has been lost by non-usage. (Comyn's Dig. Franchise, G. 3, and Croke, James, 155,) show by non-usage of a fair, the right to hold it is lost. (Moore, J.—Should not the crown have replied non-usage?) There should have been a plain averment of usage since the time of Henry V., and also, that the goods of the prisoner could not have veated till after conviction. The challenge should show what description of goods Martin was possessed of; for all the goods of the felon do not pass by this grant, but remain in the crown, and are bona notabilia. No direct interest is averred to have been in the juror in the goods of Martin, but merely one contingent on the failure of the borough fund. And could it be said that an interest so much subdivided was one to weigh with the juror (Viner's Abr. Trial, G. F. Leech's Crown Cases, 132).

Holmes in reply.

Monahan, Att.-G., in general reply. No grounds exist for the objections urged against the caption; the court before whom the prisoner was tried, was held by her Majesty's letters-patent, directed to the judges of her high courts of law, and was not one of inferior jurisdiction. The caption shewed that a session of Oyer and Terminer had been held in the city of Dublin, that the commissioners were judges of the superior courts, and that an inquisition was presented on oath by twelve good and lawful men of the county of the city of Dublin. The words "present on their oath," rendered it unnecessary to say that the jury were sworn and charged. In some of the cases relied on by the counsel for the prisoner, the word "sworn" was held to be sufficient, and in (1 Starkie, Cr. Pl. 236,) it is laid down that the word "charged" may be omitted; it is sufficient if it appear that the jurors acted under the obligation of an oath; here they are stated to have presented on oath, and therefore they must have been sworn. There was a sufficient answer to the objections to the caption, for the record was returned to the court in the present term, and an indictment cannot be quashed for a fault in the caption the same term it comes in; Anon. (6 Mod. 221). Then as to the objection to the sentence, if the present one be erroneous, no good sentence of transportation has been passed in Ireland for the last twenty years, for in none was there more stated than that the prisoner should be "transported beyond seas." The present sentence was good in law, but, even if it were not, the 11th and 12th Vict. c. 78, empowers the court to amend any defect which may appear in the sentence, and the court might now order such alteration to be made. The objection that the juror was incompetent to serve, cannot be sustained. The court should look to the real facts of the case. Dublin contained 15,000 persons qualified to serve as jurors and burgesses, and every one occupying a house worth five pounds, was liable to be rated to the burgess fund; the objection was, that the prisoner possessed property to the value of twenty shillings, and that the interest to be derived from the twenty-thousandth part of that sum was sufficient to disqualify a burgess from acting as a juror. If the objection were good, all the burgesses of cities, with similar charters, would be disqualified; the Lord Mayor could not sit as judge in any case of felony, and the judges who now form this court being burgesses of Dublin, are equally incompetent. The cases cited as applicable to this question were for the recovery of the property of the parish or corporation to which the disqualified juror belonged, and it was also to be observed, that when those cases were decided corporate property was private property, whereas the 3 & 4 Vict. c. 108, places the corporation in the condition of trustees for the public.

Cur adv. vult.

Nov. 18.—BLACKBURN, C.J., now delivered the judgment of the court. In considering the different grounds of error which have been assigned in this case, I shall take them in the order adopted by the counsel at the bar. The first is, as to the caption of the indictment, which is said to be defective in not stating where the grand jury were sworn, and in not stating where the indictment was found. It is to be observed, that the caption is not any part of the indictment; it is merely a statement of the proceedings entered by the officer of the court, and should describe the time and place where it was found, and the jury by whom it was presented. The crown contends that the caption is right, and we are of opinion it is. It states, that, at an adjournment of a Commission of Oyer and Terminer, holden in and for the county of the city of Dublin, on Tuesday, the 8th of August, before commissioners appointed under the great seal, "it was presented on the oaths of good and lawful men of the county of the city of Dublin (naming 23) in manner and form following." The question is, does this caption afford the required certainty? To assume that it does not, would be repugnant to the plain meaning of the words of the caption. The next objection is, that the words "sworn and charged," which are used in the common form, are here omitted; and many cases were cited in support of this. Were the court constrained by these authorities, they should act on them with reluctance, considering that the caption is but a copy, or entry, of the proceedings made by the officer of the court; but the formality of this caption is supported by three distinct authorities.

In the case of the King v. Morgan (1 Lord Raymond, 710), which was an indictment for riot, and removed into the Queen's Bench after being tried at assizes. On a motion being made in arrest of judgment, upon the ground of the omission of the words "sworn and charged," in the caption of the indictment, Chief Justice Holt said, that the whole court were of opinion that the caption was good although these words were omitted. And in the case of the King v. Graycar (Sir Thos. Jones, 180), on a motion being made to quash the indictment for the omission in the caption of the words "jurati et onerati," the court held that it was supplied by the words "supra sacramentum." And in the case of King v. Ambler (2 Keb. 59), on a writ of error, the words "supra sacramentum" in the indictment were held to be sufficient, and as far as the opinion of text writers can be referred to, it is settled that if it appear that the finding was on oath, it is sufficient, though the words "sworn and charged" are omitted. The last objection is, that the indictment was not said to be found by twelve men; but that is answered by the fact that there are twenty-three names set forth, although the concurring number was not stated. The court are therefore of opinion, that the first cause of error must be overruled. The second class of objections is to the counts of the indictment. The two last, namely, the 13th and 14th, were objected to, on the ground that they did not set forth the writings which the indictment charged as the overt acts of the compassing attributed to the prisoner. It is not necessary to decide on the objection, and I shall merely observe, that the counts here are conformable to the precedents of indictments for high treason under the English act of the 36th of George the Third, of which the act of the 11th Victoria, on which the present indictment was founded, is a mere transcript, and no objection ever appears to have been taken to any of the counts framed under the former statute; and we think the other counts of the indictment are not open to any of the objections made. They generally charge that the prisoner did feloniously compass, imagine, devise, and intend to deprive or depose the Queen from her style, honour, and royal name of the imperial crown of the United Kingdom, and that this felonious compassing he did express, utter, and declare, by publishing certain articles in a certain number of the Felon newspaper, in the exact terms of the statute; and this is contended by the crown to be sufficient; but, on the other side, it is objected, that in pleading it should have been averred that there was some particular design imported by the article published, and that it should have stated that it was published in prosecution of and in furtherance of that design. I confess I do not see how more could have been stated than is to be found in the indictment. The crime is the design to depose the Queen. The expression of that design, and the overt act to effect it, are the publication of the articles. There is no dispute that the articles had a tendency to effect this design, and unquestionably did both one and the other. Nothing can be clearer than the language of the pleading and the statute. The design, the evidence, and the acts done in pursuance of it, are clearly stated. The cases in which the preparatory words "of and concerning" were used, were cases of libel and oral slander, in which the words required inuendoes to explain their object. This is not a case where the design and intention of the publication were left at large, or to conjecture, for here the charge is plain; it is the compassing to depose the Queen, and the expression of it, by the publication of these articles; so that all which could be required in cases of libel and slander, is, in substance, contained in the present indictment. And there is not, as my brother Perrin suggested, a single instance in which it was necessary, in reference to any of these publications, to explain their object or intention by an inuendo. It was, in the second place, objected that the publication was not averred to be felonious. I do not see how, in propriety of language, these publications could be called felonious. That word is properly descriptive of the intention with which means are used, or acts are done by a party—but the gun, for instance, with which a murder was committed, or the publications here could only be called felonious by a misapplication of that term. The act done—namely, the publication—was properly stated to have been feloniously done by the prisoner, and that satisfied all the requirements of the law. The court is therefore of opinion that all the errors assigned on these various grounds should be overruled. The third error assigned is, the disallowance of a challenge for cause, to which challenge the crown demurred. It is in effect, that the juror, being a burgess of the corporation of Dublin, and a ratepayer, had an interest in the conviction of the prisoner, Henry the Fifth having, by charter, granted to the corporation of the city of Dublin the goods and chattels of felons convicted within the city. Various objections have been made to the form of this challenge: were it necessary, the court would consider them in detail, and some of them are of a very serious character; but, as we decide that the challenge should be overruled on its merits, the court will not intimate any opinion on those objections. To one, however, I will have subsequently to refer—I mean that "which relates to the enjoyment of the franchise." This challenge contains double matter; first, it suggests an interest in the juror, as a burgess of the corporation; and secondly, an interest, as a ratepayer of the city of Dublin. Now, what interest has a burgess, or a citizen, in the forfeiture consequent on the conviction of a felon? Plainly none; for the goods so forfeited are all dedicated to public purposes. The corporation is but a trustee for the proper application of the property and income, and even that application and disposition is confined to the town council, to the total exclusion of the burgesses. The Chief Baron stated in the court below—and Baron Pennefather concurred in his view—"that the Municipal Act vested the whole management in the town council, and that though the burgesses might have a general interest in the management of the fund, qua burgesses, still, as burgesses, they were not empowered to do a single act in the matter. The town council was invested with the sole authority, though the entire corporation might be nominally trustees for the public. Looking at the matter in this view, and considering the enormous inconvenience that would arise if the objection taken were held good, it appeared to him that the challenge to the jurors would not be admitted." Such was the opinion of those eminent judges, and in that opinion I entirely concur; and for these reasons, we are satisfied that, as a burgess, this juror is not interested in the goods of the felon. The next question is, was he interested as a ratepayer? The challenge stated that the goods and chattels of felons were applicable to the borough fund, "that William Duff was a burgess of the said City of Dublin, and an occupier and tenant of certain hereditaments within the city of Dublin, liable to be rated to a borough rate within the said city, and that the borough fund of the city of Dublin, after the payment of all debts from the body corporate in said hereinbefore recited act mentioned, and contracted before the passing of the said act, and after satisfaction of all lawful claims upon the real and personal estate of such body corporate, is not sufficient for the purpose in said act mentioned," and that consequently the juror was interested in the conviction of the prisoner. The authority mainly relied on to support this objection is a passage from 2 Hawkins, P. C. c. 43, s. 28, where it was stated that it had been always held to be a good cause of challenge that the juror was interested in the attainder or forfeiture of the goods. Upon this point the authority when stated below not being at hand, the Chief Baron stated his opinion to be, that the meaning was, that the juror should be shown to have a direct interest in the subject matter of the trial. The authorities support his lordship in that opinion. In Lord Maguire's case, State Trials, Vol. 4, the matter of objection was, that the prisoner's lands were sequestered, and that the juror had obtained a grant of them. Under such circumstances nothing could be plainer in justice or law than the incompetency of the juror to sit on the trial, for the conviction of the prisoner would confirm his own title. The case of Heaketh v. Braddock, (3 Burr. 1847), is relied on. There the objection was, that the sheriff who returned the jury, and the jury who tried the case, were freemen of the city of Chester. The action was brought to enforce a custom under which none but freemen of the city could trade in it; and Lord Mansfield said that every freeman was interested in the issue to be tried, the object of it being to establish a privilege in which the freemen had an exclusive monopoly—the sheriff and the jury being freemen. In this and other cases the objection was, that the party had an actual, direct, personal, and immediate interest in the result of the case to be tried. In order to ascertain whether those cases, or any of them, are applicable to the case now before the court, it is necessary to examine the precise character or nature of the interest the juror has in the result of the trial. It has been stated that the corporation is empowered or required to impose a borough rate, if the funds of the corporation are not sufficient to meet its liabilities, and defray the expenses of carrying the provisions of the act into effect. The 133 section of the Municipal Corporation Act directed that the corporation should make an estimate of the amount so required, in addition to the ordinary funds of the borough, this estimate was not averred to have been made, and never might be made; and, until the making of it, the amount of the rate could not be ascertained, nor could a rate exist at all in fact or in law; so that it was purely casual and contingent whether the juror would ever be liable to be rated. Again, the borough fund, by section 128, is declared to consist of the rents, issues, and profits of all hereditaments, estates, and tenements; and the annual proceeds of dues, monies, chattels, and valuable securities, were to be received to the credit of the borough fund. It did not follow, however, even if there were a deficiency notwithstanding the various sources from which this income was derived, that the means of supplying that deficiency might not exist before the ascertainment of the amount, and therefore before any legal rate could be made. Besides, the goods of a felon were not forfeited until judgment, and, in the time that intervened between the challenge and the conviction he might dispose of all the goods that he then possessed. And, in addition to this, it was possible the juror might die, and cease to be the proprietor of rateable property before a rate was imposed, without ascribing any value whatever to the uncertainty of this supposed liability, which, for the reasons stated, I am satisfied is altogether ideal. What were the expectations of advantage that accrued from the forfeiture of a felon's goods? To be accurately expressed it would be in such terms as these:—that his rate would be lessened provided the town council should have thereafter a right to impose any rate, and provided they took the steps prescribed by law to enable them to do so; provided also the juror should live until the rate was made, and provided he did not dispose of his rateable property in the meantime; and finally, provided the prisoner did not dispose of all his chattels before the judgment. In my apprehension it is utterly impossible to discover or define any actual interest in the result of a suit which is to depend on such a series of contingencies. I am, therefore, clearly of opinion that, considering the nature of the challenge, there is not any resemblance between this and any decided case where objections to a juror or a witness were allowed for interest; nor do I think there is any authority or position to be found which could warrant the court in holding that the juror in question did not stand indifferent, as he stood unsworn. Even had the challenge averred matter that proved the juror's present liability to be rated, there was authority to shew that such liability would not (unless the party were actually rated) be a ground of incompetence. The King v. Kirkford, (2 East. 559) established the distinction between present and actual interest, and that which was future and contingent. There objections were taken to the competency of a witness on the ground that he had rateable property, but was not actually rated, and Lord Ellenborough stated that the interest which the juror was alleged to have should be an actual existing interest at the time, and not an expectant interest; and in Marsden v. Stanfield, (7

B. & C. 815,) upon an issue to try whether a tenement was situated within a chapelry, a witness occupying a rateable property in the chapelry was held to be competent, because he was not actually then rated, though upon a future occasion he might be. In considering and disposing of this challenge and its merits, I have no regard whatever to the consequences that would follow if it were allowed; embarrassing and injurious as they would undoubtedly be, I have excluded them from my mind, and confined my attention to the challenge, whether it was supported by authority, precedent, or legal principles; but I think it right to say that the matter of the present challenge, if it has any real existence, has lain dormant for centuries—if it has the tendency now for the first time attributed to it, it must vitally have tainted the most important branch of the administration of justice in this populous city, and therefore the discovery of its pernicious nature and effect could scarcely have been reserved until the nineteenth century. This consideration has impressed me with the importance of the omission in this challenge of an averment of user, possession or enjoyment—omission, in my mind, not of form but of substance for rights of this kind might be, as the authorities abundantly proved, lost or forfeited by wrongful misuser. If it were necessary to decide the case on the ground of this omission, I should be strongly disposed to think it fatal to the challenge; and that the averment of user and possession was not made, because it could not, in my judgment, without tendering an issue upon the fact. Upon its merits, this challenge is utterly untenable. The last error assigned is, that the act under which John Martin was convicted, and sentenced to transportation beyond the seas for the term of ten years, required that some place not in Europe should be specified in the sentence pronounced by the judge. This was assuming that the sentence of transportation was governed by the act, 26 Geo. 3, c. 36, s. 66. I do not think it is. The sentence is in the very terms of the act of 11th Victoria, which created the felony of which the prisoner has been found guilty; and under the 30th Geo. 3, c. 32, the Lord Lieutenant is to appoint a place to which the convict is to be transported in execution of the sentence. On this subject there were various authorities; I will content myself by referring to the case of the King v. Reynolds,* in which this court decided that the sentence ordering that the prisoner should be transported for the term of ten years, the colony to which he was to be sent not being named, was correct. The objection, therefore, is not only met by the very terms of the statement in which the sentence was pronounced, but it has also been met by the authority to which I have referred. For these reasons it appears to me that all these causes of challenge ought to be overruled.

Crampton, Perrin, and Moore, J. J., expressed their concurrence.

Errors omitted.

* This case is not reported.

COURT OF CHANCERY.

POTTS v. TURNLEY.—Dec. 1.

Attorney general ought to be fully apprised of the proceedings in a suit instituted against a charity, or the crown.

Counsel having applied for the costs of the attorney-general,

The Attorney-General said that in cases of wills involving questions concerning charities, he was de a defendant, that an answer was sent him the plaintiff's solicitor, which being signed, he no further notice of the proceedings in the cause, that he was consequently unable to protect the rights of the crown.

LORD CHANCELLOR.—That practice is very improper. I think Lord Eldon was in the habit of trying cases where the rights of the crown were concerned, and the Attorney-general made a party this formal way. You should have an opportunity of inquiring whether you wish to take any part in the case. It appears to me that where the rights of a charity are concerned, the Attorney-general ought to be furnished with a brief of the proceedings, and made fully acquainted with his rights in the case. At present the rights of the crown have not been defended in this suit. I think the proper course in this case is, that I should direct the plaintiff's solicitor to lay the pleadings and evidence before the Attorney-general's counsel.

Dobbs stated that the Attorney-general's counsel appeared at the first hearing.

LORD CHANCELLOR.—That counsel was instructed by the plaintiff where the rights of the crown are concerned, there ought to be counsel for the Attorney-general, appointed by him.

FOSTER v. KERR, CLELAND v. KERR.—Dec. 9.

Practice—Staying Proceedings.

The bill in the first cause was filed to raise the amount of two judgments obtained in 1846, subsequent to a voluntary settlement of the same year. The second cause was instituted to foreclose a mortgage of 1846, affecting the inheritance. Decree to account in the first cause declaring the judgments to have priority over the settlement under no tenant in tail in esse. An application to have second cause stayed was refused, though the petitioner, a defendant in the first cause had appeared at the hearing of the latter, and had not insisted upon being redeemed.

The plaintiff in the first cause claimed in respect of two judgments, one of Easter Term, 1846, and the other of Trinity Term, 1846, confessed by the defendant, John Kerr. By deed bearing date the 2d of May, 1846, the defendant, John Kerr, conveyed the lands in the pleadings mentioned to trustees therein named, upon trust, amongst others, to himself for life, without impeachment of waste, and subject to certain trusts, to the use of William Alexander Williams Kerr, and his assigns, during the term of his life, and, after his decease, to the use of the first, and every other son of the said William Alexander Williams Kerr, severally and successively in tail male, according to the usual course of strict family settlements, with remainders over, in default of such issue, to the use of the said Wm. Alexander Williams Kerr, his heirs, &c. There was no tenant in tail in esse under this settlement. The bill was filed on the 19th of January, 1847, less than a year after the judgments had been obtained against the cognizor and others, and prayed a sale, and that the said deed might be declared fraudulent and void, as being voluntary. By a decree in the first cause, bearing date the 14th of June, 1848, the judgments were declared prior to the trusts of the deed.

The bill in the second cause was filed on the 25th of March, 1848, to raise the sum of £14,000, charged on the inheritance by deed of mortgage bearing date the 29th of March, 1845.

The plaintiff, Cleland, was a party defendant to the first cause, had appeared at the hearing, and had not insisted on being redeemed.

On the 19th of July, 1848, an application was made by the defendant, John Kerr, to his Honour the Master of the Rolls, that the proceedings in the second cause might be stayed, and that all parties thereto might prove their demands in the first cause. The application at the Rolls was refused, and in the course of his judgment, his Honour stated that he would not restrain the mortgagee on account of several imperfections in the first cause. First, because the judgments not being a year old at the time of filing the bill, the plaintiff, under the 3 & 4 Vic. c. 105, s. 22, was not entitled to sue. Secondly, that the first cause might be dismissed at the final hearing, the mortgagee having then the right to demand to be redeemed, and that right was not lost, because not insisted on at the first hearing. And thirdly, although it was not necessary to decide the case on that point, because he could find no reported case in which such an order was made where the debtor was alive; that such orders, however desirable, were only made in creditors' suits for the administration of assets. From this decision the defendant, John Kerr, appealed.

Christian, Q. C., with E. Burroughs, for the appeal, cited Loftie v. Fores, (2 Ir. Eq. Rep. 448); Beauchamp v. Huntley, (Jacob, 546); Damer v. Portarlington, (2 Phillips, 30).

Hughes, Q. C., with H. Smythe, for the plaintiffs in the second cause, submitted that the first suit was irregularly framed, inasmuch as the judgments were not a year old before the filing of the bill. Although the plaintiff here did not insist on being redeemed at the first hearing in Foster v. Kerr, he may claim that right on the hearing for further directions. (Lord Chancellor.—The plaintiff has lapsed his time, he cannot at the second hearing insist on redemption). and cited Uniack v. Rochford (1 Mol. 216); Rigby v. Strangways (2 Phillips, 175); Woodburne v. Harrington (4 Law R. N. S. 69); Rotherham v. Webb (4 L. E. R. 52).

Leach, for Foster, the plaintiff in the first cause, cited Bennett v. Bernard, (10 L. E. R. 584).

E. Burroughs, in reply.—The plaintiff, Cleland, is bound by a decree in the first cause, which was pronounced in his presence. He might then have insisted on the ordinary decree in a redemption suit, referring it to the Master to take an account of what was due for principal, interest, and costs, and that the plaintiff in the first cause should pay him within three months, or the bill to be dismissed. The court, after a decree for redemption, and pending the accounts, would stay a mortgagee from prosecuting a foreclosure suit, to prevent double litigation. It is too late at this stage of the proceedings to raise any objection as to the judgment not being entered a year when the bill was filed. The objection should have been made at the first hearing, Vincent v. Going (7 I. E. R. 468).

LORD CHANCELLOR.—Though this court is always anxious to avoid increased expense as much as possible. I find that in the case of Reid v. Territt (1 Collyer, 1), when there was an irregularity in the former suit, and a difficulty in the carrying out of the decree, an application to stay proceedings was refused. Here a creditor has obtained a decree within a year from the entering up of his judgment, the only parties representing the estate being the defendants, Kerr and his wife, the trustees named in the deed of May, 1846, and the tenant for life in remainder, William Alexander Williams Kerr. There is no tenant in tail in esse under the limitations of the deed of 1846, and it is possible that a tenant in tail hereafter may be dissatisfied with the decree, and demand a rehearing. I feel I cannot, therefore, on such a contingency, which is within the range of probability, affect the rights of a prior mortgagee.* I have already stated what I believe to be the practice of this court—that a mortgagee cannot insist on redemption at the final hearing, having failed to do so at the first. I do not say that if there were no infirmity in the first cause, and that in it as satisfactory relief could be obtained as in the second, that I should not stay proceedings in the latter, although neither suit be for the administration of assets; but having regard to the defective constitution of the first suit, and the high nature of the security of the plaintiff in the second cause, I cannot prevent him from prosecuting that in which his relief will be more effectual and conclusive, and I must, therefore, affirm the order of the Master of the Rolls.

ROLLS COURT.

DOWER v. ROXANE.—Nov. 27.

Practice—Notice to Solicitors.

Every notice should state, not only the names of the solicitors, but the persons for whom they act.

MASTER OF THE ROLLS.—The notice in this case does not state for whom the solicitors act, to whom it is addressed; and if it were not a motion almost of course, being thus irregular, I should say no rule. Note.—Some days afterwards, his honour refused a motion, in the case of Allen v. Carew, for the reason given in the above case, stating it was impossible to know whether the proper parties had notice.

* See Lloyd v. Johns (9 Ves. 37.)

COURT OF EXCHEQUER CHAMBER.

THE QUEEN v. SUGDEN.—Nov. 16, 28.

Right of Lord Chancellor to appoint to office of Assistant Registrar—Statute 6 & 7 W. 4, c. 74, construction of—Casus Omissus—New Office—Rights of the Crown.

Held by five judges that in the construction of statute, the court would rather strain the words in order to arrive at the construction evidently intended by the policy of the legislature, than either omit them, or declare the state of facts which had occurred to be a casus omissus.

Held by four judges that there was a casus omissus, but that the office being a new one, and the crown not having interfered in the first instance, the right of appointment devolved at common law upon the head of the court.

CRAMPTON, J. dissentiente.*

This was a writ of error brought to reverse the judgment of the Court of Queen's Bench on information in the nature of a quo warranto, calling on the plaintiff in error to shew cause, by what authority he held the office of Assistant-Registrar to the High Court of Chancery in Ireland. The Court of Queen's Bench having given judgment for the crown, the defendant brought his error to reverse that judgment. No question being raised upon the pleadings, the only matter for the consideration of the court depended on the construction to be given to the 11th section of the 6 & 7 W. 4, c. 74.†

* Coram Blackburne, C.J., Pigot, C.B., Pennefather, B., Torrens, J., Crampton, J., Perrin, J., Richards, B., Ball, J., Lefroy, B., and Jackson, J. Abercrombie, Doberty, C. J., and Moore, J.

† 'And whereas it is expedient that the office of the Registrars of the said Court should be regulated; therefore be it enacted, that the establishment of the Registrar's office shall consist of two Registrars, one Assistant-Registrar, and six clerks, and such a number of scrivenerly clerks as the service of the said office shall require, and as shall be approved by the Lord Chancellor; and that Francis Prendergast and Charles O'Keefe, Esquires, shall continue to be such Registrars, and Robert Long, Esquire, shall be the Assistant Registrar, and Yelverton O'Keefe, John Kelly, William Young, Robert Levy, John Connor, and Thomas Battley shall be continued as such clerks, and that Francis Whelan and John Kelly, junior, shall act as assistant clerks in the said office; and that upon the happening of a vacancy in the office of either of the said Registrars, such vacancy shall be filled up by the Assistant Registrar; and that upon a vacancy happening in the office of Assistant Registrar, the same shall be filled up by the chief clerk, if no sufficient objection to the satisfaction of the Lord Chancellor shall be made; and in that case, if the Lord Chancellor shall, until aftermentioned, appoint some proper person to be Assistant Registrar; and as vacancies may occur in the office of any of the present clerks or assistant clerks, such vacancies shall not be filled up until the whole number of clerks be reduced to six; and upon a vacancy happening after the number shall be reduced to six, the Lord Chancellor shall appoint some proper person to fill the office, and so from time to time until the whole of the present clerks shall be removed; and when a new succession of clerks shall be so appointed, then and in that case, upon the death, resignation, or removal of any of

As all the questions argued at the bar are fully tried in the opinions delivered by the judges, it is only necessary to state the points relied on, and the authorities cited by the counsel at either side.

Hamilton Smythe, with Tombs, Q. C., for the plaintiff in error, contended, first, that the relator, Kelly, could not claim the office of Assistant-Registrar by right of succession, as the eleventh section only intended that right to exist when all clerks in office at the time of the passing of the act had been removed. Secondly, that the policy of the act being to supply the office with persons whose competency the Chancellor was to be responsible for, had given him the power of appointing in time to time a fit and proper person to fill the office of Assistant-Registrar, until the new succession of clerks was complete, and that the right of Y. O'Keeffe to this office was personal. Thirdly, that the Chancellor had no right of appointment by the statute, that this was a new office, there being no reservation of the rights of the Crown, the appointment vested consequently in the Chancellor, as the head of the court. For this see cited Stat. West. 2, c. 30; 13 Edw. 1, 185; Inst. 425; Scrags v. Colehill, (Dy. 175); Ston's case, (4 Co. 32); Bridgman v. Holt, in 354, S.C. Show. P.C. 11; Harcourt v. Fox, Show. 526, S.C. 4 Mod. 723; Harding v. Pollock, (3 Bligh. P. C. N. S. 161); Wilkes v. Wilkes, (8 T. R. 631); Crosby v. Hurley, (Al. and p. 481); Kennedy v. Gregg, (8 Ir. L. Rep. 225); Walker v. Sweeney, (Al. & Nap. 438); Martin v. Marshall, (Hob. 68).

Corbett, with Napier, Q. C., for the defendant in error.—The evident meaning of the eleventh section is, that there shall in future be six clerks, not a chief clerk and five others. The expression chief clerk designates the head of a class, and not an individual. How can it be known who the chief clerk is, he being previously mentioned; the particle "the" means Y. O'Keeffe, John Kelly, &c., as they would be to the head of the office, and the word "chief" is synonymous with "first," means O'Keeffe—who is to fill the office—if there was no objection made him; if there was, then the Chancellor was to appoint "a fit and proper person;" that is a permissive enactment, excluding any power of appointment by the Chancellor, until the contingency of objection being made, had arisen. It is essential that a chief clerk should exist, as if there be none, there is no material to provide for the filling of the offices of Assistant-Registrar, or Registrar. The 11th section of the 6 & 7 W. 4, shews that certain offices were intended to be abolished, and provision made for the performance of the duties belonging thereto, and then enumerates the offices to be abolished, that of chief clerk is not among them, this office not being among those abolished, and there being no provision for the execution of the duties connected therewith, it must still exist. The 27th section provides for the payment of a retiring allowance to a person named Daly, who had been chief clerk, by the then chief clerk, O'Keeffe, and the Registrar, if the term chief clerk be taken as a designatio personarum, after the departure of that person, who is to fill his place as to the payment of Daly. Under the 11th section no vacancy was to be filled till the whole number of clerks were reduced to six; when reduced to six, the assistant clerks became clerks, and then a succession was created in the office. This is not an office peculiar to O'Keeffe; chief is a designation of the head of a particular class, and on the nomination of O'Keeffe, Kelly became the chief or head of that class. The words chief and first are synonymous. This is a newly-created office, and the right of appointing thereto belongs to the crown by virtue of the royal prerogative, and not to the head of the court, except there be a lapse of the assertion of the rights of the Crown. When a court is created, the right of appointment to all subordinate offices necessarily incident to it should of right belong to the head of the court. This office is not necessarily incident, as in that case it must have been co-existent. The judgment of Mr. Justice Littledale, in Harding v. Pollock, (3 Bligh. N. S. 220,) shews the right of the crown to appoint to all offices, by virtue of its prerogative, King v. O'Grady, (Q. B. Ir. 1816); Viner. Ab. tit. Office, Pl. 5.

Nov. 28.—The Judges differing on this day delivered their opinions seriatim.

JACKSON, J.—This case comes before the court on a writ of error to the judgment of the Court of Queen's Bench, on an information requiring the plaintiff in error, the defendant below, to shew by what authority he uses the office of Assistant-Registrar to the High Court of Chancery in Ireland. No part of this case depends upon the pleadings. The plaintiff here contends that his right is derived from the appointment of the late Lord Chancellor (Sir E. B. Sugden), and the question whether the plaintiff in error has shewn a title to this office, depends on the right of the Lord Chancellor to appoint to the office of Assistant-Registrar; and this turns on the true construction to be given to the 11th section of the 6 & 7 Wm. 4, c. 74. In other words, whether the statute provides for the state of facts which have occurred, or whether there be not, in this respect, a casus omissus. The Act of Parliament upon which the present question arises was passed for the purpose of regulating the office of Registrar to the Court of Chancery it becomes, therefore, necessary to inquire how it was regulated previously to the period of its enactment. The 4 Geo. 4, c. 61, sec. 42, vested the appointment of the "first clerk" in the Registrars, to whom, out of the fees of the office, they were to pay a salary of £500 per annum, and also the salaries of all inferior clerks. The 6 & 7 Wm. 4, other than the junior clerk, the vacancy thereby occasioned shall be filled up by the clerk next in seniority whom no sufficient objection to the satisfaction of the Lord Chancellor shall be made; and that on all future vacancies in the office of junior clerk, the Lord Chancellor shall appoint some proper person to be such junior clerk; and that upon a vacancy happening in the office of Assistant-Registrar after the whole number of clerks shall have been appointed by the Lord Chancellor under this act, then such vacancy shall be filled up by the senior clerk in the said office for the time being to whom no sufficient objection to the satisfaction of the Lord Chancellor shall be made.

c. 74, took these appointments from the Registrars and gave it to the Lord Chancellor; the 11th sec. states what the staff of the office should consist of after the passing of the act, viz., two Registrars, one Assistant Registrar, and six clerks, and legislates for three distinct periods of time. First, till the existing clerks were reduced to six; secondly, from that time till the Lord Chancellor had appointed a new succession of clerks; thirdly, from the time of the removal of all the then existing clerks, or the completion of the new succession; and then proceeds to enact that the present Registrars shall continue such, that the future Registrars shall be appointed from the office of the Assistant Registrar, and this applies to all times. It then appoints by name to the new offices, and goes on to provide for the future, that is, after the new succession of clerks had been appointed by the Lord Chancellor. Robert Long was then Assistant Registrar; the vacancy caused by his promotion, or removal, was to be filled by the chief clerk, there was no officer antecedently known by that name, and the act does not provide for the appointment of any person after the death of O'Keeffe, the then first clerk; it provides for the appointment of the then first or chief clerk, being as much a direction that the vacancy should be filled by O'Keeffe, the only person known as chief clerk, as if it named him. It is not enacted that the next in order should take the office in the event of O'Keeffe being considered objectionable, but that that the Chancellor should appoint a fit and proper person, no succession was then intended to take place till the third period had happened; and when it was the intention of the legislature that a succession should take place, it is enacted that the vacancy shall be filled by the clerk next in seniority; if it was intended to introduce a succession among these clerks, it would have been done at an earlier part of the section. The 11th section contains no provision for appointment by the Chancellor, or a succession after promotion in the office till the third period had arrived. This, I think, is a casus omnisus. The act has rendered it impossible that there should be an appointment of a chief clerk after the death of O'Keeffe, till the third period had arrived. The words are—"And as vacancies may occur in the offices of the present clerks, or assistant clerks, such vacancies shall not be filled up until the whole number shall be reduced to six; and upon a vacancy happening after the number shall be reduced to six, the Lord Chancellor shall appoint some proper person to fill the office, and so from time to time, until the whole of the present clerks shall be removed." By the first part of this clause, the Chancellor was prohibited from appointing till the number of clerks was reduced to six, and then he was to appoint a proper person to fill the vacancies as they should occur, and so from time to time, till the whole of the existing clerks were removed. The defendant in error claims this office as chief clerk. It appears to me, that except the rule of succession by seniority can be applied during the first period, he has no right. If that be so, the appointment is either in the crown or the Chancellor. The question, then, is, has the plaintiff in error shewn a title on the record? His right depends on this, that where a new office is created, the appointment resides in the crown, the prima facie source of all appointments. We have no intimation of any reservation in the crown, and it is manifest that it was for the interest both of the crown and the public to give the appointment to the Lord Chancellor. I am of opinion that, being the head of the office, the Lord Chancellor was to have the appointment. Whether the claim is by succession or appointment, the Chancellor was to have the approval; and it was the obvious policy of the act to give the appointment to the head of the Court. In the 2nd section, the crown reserves to itself the right of appointing a fit person to be Clerk of the Crown and Hanaper, and in the 17th section gives the appointment of additional clerks to the Lord Chancellor, manifestly shewing an intention to make a due selection. Much confusion has arisen from the use of the terms "first clerk," and "chief clerk." I do not know whether these terms were intended to be synonymous; there is a distinction taken in the schedules; in the first, Mr. O'Keeffe is denominated "chief clerk," the others "clerks," not first clerk, second clerk, &c., and in the second schedule, their designation is changed to that of first, second, and third clerks. The contribution provided by the 27th section for Mr. Daly, who had been chief clerk, is curious; Y. O'Keeffe, the then chief clerk, was to pay him £200 per annum, and the two Registrars £100 each; and in case of the death of any of these persons, the successor in that office was to continue to pay the allowance during the life of Daly. If the defendant in error was never chief clerk, who was to pay Mr. Daly's allowance, and if he was intended to be first clerk, and to pay this allowance, it is to me inexplicable how he could be intended to have during Daly's life but £200, and his inferior £300. It is not, however necessary to solve these difficulties. I am of opinion the act contains no provision depriving the Lord Chancellor of the appointment, it is in him still, and resides in him as the head of the court. I am, therefore, of opinion that the judgment of the court below must be reversed.

LEFROY, B.—The question as to the right of the plaintiff to the office of Assistant Registrar to the Court of Chancery, depends entirely on the construction to be given to the 11th section of the 6 & 7 Wm. 4, c. 74. Three constructions have been proposed, under one of which either party is entitled to the office. The relator contends that, by the construction of this act, he has a good title. The plaintiff here—the defendant below—says, he has a title, either by the appointment of the Lord Chancellor, under the act, or, if the act has not provided for the appointment of a person to hold pro interim; that is, from the time the then existing clerks were reduced to six until the new succession was complete. In that case, a lapse of appointment by the crown having taken place, the Chancellor was entitled to appoint. These propositions unfold every view of the question arising on this act. To consider them in their order—first, it is said, Mr. Kelly, as clerk, was named to continue in the office; his right to hold it was subject to the approbation of the Lord Chancellor, of which there has been no expression. Mr. Kelly claims, under the statute, in three capacities; first, as chief clerk; secondly, as senior clerk by succession; and, thirdly, by necessity. Was he ever chief clerk, either in name or qualification, at the time of the passing of the 6 & 7 Wm. 4, c. 74? I think not; he had not the qualification it was intended the persons to fill this office should have. The 4 Geo. 4, cap. 61, sec. 42, enacts, "that the Registrars may appoint a first clerk, to be approved of by the Lord Chancellor of Ireland, and to be removable by the Registrars, with the consent of such Lord Chancellor; and the said Registrars shall, and they are hereby required, out of such fees, to pay to the said first clerk a clear yearly salary of not less than £500; and the said Registrars shall also, out of the said fees, pay all salaries and allowances to all inferior clerks in the said office of Registrar." The person appointed under that section was to be a person appointed with the consent of the Lord Chancellor, and removable only with his concurrence; the legislature thus placing a guard round his appointment, both of consent and concurrence. The Registrars were also to appoint all scrivenary clerks; to these no fixed salary was given, there was no qualification required as a test of their fitness, they were merely the inferior clerks, for the appointment of whom the approbation of the Lord Chancellor was unnecessary. At the time of the passing of the 6 & 7 Wm. 4, c. 74, the test of qualification was the approval of the Lord Chancellor. The 11th section enacts, "that the establishment of the Registrars' office shall consist of two Registrars, one Assistant Registrar, and six clerks, and as many scrivenary clerks as the service of the said office shall require, and as shall be approved of by the Lord Chancellor." It then goes on to enact who shall be the Registrars, the Assistant Registrar, and that John Kelly, with others, "shall be continued as such clerks." What was the position of John Kelly then? O'Keeffe was the chief clerk; Kelly, a mere scrivenary clerk, continued, with all the infirmities of his original appointment, without any approbation of the Chancellor, brought in merely at the will of the Registrars. The section then goes on to provide for the filling these offices in future. What is the principle to be acted on in these appointments? There is to be a succession, but with the qualification that the appointment was to take place by, and with the approval of the Lord Chancellor, after the whole number of clerks had been reduced to six. Secondly, as to Mr. Kelly's claim by right of succession. The senior clerk was to be the person who was so, after the removal of all the then existing officers, and should have the approbation of the Lord Chancellor even to entitle him to his right by succession. There was to be no succession till the whole of the present clerks were removed and others appointed by the Lord Chancellor. How can Mr. Kelly, consistently with this right of approbation, claim this office by succession? He was to continue as he was; no doubt, he was to have a fixed salary—that will not supply the qualification required, there is nothing in the act to shew that a different policy was to be followed in the interim until the new succession of clerks had come. Mr. O'Keeffe did not gain his office by succession, but as chief clerk, having been first clerk under the 4 Geo. 4, c. 61, and with all the qualifications required by the legislature. Suppose the Lord Chancellor had objected to Mr. O'Keeffe, and passed him by, Mr. Kelly could have had no title by seniority, Mr. O'Keeffe being still chief clerk; and it was impossible to set up a title by succession, until in the words of the act, "the whole of the present clerks shall be removed." Lastly, can Mr. Kelly claim through the title of necessity? It appears to me that this was provided for, the words of the section "in case the Lord Chancellor shall not consider the chief clerk qualified, then the Lord Chancellor shall, until after mentioned, appoint some proper person to be Assistant Registrar," if fairly construed, enabled the Chancellor to appoint a proper person till the new succession had arrived. It is argued that the passage in the section, "that upon a vacancy happening in the office of Assistant Registrar," &c., should be read, "that upon any vacancy," &c. I will read it so; there is nothing extravagant in reading the passage thus—that the chief clerk was to be appointed if there was no objection to him; if there was, then, that the Lord Chancellor should appoint a proper person, from time to time, until the whole of the present clerks were removed, the words until after mentioned being intended to apply to the appointments to be made from time to time. And this mode of interpretation is borne out by authority. In Stradling v. Morgan (Plowden, 205), it is said, "From which case it appears that the sages of the law heretofore have construed statutes quite contrary to the letter, in some appearance; and those statutes that comprehend all things in the letter, they have expounded to extend but to some things; and those which generally prohibit all people from doing such an act, they have interpreted to permit some people to do it; and those which include every person in the letter, they have adjudged to extend but to some persons only; which expositions have always been founded on the intent of the legislature, which they have collected, sometimes by considering the cause and necessity of making the act, sometimes by comparing one part of the act with another, and sometimes by foreign circumstances; so they have ever been guided by the intent of the legislature, which they have always taken according to the necessity of the matter, and according to that which is consonant to reason and good discretion." And in Arthur v. Bokenham (11 Mod. 161), Trevor, C. J., says, "Therefore, in doubtful cases, we may enlarge the construction of acts of Parliament, according to the reason and sense of the law makers expressed in other parts of the act, or guessed by considering the design and frame of the whole." And the same rule, as to construction of statutes according to the intent, will be found in the King v. the Poor Law Commissioners (6 Ad. & El. 7), per Coleridge, J., and in Stracey v. Nelson (12 M. & W. 585) per Parke, B., p. 544. The court is not to be tied down by words, which, if given effect to, would violate the general policy of the act. The next question is as to the supposed casus omissus. I cannot think the legislature left a certain period unprovided for; it is, in my mind, more difficult to attain a construction by expunging words than by reading them without much violence in a different sense; and that we should not come to the conclusion, there is a casus omissus, which the legislature abhors as much as nature does a vacuum without a satisfactory reason. On these grounds, I am opinion that the judgment of the court below should be reversed.

BALL, J.—I also am of opinion that the judgment of the court below should be reversed. On the face of the record, Mr. Kelly relies on this, to deprive the plaintiff here of his office, "that the defendant, on the promotion of O'Keeffe, was, and still is, the chief and senior clerk," and that, as such, he has a title by devolution of office, and that the defendant cannot be appointed by the Chancellor or any other person. With respect to his claim as chief clerk, the 4 Geo. 4, c. 61, s. 42, created the office of first clerk; the first schedule to the 6 & 7 Wm. 4, c. 74, describes it as that of chief clerk, meaning no more than a description of the office of first clerk, held by O'Keeffe. The first schedule of the 6 & 7 Wm. 4, c. 74, names certain persons in succession, as clerks, with salaries—O'Keeffe, £500 per annum; Mr. Kelly, £300; Mr. Young, £130, &c. Mr. Kelly is, undoubtedly, the first of the future clerks; but has the act made the office of chief clerk a continuing office? I think not. The £500 per annum was to be paid to O'Keeffe alone. It is difficult to hold, that it was intended that Kelly should pay out of his £300 per annum the £200 Mr. O'Keeffe was bound to pay Daly during his life. It was next argued, that the office should not be permitted to cease. I agree with my brother Jackson that, in this respect, there is a casus omissus; but I think the Chancellor has the right of appointment under the statute, and that if even the crown had a right, this being a new office, and there being no reservation of the rights of the crown, it appears to me, that, on the general rule of law, the Chancellor should have the appointment.

RICHARDS, B.—This question wholly depends on the construction of the statute 6 & 7 Wm. 4, c. 74. I am of opinion that the right of appointment is in the Chancellor, and has been properly exercised by him. To arrive at this conclusion, two questions are to be considered; first, on the construction of the statute, was Kelly entitled? At the time the act was passed, O'Keeffe held a peculiar position; he was appointed with the concurrence and approbation of the Lord Chancellor, and it is impossible to contend that this high office was to be continued to any other person. The title given him was given to no other officer. It is important to observe, with reference to the new succession of clerks, that they were to be the appointees of the Chancellor, and that at each step they were to go through the ordeal of further approbation. The vacancy was not to be filled by the senior clerk until after the whole of the then existing clerks had passed away, and a new succession come; and the reason is, the legislature did not wish the persons then holding office to be removed; but it is not to be supposed that the legislature would have acted in this cautious manner if it had intended these persons to be eligible to this important office. The next question is, did the appointment vest in the Chancellor? It is certain the legislature intended the Chancellor to have the appointment in some cases, though the new succession had not arrived. It is said, that if O'Keeffe died he would have no such right of appointment; such a construction would stultify the legislature. I would read the act thus: that the chief clerk (plainly meaning O'Keeffe) was to be appointed, if there was no objection to him; if there was, in that case, the Lord Chancellor was to appoint a fit and proper person to be Assistant Registrar; the words "in that case" meaning in case of any vacancy occurring the Chancellor was to appoint a fit and proper person; and the word if, "and in that case if," I would read as "provided;" the clause would then read, and in that case—that is, of a vacancy occurring—O'Keeffe was to be appointed, provided the Lord Chancellor shall consider him to be qualified, if not then he was to appoint a fit and proper person, and it is impossible to contend that Kelly could take the office, discharged of that qualification of approbation by the Lord Chancellor, and that the exceptions were to cease in his favour. That the intention of the legislature is best expounded by another part of the act, is a rule of law fully recognised in the King v. Poor Law Commissioners, (6 Ad. & El. 7). On these grounds, I am of opinion the judgment of the court below should be reversed.

PERRIN, J.—The 4 Geo. 4, c. 61, created several ministerial offices; the 13th section provides for the appointment of "writing clerks;" and the 7th section provides a form of oath to be taken by officers and clerks of the Court of Chancery. These sections shew the relation that existed between the clerks in office and the writing clerks. The 42nd section provides for the appointment of a first clerk by the Registrars, with the approbation of the Lord Chancellor, and who was also removable by them with the Chancellor's consent. The Registrars were to pay the chief clerk £500 per annum, and all salaries and allowances to inferior clerks. The first clerk, or the Registrars, were to receive the fees of the office; the first clerk was thus quite distinguishable from the other or inferior clerks. It appears from a subsequent part of the act (section 27), that a person named John Daly who filled the office of chief clerk, being unable to perform the duties, that Yelverton O'Keeffe was appointed first clerk, with the approbation of the Lord Chancellor. Suppose that before the passing of the 6 & 8 Wm. 4, c. 61, that O'Keeffe was either promoted, or had died, or resigned, would the next in order be entitled to the office of first clerk? From the mode of appointment, the inferior clerk could not have succeeded. The great want of accuracy in the 11th section of 6 & 7 Wm. 4, c. 74, has rendered it difficult of construction, but it is clear that no appointment could be made but by the head of the office. Under the 4 Geo. 4, c. 61, there was no right of succession; under the 6 & 7 Wm. 4, c. 74, none of the vacant clerkships were to be filled till the then number of eight was reduced to six, that is a positive enactment that there was to be no succession then. After the reduction to the number of six, the vacancies could only be filled by the appointment of the Chancellor, and so on, till a new succession had arrived; though, in one sense, Kelly, being at the head of the existing clerks, the first in order, and with a higher salary might be considered as chief clerk to answer the description in the 11th section, on consideration, I am not satisfied that he answers the description therein of chief clerk, he was not appointed with the approbation of the Lord Chancellor, nor was he entrusted with the responsible duties of the first clerk. It is not enough that Kelly is disqualified, it is a further question is Sugden entitled to the office, or, in other words, had the Chancellor the right of appointment; the words of the act are—"that the chief clerk is to fill the office, if there be no sufficient objection," if the Lord Chancellor be not satisfied that he was free from objection, he was to appoint a fit and proper person, but there is nothing to shew that the chief clerk only was to be appointed. We are not to suppose a casus omissus, if it be possible to avoid it. This statute, and the 4 Geo. 4, manifest an intention to enable the Chancellor to appoint; this is, I think, a strong argument to shew that such was to be the case in future. I am therefore of opinion the judgment of the court below must be reversed.

CRAMPTON, J.—I still retain the opinion I entertained in the court below. I think the judgment in the Queen's Bench was right; that Sugden has shewn no right to the office under the statute, and that Kelly is in by succession.

TORRENS, J.—I have arrived at the same conclusion as my learned brethren who have preceded me, and upon the same grounds. I think a satisfactory conclusion can be arrived at, by considering the state of the court before the passing of the 6 & 7 W. 4, c. 74. Under the provisions of the previous act, the first clerk, before he could receive his appointment, required the approbation of the Lord Chancellor, and could not be removed without it. O'Keefe alone was chief clerk, and no scrivenerary clerk could succeed, as there was then no right of succession in the office of Registrar. The 6 & 7 W. 4, legislated on this state of facts. Who are the chief clerks? Two; Daly, who in the 22d section we are told had been first clerk, and O'Keefe, who is there also designated as first clerk. The 11th section regulates all the offices of the Court of Chancery, and, in doing so, took into consideration the position of Mr. Kelly, and the other inferior clerks, and enacted that no subsequent state of facts should remove them; it then enacts that after a certain period those persons who had gone through a certain probationary state, should be appointed to the office of Assistant-Registrar, leaving to the Lord Chancellor the right to inquire into their qualification. If the Chancellor had first the power of appointment by approval, and after by selection, it is in my mind a strong argument to shew he was to have it in the interim, and that the Crown, by express enactment, has given the Chancellor the power of appointment.

PENNEFATHER, B.—I shall consider the construction of the 11th section alone, but, in so doing, the provisions of the 4 Geo. 4, must be kept in mind, and, attending to the provisions of the 11th section, it appears to me clear from the last clause in the section, "that after the whole number of clerks shall have been appointed by the Lord Chancellor under this act, then such vacancy shall be filled by the senior clerk, to whom no sufficient objection shall be made," that the succession upon which the relator relies, could not take place till six new clerks had been appointed. Taking into consideration the express enactment, and general meaning of the legislature, I am also of opinion that the office of chief clerk was personal to O'Keefe, and the act is to be read as if it had said, that on a vacancy happening in the office of Assistant-Registrar, the same was to be filled by O'Keefe. If this be so, it follows plainly that Kelly can have no right. It remains then to be considered where the right vested. This section is not to be construed by the exact words, but by the purport and intention of the statute, and, considering the different parts of it so forcibly alluded to by my brother Richards, I think this section must be considered as having given to the Chancellor a power of appointment, not confined to the single case of the disability of O'Keefe, but whenever a vacancy should take place, reason and sense require this construction, and the cases cited by my brother Lefroy fully establish this position. If the intention of the legislature is clear and unequivocal, and if particular words are to be controlled by the intention the legislature had in view, I am satisfied the Lord Chancellor had the power of appointing a fit and proper person, till the time when the right of succession had arrived. I do not think there is in this case a casus omissus, or that such should ever be intended, where the legislature profess to deal with the subject for legislation. Attending to the words of the act, I think the crown gave the court the right of appointment.

FIGOT, C.B.—Considering the language of the 11th section of the 6 & 7 W. 4, c. 74, and the other portions of the act, I am of opinion there was no succession; and that at the time of the appointment of the plaintiff here, there was no chief clerk. The next question is, did the act confer on the Chancellor the right of appointment. I am forced to come to the conclusion there was a casus omissus, but whether the appointment be in the crown or the Chancellor, we must in this case assume that the crown did not interfere, and, not having done so, on the authority of Harding v. Pollock, I think the crown has given up the right of appointment, and as it does not appear from the statute the crown intended to reserve any right, we are warranted in holding that the appointment devolved on the Chancellor.

BLACKBURN, C.J.—I am quite satisfied that there is no succession in this office till the new order of clerks are complete. It is as plain as any proposition can be, that the crown has no right of appointment; the intention was to vest it in the Chancellor, with two exceptions, Robert Long, the then assistant-registrar, and O'Keefe, the description of chief clerk meaning the latter as plainly as if he were named. The court is bound to adopt that construction which will effectuate the intention of the legislature, the authorities on this point are conclusive. I think there was a casus omissus, but that the crown has surrendered its right to the Chancellor.

Judgment of Queen's Bench reversed.

QUEEN'S BENCH.—MICHAELMAS TERM.

FENNELL v. DEMPSEY. Nov. 18.

Practice—Concurrent Writs—Irregular Arrest.

A plaintiff cannot act upon two concurrent writs of ca. sa. and fi. fa. at the same time. When a fi. fa. and ca. sa. having issued together, a small sum only was levied under the former, and before returning the fi. fa. the defendant was taken in execution under the ca. sa.; the Court discharged her out of custody.

The Court will restrain a defendant who declines to be put under terms, from bringing an action.

Writs of ca. sa. and fi. fa., having issued together against the defendant, returnable at the same time, a levy was made under the latter, the proceeds, after deducting the expenses of the exertion, amounted only to £3, the debt being £40. Before the fi. fa. was returned, the defendant was arrested on the ca. sa.

Blackham, on a former day, having obtained a conditional order to discharge the defendant out of custody, on the ground that the ca. sa. could not be executed before the fi. fa. was returned.

F. Meagher now showed cause. The sale having proved inoperative, the plaintiff was entitled to have recourse to the ca. sa., without waiting for the return of the fi. fa., Edward v. Ross, (9 Price, 5); Dicas v. Warne, (10 Bing. 341); Primrose v. Gibson, (2 D. and Ry. 193.) The plaintiff has not acted with oppression, and the court will not interfere except in such a case.

Blackham in support of his rule. A fi. fa. and ca. sa. may issue together and be concurrent, but if one be acted upon, a return of that must be entered before a proceeding, can be taken upon the other. Miller v. Parnell, (6 Taunt. 370); Hodgkinson v. Walley, (2 Tyr. 174); Edmond v. Ross, (9 Price, 5); Kane v. Bridgman, (5 I. L. Rep. 222); Wilson v. Kingston, (2 Chit. 203). The cases cited at the other side do not apply, for in all of them the goods were in custodia legis; no seizure could therefore be made, and the parties had not elected to proceed under the fi. fa.

BLACKBURN, C. J.—Here is an execution executed, and before the plaintiff can have any knowledge of the amount of that levy, the defendant is taken on another writ, marked for the full amount.

Let the rule for the discharge of the defendant be made absolute, with costs, on the terms of his bringing no action.

Blackham having declined to accept these terms, his client preferring to bring her action, BLACKBURN, C. J., said the court would follow the practice of the Court of Exchequer, as stated by Mr. Meagher, and restrain the plaintiff from bringing her action.

Rule absolute, with costs.

EXCHEQUER OF PLEAS.

FITZGERALD v. COATES.—Dec. 9.

Practice—Interpleader Act—Costs of Sheriff.

Where the sheriff has used due diligence the court will direct the costs of the rule to interplead, and of attendance on the motion to be paid by the party who shall fail on the issue.

Hemphill on behalf of sheriff, moved pursuant to a rule obtained under the Interpleader Act, an execution had been lodged with the sheriff on the 25th November last, under which he seized certain furniture, &c. On Nov. 27th a claim was put in by a third party to the furniture under seizure. The sheriff obtained the ordinary rule on the 6th of December.

O'Hagan appeared for the execution creditor.

Rollestone for claimant.

An issue having been directed, Hemphill applied for the costs of the order, and the present motion to be paid by the party who should fail on the trial. The practice of the Court of Queen's Bench is to give the sheriff his costs. There is a conflict of the cases in the Exchequer, but there is in court an order made by Baron Leffroy last Trinity Term for payment of the sheriff's costs by the unsuccessful party. The act vests the fullest discretion in the court as to the costs. Counsel also cited Burke v. Darcy, (9 I. L. R. 287.)

PENNEFATHER, B.—I shall declare the sheriff entitled to the costs of the rule and of this motion; the question as to which party is to pay him to abide the event of the trial. The sheriff has used great diligence here, coming in on the earliest opportunity.*

* Before Pennefather, B. in Chamber.

COURT OF CHANCERY.

SMITH v. CHICHESTER.—Nov. 30.

Judgments—Priority.

Judgments of the Exchequer rank in the same priority with those of the other Courts, obtained in or as of the same Term, the Exchequer judgment having relation to the first day of Term, although the day of the plaintiff's appearance named in the declaration, be subsequent to it.

This case came before the Court on exceptions to the Master's report. Several creditors having judgments against the defendant, all of which being entered during vacation, related generally to the first day of the previous Term, the Master, in considering the priorities of these judgments, postponed that of Messrs. Rundell and Bridges, being in the Exchequer, to those in the Courts of Queen's Bench and Common Pleas.

Christian, Q. C., for Rundell and Bridges, in support of the exception. The Master reported the Exchequer judgments puisne to those in the Queen's Bench and Common Pleas, because the record in the Exchequer shews the date of the appearance, which the others do not, but nevertheless they have relation to the first day of the Term. Burrough v. Williamson, (11 L. E. R., not published); Stanford v. Cooper, (3 Cro. 102).

Gayer, Q. C., for report.—The doctrine of relation does not take place where the record shews that the judgment could not have been recovered on the first day of Term. Anonymous, (3 Salk. 212); Seun v. Broome, (3 Bur. 1595); Hynde's case, (4 Co. Rep. 71. b).

Pilkington for another creditor, in support of the report, referred to Purcheater v. Petre, (3 Dougl. 274); Miller v. Bradley, (8 Mod. 190); Huys v. Wright, (Yelv. 35).

Rogers, in reply, cited Att-Gen. v. Andrews, (Hardres 23); Doe & Davies v. Creed, (5 Bing. 327); Bragner v. Langmead, (7 T. R. 20, 24); Calvert v. Tomlin, (5 Bing. 1); Ex parte Birch, (4 B. & C. 880); Greenway v. Fisher, (7 B. & C. 436); Wilton v. Girdlestone, (5 B. & Al. 847).

LORD CHANCELLOR.—In this case the judgment obtained by Messrs. Rundell and Bridges has been postponed to those of creditors who obtained judgments in the same term, but in different courts. It appears that all the judgments in question were entered in vacation, that of Messrs. Rundell and Bridges in the Court of Exchequer, and, according to the practice of that Court, the plaintiff states his own day of appearance, which in this instance was on a day subsequent to the first day of Term; and it is contended that a judgment upon a declaration, which on the face of the record appears to have been filed on a particular day, cannot relate to the first day of Term, or farther back than the day mentioned in the declaration. There can be no doubt that in point of law all judgments are considered as having relation to the first day of Term. The authorities are uniform with the distinction noticed in Whittaker v. Whittaker, (8 B. & C. 768); Samuel v. Evans, (2 T. R. 569). That where the proceedings are in the Queen's Bench by bill, they relate to the first day of Term, but that where there is judgment on process by original, it relates to the first essoign day of Term. Thus, in Stanford v. Cooper, (Cro. Car. 102), a judgment was held to relate to the first essoign day, instead of to the first day of the full Term. That is a strong case, and shows the force given to a fiction of law, it being determined that even against a Statute solemnly acknowledged, the Court will give effect to the fiction of relation. A decree of this court is different, and in Morrice v. Bank of England, (3 P. Wms. 401, note F), the decree of the Court of Chancery being for a just debt, and having a real priority in point of time, not by fiction and relation to the first day of Term, was preferred in the order of payment to the judgments, and the executrix protected and indemnified in paying a due obedience to such decree. But, with regard to judgments, among themselves their relation to the first day of Term, even in this court, is settled by Robinson v. Tonge, (3 P. Wms. 397). The general doctrine is contained in the case of Bragner v. Longmead, (7 T. R. 20,) which decides "That a judgment signed in any part of the Term, or the subsequent vacation, relates back to the first day of the term, notwithstanding the death of the defendant before judgment actually signed." In that case Lord Kenyon says, "If we were now to consider for the first time, whether legal relations and legal fictions should be adopted, we would inquire into, and sift most minutely the foundations on which they could be supported, but it is now too late for us, sitting in a court of law in the eighteenth century, to consider whether or not that which has at all times been considered as law, should continue to be law now. In this case, we are bound by a current of authorities all speaking the same language." In Javil v. Wiltshire, (Willes, 428), a similar doctrine obtained when "the whole court were of opinion that the statute 29 Car. 2, c. 3, strengthens the case, for that statute was drawn by Lord C. J. Hale, and provided only for judgments affecting lands, in the case of purchasers, leaving them in all other cases to the course of the court, where, though entered after the death of the parties, they have relation to the first day of Term if signed in Term, if signed out of Term, to the first day of the preceding Term." The same doctrine is held in Doe v. Mogill, (1 H. & Bro. 396,) and Calvert v. Tomlin, (5 Bing. 1; 2 Moo. Paine, 1 S.C.) that the statute of frauds has no relation between creditors, it was passed only for the protection of purchasers. For the general doctrine there is ample and unvarying authority. But it is now contended that though this is so in general, yet if there appears on the record any date which shows that judgment could not have been actually recovered on the first day of term, the relation is only to the day which appears on the record, and this is said to be founded on the authority of a dictum of Lord C. J. Holt in 3 Salk. 212:—"A judgment shall have relation to the first day of the Term, as if it were given on that very day, unless there is a memorandum to the contrary, as where there is a continuance of the cause till another day in the same Term." It is important to observe that what the dictum mentions as having the effect of preventing relation to the first day of Term, is a continuance, which is the act of the court. In Miller v. Bradley (8 Mod. 190), it appears that a judgment was given on the last day of Term, and the plaintiff having issued a testatum ca. sa. on it, it was contended that that was irregular. But the court held—"This is a judgment of the first day of the Term in which it was obtained, by relation which is sufficient to ground a ca. sa., and by consequence a testatum ca. sa.; and if there is no difference between an action by bill and by original, it is regular. As to the continuances being carried on from one Term to another, no such thing appears on the record, so this execution is regular. It is true, if the continuances had been entered no execution could be prior to such entry; and so is the case Prince v. Haughton, and Dobson v. Bell." So the case before C. J. Holt, and the case 8 Mod., do not carry the exception farther than this, that if there be a continuance on record, the doctrine of relation will not operate to carry the judgment farther back than the day of the continuance. Huys v. Wright (Yelverton, 35) was an action on an award made in Easter Term, that the defendant should cease all actions against the plaintiff, and should release all demands. The breach assigned was, that the defendant had not ceased his action, but had prosecuted it, and afterwards obtained judgment against the plaintiff in the same Term. The defendant pleaded non assumpsit; on a motion in arrest of judgment, it was argued that there was no breach, because the judgment related to the first day of Term. The court at first admitted that, but afterwards said that the defendant had filed a pleading confessing that the judgment had been obtained after the award. In fact, they did not refer to the record of the original judgment, and held they could not look at it. Lord Mansfield, in Porchester v. Petrie (3 Doug. 274), seems to have mistaken Hynde's case (4 co. 70 b.), which appears to have been the same in principle as Huys v. Wright, there the party having demurred to a pleading which alleged that the enrollment of a deed had occurred after a fine had been levied, and the court held that the demurrer admitted that fact. In Porchester v. Petrie, the question did not arise. In Swan v. Broome (3 Bur. 1595), a recovery was questioned on this ground: the return day of the writ of summons happened to be on a Sunday, on which day the tenant died; and the court held, that as it appeared by the record that the return day was Sunday, on which day judgment could not be given, and as the judgment could not relate to a previous day, the recovery was bad. All that is in conformity with the doctrine of relation, and the language of the Statute of Frauds, "that judgments of the King's Courts at Dublin do many times relate to the first day of the Term whereof they are entered, or to the day of the return of the original, or filing the bill" does not distinguish between the Exchequer and the other King's Courts. Now, the question is, whether there is anything in the practice of the Court of Exchequer to introduce a distinction between the judgments of that court and those of any other. I may say that no such distinction has ever yet been acted on. There cannot be found any case in which there is the slightest allusion to the doctrine, that judgments in the Exchequer relate, not to the first day of the Term, but to the day on which the party came there. What is there to prevent the relation? Only that the party filed the bill on a particular day; the declaration is entitled generally, and there is nothing to shew that the party was not in court the whole Term. In Dobson v. Bell (2 Lev. 176), "Trover was laid the first day of Easter Term, and the declaration was generally of the same Term. Whereupon after verdict pro quer, this matter was moved in arrest of judgment; but upon making it appear that the bill was filed, and the declaration also delivered, both after the 20th day of April, the judgment was entered for the plaintiff without any amendment, though the declaration, being general, relates to the first day of Term, yet the bill, being filed at a day after, all relates to the filing of the bill by the course of the court; of which course, if error be brought, the court where the error is brought will take notice as to the customs of this court." Now, in the Court of Exchequer, what more is done than that you may file a declaration entitled generally of the Term. The course to be taken on warrants of attorney is pointed out in the books of practice. Howard, Ex. Pleas Pract. 302, says, "When the person who gives a warrant of attorney to confess judgment, dies before judgment is entered, if he dies in the vacation time, and the warrant of attorney was executed before the vacation, judgment may be entered any day before the essoign day of the ensuing Term, as of the preceding term, by making the day of appearance on any day in the preceding Term, subsequent to the day on which the warrant was executed." It seems, therefore, that the day of appearance entered is in the discretion of the officer of the court. It is not like a continuance, an act of the court appearing on the record. It is now too late to hold that judgments do not relate to the first day of the Term in which they were obtained, and it would introduce a novelty in practice. The Exchequer does just what the other courts do, as I have pointed out, and therefore, upon these grounds this exception must be allowed.

ROLLS COURT.

BLAKE v. FFRENCH.

FULTON, Petitioner, FARRAN, Respondent.—Nos. 13.

3 & 4 Vic. c. 105, s. 23.

Judgment Creditor—Petition—Charging Order—Payment of Money.

Where a charging order has been obtained by a judgment creditor upon funds reported to a creditor in a cause, the Court, where there is no controversy as to the right of the petitioner to the fund charged, will direct the fund to be paid to him without a bill being filed.

Seemly, that where there is a conflict of rights, the fund will not be transferred upon motion.

This was an application that two sums of stock, which, by an order bearing date the 19th day of February, 1848, and made in the cause of Blake v. Ffrench, had been transferred to the separate credit of the respondent Farran, a reported creditor in the cause of Blake v. Ffrench, might be paid to Fulton, the petitioner. And, by an order bearing date the 18th of January, 1848, made in the matter of Fulton, petitioner, and Farran, respondent, the interest of the respondent in the fund standing to the credit of the cause of Blake v. Ffrench, was under the 3 & 4 Vic. c. 105, charged with payment of two judgment debts due to the petitioner, and upon the 12th of February, 1848, the charging order was made absolute.

By the said order of the 19th of February, 1848, made in the cause of Blake v. Ffrench, the sum of £977. 2s. 7d. was directed to be transferred to the separate credit of William Farran, the respondent.

Hamilton Smythe.—The question in this case is, whether the petitioner is entitled to have this sum paid out six months after the charging order was made absolute, without filing a bill. By the 3 & 4 Vic. c. 105, s. 23, it is enacted that "such charging order shall entitle the judgment creditor to all such remedies as he would have been entitled to if such charge had been made in his favour by the judgment creditor." The language of the act gives the party the same benefit as if the fund had been charged in his favour by the owner. The case of Burke v. Burke, (7 I. E. R. 174,) is directly in point, and the order to transfer the fund was there made upon motion. Whitfield v. Prickett, (13 Sim. 259,) is not an authority against this motion. That and the other English cases all proceed on the practice, that it is not the course to pay out money to an assignee of a fund upon motion, unless by consent of the assignor. In this country, however, the practice is different, for upon an ordinary motion to pay out funds pursuant to an allocation report, it is usual to entertain motions upon behalf of persons to whom funds have been assigned, or in whose favour they have been charged. In the case of —, petitioners, and Bridgeman respondent, unreported, upon application by the judgment creditor (of a party who was tenant for life of a fund in court) for a receiver, or to have the dividends paid out, it was ordered that the dividend should be paid to the judgment creditor in satisfaction of his demand.

Richard Armstrong contra.—It must be admitted that this court has been in the habit of substituting equitable assignees of a fund, and making the payment to them of monies allocated to their assignor; but this practice appears not to be warranted except by consent. The practical inconvenience of parting with a fund, in which parties may be interested who are not before the court, is manifest, and a motion should not be elevated into a hearing of a cause, and a settling of rights and priorities of different claimants to a fund. When Burke v. Burke was decided in 1844, Whitfield v. Prickett was not before the profession, the report not having been published till 1846, and the same observation applies to the manuscript case cited. In Westall v. Leslie reported in a note to Neate v. Pink (15 Sim. 453), in which a lady entitled to an annuity which the receiver in the cause was directed to pay her, charged it with the repayment of £100 lent to her by one Carter, who presented a petition, praying that the receiver might be directed to pay him £100 out of the moneys coming to the annuitant. The Vice-Chancellor held, that as the lady appeared by counsel and opposed the petition, he had no jurisdiction to make the order; but that a bill must be filed. Newton v. Askew (12 Jur. 766), shews that Whitfield v. Prickett is law in England, and supports Lord Langdale's reading upon the corresponding statute in England, and the jurisdiction under it. In the present case, the petitioner is under obligation to other persons to pay them out of the fund now sought for.

THE MASTER OF THE ROLLS.—In this case, on the 18th of January last, a conditional order had been made, that certain stock, which has subsequently been transferred to the separate credit of the respondent, by an order made in the cause of Blake v. Ffrench, should, under the 23rd section of the 3rd & 4th Vic. cap. 105, stand charged with the petitioner's demands. This conditional order was made absolute on the 12th of February following, the Master having, in the interim, made his allocation report, dated the 24th of January. I may here remark, according to a case decided in the Court of Exchequer, the conditional order was irregular; for that court will not make a charging order before an allocation report has been made, and I think that practice is convenient, but it does not apply in this case, for there has been no application to set aside the order, though more than six months have elapsed since the charging order. In this case, the owner is interested in supporting the order, for a much larger sum is due to Mr. Fulton than the sum sought to be transferred; but it is said, I have no jurisdiction under the act to order this stock to be transferred, and that a bill must be filed for that purpose. The cases of Whitfield v. Prickett and Newton v. Askew, have been cited in support of that position. At page 768 of the report of Newton v. Askew, in 12 Jurist, Lord Langdale expresses himself of opinion, that the charging order is, in effect, a stop order, and nothing more. When the late Master of the Rolls decided the case of Burke v. Burke, the case of Whitfield v. Prickett was not before him, not being then reported, and the difficulty I have in this case is to reconcile these decisions. I think, however, the best course to adopt is to follow the decision of the late Master of the Rolls in Burke v. Burke; and, on considering the 23d section of the act, I have no doubt he was right, for in this court I am constantly asked, on cross motions, to make sub-allocations. Now, if this be not the habit in England, the cases are quite reconcilable. It is argued I am not to give this charging order more effect than if the person himself charged it, but am I to hold that it is not to have as much effect? There is no question to be decided between the parties in a suit, if it were instituted, there being no controversy about rights. I think it is better for the suitors of this court to abide by the practice as laid down in Burke v. Burke, and if the practice of sub-allocation be not the practice in England, the cases are quite reconcilable. I wish it to be distinctly understood that if there were a conflict of rights, I do not decide that a bill should not be filed; and I do not wish that this case should be made a precedent for a similar rule, under such a state of facts.

Order in terms of the notice.

EQUITY EXCHEQUER.—TRINITY TERM.

PUTLAND v. EVANS.—Dec. 5.

Personal Interrogatories, 115th Order.

The Court will not, in general, interfere with the discretion given by the 115th Order to the Remembrancer, as to the examination of parties by interrogatories in the office.

Mars moved that the defendant, Evans, might be at liberty to examine Mrs. Putland, the plaintiff, on personal interrogatories, notwithstanding the refusal of the officer to permit it. It appeared that the Remembrancer in the office had named a day up to which Mrs. Putland might be examined in the manner now applied for, and that the defendant had allowed that time to pass. It was further sworn that her evidence was material, and could not be replaced by that of any other person.

Longfield, Q. C.—The Remembrancer knows all the facts, and has refused this application, and the order gives no appeal to the court. The court certainly ought not to interfere, as it was evidently intended that the Remembrancer's decision on such points should be final.

RICHARDS, B.—This is an appeal from the decision of the Remembrancer, upon a matter purely within his jurisdiction and discretion. The general rule provides that the Remembrancer shall have power, at any time he sees fit, to direct such an examination as the present; apparently intending that the matter should remain constantly in his discretion. I do not say that we should not have jurisdiction to interfere under very special circumstances, but, before we so interfere, we must see very special circumstances. In this case we have not heard sufficient to induce us to interfere with the officer, the more especially as he is intimately acquainted with the cause, and can order the examination at any time he sees fit.

HORT v. BLOOMFIELD.—Dec. 17.

Practice—Liberty to Creditors not parties to suit to come in and prove. Clarke v. Jessop, (10 I. E. R. 40), dissented from.

After the report and final decree in the cause, the court will not, at the instance of the plaintiff, grant liberty to judgment creditors to come in and prove their demands, with permission to object to the accounts and proceedings already had, unless upon consent of all the creditors.

Robert Johnston, on behalf of the plaintiff, moved, that notwithstanding the report and final decree in this cause, certain judgment creditors of the defendant and inheritor of the lands decreed to be sold might be at liberty to prove their demands. The notice was in the precise terms of that in the case of Clarke v. Jessop and others (10 I. Eq. R. 40). The bill had been filed previously to the new rules, and the various judgment creditors had not been made parties. Neither the judgment creditors, nor any of the defendants in the cause, appeared on the motion. Counsel relied on the authority of Clarke v. Jessop (10 I. Eq. R. 40), and Gillespie v. Alexander (3 Russ. 136), referred to in the judgment in that case.

LEFROY, B.—With great respect to his honour the Master of the Rolls, the case of Gillespie v. Alexander cannot be relied upon as warranting his ruling in Clarke v. Jessop. The effect of the decree in the case before Lord Eldon was—not to undo any thing that had been done in the previous stage of the suit, but to leave matters in status quo—but here non constat, that some of these creditors may not prove charges prior to those already reported, and thus unsettle the entire proceedings. To grant this application, would be to make a decree upon motions. Perhaps, if all the judgment creditors mentioned in your notice enter into a consent to be bound by the previous proceedings, I may grant the liberty you seek, but at present I say no rule.*

COMMON PLEAS.—MICHAELMAS TERM.

IN RE BOOTH AND OTHERS.—Nov. 24th.

Arbitration—Costs of Deed of Submission.

Where a matter is referred to arbitration, and complicated matters of law and equity are involved therein, fees to counsel for perusing and settling the deed of submission will be allowed on the taxation of costs between party and party.

In this case, Coates, on the 8th November last, had applied for an order that certain items in a bill of costs, disallowed by the taxing officer on taxation, should be allowed, or that the officer should be directed to review his taxation; and the court then directed the case to stand over, and that the taxing officer should report on what grounds he had disallowed the items.

It appeared that all matters in dispute between the parties had been referred to arbitration, and that the arbitrators had awarded in favour of the applicant, with costs; and, on taxation, the officer had disallowed certain items relative to the perusal by counsel of the draft deed of submission.

The taxing officer now made his report, as to his reasons for disallowing the above items, which was as follows:—"I disallowed in the said costs the items entitled 'draft instructions for counsel to settle deed, 5s. 4d.; attending counsel therewith, 6s. 8d.; paid his fee, £2 2s.;' because it is contrary to the practice in the taxation of law costs, between party and party, to allow any fee to counsel for the settling of a deed, the reason of which I apprehend to be, that a deed is not a document that requires the signature of counsel to give it effect. For instance, no fee was ever allowed to counsel in the taxation of costs, between party and party, for drawing a fine or recovery, or a deed to declare uses thereof, because the signature of counsel was not required to those documents. So in England, where the signature of counsel is not required to declarations, or to the plea of the general issue, no fee is allowed to him for drawing the pleadings; but if the pleadings be special, as a replication, or demurrer, &c., the signature of counsel is necessary before the pleading is filed, and then a fee is always allowed to counsel. In Ireland, where, by a rule of all the law courts, every pleading must be signed by counsel before it can be filed, a fee is always allowed to him for drawing declaration, the plea of the general issue, and every other pleading."

* Pigot, C.B., Pennycuik and Richards, B.B., were absent.

Coates now, with R. Armstrong, contended that the items ought to be allowed,—that the reasons assigned in the officer's report for disallowing them were fallacious,—that the deeds mentioned in the report meant deeds of conveyance, as the instances cited—viz., fines and recoveries, and deeds to declare their uses—and thus plainly shewed that the English practice was incorrectly stated; and although many pleadings in England do not require the signature of counsel, fees to special pleaders, gentlemen practising under the bar, were always allowed on taxation,—that the deed of submission was not a deed of a conveyance, but in the nature of a record, the foundation of the proceedings, and it was necessary it should be perused and settled by counsel, in order to the proper adjustment of the rights of the parties,—that serious questions of law and equity were in dispute between the parties to this arbitration, and that the deed of submission required to be drawn up with great care and accuracy,—that it was not within the province of a solicitor, however skilful, to settle such a deed on his own responsibility, and that he would not have been justified in so doing.

Fitzgibbon, Q. C., contra, resisted the application, and insisted that the items were properly disallowed,—that the deed of submission was not special, but of the ordinary character of deeds of this kind,—that it was unnecessarily prolix, the facts of the case not requiring any special deed, and that it might have been drawn in a much more concise form,—that if one party chose to employ counsel to settle his deeds, it was done for his own satisfaction, and that they had no reason for burdening others with costs unnecessarily incurred.

PER CURIAM.—This draft deed is not a mere formal copy to be signed by counsel, but appears to have been carefully and laboriously altered, and the other parties acquiesced in this deed. We think it right to allow the fee for perusing it, but in doing so we do not mean to interfere with the general rule set out in the Master's report.

No costs to either party.

PRENDERGAST v. LORD GLENGALL.—Nov. 25.

Sheriff—Informal return of Fi. Fa.

To a writ of fi. fa. the Sheriff returned the delivery of prior writs to his predecessor and to himself; seizure by the predecessor, in whose hands goods remained for want of buyers; and that there were not any other goods and chattels within his bailiwick at the time of the delivery to him of the said annexed writ, or at any time since, whereout he could levy the sum mentioned, or any part thereof. Held a bad return.

J. B. Murphy, on behalf of the plaintiff, applied for an order that the Sheriff for the county of Tipperary should amend his return to a writ of fi. fa., on the ground that the said return was irregular, informal, and defective. The Fi. Fa. was delivered to the sheriff on the 23d of October, 1848, returnable on the 2d of November, and was indorsed to levy the sum of £1066. 11s. 4d., besides damages and costs. To this the sheriff made a return, stating that on the 15th of February, 1847, and before the delivery to him of the said writ, a certain other writ of Fi. Fa. against the goods and chattels of the same defendant, at the suit of the Governor and Company of the Bank of Ireland, marked for the sum of £1,119, and returnable on the 15th of April, then next, was delivered to Lord Suidale, his predecessor in office. That on the 12th of November, 1847, and before the delivery to him of the said writ, a certain other writ of Fi. Fa. against the goods and chattels of the same defendant, at the suit of Timothy George Adams, marked for the sum of £667. 10s. 3d., and returnable on the 19th day of November then next, was also delivered to his said predecessor. That on the 31st of December, 1847, and before the delivery to him of the said writ, a certain other writ of Fi. Fa. against the goods and chattels of the same defendant, at the suit of John R. Byrne, marked for the sum of £381. 12s. 10d., and returnable on the 11th day of January then next, was also delivered to his said predecessor. And that on the 6th of January, 1848, and before the delivery to him of the said writ, a certain other writ of Fi. Fa. against the goods and chattels of the same defendant, at the suit of Hugh O'Callaghan, marked for the sum of £870. 2s. 5d., and returnable on the 11th of January then next, was also delivered to his said predecessor. That six other writs of Fi. Fa., at the suit of other persons, against the same defendant, had been delivered to himself before the delivery of this writ, and that on the 23d of October, 1848, the writ at the suit of the present plaintiff was delivered to him, and the return then concluded as follows:—"and I further certify that by virtue of the said four first-mentioned writs, and according to the priorities thereof respectively, the said Richard, Lord Suidale, my predecessor in office, took and seized the following goods and chattels of the said Earl, to wit, 200 sheep, 20 cows, 14 horses, 3 carriages and harness, and a quantity of household furniture, of the amount and value of £800, and that these goods and chattels remained in the hands of the said Richard, Lord Suidale, for want of buyers, and that the said Earl had not any other goods or chattels within any bailiwick at the time of the delivery to me of the said annexed writ, or at any time since, whereout I could levy the sum therein mentioned, or any part thereof." This return is defective; it is argumentative and uncertain. It should have stated in positive terms that the defendant either had, or had not, goods in the sheriff's bailiwick. From this return it cannot be concluded whether, in point of fact, there were any goods which the sheriff could have seized. If there were not any such goods, the return should have been nulla bona. If there were any such, he should have seized them, so as to have given us an opportunity of issuing a venditioni exponas, selling the goods, and out of the proceeds paying off the demands on other writs, according to their priorities. This return is clearly bad according to the authorities. In Lorick v. Crowder, (8 B. & C. 132), it was decided, first, that goods seized by a former sheriff, and not sold after considerable delay, should have been seized by the subsequent sheriff, under a writ subsequently delivered to him; secondly, that where the second writ was delivered to the sheriff, and he found that the officers of the former sheriff were in possession, it became his duty to inquire by what authority they were there; and thirdly, that the possession of the former sheriff is no more than the possession of any third person under a bill of sale. And in the same case, Bayley, J. says, "There cannot be any doubt that these goods were liable to the plaintiff's execution. Where a plaintiff sues out execution, and seizes under a fiery facias the goods of his debtor, and suffers them to remain long in the debtor's hands, a subsequent execution creditor may treat the goods as the goods of the debtor. The only question is, does the change of sheriff make any difference? and then he proceeds to say that the second sheriff should have asked to see the warrant, and when he found from its date that there had been gross delay, he should have treated the first execution as fraudulent and void, and have seized the goods. Payne v. Drewe, (4 East, 522,) is also an authority for this point. Then there is no difficulty as to the form of the action. In Chambers v. Coleman, (9 Dow. P. C. 588,) where the circumstances were similar to those of the present case, the sheriff having recited in order a number of writs previously delivered to him against the same defendant returned, that by virtue of the said several writs, and according to the priority thereof, he had seized the goods and chattels of the defendant, and that they remained in his hands for want of buyers. The sheriff here might have adopted that form, but, at all events, the present return is informal and bad.

D. Lynch and J. Pennefather, contra.—This return is perfectly good and valid, and the only one which the sheriff could have made under the circumstances, and it is the one which is most for the benefit of the execution creditor. The case before Lord Tenterden was the case of a false return. The question there, was not whether the return was good, but whether it was bonâ fide. Here there is no allegation that the return is false, and, if it be true, it is good on the face of it. The case cited from 9 Dow. is an authority for the present return. The return there was identical with the present return. Under all the rules of this court, the return must be taken to be true. (Doherty, C. J.—That is the very ground for this application that the return being true is informal.) No other return could be here made. The legal effect of this return is the same as if the Sheriff had returned that he himself had seized the goods under the former writs, and that they were in his hands for want of buyers. And the plaintiff cannot be prejudiced in any way, for it appears that there is only £800 worth of goods, and that there are prior executions to the amount of £3000. This return is fully warranted by precedent.

PER CURIAM.—The authority of the case before

Lord Tenterden is too strong for you to struggle against. The sheriff must amend his return.

Order granted.

EXCHEQUER OF PLEAS.

ASSIGNEE OF BROWNE v. BROWNE—Nov. 5 & 34.
Practice—Assignment of judgment by Assignee of Insolvent—Conusee.

Where a judgment, the property of an insolvent conusee, is vested in his assignee under the Insolvency Act, the court will direct an assignee by the latter to a third party, to be enrolled under the judgment having been revived in the name of the assignee of the insolvent.

W. Brerston moved that the officer should be at liberty to enrol the memorial assignment of a judgment under the following circumstances. The conusee of the judgment had become insolvent, and the assignee had contracted to assign the judgment, but the officer refused to enrol the memorial assignment without the special order of the Court.

LEFROY, B. having intimated a doubt, whether the proper course would not have been for the insolvent's assignee to revive the judgment, and thus bring himself into privity with the record, directed the case to stand for the full Court.

Nov. 24.—Brerston.—The effect of the Insolvency Act is to vest the legal and equitable estate in the judgment in the assignee, and the act gives him a perfect a legal title as any revival by ipse assignee could confer. Where a judgment was assigned to new trustees under 1 W. 4, c. 60, the court directed a memorial of the assignment to be enrolled. Burrowes v. Hogan, (2 I. L. R. 369). Conusee also cited Collis v. Mahon, (Jones, 132, S. C. 3 I. R. 3 s. 144,) in which case the Bankers' Act, 34 G. 3, c. 14, was held to vest a judgment legally in the trustees, without a memorial enrolled. Fortenue v. McKee, (1 J. & Sy. 347-8.) The uniform practice in the Queen's Bench is to enrol such assignment as a matter of course.

FIGOT, C. B.—My difficulty at first arose from the terms of the second section of 9 Geo. 2, c. 3, which seems to contemplate that assignee only—who have become such by memorials duly enrolled—should have execution, and the other remedies on the judgment. The terms of the fourth section, however, seem sufficiently large to let in the present case, and those referred to in argument. We shall therefore make the order, the memorial to recite the vesting order.

BALLINA UNION v. WALSH—Nov. 22-23.

Pleading—Tender.

A declaration in debt contained four counts, plain of tenders to the first three, on which issues were taken and found for the defendant; to the fourth count was pleaded:—"As to the said sum in the last count of the declaration mentioned remain of the said several sums above demanded over and above the said sums in the first, second, and third counts mentioned, the said defendant says he does not owe the same, or any part thereof, to the said plaintiffs, in manner and form as the said plaintiffs have thereof," &c. On issue on this plea, held that plaintiffs should have shewn debt beyond the sums contained in the first three counts.

Where defendant told plaintiff's agent that an amount more than sufficient to cover the demand was in a desk in the room, and desired his son to hand the amount to the agent; and the son rose to do so, but was interrupted by the agent, saying, that he would not at all take the money, as a third person had forbidden him to do so. This refusal dispensed with the necessity of producing the money, either in number or specie.

Held also, that evidence of such a transaction was sufficient to support a plea of tender.

Qu. Whether the consent of the Poor Law Commissioners to an action for rates, as required by 6 & 7 Vic. c. 92, s. 2, should be given under their seal; and if so, whether a defendant can avail himself of the non-production of such sealed assent at the trial.

Qu. Whether a tender of rates to a collector on a Sunday is a good tender. Semble, a tender to a rate collector, whose appointment continues, binds the guardians, though they may have expressly ordered him not to take the money.

This was an action of debt brought by the Guardians of the Ballina Union against the defendant, as immediate lessor of certain tenements within the union, of less annual value than £4. There were four counts in the declaration, of which the first was for sums due out of the division of Crossmolina; the second and third for two separate rates in the division of Binghamstown; and the fourth for £50 for rates due out of lands in the union generally. The bill of particulars claimed £43 10s. To the first, second, and third counts, the defendant pleaded separate pleas of tender; and to the fourth, "as to the sum of £50 in the fourth count mentioned, residue of the said several sums above demanded, over and above the said sums in the first, second, and third counts in said declaration mentioned, the said defendant says he does not owe the same, or any part thereof," &c. Issue was joined upon all the pleas; and the defendant paid into court £43 10s, on the pleas of tender, being the total amount claimed by the bill of particulars. The case was tried before the Chief Baron, at the sittings after Trinity Term, 1848; and on the issue upon the fourth count, the plaintiff proved an offer by the defendant to pay a sum of money on account of rates: being, in fact, the money claimed by the first count of the declaration. On the issues taken on the second and third pleas of tender, the defendant proved that he and his son had met the rate collector in an hotel, who, upon being questioned, said that he would not receive rate from the defendant, having been instructed by the attorney of the guardians not to do so; that the defendant rejoined, the rate due from him must be under £50, and that there was that sum in a desk of his in the room, from which he desired his son to take the money and give it to the collector, who could afterwards account for it; that the defendant's son thereupon was proceeding towards the desk, but the collector said he could not at all take the money; whereupon the defendant's son sat down without producing it. It further appeared, that on the next day, which was Sunday, a regular tender was made to the collector, who refused the money, on the grounds he had previously assigned. A document under the hand of the secretary to the Poor Law Commissioners was also admitted in evidence, authorizing the bringing of the action; and also a draft order to the same effect, initialed by the Chief Commissioner. To this evidence the defendant objected, it not being under the seal of the Poor Law Commissioners. The Chief Baron, in his charge, left it to the jury to say whether the tenders put in issue had been proved, stating to them his opinion as to what was a legal tender. He also told them to find for the plaintiff on the fourth count, if they should be of opinion that an admission of rates being due had been made by the defendant. To the former part of his Lordship's charge the plaintiff objected, and to the latter the defendant; but his lordship refused to vary his charge. The jury found for the defendant on the pleas of tender, and for the plaintiff on the fourth count of the declaration. And now, pursuant to liberty reserved by the learned Judge, the objections on both sides came on to be argued.

Joseph Reeves, for the defendant.—We contend, first, that the plaintiff has not shewn the assent of the Poor Law Commissioners to this action, as he was bound to do by the 6 & 7 Vic. c. 92, s. 2. The Commissioners of the Poor Law are clearly a corporation (10 & 11 Vic. c. 99, s. 10), and, as such, can do no act without seal (Steph. Comm. vol. 3, p. 126); Mayor of Ludlow v. Charlton, (6 M. & W. 815). Besides, the 10 & 11 Vic. c. 90, s. 11, expressly provides, that all rules, regulations, and orders shall be made by them under their seal. So likewise does 1 & 2 Vic. c. 56, s. 121. (Pennfather, B.—What right has the defendant to avail himself of such a defence, supposing the seal to be necessary? Can you distinguish between this case and that of an action brought by assignees of a bankrupt, without consent of the creditors, where it is settled the defendant has no right to complain?) (Lefroy, B.—The object of the clause is, to protect the public from the waste of their funds in costs, and not to protect parties who do not pay their rates.) The consent is made necessary for the protection of the ratepayers, of whom the defendant is one; and also for the protection of landlords, to prevent their being harassed with unnecessary and expensive litigation in the superior courts, when they might be sued by civil bill. The cases, therefore, are not analogous. Secondly, we object, that the direction of the Lord Chief Baron on the fourth count was wrong; for that he should have required the plaintiff to prove a demand beyond the sum claimed in the first, second, and third counts, and should have told the jury not to find for the plaintiff unless they thought his admission referred to a sum different from those mentioned in them, Comper v. Hicks (7 T. R. 727); Taylor v. Cole (3 T. R. 296); Churchill v. Day (3 Man. & Ry. 71; 1 Chitty, 447; Bul. N. P. 17a). As to the objections raised to the evidence of the tenders in this case, the defendant is clearly entitled to retain his verdict. We proved a good tender on Sunday, and the 7 Wm. 3, c. 17, does not apply to such persons as a collector of poor rates, Drury v. De-fontaine (1 Taunt. 181); Sandiman v. Branch (7 B. & C. 96); Rex v. Whitnash (7 B. & C. 596); Scarfe v. Morgan (4 M. & W. 270). Even if the tender was bad, as being made on a Sunday, the collector should have objected on that specific ground; and by not doing so at the time, he has waived the objection, Bull v. Parker (2 Doed. N. S. 345); Polglass v. Oliver (2 Cr. & Jer. 15). At all events, the tender proved on Saturday is quite a sufficient one.

Whiteside, Q.C., with Otway, for the plaintiffs.—The seal of the Commissioners is not absolutely necessary, either by the statutes or from their being a corporation, Mayor of Thetford's case (3 Salk. 103); Smith v. Birmingham Gas Company (1 Ad. & El. 526). And even if it were, the defendant has no right to take advantage of its absence. As regards the plea to the fourth count, the principle contended for by the defendant may be true, when pleas going to the cause of action have been pleaded to the other counts; but it does not apply where the pleas are merely in mitigation of damages, as is the case with a plea of tender. Here we allege that there is, in reality, only evidence of a dispensation with a tender, which should have been pleaded. Such was the plea in Douglas v. Patrick (3 T. R. 684). The cases on bills of exchange, in which notice is necessary, are precisely in point; and in them an allegation of notice will not be proved by evidence of a dispensation with notice, Burgh v. Legge (5 M. & W. 418). (Pennfather, B.—The difference is, that the plea of tender puts in issue an offer of payment; and if the formality be dispensed with, may be proved by any evidence shewing that fact.) (Lefroy, B.—Precisely so; for in those cases you mention, they relied on notice in pleading, and proved a waiver of it; whereas here they plead a tender, which the dispensation with the mere formality enables them to prove.) It appears from the evidence that at the time the supposed tender was made, the collector had been, so far as that sum was concerned, discharged from his office of agent to the guardians, and they, therefore, were not bound by the transaction with him. (Pigot, C.B.—The collector was not dismissed, but was ordered to refuse; is not, therefore, his refusal the refusal of the guardians?) Counsel relied on Dickinson v. Shee (4 Es. 67); Thomas v. Evans (10 East. 101); Phillips v. Innes (4 Cl. & Finn. 234); Krans v. Arnold (7 Moore, 59); Betterbie v. Davis (3 Camp. 70).

Richard Reeves, for defendant, was not called on.

Pigot, C.B.—We are all of opinion that the verdict for the defendant, on the pleas of tender, should stand; and that the verdict for the plaintiff, on the fourth count, should be set aside. As regards the pleas of tender, a great deal has been urged upon us, and we have been asked to reconsider what we are inclined to hold as settled law; viz., that a party, to whom money is offered, may dispense with the actual production of it, or the offer of the precise amount, and by such dispensation make an otherwise informal tender good. Such being the law, the evidence that went to the jury in this case was quite sufficient to show that there had been an offer by the defendant, and such a waiver by the collector, of the actual production of the money, as we hold to be sufficient evidence to support a plea of tender. But, then, it is questioned, whether the authority of the collector was not at an end at the time of the tender, and that therefore the tender to the collector does not affect the guardians, there being no connexion between him and them; and it has also been argued that the tender should have been made in the collector's office. But even if the guardians had duly attempted to withdraw the authority of the collector, I should have found some difficulty in allowing that such withdrawal would be sufficient to vitiate the present tender. It would lead, I think, to much collusive and oppressive conduct if it were allowed that the collector might receive from one person, and reject from another. It is a mistake to suppose that the collector is an agent of the guardians, voluntarily retained, and whom they may direct and order at their pleasure. The collector is appointed by virtue of the act of parliament, and derives his authority and functions from its enactments, more than from any orders or directions of the guardians; and it is his duty, at all reasonable times, to receive payment of the rates, whether in his office or not. It would be most dangerous to say, that if the guardians choose to receive money from one person, and not from another, that a tender by the ratepayer to the person lawfully authorized to receive shall not protect him from the consequences of such wrongful conduct. Here, however, there is no sufficient evidence of a withdrawal of the collector's authority. The guardians have not intimated their order, as far as appears; and no direction from attorney, or other person, would be sufficient to interfere with the collector. There has, therefore, been no withdrawal of authority shown; and, even if there had been, I should be unwilling to allow it to vitiate the tender. As for the tender on Sunday, we do not think it necessary to consider it, as the jury have found the tender on Saturday to have been good, but we do not wish to encourage money dealings on the Sabbath. As regards the question on the fourth count, and the plea to it, we are of opinion, upon the cases cited, that the plaintiff should have shewn a demand beyond what was covered by the pleas of tender, and that, not having done so, the verdict on it must be for the defendant. Upon the question as to the assent of the commissioners being under seal, the case being decided for the defendant on the other points, it becomes unnecessary for us now to form a determination.

RICHARDS, B.—I concur in the judgment of my Lord Chief Baron. Without, however, intending to say, that, if the authority of the collector to receive rates had been properly and lawfully withdrawn by the Board of Guardians, a tender to him would then be valid.

LEFROY, B.—Without doubt, if the authority of the collector were properly and legally withdrawn, and due notice of such withdrawal given, a subsequent tender to the collector would be ineffectual; but, until then, it would be extremely inconvenient and mischievous, as my Lord Chief Baron has remarked to deprive the public of the right of paying to him.

Verdict for defendant.

COURT OF CHANCERY.

MURRAY v. RICHARDSON.—Dec. 11, 12.

Will—Codicil—Revocation.

A. by his will, bequeathed, one-seventh of a fund to B. for life, with remainder to her daughter. The residue of the fund was bequeathed to the sisters of B. for life, with remainder to their children, with an executory limitation over in default of children, in the nature of cross remainders. By his codicil, A. revoked the bequest of one-seventh to B. and her daughter, and declared his intention that they should take no benefit under his will. Held a revocation of the interest of B. under the executory limitation.

THIS case came before the court on exceptions to the Master's report. The question raised by those exceptions was, whether an executory devise, in the nature of cross remainders, was revoked by a codicil. The Master reported that it was revoked, and to this report exceptions were taken. The will (which was very verbose) is, so far as material, sufficiently set out in the judgment of the Lord Chancellor.

John Brooke, Q.C., with Gresson, for the exceptions, referred to Doodem Dearle v. Hicks (8 Bing. 475, S. C. 1 Moo. & Scott, 759); Francis v. Collier (4 Russ. 333); Roach v. Haynes (6 Ves. 153); Darley v. Langworthy (3 Bro. P. C. 359).

Gilmore Q. C., with Hughes, Q.C., and J. C. Lowry, for the report cited Persse v. Daly (9 I. E. R. 506); Murray v. Johnson (3 Dru. & Warr. 143); Read v. Backhouse (2 Russ. & My. 546).

Gresson, in reply, cited Doe Dem Murch v. Marchmont (6 Man. & Gr. 813); Newman v. Lade (1 Yo. & Col. C. 680); Beaucherk v. Meade (2 Atk. 167).

Dec. 12th.—LORD CHANCELLOR—I have read through the will and codicil, and the case seems one of some difficulty. Both documents seem to have been prepared with great care, and it is impossible to mistake the intention of the testator. He devised his leasehold lands to trustees therein named, to hold upon trust, to pay certain portions to some of his sisters (he having then six) and the children of a deceased sister, Mary Lawson; he then disposes of the surplus of the rents and profits, but appears to contemplate that disposition continuing only during the time those portions shall remain unpaid; and, after their payment, he bequeaths the rents and profits as follows:—"One-seventh part thereof to the said Charity Ashmore, during her natural life, and from and after her decease, to such child or children, male or female, lawfully to be begotten, as she shall leave at the time of her death, share and share alike, if more than one, his, her, or their heirs, executors, administrators, or assigns. One other seventh part to the said Amelia Johnston for and during her natural life, and from and after her decease, then to the child or children, male or female, of the said Amelia Johnston, lawfully begotten, whom she shall leave at the time of her death, share and share alike, if more than one, and to his, her, or their heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns. Another seventh part thereof to the said Elizabeth Walker for and during her natural life, and from and after her decease then to her present daughter, Eliza Walker, her heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns." The disposition to her is thus different from the disposition to the other sisters, giving an interest to the daughter nominatim, while the shares of the other sisters are given to their children generally. However, this difference appears to be immaterial. He then gives three other sevenths to his sisters Catherine, Anne, and Sarah, in the same manner as those given to his sister Amelia, and the remaining seventh to the "child, or children, of the said Mary Lawson who should be living at the death of the said testator, share and share alike, if more than one of such issue, and to their executors, administrators, and assigns; and if there should be but one of such issue living at the death of the said testator, and if but one child, the seventh remaining portion to that one child, her or his heirs, executors, administrators, or assigns." Then comes the following clause of accruer as it is called, being an executory devise of the property, "and in case of the death of any of my last-mentioned sisters without leaving a child, or children, living at her death, it is my will and intention that the share or proportion of such sister, or sisters, so dying without any child living at her death shall go to and be received by the surviving sisters or sister, together with such child, or children, of the said Mary Lawson, who, if more than one, are all to be considered as one person, and to take but one person's share only, and which shares and proportions are to be vested in my surviving sisters and the children of the said Mary Lawson, for such estates, and with such remainders, and subject to such limitations over in default of a child, or children, as are herein before specified, with respect to the original seventh part so devised to them respectively; and in case of the death of any of the children of the said Mary Lawson, without issue, then his, her, or their share of the said part shall be equally divided among the survivors of them." He then charges his lands with an annuity of £60 for the said Eliza Walker, the elder, and a sum of £1,000 to Eliza Walker, the younger, in satisfaction of some trust money of theirs misapplied by him; and in case all his sisters, and their children, should die without issue, he devises all the lands to his right heirs; then, after some bequests, he devises all the residue of his property to such of his sisters as should be living at his decease, and the children of any of his deceased sisters as should then be living, share and share alike, the children of such deceased sisters, if more than one, to be taken and considered as one person only, and to receive only one person's share. After this he makes a disposition with respect to two sums of £200 and £400, which he directs to be paid by John Blair and James Lawson, to entitle their families to the benefits thereby bequeathed them, which sums he orders to be applied in payment of his debts, or to be divided amongst his sisters. On this portion of the will there can be no question—the codicil creates the whole difficulty. There is no doubt of the intention; he considered that Mrs. Walker had disentitled herself to any benefit from him, and seems to have taken special care to exclude her from all such benefit. If he has failed, it is not from want of words, for two or three times in his codicil he has mentioned that intention. After reciting and confirming some part of his will, the testator proceeds—"Whereas, I have by my said will left and devised unto the said trustees named in the said will, certain lands, tenements, and premises therein mentioned, upon the trust in my said will mentioned, and upon this further trust, to permit and suffer my said sisters, Charity Ashmore, Amelia Johnson, Elizabeth Walker, Catherine Ashmore, Anne Ashmore, Sarah Blair, and the children of my sister Mary Lawson, which should be living at my death, to have and receive all the surplus of the rents, issues, and profits of my said lands, after paying and satisfying three sums of £36 yearly, mentioned in my said will, and exceeding the sum of £250, which make together the sum of £286, until by the means in my said will mentioned, the whole of the respective portions of my said sisters then living and unpaid, shall be fully paid and satisfied." "I now, by this my said codicil revoke, annul, and avoid the said devise or bequest, so made in favour of the said Eliza Walker, her portion having been heretofore paid, and her conduct towards me of late having forced me not only to revoke the said recited devise or bequest, made by my said will in her favour, but to withdraw all regard and natural affection which I have heretofore had for her." Can anything indicate more expressly the opinion of the maker of the codicil? The bequest above-mentioned was only of the surplus profits till the charges should have been raised, but then he seems to go step by step through the will, and proceeds to revoke the devise of one-seventh to her. "And whereas by my old will I further ordered, that after payment of the respective portions of my sisters, named for the purpose in my said will, the trustees therein mentioned should permit and suffer my said sister, Elizabeth Walker, during her life, and after her decease her present daughter, Eliza Walker, her heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns, to take and receive one-seventh part of the whole of the rents and profits of my said towns, lands, &c., I now, by this my codicil, revoke, annul, and make void the said devises or bequests, made by my said will in favour of my said sister, Elizabeth Walker, and the said Eliza Walker, and each of them; and I order and direct, and my intention is, and I hereby leave and bequeath the said one-seventh, so by my said will intended for the said Elizabeth Walker during her life, and after her death for her daughter, the said Eliza Walker," amongst the other sisters. He then goes on—"As to all the rest, residue, and remainder of my estate and effects, not heretofore or by my said will particularly disposed of, together with that part of the residuum of my fortune which I have by the residuary clause in my will left to the said Elizabeth Walker and her child, I give the same to such of my said sisters who shall be living at my death, and to the children of any of my deceased sisters as shall be then living, save and except the said Elizabeth Walker and her child or children, to whom I do not intend or mean to give anything; share and share alike, the children of each such deceased sister, if more than one, to be considered as one person only, and to receive only one person's share." "And I hereby, by this my codicil, revoke and make void the residuary clause in my will, so far as it relates to the said Elizabeth Walker, her child or children." So then on this nothing can be plainer than the testator's declared intention, that Mrs. Walker is to take nothing by the will. He expressly revokes, first the surplus next the one-seventh, next the residuary gift, and last of all excludes her from any share of the sums of £200 and £400, and he declared his intention to give her nothing. If there had been a mere revocation of the seventh, it might have been more difficult to decide that such revocation could operate to revoke the clause of accretion. The maker may not have considered that clause as relating to Mrs. Walker. It is plain that as to her personally that clause did not apply; it may even be a question whether that accretion clause refers to any of the three mentioned after the bequest to Mrs. Walker; so it may be that he did not think it applied to her, and though in sound construction it might apply, it may be a question whether he thought it did. So that if it depended on the words of revocation alone, it might be and it is very properly argued, that the codicil did not revoke the accruing share—that the revocation was only of the one-seventh, and that the words were sufficient to carry out the revocation so far as that. But the whole scope of the codicil leaves no doubt of the intention, and his using those words—"Elizabeth Walker and her child or children, to whom I do not intend to leave or give anything." What is the meaning of those words? Are they mere recital, or are they not a declaration of the intention of the codicil? I think I am warranted in giving them the latter effect; if so, the accretion clause is revoked; formal words are not necessary if the intention be clear. There is something very like this in Symson v. Purton, (Cro. Jac. 115)—"When one had made his will in writing, and devised his land to Anne Hide and her heirs, and afterwards being sick and lying upon his death-bed, (because Anne Hide did not come to visit him) affirmed that Anne should not have any part of his lands or goods. It was held by all the court that it was not any revocation of the will, being but by way of discourse, and not mentioning his will. But the revocation ought to be by express words, that he did revoke his will, and that she should not have the lands given unto her by his will, or such like words, which might shew his intent to make an express revocation thereof." Now, are there not here such words, manifesting such an intention? But I confess, if it had not been for those words, I should have followed the argument of the counsel for the exceptions, and if they desire it, I will send a case to be tried by a court of law.

IRVINE v. ROGERS.—Nov. 13, 14, 15.

Power of Revocation—Execution—Trustee—Caveat. W. assigned his property upon certain trusts, reserving a power of revocation, and afterwards by his will directed his executors to take measures to have the assignment set aside as fraudulent.

and then made a different disposition of the property included in the deed. Held that this was an execution of the power of revocation.

Costs were given against a trustee who, having a benefit under the instrument revoked, compelled the plaintiff to establish the will.

Henry Ward, the testator in this cause, being seized and possessed of certain freehold and chattel leases, and of a sum of money in stock, by deed of the 1st September, 1846, reciting that the stock had been transferred to W. T. Rogers, sub-demised the lands comprised in those leases to Rogers—reserving a nominal rent and reversion—upon trust as to both lands and stock, and subject to an annuity of £20 to Rogers as remuneration for his services, for Henry Ward for life, and after his death, in the first place to pay off a mortgage debt, and subject thereto, to retain the said annuity of £20 to himself, to pay to Maria Balfe, a daughter of H. Ward, an annuity of £10: after her decease, to pay an annuity of £20 to her son, H. Balfe, and his children, as therein mentioned; to pay to plaintiff G. A. Irvine, another daughter of H. Ward, an annuity of £20, to her separate use for life, with remainder as she should appoint; to John Byrne his executors administrators and assigns, an annuity of £20, during the term thereby granted; to Catherine Hopkins an annuity of £20 for life, with remainder as she should appoint; and to pay one moiety of the residue of the rents and profits to G. D. Ward, a son of H. Ward, and the other moiety of the said rents to the plaintiff, for her separate use for life, with remainder to her issue as tenants in common, and for want of such issue, as she should by will appoint; and upon trust as to the other portion of the lands for H. Ward for life, with remainder to Samuel Ward, his heirs and assigns. In this deed was contained the following power:—"Provided, however, and these presents are upon this condition, that it shall and may be lawful for the said Henry Ward, by any deed or deeds, or by his last will and testament, or any codicil or codicils thereto, by him duly executed in the presence of two or more credible subscribing witnesses, to annul, revoke, make void, change, or alter any grant, limitation, matter, thing, of any or every nature or kind soever herein contained, according to his free will and pleasure, these presents, or anything herein contained, to the contrary in anywise notwithstanding." The bill alleged fraud and undue influence in procuring the execution of this deed, Ward, the testator and the grantor in the deed, being a very aged and infirm man. These charges were not sustained in evidence; but it was proved that the plaintiff, in consequence of suspicions as to the nature of this transaction, having caused a search to be made in the Registry Office, discovered a memorial of this deed, wherein no mention of the clause of revocation was made; that the testator, Ward, on being informed of this memorial, expressed both surprise and anger, and shortly afterwards, by his will dated the 10th of October, 1846, bequeathed his stock to the plaintiff; and after describing his leasehold interests, recited that he had been induced to execute the said deed of the 1st Sept., 1846, "by which said deed I have been made to dispose of my said houses in College Street, Fleet Street, and Exchange Street, contrary to my intentions and wishes, the said deed having been untruly read to me, at a time when from bodily weakness and infirmity, I was unable to read the same myself; and, whereas I consider the same to have been most fraudulently and wickedly obtained from me, I hereby direct my trustees and executors, hereinafter named, to use their best exertions, and take all the steps which may be necessary to have the said deed set aside and cancelled." He then bequeathed his freehold and leasehold interest to the plaintiff and R. Kelly, upon trust, "in the first place, to adopt all measures necessary or requisite to have the said deed set aside;" and in the next place, as to the freehold houses to J. Ward absolutely, and as to the residue upon trust, to pay thereout an annuity of £10 to Maria Balfe, to her separate use for life, with remainder to her son, H. Balfe, and his children, as therein mentioned; and an annuity of £30 to C. Hopkins for life, and subject to the said annuities in trust for the plaintiff, to her separate use; and after bequeathing to C. Hopkins some articles of furniture, and to his eldest son, H. T. Ward, and his sons, G. D. Ward and T. W. Ward, and his daughter, C. Smith, 5s. each; and having appointed the plaintiff and Kelly executor and executrix of his will, and made the plaintiff residuary legatee. The testator died on the 15th October, 1846. The validity of the will was contested in the Prerogative Court by G. D. Ward and Caroline Smyth, on the ground of want of mental capacity in the testator, and of imposition on him, but was eventually established in February, 1847. G. D. Ward was the heir-at-law of H. Ward, the elder sons having died in his lifetime. The bill in this cause was filed the 12th March, 1847, praying that the deed of 1st September, 1846, might be declared to have been revoked by this will, or that the deed might be declared fraudulent and void. The defendants Rogers, Hopkins, Byrne, G. D. Ward, H. Balfe, by their answers, denied fraud in obtaining the deed, and suggested the mental incapacity of the testator at the time of making his will; and further relied on the non-execution of the power by the will, even if it were valid, and no evidence was offered to shew it otherwise.

Brewster, Q.C., with Christian, Q.C., and Drury for the plaintiff.

J. D. Fitzgerald, Q.C., with Francis Fitzgerald, for the defendant, Catherine Hopkins.—The testator must shew an intention to exercise the power. It is not sufficient to shew an intention to execute the deed. (Lord Chancellor.—Does not this power leave the testamentary capacity of Mr. Ward, very much as it would have been if the deed had never been executed?) This is not a testamentary deed. Attorney-General v. Jones (3 Pri. 368), and such cases are, in effect, overruled, Thompson v. Brown (3 My. & K. 32). (Lord Chancellor.—I do not apprehend that this is a testamentary deed, but does it not leave the testator a testamentary power as extended, as that he would have had if the deed had not been executed?) This is not an execution of the power, Boughton v. Sandelands (3 Taun.

342); and it should be apparent on the face of the deed that it was the testator's intention to execute the power. Denn v. Rouke (2 Bing. 497, S. C.; 5 B. & C. 720); Scrope's case (10 Rep. 143b). (Lord Chancellor.—It is a question of intention. Can anything be more manifest than the intention in this will? Suppose he had used the very words of the power, would they be stronger to mark the intention?) Cross v. Hudson (3 Bro. C. C. 468); Thompson v. Simpson (8 I. E. R. 59; 1 Sug. Pow. 440-448, 5th ed.) The question is not whether the party intended to revoke the prior deed, but did he intend to exercise the power. Farmer v. Martin (2 Sim. 502) is an authority quite in point, and must govern this case.

Christian, Q.C. for plaintiff.—This is a question of intention; but not such as is contended for by the defendants, who must shew that the testator had no intention of exercising the power, Wade v. Paget (1 Sug. Pow. 419; 1 Bro. C. C. 364); Denn v. Roake (5 B. & C. 720, S. C.; 8 D. & Ry.); Brookman v. Hales (2 Ves. & Bea. 45); and the statute of 1 Vic. c. 26, shews the high regard the legislature has paid to the intention of the testator.

Drury, in reply.—This will, being an act that can only be done in exercise of the power, it will be deemed such, Fitzgerald v. Falconbridge (Fitzgibbon 207). If the will be considered without the words of annulment, it would be a clear revocation. These words merely express disapprobation, and do not alter the operation the will would have if without them. Cited Bath v. Montague, (3 Ch. Ca. 122, 86 S. C. 2 Free. 193.)

Dec. 15.—LORD CHANCELLOR.—If the defendants desire it, I will send this case to a court of law, but my present impression is in favour of the plaintiff. For the defendants the case of Boughton v. Sandelands is strongly relied on. A deed of settlement was executed 1st May, 1799,—by parties who believed themselves then legally married, in pursuance of an agreement before marriage. Now, that settlement did not contain any power of revocation; it was “to the use of such person or persons, and for such estate or estates, and to, for, and upon such uses, trusts, intents, and purposes, and under and subject to such powers, provisions, and declarations as the said G. Boughton and Eliza, his wife, by any deed or deeds, &c., should jointly direct or appoint, and in default of, and subject to any such joint direction, limitation, or appointment,” in strict settlement. The parties, having discovered that their marriage was void within the English Marriage Act, intended to marry again and make a new settlement, and for this purpose a recovery was suffered in pursuance of a new deed executed in 1800, which recited their intention to revoke and declare void the previous settlement. The parties imagining that they had the power of doing so in consequence of the invalidity of the marriage—settled the estate to such uses as Eliza Boughton should appoint; and, in default of appointment to trustees for her during life, with remainder to the use of her right heirs. It is evident that deed was not made for the purpose of acting on the power of appointment contained in the first settlement. An issue was directed by the Court of Chancery to the Court of Common Pleas, to try the validity of the settlement made by the second deed. At first, it was attempted to support the second deed as an appointment under the first; but counsel gave up that question, as the new deed could not refer to any authority in the old. By the second deed, the husband and wife professed to “rescind, revoke, and declare absolutely null and void the said several indentures of the 6th August, 1798, and the 1st May, 1799, respectively, and all the covenants, &c., in or by the said indentures, or either of them, limited, declared, or contained.” It would have been a strong measure in that case to support the second deed as an exercise of the power of appointment in the first, which the parties had professed to rescind. Yet Sir Edward Sugden does not agree with the decision in that case, and after quoting it, says (1 Sug. Pow. 423), “Yet it is observable that their intention was to make a new settlement, and although they treated the first as void, yet they recited an intention, not merely to rescind, but to revoke the deed; and, in the witnessing part of the second deed, they directed, limited, and appointed, as well as granted the estate, and the limitation in the premises appears to be to the releasee, and his heirs generally, with the usual words of all their estate, although the habendum is to him and his heirs for the life of the lady.” The case of Farmer v. Martin (2 Sim. 502) creates more difficulty. That case arises on a power of revocation. The marginal note is—“A. having a power to appoint £10,000 among his younger children, appoints it to them equally, reserving to himself a power of revocation as to £5,000, which he afterwards irrevocably appoints to E., one of the children, in consideration of her having agreed to apply part of it in payment of his debts. Afterwards A., by a deed to which he was also a party, revokes, with her consent, the last appointment as to £2,500, and in pursuance of all powers, appoints that sum to a child by a second marriage, and confirms C.'s title to the remainder under the former appointment. Held that the appointment of the £5,000 being void, the appointment of the £2,500 must also fail.” Now, that case was decided on the ground that the parties to the last deed shewed an intention to treat a corrupt appointment as valid. The Vice-Chancellor says, “My opinion is that the instrument of 1819 was intended to be what it appears to be, that is, an execution of a power which the parties supposed to exist, but which, in point of fact, did not exist, and not as an original appointment.” The Vice-Chancellor also observes, that the party did not repeat the words “in pursuance of all powers,” in the appointment. He says, “It would be a most extraordinary thing to hold, that because the father in this instrument has used a general expression in the clause of revocation, namely, he does so ‘in pursuance of all powers, &c.’ could revoke without repeating those words when he comes to make the appointment, it is to be taken as an absolute appointment to Ann of £2,500.” That case has since been criticised by Sir E. Sugden, who expressly says it should have been decided otherwise. In 1 Pow. 425, he says, “Now, it will be observed, that the power included all the father's children, and therefore Ann became an object of it; and the appointment to Eleanor of the £5,000 was unsustainable, in consequence of the improper agreement with the father. It was, therefore, contended, that the last appointment operated as a new appointment, or confirmation, to Eleanor of the £2,500 not appointed to Ann, and if not, that it was wholly void, as Eleanor did not intend to act, except under the appointment to herself of £5000. The Vice-Chancellor was of opinion that the last appointment could not operate as an original execution of a power [that is, of the power of revocation and new appointment, treating the appointment to Eleanor of the £5000 as invalid]. He was of opinion, from the recital, that there was no otherwise an intention to deal with the property than by the execution of a supposed power of revocation, and a new appointment under a like supposed power of £2,500 to Ann, and a ratification to Eleanor, not an appointment of £2,500 absolutely to her, but only a declaration that this instrument should not impeach her title to the remaining £2,500 under the former appointment to her. He held that Eleanor and her father acted only upon the supposition that she had a complete title by the appointment to her of the £5,000, and did not mean to give her any new title, and therefore thought it impossible to consider this instrument as an appointment de novo of the £5,000 between the two. Although the father referred to all powers in the revocation of the appointment as to £2500, yet as he did not intend the instrument to operate as an appointment to Eleanor of the £2500, under the power in the original settlement—that is, by force of the power of revocation and new appointment, the deed could not be considered an absolute appointment to Ann, and he held that she took nothing under it. His opinion was, that the last appointment was intended to be what it appeared to be—that is, an execution of a power which the parties supposed to exist, but which in point of fact did not exist; that is, they suppose the father to have a power to revoke the appointment of the £5000, and not as an original appointment. Eleanor only supposed she was confirming what the father might appoint. He held, therefore, that Eleanor and her sister, the original appointees, took the whole of the £10,000 under the original appointments. The principles laid down in this case are right, but it may be doubted whether they were rightly applied." This authority being questioned so forcibly by Sir Edward Sugden, and the present case being a mere question whether a will shall have any operation because the testator does not appear to recollect his power, I do not feel much embarrassed by it. There the parties supposed they had a certain power, and professed to exercise it, not having such power in fact; and it decides that such an intended exercise of a power cannot be referred to another power which they really possessed. It is not similar to that of a party having a power, not professing to execute any other, but doing an act which without that power he could not do. Farmer v. Martin does not govern the present case, it is at most an exceptional case, and I am not disposed to carry the exception farther. I will decide this case on the general doctrine. In Dunn v. Roake, Lord Tenterden says—"Although, therefore, we may think that the testatrix intended that the entirety should go in strict settlement on the family of her sister, yet we think it possible to suppose that the testatrix had no intention to execute the power, and if the intention to exercise the power be doubtful, the will cannot, in our opinion, be deemed an execution of it." These observations are fully answered by Sir E. Sugden in his treatise on Powers. vol. I. 425. What are the facts of this case? Henry Ward had under the deed a power of revocation; that is, he had by the deed a complete testamentary power. If in executing his will, he had been silent as to the deed, it must then have been taken to be an execution of that power. The defendants say it is not an execution, because he mentions that deed, and directs his executors to take all means in their power to set it aside for fraud, and therefore that he cannot be considered as acting on the authority contained in it. This will, which has no operation save by the deed, deals with property comprised in it; and declares an intention to alter that deed; and there is no authority, to the effect that this shall not be deemed an alteration, because the testator seems to have thought he could get rid of the deed by other means than by a revocation. It was very ingeniously argued by Mr. Christian, that where a party has settled property with a mere power of revocation and afterwards by will exercises that power, the property passes by his will, not by the power, and therefore that a party cannot be considered to take under an instrument, where he takes under a will revoking that instrument. It does not seem inconsistent that the testator might wish by the exercise of his power to alter, revoke, and rescind the deed for the future, and avoid it for the time past, on the ground of fraud, I can find nothing shewing that the testator did not mean to exercise the power contained in that deed, but as there seems sufficient difficulty in the matter to warrant further inquiry, if the defendant wish, I will send a case to a court of law. It was contended that W. T. Rogers, as a trustee, was entitled to his costs, and G. D. Ward also claimed his as heir-at-law, brought before the court to have the will established against himself. W. T. Rogers, having taken a benefit under the deed, and forced the plaintiff to go into evidence to establish the will, even after the litigation in the Prerogative Court, is liable to costs, but the plaintiff, not having made out the case of fraud charged in the bill, must pay costs of the suit so far as they are occasioned by his putting forward that case.

Let the plaintiff have her costs of this suit against the defendant, W. T. Rogers, so far as the same relate to the proof and establishment of the will of the said Henry Ward, the said W. T. Rogers not to be liable to the extra costs occasioned to the plaintiff by the examination of witnesses by the said Catherine Hopkins, which extra costs the plaintiff is entitled to against the defendant Catherine Hopkins alone. Let the defendants, J. Byrne, G. D. Ward, and H. Balfe respectively abide their own costs in this cause; and so far as the plaintiff's bill sought to set aside the said deed for fraud, let the same be dismissed, and let the said W. T. Rogers and Catherine Hopkins be entitled as against the plaintiff to the costs of so much of the said bill as is hereby dismissed, and let the said defendants be at liberty to set off the same against the costs hereby decreed against them.

Reg. Lib. Hearing, 100, p. 258.

ROLLS COURT.

WALSHE v. SHEEHY.—Nov. 22.

WALSHE, the petitioner, had been solicitor for the respondent, and on the taxation of the petitioner's costs, allowances were claimed by the respondent, which the Taxing Master refused to make, on the ground that he had no authority, that question not having been submitted to him by the requisition to tax.

D. R. Kane, Q. C., now moved for an order for the payment of the costs as taxed.

Hughes, Q. C., contra, submitted that the Taxing Master ought to have allowed all just allowances, Lawler, Minors, (F. & K. 73.)

Reeves, R., in reply, relied on Anon., (2 Ves. Sen. 45.)

MASTER OF THE ROLLS.—I am asked to make an order for the payment of the whole sum taxed, no allowance having been made to the respondent for just credits, and I am asked to do this on a point of special pleading on the import of the requisition. I shall not make such an order, but refer it back to the Taxing Master, to make just allowances, and if any be made, I shall make the petitioner pay the costs of the reference.

Petition Book, 26, p. 92.

O'KEEFFE v. HOLMES. TANGLEY v. HOLMES. GOOD v. HOLMES. HACKITT v. HOLMES.—Dec. 12.

Several suits—Order staying proceedings—Costs of defendants—Liability of plaintiffs to.

Where there are several creditor's suits, and a decree having been obtained in one, proceedings in the others are stayed. The plaintiffs in the suits which are stayed are personally liable in the first instance to pay the costs of the several defendants, who are not obliged to wait till the funds are realized under the decree in the prosecuted suit.

Chatterton in this case applied on behalf of a defendant in the second and third causes, that the plaintiffs in those causes might be directed to pay him his taxed costs. Several suits had been instituted against the defendants, and a decree having been obtained in the first cause, by order bearing date the 23rd of June, 1848, the proceedings in the other causes were directed to be stayed, and that the parties should be at liberty to come in and prove their demands in the first cause. The case of Loftie v. Forbes, (2 L. E. Rep. 443,) is a clear authority, that when a suit is stayed, as in the present case, the defendant is entitled to have his costs paid by the plaintiff, and is not bound to wait until funds are allocated or realized in the first cause.

McObay, for the plaintiff in the second cause, relied on Uniacke v. Rochford, (1 Moll. 216.)

Joseph Reeves, for the plaintiff in the third cause. It would be a very great hardship to compel the plaintiff to pay those costs before the funds are realized, as it appears she has very little property except the subject matter of the suit. Loftie v. Forbes is contrary to principle and authority, for the order to stay proceedings does not of itself make the plaintiff personally liable to the defendant's costs. In Croker v. Copley, on the authority of which Loftie v. Forbes was decided, a conditional order had been obtained to dismiss the plaintiff's bill, and if the defendant in the present case had so moved, there would have been an adjudication as to the costs. In Damer v. Earl of Portarlington,* (2 Phil. 30,) it was made part of the order that the costs should be paid by the plaintiff; and, on appeal, that part of the order which made the plaintiff personally liable, was reversed, although the plaintiff acted improperly by going on with the suit after an order that proceedings should be stayed. That is an a fortiori case, for here no improper conduct is imputed to the plaintiff.

MASTER OF THE ROLLS.—There may be a hardship in the present case, but Loftie v. Forbes was very well considered. I should be slow to alter the practice of this court, as to do so would be productive of great mischief. It is very desirable not to break in on a rule which checks the institution of several suits. Sir M. O'Loughlen says, in the case to which I have alluded, "every suitor who comes here for relief necessarily makes himself liable to the rules and practice of the court. One of the rules is, that where two suits are instituted, and a decree has been pronounced in one of them, under which the plaintiff in the other can have effectual relief, the court will stay the proceedings in the second cause, and oblige the plaintiff to prove his demand in the first." I have made orders upon the authority of that case. The party who now applies is a trustee, a mere formal party, who has not been made a defendant through his own default, and there would be more injustice in refusing than in granting this application.

Order Book, 277, p. 336.

NANGLE v. NANGLE.—Dec. 19.

Witness—Practice—90th General Order.

The Court will make an order that a witness may be allowed to read over the interrogatories in which he is to be examined, notwithstanding the 90th General Order, when it is sworn the witness is deaf, and could not otherwise be examined.

Deasy moved for an order, that James Shannon, a witness in this cause, might be permitted to read the interrogatories for his examination.

The affidavit of P. Scott, the solicitor for the plaintiff, stated that Shannon was a material wit-

* The case of Damer v. Portarlington, is also reported in (15 Sim. 380,) and in (2 Phillips, 263,) on appeal from the Vice-Chancellor of England. See also McHardy and wife v. Hitchcock, (12 Jur. 781,) on appeal from the Master of the Rolls.

ness, and that he believed said Shannon was altogether deaf; that he had served a notice for examining the said Shannon, and that Henry Quinn, the Examiner-in-Chief, informed deponent that under the 90th General Order the said Examiner was precluded from permitting the said Shannon to read the interrogatories, and that if the court do not make an order, it would be impossible to examine the witness at all.

The Master of the Rolls granted the order.

EQUITY EXCHEQUER.

CLEARY v. CLEARY.—Dec. 3.

Practice—Re-hearing.

Liberty will be given to the heir-at-law of a deceased minor, to avail himself of an order of rehearing which had been made upon the petition of the minor, even though the former was a party to the suit from its institution, and affected with notice of all the proceedings, and though the minor claimed only by purchase from him.

THIS cause came before the court upon an order for re-hearing made upon the petition of Mary Cleary, a minor, defendant. The minor died before the cause was re-heard, and a question arose, whether the father and heir-at-law of the minor could avail himself of the order, under the following circumstances:—The original bill had been filed the 8th of February, 1822, by Patrick Cleary, the younger against his eldest brother, James Cleary, for an administration of the assets of their father, Patrick, the elder. There was a decree to account in that cause, pronounced the 21st of April, 1825. Before any further proceedings were had, the defendant, James Cleary, died intestate and without issue, leaving his brother, John Cleary, his heir-at-law. In November, 21, 1825, Patrick, the younger, filed a bill of supplement and revivor, charging by way of supplemental matter, that James Cleary had purchased an estate in Limerick for £12000, of which sum £8000 was portion of the assets of Patrick, the elder; and the supplemental bill prayed, that the said sum of £8000 and interest thereon might be declared well charged upon the said estate, and for a sale. In February, 1830, a conditional decree was pronounced against John. In October, 1830, Patrick, the younger, died, and the suit was revived by his widow. In February, 1835, an absolute decree was pronounced against John Cleary. On 27th of May, 1841, the Remembrancer made his Report, finding that Patrick the elder had died possessed of considerable assets, and that John had invested £8177 16s. in the purchase of the estates in Limerick. The cause came on to be heard upon the report unexcepted to, but in November, 1841, the report was sent back to the Remembrancer, to charge interest on the sum of £8177, and such further proceedings were had thereupon, that on February 8th, 1842, there was a decree confirming the report, and directing a sale for the purpose of raising £11000, the sum found due for principal, interest, and costs. In January, 1843, a supplemental bill was filed, charging, that on proceeding to effect a sale under the decree, it was found that John Cleary, pending the suit, had conveyed away the legal estate in the lands, by a deed of marriage settlement, dated the 22nd of May, 1827, and that a supplemental bill was rendered necessary for the purpose of bringing before the court those whose rights had accrued under the settlement, pending the suit, and, amongst others, Mary Cleary, a minor. In January 19, 1846, a decree was pronounced in the supplemental cause, and the plaintiff was declared entitled to the benefit of the former decree, and it was referred to the Remembrancer to ascertain the sum due on foot of the former decree, &c., liberty being reserved to Mary Cleary and another minor to come in and falsify the accounts. A discharge was filed on part of Mary Cleary, the minor, and she afterwards presented a petition for rehearing. On that petition the ordinary rule was made. But before the cause was re-heard, Mary Cleary died, leaving her father, the said John Cleary, her heir-at-law.

Henn, Q.C., for plaintiff contended that John Cleary had no right to avail himself of the order for rehearing. He had been a party to all the proceedings from the institution of the suit—he never sought a rehearing on his own behalf, nor set up any claim under the settlement of 1827; but, on the contrary, in his answer to the supplemental bill, denies ever having executed the settlement, or, if ever, only under the influence of intoxication, and impeaches those very deeds under which the minor, Mary Cleary, claimed. (Pennefather, B.—John may say, my daughter, Mary Cleary, was a purchaser for valuable consideration under those deeds, and I am entitled to stand upon her rights, though I have been a party to all the proceedings in another capacity.) John Cleary claims by descent from a party who has no title, save as a purchaser from himself. The only necessity that existed for her being before the court was, because of the legal estate being in her, and whatever equity she had was clearly bound, inasmuch as she claimed solely through a party whom all the proceedings in the cause affected. (Pennefather, B.—That is assuming that she was bound by the proceedings; if she was so, John, her heir-at-law, was equally bound; but, for the purposes of this argument, we must assume that she had a right to be reheard.) Suppose that Mary had died before the supplemental bill was filed, John would have been bound by the proceedings, and the court would not have granted him a rehearing. Can he be in a better position than if a supplemental bill had never been filed?

PENNEFATHER, B.—Has not a purchaser with notice from a purchaser without notice a right to stand in the place of his vendor?

LEFROY, B.—You are, in fact, calling upon us to decide on this preliminary motion the main question in the cause; namely, whether the rights of the minor were affected by the proceedings. We will rehear the cause.*

* Before Pennefather, Richards, and Lefroy, B.B. The cause was afterwards compromised.

QUEEN'S BENCH.

EXECUTORS OF ACKLAND v. GRANT.—Nov. 10.

Practice—Executors—Security for Costs—3 & 4 Vic. c. 105.

THIS was an application on behalf of the defendant, that the plaintiffs, who were executors, and resided out of the jurisdiction of the court, should give security for costs pursuant to the 3 & 4 Vic. c. 105, s. 56.*

F. Meagher for the motion.

C. H. Woodroffe, contra.—The act vests a discretion in the court, and the defendant ought to have an affidavit of merits.

PER CURIAM.—This statute puts executors and administrators upon the same footing as ordinary plaintiffs, and makes them liable to pay costs, unless where the court, in the exercise of its discretion, shall otherwise order.

Meagher applied for the costs of the motion.

PER CURIAM.—The order is always silent as to costs.†

LESSEE OF HICKMAN v. BEHAN.—Dec. 16.

Practice—Ejectment—Defence—Bankrupt Lessee.

A defence taken by a bankrupt against whose assignee judgment has been marked, was set aside, and the name of a solvent under-tenant in possession, against whom judgment had been also marked, allowed to be substituted instead.

Griffin moved, that the defendant in this cause should give security for costs, or that, in default thereof, the defence taken in his name should be set aside and judgment marked forthwith for the plaintiff, notwithstanding such defence taken. The affidavit of the agent for the principal lessor of the plaintiff stated, that the lessee in the original lease of the premises in the ejectment mentioned, died, having bequeathed said lands to the defendant, who was then in receipt of the profits thereof, but not in the actual occupation of them. It then stated that the ejectment was brought for one year's rent due to the 1st May, 1848—that the defendant had filed his schedule in the Insolvent Court on the 27th March, 1848, and that a docket of bankruptcy had issued against him on the 15th of April, 1848—that by his schedule he had admitted that a year's rent was due—that his assignees in both the Insolvent and Bankrupt Courts had been served with the ejectment, and that no defence had been taken in their names, and judgment was accordingly marked against them—that the bankrupt

* The 3 & 4 Vic. c. 105, s. 56, enacts "That in every action brought by an executor or administrator, in right of the testator or intestate, such executor or administrator shall, unless the court in which such action is brought, or a Judge in any of the superior courts, shall otherwise order, be liable to pay costs to the defendant, in case of being non-suited, or a verdict passing against the plaintiff, and in all other cases in which he would be liable if such plaintiff were suing in his own right, upon a cause of action accruing to himself; and the defendant shall have judgment for such costs, and they shall be recovered in like manner."

† See Wilkinson v. Edwards (1 Scott, 173;) Godson v. Freeman (Tyr. & Gr. 35)

alone had taken defence, and that he verily believed there was no legal defence, but that same had been taken for the purpose of vexatious delay, Lessee Hoy v. Dillon (5 Ir. L. R. 243).

W. Brereton, contra.—Hoy v. Dillon was in the Common Pleas, and this court and the Exchequer invariably refuse such motions. Besides, in that case, there was two years' rent due, and the defendant was in possession; here he is not, and his under-tenants look to their lessor to defend the ejectment for them. If his defence be set aside, they will be turned out of possession, as judgment has been marked against them. This motion is late. Defence was taken 18th November, and notice of this motion was not served until the 14th December.

MOORE, J.—Let this defence be set aside, and let some person, a tenant in possession of the lands, and in solvent circumstances, be at liberty, if so advised, to take defence within one week, in his own name instead of the bankrupt. No costs of this motion.*

COMMON PLEAS.—MICHAELMAS TERM.

COCHRANE v. HOLDEN.—Nov. 20.

Plaintiff resident out of jurisdiction—Security for costs—Unconditional assent.

When the defendant gives the preliminary notice required by this court, that the plaintiff resident out of the jurisdiction shall give security for costs—if the defendant assents thereto, such assent must be unconditional, and no further proceedings can be taken until the security be given.

Chatterton moved that the plaintiff, being out of the jurisdiction, should be compelled to give security for costs. The preliminary notice required by the practice of this court had been served on the plaintiff immediately on appearance, and before the declaration was filed, requiring him to give security; to which the plaintiff's attorney replied, that he would not take any steps in the action save filing the declaration and entering the rule to plead, until security for costs was given. He then filed the declaration, and entered the rule to plead.

Mockler contra, submitted that there was no occasion for the motion, as the plaintiff had already undertaken to do all that was required of him by the motion, and that the plaintiff was entitled to make the reservation he did, and which could in no way prejudice the defendant, as the plaintiff reserved the right only of entering rules to plead, and did not seek to enter the rule for judgment—that there would be a three days' summons to measure the security, so that the defendant would have ample time to prepare his plea.

PER CURIAM.—The plaintiff had no right to make the reservation; his assent to the preliminary notice should be unconditional, and if unconditional, no proceedings whatever could be taken until the security for costs was given.

Application granted, with costs.

* Before Judge Moore in Chamber.

ROLLS COURT.

KING v. BROWNEGG.—PHINN, Petitioner. BRADY, Respondent.—Dec. 19.

Cross Motion—Costs.

Neither the costs of a petition to charge a fund in court, nor of a cross motion to draw money out of court which has been so charged under the 23rd section of 3 & 4 Vic. c. 105, will be granted in a case where the respondent does not appear.

J. S. Townsend moved, in this cause, to have money paid out of court to the several parties, pursuant to the Master's report.

Orpen moved a cross motion, entitled in the petition matter, and under the 3 & 4 Vic. c. 105, s. 23, for payment of part of the funds reported due to the respondent, Brady; and the question was, whether the costs of the petitioner which had been presented by the petitioner Phinn, and of the cross motion, should be allowed the petitioner. Counsel cited Guinness v. Armit (3 Ir. L. Rep. 359), and argued, that if a charge had been made by the respondent, and a bill had been filed to raise that charge, the costs of the suit would be paid to the plaintiffs, and that under the 23rd section of the act the charging order is given the same effect as if the fund had been charged by the debtor himself.

MASTER OF THE ROLLS.—I have considered this case, and think I cannot give the costs, either of the petition or of the cross motion for which Mr. Orpen contended. I shall grant the motion in accordance with the decision of the late Master of the Rolls in the case of Burke v. Burke (7 I. E. R. 174), but will refuse so much of it as asks the costs; and in this I follow a decision of the Court of Exchequer in the case of White v. Heron (5 I. L. Rep. 165).

COMMISSION OF OYER AND TERMINER.

QUEEN v. DUFFY.*—Dec. 16, 18, 19, 21, 23, 28, 29.

CORAM PERRIN, J. AND RICHARDS, B.

Held, on motion to quash the indictment, that at common law the pendency of a former indictment did not prevent the crown from calling on the prisoner to plead to a subsequent one for the same offence, and that the 9th section of the 9 Geo. 4, c. 51, has not altered the law, except in cases where notices of the prosecutor's intention to prefer a bill of indictment in the adjoining county have been duly served, pursuant to the 7th, 8th, and 9th sections of that act.

Therefore, where a bill of indictment was preferred to the grand jury of the adjoining county, for an offence committed in a county of a city, under the provisions of the 9 Geo. 4, c. 51, and found there, but no notices were served, nor the informations removed from the custody of the Clerk of the Peace for the city. Held that a new indictment might be preferred in the city.

Plea in abatement, that A., one of the grand jury who found the indictment, was not an inhabitant, or resident, or freeman, or burgess of the city of Dublin, or possessed of, or entitled to any lands, &c., or any rateable property. Held that the plea not having negatived every qualification, the court would presume him qualified.

Semble per Perrin, J., that the 3 & 4 Wm. 4. c. 91, applies to grand jurors at Commissions of Oyer and Terminer and Gaol Delivery.

Semble too or more pleas in abatement can be pleaded together in a criminal case.

An indictment under the 11 & 12 Vic. c. 12, charged that the prisoner did compass, imagine, &c., to depose the Queen, and such compassing, &c., "did express and declare by publishing a certain printing, containing in one part thereof, amongst other things, according to the tenor following, setting out a portion only of the printing."

Held on demurrer to the indictment, that this mode of laying the felonious publishing was sufficient, and that it was not necessary either to set out the whole printing or to aver that the intention was expressed by the printing set out.

Held, that the several printings were not distinct felonies, and therefore the counts of the indictment were not open to the objection of duplicity. That as the intention was sufficiently expressed by the articles themselves, there was no necessity for any innuendo.

Held that the 2nd, 4th, 5th, and 6th counts in the indictment, which alleged the compassing to have taken place on a certain day, and to have been then and there expressed by divers overt acts thereafter mentioned, and which then proceeded to set out overt acts committed on that day and on several days subsequent, were, so far as related to all the overt acts subsequent to the day of the compassing, bad, as being repugnant and insensible.

Held, that the publications were properly laid as overt acts.

THE prisoner was indicted under the 11 & 12 Vic. cap. 12, entitled, "The Crown and Government Security Act." On the 8th of July, 1848, he had been arrested and committed to Newgate, on a charge of feloniously publishing, within the county of the city of Dublin, certain printings in the Nation newspaper, on informations sworn by John Hawksley, Martin Reilly, and Charles Vernon, who were bound by recognizance to prosecute and give evidence against the prisoner; and at a Commission of Oyer and Terminer for the county of the city of Dublin, on the 8th of August, 1848, a true bill was found against the prisoner for the offences previously found. At the Commission of Oyer and Terminer for the county of Dublin, in October following, a new bill of indictment was preferred, for the same offences, to the Grand Jury of the county of Dublin, before whom John Hawksley, Martin Reilly, and Charles Vernon, gave evidence, which bill the Grand Jury found to be true; and the first-mentioned indictment was, upon motion of the Attorney-General, quashed by the court. Writs of habeas corpus to remove the prisoner from the custody of the Sheriff of the county of the city of Dublin to the custody of the Sheriff of the county of Dublin, were issued by the crown, and the prisoner was brought to the bar of the court in the custody of the Sheriff of the city of Dublin, and was about to be arraigned, when it was objected by the prisoner's counsel that he could not be arraigned when in the custody of the Sheriff of the county of the city of Dublin, and that the writs of habeas corpus could not then be acted on, not having been issued ten days previous to the sessions, as required by the statute 6 Geo. 4, c. 51, which objection the court ruled with the prisoner. At the conclusion of the same sessions for the county of the city of Dublin, the prisoner applied that he might be discharged, as no indictment was then pending against him in the county of the city of Dublin; but in consequence of the indictment found by the Grand Jury of the county of Dublin, the court refused that application. The prisoner was now again indicted before the Grand Jury of the county of the city of Dublin. It appeared from an affidavit sworn by the Crown Solicitor, that the previous indictment in the county had been abandoned, in consequence of a letter containing matter of a felonious nature, written by the prisoner, and that no notice of the intention of the crown to remove the indictment to the adjoining county had been served on the witnesses, or persons who had sworn informations or entered into recognizance to appear and give evidence, that the persons who had sworn informations had attended before the County Grand Jury for the purpose of giving evidence against the prisoner, and that the informations and recognizances returned to the Clerk of the Crown, on the 10th of July last, had never been removed from his custody. A new bill for the same offence having been now sent to the City Grand Jury for the present commission, was found by them to be true.

* Reported by J. Blackham, and W. J. Dundas, Esqrs., Barristers-at-Law.

Butt, Q.C. now moved that this Indictment be quashed.—The question in this case arises upon the construction of the 6 George 4, cap. 51, which enables any prosecutor to send up bills, for any offence committed in a county of a city, to the next adjoining county, and the third section provides, "that it shall be lawful for any prosecutor to prefer his bill of indictment for any offence committed within any county of a city, &c. in Ireland to the jury of the county next adjoining to such county of a city &c., sworn and charged to inquire for the king for the body of such adjoining county at any sessions of Oyer and Terminer and General Gaol Delivery, and that every such bill of indictment found to be a true bill by such jury, shall be valid and effectual in law, as if the same had been found to be a true bill by any jury sworn and charged to inquire &c. for such county of a city &c." The act contains no express direction that the proceedings are to be transferred to the county, however in England it is the constant practice, and in the case of Reg. v. Mellor and another, (Rus. & R. 144) it is assumed that when the bills are found in the county, such a transfer takes place, and that would seem to be a necessary implication, for the sixth section provides, that the prisoner shall be transferred, by writ of habeas corpus, to the custody of the sheriff of the next adjoining county, and the court may issue process to compel the attendance of witnesses there. The seventh section provides, "that recognizances entered into by witnesses shall be forfeited if ten days previous to the holding of the next court of Oyer and Terminer they shall have notice of the intention of the prosecutor to remove the indictment into the county, and the parties bound shall not attend in the county," and the eighth section provides, "that notice left at their place of abode shall be sufficient, and if the witnesses attend, the recognizance is discharged;" that provision is for the benefit of the prosecutor as between him and the witnesses, and it may be waived by the attendance of the witnesses gratis. The concluding part of the ninth section provides, "that after the delivery of any of the said notices it shall not be lawful for any person or persons to prefer any bill of indictment, or to return any inquisition for any offence mentioned in the said recognizances, &c., at or to any sessions of Oyer and Terminer or General Gaol Delivery for any such county of a city, &c." It is clear that when once the prosecutor has made his election, the proceeding cannot be brought back to the city, and this was enacted to prevent changing backwards and forwards, which might be made an instrument of great oppression. Queen v. Traynor, (1 Cr. & D. C.C., 237,) which was a trial for libel at Drogheda, and (Hayes Crim. Law, 908.) In the present case there are bills of indictment pending in both the county and city which may be most injurious to the prisoner, for if in the case put there were at the same time two judges sitting in Trim and two in Drogheda, can it be contended that the prisoner should be exposed to the hardship of his trial going on in both together? In the present case recognizances have been entered into by Hawkesley and Reilly, the election has been made. (Perrin, J.—Does not the ninth section raise the very serious question, whether the Queen is bound? It appears to me there is not any case where the Queen can be considered to come under the description of person.) The second section provides, "that it shall be lawful for the court, at the prayer or instance of any prosecutor, &c.," the word "prosecutor" there must be considered to include the Attorney General prosecuting on the part of the crown, and if so he must be considered to come also within the meaning of the word "person." (Perrin, J.—What are the facts which bring this case within the ninth section?) There are no circumstances which bring the case within the express words of the act, but it is clearly within the spirit of it, for although there may not have been any notices served on the witnesses, the notice being to secure their attendance, if they attend without notice the recognizance is discharged; it is the duty of the prosecutor to serve these notices, and to have the informations returned, can it be contended, that if he does not do what he ought, that he can go back to the city and obtain an advantage which he otherwise would not have?

Attorney-General contra.—The prisoner having been arrested in July, remained in the custody of the sheriff of the county of the city of Dublin up to the present time; no application was made under the act to transfer the proceedings or to change the venue; a bill was preferred to the City Grand Jury, and afterwards quashed, owing to the discovery of a letter which it was considered necessary should be inserted in the indictment, a bill was then sent up to the county, but no notice was given under the act, nor any further proceeding taken on foot of it. The present indictment has been found by the Grand Jury of the county of the city, and the application is to quash that bill. There are cases in which bills may be found in one of several counties, such as for a larceny committed upon a coach, and the pendency of a bill in one county could not be considered an answer to an indictment in another, but I do not mean to say that the Court would not have jurisdiction to prevent the prisoner from being harrassed, if such were the case, by these proceedings. It is not alleged that the act in terms applies to the present case; the provision in the ninth section, "that it shall not be lawful for any person to prefer a bill of indictment to the county of a city" applies to those cases only where notices have been served under the act, and there is no provision in the statute, that, if a bill be found in one jurisdiction, another cannot be preferred to a different one. Putting the case most strongly against the Crown, if a private prosecutor swore informations, and gave notice of his intention to proceed at a commission of the next adjoining county, that would not limit the Crown, and such prosecutor could not be compelled to enter into the recognizance required by the thirteenth section. (Perrin, J.—The Crown may not be bound by the act, but if it once take advantage of it, as it may, would it not then be bound by all the rules a subject would be bound by?) In the case of Att. gen. v. Wilson, (Jebb's Cr. cases reserved 313) a recognizance was entered in to for the performance of public works, the Attorney-general proceeded by civil bill, there was an appeal, and the judges held that the provisions of the statute requiring security for double costs, did not apply to the Crown, so that the Crown may take advantage of some acts of Parliament, without being bound by all their provisions; this statute contains no provision, that where a bill is found in a county there shall not be any bill preferred to the city; the case does not come within the words or spirit of the act—the object of the Crown is to have a trial, and not to delay, this application should therefore be refused.

Napier, Q. C., in reply.—There is at present a valid proceeding in the county, will the Court then, pending that proceeding, which is capable of being carried into effect, permit another to be taken? It is conceded, that if any one of the notices required by the act had been served, it would not be optional with the party to go back to the city; can it be contended that if a party does not give these notices—if he violates the act, he will be at liberty to reserve a power of violating another part of it? The argument is, that if he neglects to serve notices, or the witnesses do not attend, that he may go back to the city and begin afresh, but that if he performs what the act directs for the purpose of having the bills properly found, that then he is not to be at liberty to go back, it is not by the service of the notices the Court gets jurisdiction but by the finding of the bills, the third section must be considered as extending to the case of prosecutions by the Crown, the words used are sufficiently large, and a private prosecutor proceeds only by the sufferance of the Attorney-general, who may interpose at any time; by the sixth section of the habeas corpus act, (Hayes, 367,) the Court is required to set at liberty a prisoner if not tried the second term, the present is the third term since an indictment was preferred for the same offence, here there is a good indictment in the county, and it would be a hardship to the prisoner if the Attorney-general could have the power of going into every court and issue process in each. The Attorney-general before the present Commission could have obtained a transfer of custody to the county under the fourth section; in the case of the King v. Traynor, the transfer was at the prayer of the Attorney-general. (Richards, B.—Had the indictment been found there?) It had, there is no reason why powers should be given to private prosecutors, and not to the Attorney-general, the words are sufficiently large to include every prosecutor, it would be unjust to have two concurrent jurisdictions. Is a violation of the act to be considered a sufficient argument for the interpretation of a statute injuriously to the prisoner? the case should be considered as if the Crown had done that which the act directed.

Solicitor-General in reply.—At the commission in August it became the duty of the Crown to postpone the trial on the ground of newly-discovered evidence; in October the trial was prevented by the interposition of the prisoner's counsel, who raised the formal objection that notices had not been served. The first section of the 6 G. 4, c. 51, declares that on "motion on behalf of his Majesty," and "on motion on behalf of any prosecutor, &c.," taking a plain distinction between prosecutions by the Crown, and by a private person, and in those parts of the statute where the Crown is not named, it is not intended to be bound; it is provided that recognizances shall be entered into by the witnesses, in order to secure a trial, and to prevent a failure of justice; if all the preliminary arrangements are completed, the proceedings are transferred, and it is under such circumstances alone that any argument could arise against bringing the case back to the city. If the argument on the part of the prisoner is well-founded, a bill might be found in the county, the witnesses might not attend before the petty jury, and as by the act it is at the next court they are bound to attend, they need not come to any other; and there would be a total failure of justice, if no bill could be preferred in the city. The county of Clare is the next adjoining county to Limerick, if a Judge of Assize came into the court at Ennis, and found a bill upon the books, he could not take any notice of it if the prisoner was not in custody in Clare, or if the bill was found without the notices prescribed by the act, in Limerick the prisoner is found in gaol, and the judge being bound to deliver the gaol, would ask why an indictment was not sent up, would he listen to a statement that a bill was found at Ennis, without also inquiring, whether the necessary preliminaries had been complied with, or could it be said that the prisoner could not ever be tried in either? for the witnesses would not be bound to attend in Ennis, if notice had not been served upon them.

Dec. 18.—PERRIN, J.—In this case the prisoner has been called on to plead to an indictment found by the Grand Jury of the county of the city of Dublin at the present Commission, charging him with felony, and with compassing to depose the Queen, and levy war against her Majesty. The prisoner obtained a copy of the indictment, at the desire of his counsel, and moved by his counsel that it should be quashed, because it is alleged there is another indictment pending, charging the same offences, which was found by the Grand Jury of the county of Dublin at the last Commission, held in the month of October, which indictment was preferred by the direction of the Attorney-General, acting for her Majesty, under the powers and provisions of the 6 Geo. 4, c. 51, and to which, as appears from the affidavit, the prisoner declines to plead, and objects to be arraigned, and it is insisted on his behalf that this statute obliges the crown to abide by that indictment or venue, and prohibits her Majesty from preferring an indictment to any other jury for the same offence in the county of the city of Dublin; and that the indictment ought to be quashed, and the Queen stopped from proceeding any further upon it. The statute 6 Geo. 4, c. 51, by the 3rd section, enables any prosecutor to prefer his or her bill of indictment, for any offence within any county of a city or town to the Grand Jury of the next adjoining county, and provides that the bill found by that Grand Jury shall be as valid and effectual as if found by that of the city. It appears to me that the Attorney-general may prefer bills for an offence committed in a city to the next adjoining county, under that section, and may avail himself of the benefit of the statute, which is merely enabling, not disabling; for though the king shall not be bound by a statute unless specially named, he may take the benefit of it though not named; there are several cases to that effect cited in the (11 Report, 68 a.) It was held that the king may take advantage of the statute of Nisi Prius, though he is not bound by it; also the statute of Magna Charta, which provides that the Court of Common Pleas shall be held at some certain place, does not bind the king. In the case of the King v. Traynor, (1 Cr. & Dix. 237,) ruled by Mr. Justice Burton at Drogheda, the Attorney-General was held to be a prosecutor within the third section of the act. The fourth section enables the Court of Oyer and Terminer, to transfer the indictment found in a county of a city, if it appears that any indictment is proper to be tried by a jury of any next adjoining county, and the court may, at the prayer of the prosecutor or defendant, order such indictment or inquisition, and the several recognizances, &c., relative to such indictments and inquisitions, to be filed with the proper officer, to be by him kept among the records of the Court of Oyer and Terminer for such next adjoining county, and cause the defendant to be removed by writ of habeas corpus to the gaol of the next adjoining county, as if the offence was committed there. The statute seems to provide for three cases. The 4th section has no bearing on the present case, nor has the 5th; the 6th enables a judge of any of the superior courts, King's Bench, Common Pleas, or Exchequer, upon application ten days next before the holding of any sessions, &c., to cause the prisoner to be removed by writ of habeas corpus to the custody of the sheriff of the city to the sheriff of the adjoining county. So far as I have read, there is no express prohibition in the act against preferring or finding a bill in the county of a city, after one found in the county. It is plain it was not illegal before the statute to have a second bill found, though another was pending for the same offence, and though the Court is bound to take care that the prisoner shall not suffer any disadvantage or inconvenience, there are clear authorities that the mere fact of the existence and pendency of an indictment for the same offence is not a sufficient ground to call on the court to quash a fresh indictment. There is a case referred to in the King v. Stratton, (Doug. 239,) Res. v. Webb, (3 Burr. 1468,) and also reported in (1 Bl. Rep. 460,) which is a plain authority on this point. The defendant was indicted for perjury, and the case having been removed by certiorari, stood for trial; in the meantime a new indictment was preferred, and the court declared its opinion that a motion to quash the indictment was not of course, and the rule made was, that the first indictment should be quashed, and the second stand in its place. There is another authority on this point, the case of Res. v. Swan and Jeffries, (Fost. 104.) It was an indictment for murder; the trial was postponed, and in the meantime the Attorney-General, being satisfied from the evidence that Swan was in the service of the deceased, considered it advisable to prefer another bill; the prisoner pleaded in abatement, and also over to the felony; the case was argued before Mr. Justice Wright and Baron Foster, who were of opinion the charge must be answered. "That the pendency of a former indictment is no answer nor any reason why he should not plead to the last indictment, notwithstanding the pendency of the former, for autrefois arraign is no plea in this case. The king, by his counsel, must be at liberty to prosecute in such a manner as will best answer the ends of justice, and the court must take care that the prisoner is not exposed to the inconvenience of undergoing two trials for the one offence." That is a decision on record, and it seems necessarily to rule the present case, unless the law is altered by the statute; and if it be no answer, by way of plea, so it is no ground for calling on the court to quash the indictment. It is, however, insisted that the provisions of the statute distinguish this case, and that though it was not illegal before the statute to have a second indictment found, while another was pending for the same offence, that the law has been altered in that respect. As far as I have referred to the 3rd, 4th, and 6th sections, I find nothing in the statute prohibiting a person who prefers a bill under the third section from afterwards preferring another in the county of the city where the offence was committed, and nothing annulling or invalidating that indictment when found. Here the bill was found by the county, and pending that, another appears to have been preferred under the authority of the third section. There was no proceeding under the 4th or 6th sections—none by order of the court under the 4th, and the prisoner was not removed under the 6th, which was the objection taken at the last Commission, and held valid by the court. It is insisted that the 7th, 8th, 9th, and 13th sections either express or sufficiently evince such prohibition. The statute directs that the recognizances of the prosecutors or witnesses who do not appear after notice shall be forfeited; and the eighth section provides that notice left at their place of abode shall be sufficient; by the 9th section it is enacted that the magistrates before whom the informations were taken shall, after ten days' notice, return the recognizances, &c., to the Court of Oyer and Terminer for the next adjoining county, and that after the delivery of these notices it shall not be lawful to prefer a bill at the sessions of Oyer and Terminer for the county of the city; and the 13th section enacts, that such persons shall enter into recognizance in £40, &c. It is insisted that the latter clause of the 9th section makes it unlawful for any one, after an indictment found by the county, to prefer an indictment in the county of the city. The statute has no such provision; it is, that "after the delivery of any of the said notices, &c., it shall not be lawful to prefer any bill of indictment in the county of the city." Here it is stated on affidavit that no notices were served; therefore, the case plainly does not come within the terms of that enactment, which is, that after the delivery of said notices it shall not be lawful to do so. It was argued, on the part of the prosecution, that the object of this provision was to assist the prosecutor, not to restrain that officer from preferring the indictment, and that the provision is not after preferring or finding a bill or indictment, but after notice, which not having been delivered here, the provision does not apply; and further, that the Queen was not intended to be bound by such provision, the word used being "person." Before the passing of this statute, it was not illegal to have a second bill found during the pendency of the first, and it would be difficult to hold that where there is no express provision in the act, we should imply one restraining the crown from sending up a second bill in the place where the offence was committed. Still, the Court will prevent a vexatious use of that proceeding. There are several cases where parties have the option of preferring indictments in one of several counties, as if a larceny is committed upon a coach travelling, or an offence upon the borders of the counties, and no authority has been cited to shew that any one of the indictments were invalid. It has been contended that though the Queen may take advantage of this statute, the crown is not bound by the prohibitory clause in the 9th section, or by the 13th section, by which recognizances are to be given. I am of opinion, that there is nothing in the statute which prohibits the Attorney-General from sending up a fresh bill in the county of a city, although a bill has been already found, and may be pending in the county. Here no notices have been served, therefore the case is not within the terms of the statute, and we cannot imply an intent to bind or restrain the crown by general words. Suppose this case, that a private person prefers a bill, and serves notice, and the Attorney-General was of opinion that another bill ought to be preferred in the county of the city, as in the case of Res. v. Swan and Jeffries, is there anything in the act to restrain or take away this power, this common-law right of the crown? I do not think there is. I think we cannot imply such a provision, the effect of which would be to deprive the crown of the power of enforcing the due administration of justice; nor do I think it makes any difference where the indictment in the county has been preferred by the Attorney-General, if upon further consideration, whether in consequence of the rule made in the Queen's Bench in the case of the Queen v. Martin, as to the interest of a burgess, or to avoid the question as to whether a trial could be had in the county, or for any other sufficient reason he considers another indictment to be necessary, if he is of opinion the new bill is better adapted to the case than the former one, I do not think there is anything calling on us to prevent him from prosecuting in the manner he thinks will best answer the ends of justice. I do not think we can hold, upon motion to quash this indictment, that we should imply a prohibition restraining the crown. Looking at the subject matter, and the authorities, we do not find any provision contained in the act, either express or by necessary implication, abridging the right of the crown to send up a second indictment. It was argued by the counsel for the prisoner, that the proceeding was arbitrary, and might be unjust, to give the Attorney-General the power of changing the venue, which would be the effect of the construction we are inclined to give the statute; but we cannot, even if such an argument were well founded, extend the provisions of the act, or import into it what it does not contain. It is said the proceeding is harassing and oppressive. No such abuse is complained of here; for, though in the argument it was said to be so, no fact is put forward shewing such to be the case. Nothing that I have heard, save that the prisoner made considerable preparation for his defence in the county. It is not said that it will be thrown away, or not be applicable to the present trial, or that he will be deprived of the benefit of it; nor is there any allegation that a fair trial cannot be had in the city. It will be our duty to take care that the fresh indictment will not deprive the prisoner of the benefit of the Habeas Corpus Act; indeed I cannot see how it will have that effect. The prosecutor is ready to go to trial, and the delay is caused by the prisoner declining to plead. It is not alleged that he is not prepared, or that the indictments, though not precisely alike, are not substantially the same. The only material alteration is one of which no one can complain, that the present is shorter than the former. The other objection is the pendency of the second indictment, and that exists merely by the resistance to the motion of the Attorney-General to quash it; but we will take care the second indictment shall not prejudice the prisoner in whatever manner it is to be effected. I am of opinion, therefore, that we cannot comply with this application, as it appears to us contrary to the authorities, and not warranted by the provisions of the act.

RICHARDS, B.—Concurring as I do in the judgment pronounced by the senior member of the court, I should content myself with merely expressing my assent, were it not that this being a novel question, and one arising upon the construction of a somewhat recent statute, and on which there have been but few decisions, I consider more proper to state briefly what has been passing, in my own mind on the subject. The first section of the 6 Geo. 4, cap. 51, relates to indictments, or informations, in the superior courts—such as the Queen's Bench, Common Pleas, or Exchequer—and enables these courts, upon application on behalf of her Majesty, or of any prosecutor or defendant, to give orders for the striking of a special jury, &c. In that section the crown is expressly named, notwithstanding that the general term “prosecutor” is also used; and that gives colour to the argument, that where it was intended to include the crown, it was done so in express terms, and that the term “prosecutor” was not considered by the framers of the act as sufficient to include or comprise the crown. But, on the other hand, in the second section, the general term “prosecutor,” as there used, must be construed to include the crown, as well as all others. That section empowers the superior courts to direct that issues joined in all actions and prosecutions depending therein shall be transferred for trial from the jurisdiction of a city or county of a town to the next adjoining county. Now, I find every information by her Majesty's Attorney or Solicitor-General included in this section; but how is the necessary order to be obtained for a transfer of such issues? It is to be obtained “at the prayer of any prosecutor, or plaintiff, or of any defendant;” it is not at the prayer or instance of the Attorney-General prosecuting for the crown, and of any prosecutor, &c., but of any “prosecutor.” So that the term “prosecutor,” as there used, manifestly includes the crown, or rather the Attorney or Solicitor-General prosecuting for the crown. It is impossible to read the language of the second section and come to any other conclusion. So that if the naming the crown in the first section affords an argument one way, the including the crown in the second section, in the general term “prosecutor,” is equally an argument the other way. But there is an enabling statute intended for the benefit of all plaintiffs, prosecutors, and defendants; and finding that it was in the first two sections manifestly intended to include the crown, and that the term “prosecutor,” in the second section, was used for that purpose. I confess I would feel very great difficulty in holding that the 3rd section should receive a construction limiting its operation to prosecutions carried on by private prosecutors alone. There is no reason suggested why the legislature should have intended to exclude the crown from the benefit of that section; and prosecutions by the crown were as much within the mischief intended to be remedied as those by private persons. In truth, all prosecutions are carried on in the name of the crown. The third section is general. The fourth section is where an indictment is, in fact, found; and provides that in all such cases the Court of Oyer and Terminer, &c., may order the indictments and inquisitions, &c., to be handed over to the proper officer of the next adjoining county, together with all documents, &c., relating to such indictment. But how is that to be done? Just in the same way as was before directed by the 2nd section, at the prayer of any prosecutor or defendant. It cannot be argued that the word “prosecutor,” in that section ought not to bear the same meaning as in the 2nd section, or that the right should be confined to the private prosecutor and to the party prosecuted, but should not be vested in the crown prosecuting pro bono publico. By the 13th section it is provided, that the “person” seeking to change or remove the proceedings shall enter into recognizance for payment of costs, &c.; and it has been suggested that this section may be resorted to, for the purpose of interpreting within the limits contended for, the previous part of the act. No doubt the section cannot apply to her Majesty, for I admit it could not be the intention of the legislature to include the crown in that section. It would be absurd to require the crown to enter into recognizance; besides the word used in the section itself is “person,” not “prosecutor.” That section was plainly intended to apply to private prosecutors only; but it would be too much to hold from that, that none of the preceding enabling sections of the act included the crown. It has been, next, argued,—and it is the more important question for our consideration—that if the Attorney-General once avails himself of this act, by proceeding to obtain a transfer under it, he cannot afterwards again resort to the limited jurisdiction; and the 9th section has been relied on in support of that position. The argument is, indeed, founded upon that section alone; for, independent of it, there is no ground to contend for any such proposition. My brother Perrin has referred to several cases for the purpose of shewing that the pendency of one indictment cannot be relied as an answer to any other indictment for the same offence; and, in addition, I would refer to 2 Hale, P. C. 351. Now, I confess I am strongly disposed to be of opinion that the ninth section was consequent on the third section. That section (the third,) was conversant with cases where no bill had been found, and where a transfer was made in that stage of the proceedings from the limited jurisdiction; the several other sections, seventh and eighth, rendered it obligatory on the witnesses, &c., to attend at the Court of Oyer and Terminer in the county to which the case had been so transferred. The 9th section requires the magistrates before whom the recognizances had been taken, to return all such to the same county upon receiving ten days' notice, and consequent upon such change, it was enjoined by the 9th section, that no person should afterwards prefer a bill to the limited jurisdiction. That was enacted to prevent confusion, and a possible defeat of justice, by preferring a bill in the jurisdiction where neither the prosecutor nor witnesses were bound to attend. I would therefore rather incline to be of opinion that the 9th section was not intended for a case circumstanced as the present. But whether the 9th section would preclude a prosecutor, in a case plainly falling within its provisions, from resorting again to the limited jurisdiction, is a question upon which it may be unnecessary to express any opinion, inasmuch as I think it plain that that section could in no point of view be considered as extending to any case except where the notices prescribed by the statute had been served. But where no notice has been served, the case cannot be considered as falling within it. The defendant availed himself of an omission similar in principle at the last Commission. The writ of Habeas Corpus not having been sued out 10 days before, he insisted he could not be legally transferred to the county, and here no notice has been served under the ninth or any of the other sections of the act, nor has the prisoner been transferred, nor pleaded to the indictment preferred in the county; and the only thing done within the county jurisdiction has been the mere preferring and finding the bills of indictment by the county grand jury. I would be slow to hold that any prosecutor, whether private person or the crown, would be precluded, pending such inchoate and incomplete proceeding, from abandoning the county jurisdiction, and preferring an indictment in the city; and I think the prosecutor ought not to be considered, under such circumstances, as having made his election so as to bind him for ever, supposing the ninth section to have the effect as to cases falling directly within it. But it has been further argued by the Attorney-General that in no case could the Crown be bound by the restrictive provision contained in the 9th section. Generally speaking, where the words used in an act of Parliament are "person or persons," the crown is not bound. Supposing, however, the 9th section to bear the construction contended for on the part of the defendant, in regard to cases coming plainly within its operation, it may, I apprehend, admit of some question, I will say of a very grave and serious question, whether the court would not feel itself authorized to apply the principle to be extracted from such a provision as that, to crown prosecutions—I mean, prosecutions carried on by the Attorney-General, as well as to all others in cases where the Attorney-General had availed himself of the general provisions of the statute. But entertaining the opinion which I do upon other parts of this case, it is unnecessary to consider that question, and all I shall say at present is, that it is not my intention to express any opinion upon it one way or the other. With respect to the allegation of hardship and oppression and the like, my brother Perrin has shewn that no inconvenience to the prisoner can result from the course taken by the Crown in this case. If we found the proceedings were adopted for the purpose of oppression, or to prevent the prisoner from having his case disposed of, although the pendency of one indictment would not at law be any bar to the preferring of a second indictment for the same offence, I should hope the court would possess sufficient power to prevent the abuse of sending up indictments toties quoties in different jurisdictions, for the purpose of embarrassing a prisoner in his defence, or delaying him from being delivered from the charge against him. But that is not the present case, and whatever the reasons of the Attorney-General may be, it has not been even suggested that any hardship has been caused to the party charged by the course adopted; and we will take care that the prisoner shall not be in a worse position, with reference to the period of his trial, by the present proceeding, than if he were tried under the indictment preferred in the county.

The prisoner being now called upon to answer the indictment, pleaded the following pleas in abatement:—"And now on this day, that is to say, Monday, the 18th day of December, in the year of our Lord 1848, the said Charles Gavan Duffy, being led to the bar of the court here by the High Sheriff of the county of the city of Dublin, and having heard the said supposed indictment read protesting that he is not guilty of the offences in the said supposed indictment specified, or any of them; for plea in abatement nevertheless saith that he ought not to be compelled to answer the said supposed indictment, and that the same ought to be quashed, because he saith that Walter Sweetman, one of the jurors aforesaid, by whom the said supposed indictment was found a true bill as aforesaid, was not, at the time of his being sworn on the grand inquest aforesaid, nor at the time of his finding the said supposed indictment a true bill, as aforesaid, an inhabitant of the county of the city of Dublin, or resident within the same, or a freeman of the city of Dublin, or seised of any estate of freehold in the said county of the city of Dublin, and this he the said Charles Gavan Duffy is ready to verify; wherefore he prays judgment of the said indictment, and that the same may be quashed, and so forth.

"And for a further plea in this behalf, the said Charles G. Duffy, protesting as he hath above protested, saith that he ought not to be compelled to answer the said supposed indictment, and that the same ought to be quashed; because he saith that Patrick Boylan, another of the jurors aforesaid by whom the said supposed bill of indictment was found a true bill, as aforesaid, was not, at the time of his being sworn on the grand inquest aforesaid, nor at the time of his finding the said supposed indictment a true bill, as aforesaid, an inhabitant of the county of the city of Dublin, or resident within the same, or a freeman of the city of Dublin, or a Burgess of the said city, or seised, possessed of, or entitled to any lands, tenements, or hereditaments within the said county of the city, for any estate of freehold, or any less estate, or entitled to any property within the said county of the city, in respect of which he, the said Patrick Boylan, was liable to be rated to the relief of the poor, or for county, parish, or municipal taxes, and this he, the said Charles Gavan Duffy, is ready to verify; whereupon he prays judgment of the said indictment, and that the same may be quashed, and so forth.

These pleas were verified by the affidavit of Mr. Duffy, and to both of them the crown demurred.

Dec. 19.—Butt, Q.C., before the argument, on behalf of the prisoner, applied to the court that the Attorney-General might be directed to take some course with respect to the indictment in the county.

Attorney-General.—If the plea in abatement to the indictment found by the City Grand Jury is allowed, it will have the effect of quashing it; therefore the crown should not yet be called on to take any course as to the county indictment. There is no intention of harassing the prisoner. If the general issue was pleaded, and a trial could be had, the case would be different.

PERRIN, J.—We will not, at present, call on you to quash the county indictment; and will, therefore, hear the demurrer.

Attorney-Gen.—The first objection is in point of form; for the prisoner has no right to plead two separate pleas, therefore these pleas should be overruled for duplicity (1 Chitty, Crim. Law, 434). Only one plea can be pleaded to an indictment or information; the rule is the same in civil cases (Archbd. Civil Pleading, 2nd ed. 305). A defendant shall not plead two pleas in abatement (Com. Dig. Abatement, s. 3). These pleas are also bad in substance. In a plea of this description, every qualification which would shew competency in the juror must be negatived, otherwise the plea must be overruled. There is no statute regulating the qualifications of a grand juror at Commissions of Oyer and Terminer. At common law, the only qualification was that he should be homo probus et legalis, or liber et legalis; he need not be an inhabitant, or possessed of freehold property. This plea contains no allegation that the juror is not liber et legalis. In the Sheriff's return annexed to the writ, he is described as of Grafton street, in the city of Dublin, and consistently with anything alleged by the prisoner, he may be a merchant carrying on business at the house of a partner; and, though not having a residence or rateable property in it, may be properly described as of the city of Dublin. Upon a statement submitted to the judges, reported in (Russell & R. Cr. Cas. 177), it was decided that a grand juror need not be a freeholder, and the practice in England has since been, not to require grand jurors to be freeholders. Kirwan's case (31 St. Tri. 575) was an indictment found by the Grand Jury of the county of the city of Dublin; there was a plea in abatement that many of the grand jurors were not freeholders. Upon the argument, it was conceded upon the authority of the dictum in 2 Hale, P. C. 155, ed. 1800, that a freehold was a necessary qualification for a juror of a county at large, but it was argued by the Attorney-General, that in the city, if the grand jurors were freemen, it would be sufficient, and that qualification not having been negatived by the plea, the demurrer was held good. The supposition was, that the word liber had something to do with the quantity of the estate; but it properly means a man not tainted, as contradistinguished from a villain. The first statute upon this subject is 13 Ed. 1, cap. 38, Statute of Westminster, entitled, "How many and what sort of persons shall be returned as jurors of petit assizes." The next statute is 21 Ed. 1, c. 2, entitled, "De eis qui ponendi sunt in assises," and provided that the Sheriff shall not put any person on the grand jury in their county who had not lands to the value of forty shillings; but, according to Coke (2 Inst. cap. 38, 447-8), if any party be returned contrary to this act, he cannot be challenged, but the remedy is against the Sheriff. There is no case of an indictment being quashed in consequence of a defect in a juror, except one founded on the 11 H. 4, c. 9, which provided that any indictment found, contrary to the provisions of it should be quashed (Coke, 3 Inst. Treason, 33, 34); see W. Withpole's case (Cro. Car. 134, S.C. Sir W. Jones, 198). In 2 Hawk. P.C. b. 2, c. 25, sec. 16, is the only authority which would seem to shew that non-residence is an objection. He says, "The indictment must be found by twelve men, at least, every one of whom ought to be of the city, and freemen, and liege subjects." He refers to Plack's case (2 Rolles, Reps. 82), and the objection taken there was, that the indictment was not found by twelve proborum et legalium hominum, as well as that they did not reside. In the present case, Mr. Boylan may be properly described as of the city of Dublin, though he does not reside. The present Jury Act (3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 91) does not apply to grand jurors of Commissions of Oyer and Terminer, and is confined to juries for the trial of issues, and grand juries at sessions of the peace, &c. It may be argued, that the third section uses general words which would extend to all grand jurors; but, being used in a limited sense in the first section, they must bear the same meaning in the third. Besides, this act does not contain any provision that an indictment shall be quashed for any defect in a grand juror. So that it either does not apply at all to the present case, or if it does, the indictment should not be quashed. The 33rd. section provides, that any Sheriff, &c., is hereby indemnified for impannelling and returning any man named in the jurors' book, though he be not qualified or liable to serve on juries; and if any Sheriff return any man to serve, &c. (except on the grand jury at any assizes) such man's name not being so inserted in the jurors' book, &c. he shall be fined. This is an express exception as to grand juries. It would be a great inconvenience to hold, unless expressly provided by the statute, that a defect in a grand juror would vitiate an indictment; for there is no means of ascertaining who are on the jury, as the Sheriff may return whom he pleases. If a property qualification were necessary, the Sheriff might return a proper person, who might change his residence and part with his qualifications before serving, and finding the bill, and that might be kept concealed from any person except the prisoner. In the case of the Queen v. Whitshead (7 Q. B. Rep. 582), the question was not argued, as the sentence was wrong; therefore, this plea should be overruled, as bad in form and substance.

John O'Hagan, in support of the plea in abatement:—As to the objection to the form of the plea, as containing double matter, there is a distinction between dilatory and peremptory pleas. Several dilatory pleas may be pleaded, (2 Hawk. 266, Ed. 1824,) who refers to the year book, 446, fo. 15; and the objection applies only to cases where there are two pleas triable in different ways, Sheridan and Kirwan's case, (31 St. Tr. 575.) As to the substance of the plea, first, Mr. Boylan is not an inhabitant of the county of the city of Dublin; we deny not only residence, but also occupancy of any kind; the word inhabitant is the very largest that can be used, and is so defined, (2 Coke Inst. 702.) It must be admitted, that every qualification not included in the terms of the plea must be deemed excluded; but by the allegations we have expressly excluded such a state of facts as that of a merchant carrying on business at the house of a partner, for such a person would come within Lord Coke's definition of inhabitant. By the common law, grand and petty jurors must be in possession of property, and, by occupancy or residence, be of the county for which they are returned to serve, (1 Chitty Crim. Law, 308; 2 Ld. Hales P. C. 154; Coke's 3 Inst. 30-31; 2 Hawk. 299.) An indictment must be found by twelve men at least of the same county, freemen, &c., (2 Hawk. 207, E.; 4 Bl. Com. 302; Complete Jurymen, 11-16.) The statements of these text writers do not go beyond the exigency of the writ, and the statement in the caption of the indictment. The writ commands the sheriff to return good and lawful men of the body of the county, and the caption is bad if it does not state that the jurors are good and lawful men of the body of the county, Forbes' case, (Sir T. Raymond, 433;) King v. Cole, (2 Keb. 284 & 292;) King v. Sparrowhawk, (3 Keb. 807.) The words de comitatu are the most essential; it will be assumed that a man is probus et legalis, but not that he is of the county. These words cannot mean a party who does not reside, for grand jurors are presumed to have local knowledge of facts, and they may present without any indictment. In the Jurymen's Guide, Sir J. Hall, Solicitor-General in the time of William 3, at page 32, says, "To what end is a jury to be returned out of the vicinage, &c.? A man cannot see by another's eye, nor hear by another's ear." How, then, can it be presumed that the duties of jurors are to be performed by strangers; is the Sheriff of Dublin to go to Cork, Canada, or Jamaica for grand jurors? If the argument on the other side is good, he may go to the Quay, and select a grand jury out of a ship from Canada or Jamaica. In all the old statutes, (13 E. 1, c. 38; 21 Ed. 1, c. 2,) it must have been assumed that the jurors were not only of the county, but were also possessed of property in it. They were passed to prevent persons being annoyed by being summoned on juries; how could a person be annoyed if he did not belong to the place, or was not possessed of property in it? Throughout all the statutes, residence has been assumed. By 2 H. 5, stat. 2, c. 3, a party must be possessed of lands or tenements of the yearly value of forty shillings. This statute, being general in its terms, was held to extend to cities, boroughs, and towns, and being found inconvenient, was partially repealed by 23 H. 8, c. 13, which was not in force in Ireland, and this statute qualified every person who enjoyed the liberties of any city, &c., wherein he dwelt or made his abode. What was the necessity for that statute, if the sheriff of the city could go for jurors into the county adjoining. In Lord Russell's case, (3 St. Tri. Fol. Ed. 634, the argument used was, ex necessitate, that a sufficient number of jurors could not be had, and in Sheridan's case, the argument was based on the necessity of the party being of the county of the city, and it was held that to be a freeman was a sufficient qualification, and the plea was bad as it did not negative that fact; and the 4 G. 1, cap. 15, was relied upon as establishing the fact that freedom was not sufficient, and that a party should be a freeholder, as that act would have been unnecessary if the argument, that a grand juror need not reside, is well founded. The legislature has recognized the principle, that jurors must be of the county, resident in the county, and have property in it. The 3 & 4 W. 4, c. 91, prescribes the qualifications of jurors. They must be resident merchants, freemen, and householders. As to the necessity of residence, King v. Adlard, (4 B. & Cr. 772;) King v. Inhabitants of North Curry, (4 B. & Cr. 953.) If an indictment was found at Recorder's Court or sessions of the peace, it would be a good plea in abatement that a party was not resident; how can it be contended, then, that at the more important sessions of Oyer and Terminer the grand jurors may be called from the four quarters of the globe? As to the objection made, that the indictment cannot be quashed on this ground, even if there was no case on the point, the court would be slow to hold as law that a party could be convicted and executed upon an illegal indictment, and that there was no means of taking advantage of it. As to the case referred to, (Russell & R., C. C. 177,) it was the opinion of the judges that it was not necessary that a grand juror should be a freeholder; it was probably considered that if possessed of leasehold property it would be sufficient. But that case does not warrant the assertion that a grand juror need not be possessed of any property whatever. No case has been cited, no authority, no dictum, to shew that a grand juror need not have any property or be an inhabitant of the place, and, on the other hand, we have the words of the writ, the statement in the caption of the indictment, the recognition by the ancient statutes, and the peculiarly local functions of grand jurors. Mr. Boylan is a stranger, and this indictment should be quashed, for it is the prisoner's right to have the bill found by twenty-three good and lawful men of the county in which the cause of action arose. If he part with his land, he may be challenged, and that answers another objection, that although a party may be a good juror at the time of his return, he may have parted with his qualification before finding the bills. In the present case, the greatest care should be taken to have all the proceedings regular, as the offence of treason has been made treason-felony by the statute. In all cases in a county of a town, jurors must be at least freemen, and in some cases that was not sufficient, (Gilbert, C. P. 95.) In a corporation, freedom and not freehold makes men libros homines, and the same proposition is laid down (Bacon's Abridgement Tit. Juries, E. 3.) At common law, the fact of a man being a liber homo was evidenced in a city by being a freeman, in a county by having a freehold, Sheridan's case, (31 St. Tr. 583; Mr. Justice Day's judgment, p. 621. Bacon, Abr. Juries, A. vol. 4, new edition, 525-6.) So important was it that a party should be possessed of a freehold, that at common law freehold in ancient demeane or that of a minor, was not sufficient, (Hard. 311.) It would be strange to say that a man who, under the late Jury Act, 3 & 4 W. 4, c. 91,) could not appear on a petty jury, would be qualified to serve on grand juries. In Re Nolan, (2 L. & S.) Sheridan's case decides that a freeman is liber homo, but the court is now called on to go farther, and say that one who does not possess any such qualification can be a grand juror.

Napier, Q.C., same side.—This is a question of great consequence; and it is admitted by the Attorney-General, that there is not any legislative provision by which any one not entitled to rateable property can be a grand juror of the city of Dublin. There is no principle of common law, nor authority of any text writer, which would warrant such a proposition. Kirwan's case went off on the ground that being a freeman by charter is sufficient to answer the requirement of the law. In all the statutes it is required, that in addition to being a freeman, a grand juror should have a property qualification. A plea is the only way in which a prisoner can take advantage of this objection; for he cannot interpose until called upon to answer the indictment; and as to the objection for duplicity, 2 Hawk. cap. 23, sec. 128; Coke, Litt. 303, a.; Chitty v. Dendy (4 N. & M. 842). (Perrin, J.—That would only vary the form of the objection, and would rather apply to the order of pleading several matters, and not to the pleading of several matters of the same value at the same time.) In Sheridan's case it was so done, and no objection was taken. As to the substance of the plea, the older statutes did not constitute the qualifications of jurors, they applied rather to the cases where a party having a freehold was possessed of the necessary qualification (Fitzherbert Nat. Bre. 165; Coke Litt. 157 b.) A grand juror must be a freeholder.

Sergeant O'Brien, in reply.—The plea is bad in form as being double. The cases in the note to 2 Hawk. Pl. C. 23, s. 128, are cases of appeals. In criminal cases, a prisoner cannot have any greater privilege in pleading than in civil, and such a plea would be bad for duplicity. As to the substance, it is conceded that Mr. Boylan might, consistently with anything stated in the plea, be possessed of very considerable chattel property. The proposition has not been considered, that it is sufficient if a grand juror is good and lawful. If extreme cases have been put, a case may also be suggested, and one more likely to occur. A person who has served upon the grand jury, who has taken the oath and discharged the duties of the office, may give information to the prisoner that he was not duly qualified. If the principle contended for be sanctioned, no precaution on the part of the Sheriff would avail, and the ends of justice would be defeated. All the dicta cited from Lord Coke refer to the cases of petty juries, and do not, therefore, apply. Wherever a juror was disqualified, there was a distinct and clear enactment, as appears by the ancient statutes; and unless there is such an enactment, a party cannot be considered as not properly qualified. The statute of 2 Hen. 5, st. 2, c. 3, rendering a freehold qualification necessary, applied to capital cases only, and would seem to support the proposition, that in cases not capital, no qualification was necessary. If the legislature deemed any qualification necessary, it would have imposed a penalty on the party acting without it. The plea, in the present case, should have denied that Mr. Boylan was a good and lawful man; and not having done so, is bad. It is said that the word "inhabitant," includes the case put by the Attorney-General, of a person carrying on business at the house of his father; there is no authority that such a person is an inhabitant; King v. Adlard (4 B. & Cr. 772) would seem to decide that he was not an inhabitant.

Perrin, J.—In this case, a plea in abatement has been filed to the indictment, which states, that two of the grand jurors by whom the bills were found, Mr. Sweetman and Mr. Boylan, were not inhabitants of the county of the city of Dublin, resident within it, or freemen, or seized of any estate. My observations will be principally directed to the objections made to the qualification of Mr. Boylan, because they are more full than the others. The plea states that he was not, at the time of being sworn, or the finding of the bills, an inhabitant of the county of the city, or resident within same, or a freeman, or burgess, or possessor of, or interested in any lands, freehold or leasehold, or possessed of any property in respect of which he is liable to be rated, &c. To this the Attorney-General has demurred, and insists that it presents no valid objection to the indictment, nor any reason why the prisoner should not be tried, and for this reason, that the plea does not shew that Mr. Boylan is not a good and lawful man of the city of Dublin. This case was argued with great ability and propriety, especially by Mr. O'Hagan, the junior counsel on behalf of the prisoner. In considering the validity of the plea, it must be observed, that when a party pleads in abatement particular matters of disqualification, he admits the existence of all matters which are not denied by the plea; he rests on the objections assigned, and cannot bring forward any other. We think the authorities cited rather shew what the law was, than what it is; and that the statutes referred to in argument have been repealed, or consolidated, by the 3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 91, but we considered it right, and due to the learned counsel who cited them, to read and examine them. I will not, therefore, discuss them in detail, but will proceed to examine the objections assigned—first, that Mr. Boylan is not an inhabitant of, or resident within the city of Dublin, or possessed of, or entitled to, rateable property within it. Although it may be true that he is not possessed of rateable property, or an inhabitant of Dublin, yet he is impannelled by the name of Patrick Boylan, of the city of Dublin, merchant; and, though not an inhabitant, he may be an extensive merchant carrying on his trade there; he might be connected, and conversant there, in business hours every day, in the shop of a partner or parent, as manager or conductor. A case has been referred to by the counsel on both sides, and very well remarked on by Mr. O'Hagan—the King v. Adlard (4 B. & Cr. 772) which shews, that without being an inhabitant or resident, a man may be of a place. The defect carried on his trade at the house of a partner, and was in the habit of resorting there on working days, and sometimes remained at night but did not sleep. It was held that he was not an inhabitant or resident. There is also another case in the same book to the same effect, page 959, Rex v. Inhabitants of New Curry, where there is an observation by Justice

Holroyd which shews that a person may be conversant and commorant in a city, and carry on business there, yet, if he sleep outside it, would not be an inhabitant or resident. It appears to me that case decides that the word inhabitant does not necessarily embrace a person carrying on business in the place. The next objection is, that Mr. Boylan is not possessed of, or entitled to any property in the city liable to be rated. Now, this objection is confined, and does not deny that he is a merchant possessed of property; and, consistently with anything pleaded, he might be possessed of merchandize of great value, though not rated in respect of it. The next objection is, that he is not a freeman or burgess. With respect to that, the plea does not deny that he is, in the words of the precept, a good, honest, and lawful man of the city of Dublin; but it denies that he is a freeman of the city of Dublin—that is, he is not a freeman by tenure or by birth. It is important to consider, that by the law of the land, all men not stigmatized by crime are now freemen, except outlaws and convicts; that vassalage and villeinage being abolished and at an end, all the subjects of this country are freemen, not by tenure from any one, or by charter from the crown, but by the law of the land. Therefore, as I before observed, this plea does not deny that Mr. Boylan is a free, good, and honest man of the city of Dublin; for he may be of the city of Dublin, though not an inhabitant or resident in it. If a man resides in one place, and transacts business in another, he is a man of one place or the other (Com. Dig. Abatement, F. 25; Felwyls. Dig., and see Barnes, 162), therefore, as Canadians (to meet a case cited in argument) would not answer that description, I do not think they could be fairly described as merchants of the city of Dublin. In order to detract from the ability to serve as a grand juror, some disqualification must be averred. Now, here Mr. Boylan may be the eldest son of a resident merchant of considerable property, and he may conduct his business. I did not intend to notice the objection to the form of the plea, as I would rather decide this question on the substance; but I may mention, that I consider the form of it is borne out by the precedent in Kirwan's case, though perhaps not strictly, and if the two objections had been put in one plea, on the authority of that case it would be sufficient. A man may not have a rood of ground, or rent a house in Dublin, he may not be liable to any taxes, yet he may be a principal merchant in the city, and may have property to a considerable amount in the Custom House; he may be a manager of one of the banks, and he may be on the special jurors' book by the 24th section of the 3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 91. And though all the allegations in the plea were true, as to the necessity of a grand juror being a freeholder, I need not observe upon that, after the opinion expressed by the Judges in the case in Ry. & Russ. R., followed, as it has been, by the Acts of Parliament affecting Great Britain upon that subject, and which contain no provision that would affect the opinion there expressed, that a freehold qualification is not necessary. The objection in the present case seems to be taken from the late statute, although, in the course of the argument, it was assumed that it had no bearing on the subject.

The matter is not very clear, but my opinion is, that the statute does affect the question. In Nolan's case the point was not pressed by counsel in the argument, and, when attention was called to it, was given up; and it was remarked by one of the Judges, that it was not considered necessary to decide that point; and when we look to the title of the act—to consolidate and simplify the laws relating to the qualifications of jurors and the formation of juries—it would be difficult to say that the legislature did not mean to make some provision with respect to grand jurors. "The act provides that the Sheriff shall not, in any venire facias, or precept," (which is the process by which grand jurors are summoned) "return the name of any person not qualified to serve on juries according to the act; and the first section provides what shall be the qualifications of those liable to serve. There are frequently to be met through the act the words "trial of issues," and that, of course, confines that part of the statute to petty juries. The words used in the first section are, "such persons, &c., shall be liable to serve on grand juries, in Courts of Sessions of the Peace;" and in the 10th section it is enacted, "that every precept for the return of jurors shall direct the Sheriff to return a competent number of good and lawful men of the body of the county qualified according to law." That section seems to me to comprehend persons summoned on grand juries; for the precept of this court is not distinct for grand and petty jurors. By the 11th section, the Sheriff is not to return the name of any person not contained in the jurors' book, whence it would seem to be a fair inference that all persons who are directed to be put on that book are to be deemed and supposed to have the necessary qualification, though it is not by any means conclusive upon it. The 20th section provides, that want of freehold shall not be ground of challenge. The 24th and 33rd sections appear to me very important in considering this question; particularly the case of a merchant having a residence outside of the city, and coming in to carry on his business; or if he be the son of such a person; for the Sheriff is to take from the book the names of the sons of persons, &c., persons who have served the office of grand jurors, the eldest sons of such persons, and he is to put them on a list,—for what purpose? for the purpose of having a list whence the grand juries are to be called, or the special juries empannelled. The 33rd section enacts, that the Sheriff shall be indemnified for returning any person who is named in the jurors' book, and in all the sections where the legislature intended to confine the term "sessions," to "sessions of the peace," it is so expressed; in this section, the meaning of the term must be, sessions of Oyer and Terminer, and general gaol delivery, there being nothing to confine it. He may, therefore, call persons not inserted on the jurors' book. Above all, the 24th section qualifies the eldest sons of merchants and persons carrying on wholesale trades, possessed of £5,000, to be put upon special juries, not by virtue of any personal qualifications of their own, but as the eldest sons of such persons. My opinion is, that this act does contemplate grand jurors as well as others, and that it does not prohibit the return of a person circumstanced as I have observed in the early part of my observations. The just inference, therefore, is, that any person qualified to serve as a special juror, may serve, and is liable to be returned as a grand juror; and it is every day's experience, in counties, that the eldest sons of noblemen and persons of rank are sworn upon grand juries, although they may have no personal qualification. I am of opinion, therefore, that this plea is deficient, and that neither Mr. Sweetman nor Mr. Boylan are shewn to be disqualified.

RICHARDS, B.—In this case, I have very little to add to what has been said by my brother Perrin. As to the objection made by the counsel for the crown to the form of the plea, I content myself by saying, that I concur in what has been already stated; and, with respect to the substance of the plea, I also concur in the judgment pronounced. After as careful an examination of all the cases and authorities to which we have been referred, as time would permit, I cannot find that it has ever been held—except where made necessary by statute—that grand jurors should have any particular qualification in point of property. A grand juror should be a liber homo, a freeman as contradistinguished from a villein; he should be taken from the body of the county for which he is called on to act. It is laid down (2 Hale, 155), that at common law it is necessary for a grand juror to have a freehold, and the same doctrine is repeated elsewhere, and appears to have been admitted by the counsel in the case of King v. Sheridan (31 St. Trials); but it is no where laid down what the amount in value of that freehold should be. If I might venture to account for the notion, that at common law a grand juror should be a freeholder, while the value of his freehold does not appear to have been in any degree material, I would say that such an opinion prevailed, because in early times the distinguishing characteristic of a freeman was a frank tenement. A villein could not be a legal juror, and a man who held lands in frank tenement could not be a villein; so that it was only important to consider whether a man was a freeholder, and not the amount of his freehold, and this view receives confirmation from the recitals contained in the statutes 13 Ed. 1, c. 38, and 21 Ed. 1, c. 1. The 21 Ed. 1 prescribes a qualification for grand jurors, but it was not intended to interfere with cities or counties of towns, many of which had, by charter, been invested with privileges long before. The tests adopted in counties for considering whether a man was a liber homo would not answer for, and could not be applied to cities; and other tests were necessary, by which the same thing might be ascertained. The form of the 2 H. 5, c. 3, being general, was held to extend to cities, but was found so inconvenient that the legislature, by the 23 H. 8, repealed that statute, so far as related to cities and towns. The act of Henry 5 was extended to this country by Poyning's act, while the 23 of H. 8, was not passed till after; therefore the 2 H. 5 remained the law in Ireland till the 3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 91. However, the statute of Henry 5—even if not repealed—could not apply to the present case, so far as it proposed to deal with the criminal law; for it was confined to capital cases, and the present is not such an one. I now come to the case of the King v. Sheridan, which decided, that except in cases within the statutes (the 2 H. 5 not being then repealed), a grand juror of a city need not have a freehold, it was argued that a freeman of a city must be regarded in the same light as a freeholder of a county at large; but I apprehend that it cannot now be argued, that a man may not be liber, and good and lawful, without being a freeman. I should find it very difficult to say what person at common law is disqualified from acting as a grand juror at Commissions of Oyer and Terminer, no law or case laying down that any qualification is necessary beyond what I have stated. The 3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 91, enacts, that the several persons qualified in manner therein mentioned shall be liable to serve on grand juries in Courts of Sessions of the Peace, and that manifestly extends only to courts inferior to those of Oyer and Terminer and General Gaol Delivery. It was not intended that this act should extend to assizes or sessions of Oyer and Terminer, and I would refer to the 33rd section, which contains an express exception to that effect. It was the general policy of this act, that all qualified persons should be put upon the jurors' book; yet here is a section which enables the Sheriff to go out of this book. Possibly it was thought unnecessary to pass any law as to the amount of the qualifications of grand jurors at assizes, regard being had to the class of persons who usually served, though it might be necessary to do so in case of Sessions of the Peace. Upon the whole, I consider the term liber homo, as applied to jurors, was used to distinguish the freeman from the villein; and as the latter no longer exists, I would say that every liege subject, not disqualified, is a liber homo, in the eye of the law and qualified to serve. It was insisted that a juror cannot legally act as such unless he be of the body of the county, and that consistently with the allegations in the plea, Mr. Boylan cannot be considered as of the body of the county. Now, I take it, that consistently with anything in this plea contained, Mr. Boylan may be a merchant in the city, he may have a partner there, and, though he may have his residence outside of the city, he may spend the entire day in transacting his business there; he may be a director of some of the banks, and may have a share in the concern, and I should call such a person of the city of Dublin, although he may not be an inhabitant, or freeman, or possessed of any rateable property in it; he is described on the panel as of the city of Dublin, merchant, and that, if true, entitles him to be a juror, and is not negatived in terms, or in substance, by any allegation in the plea. Extreme cases may and have been put in the course of the argument, but when such occur, if ever they do, the court will know how to deal with them. The present question is, whether Mr. Boylan is of the city of Dublin, merchant—whether he may not be so, consistently with this plea; and if he be, the case put, of the Canadian sailors is an extreme one which does not apply, and has no bearing on the question. My brother Perrin has referred to the case of the King v. Adlard, and the opinion expressed by the Judges in the case in R. & Ryan; it is unnecessary for me to allude further to them. For these reasons, therefore, I concur in the judgment of the court.

The court having pronounced judgment of respondent oster, the prisoner was now again called upon to plead to the indictment.

The first count of the indictment stated, that the jurors for our lady the Queen upon their oath present that Charles Gavan Duffy, after the passing of an Act of Parliament made and passed in the eleventh year of the reign of our sovereign lady Queen Victoria, &c., feloniously did compass, imagine, invent, devise, and intend to deprive and depose our lady the Queen from the style, honour, and royal name of the imperial crown of the United Kingdom, and the said felonious compassing, imagination, invention, device, and intention, he, the said Charles Gavan Duffy, then and there feloniously did express, utter, and declare, by then and there feloniously publishing a certain printing in a certain number of a certain public newspaper called the Nation, which said printing is entitled "The Business of To-day," and contains, among other things, according to the tenor and effect following, that is to say (setting out one portion of the article complained of); and in another part thereof, according to the tenor and effect following, that is to say (setting out another portion of the same publication); "And the said felonious compassing, imagination, invention, device, and intention, he, the said Charles Gavan Duffy, afterwards, and after the passing of the said Act of Parliament so passed, &c., on the seventeenth day of June, in the said eleventh year of the reign aforesaid, at, &c., did further feloniously express, utter, and declare, by then and there feloniously publishing a certain other printing in one other number of the said public newspaper called the Nation, which said last-mentioned printing is entitled "The Uses of the Union," and contains, among other things, according to the tenor and effect following, that is to say (setting out a portion of the second publication), and so on throughout all the articles.

The second count stated, that the said Charles Gavan Duffy, after the passing of the said act, &c., on the third day of June, &c., feloniously did further compass, imagine, invent, devise, and intend to deprive and depose our said lady the Queen from the style, honour, and royal name of the imperial crown of the United Kingdom; and the said last-mentioned felonious compassing, imagination, invention, device, and intention did then and there feloniously express, utter, and declare, by divers overt acts and deeds hereinafter mentioned, that is to say, in order to fulfil, perfect, and bring into effect his most evil and wicked felony and felonious compassing, imagination, invention, device, and intention, last aforesaid, he, the said Charles Gavan Duffy, on the said third day of June, in the eleventh year of the reign, at, &c., did feloniously publish in a certain other number of a certain other public newspaper called the Nation, a certain other printing of and concerning a certain other treasonable revolution by him, the said Charles Gavan Duffy, &c., then and there feloniously devised and intended to be carried into effect by force of arms, and by traitorously levying war against our said lady the Queen, and to deprive and depose our said lady the Queen from the style, honour, and royal name of the imperial crown of the United Kingdom, and of and concerning the said war so intended to be levied as aforesaid, which said last mentioned printing is entitled "The Business of To-day," and contains, among other things, according to the tenor and effect following, that is to say (setting out the publication as in the first count); "and further to fulfil, perfect, and bring into effect his said last-mentioned most evil and wicked felony and felonious compassing, imagination, invention, device, and intention, aforesaid, he, the said Charles Gavan Duffy afterwards, and after the passing of the said act, and on the seventeenth day of June, in the year, &c., at, &c., did feloniously publish in one other number of the said public newspaper called the Nation, a certain other printing of and concerning a certain treasonable revolution by him, the said Charles Gavan Duffy, &c., then and there feloniously devised and intended to be carried into effect, in order to deprive and depose our said lady the Queen from the style, honour, and royal name of the imperial crown of the United Kingdom, which said last-mentioned printing is entitled "The Uses of the Union," and contains, among other things, according to the tenor and effect following, that is to say (setting out another portion), and so through the remainder of the publication. The third count was similar to the first, and the fourth to the second, but stating the publications as overt acts.

The fifth count stated "that the said Charles Gavan Duffy, after the passing of the said act of parliament, made and passed in the eleventh year of the reign of our said sovereign lady Queen Victoria, entitled 'An Act for the better security of the Crown and Government of the United Kingdom,' on the third day of June, in the eleventh year of the reign of our said sovereign lady Queen Victoria, with force and arms, within the united kingdom, at the said parish of St. Thomas, in the county of the city of Dublin aforesaid, feloniously did further compass, imagine, invent, devise, and intend to deprive and depose our said lady the Queen from the style, honour, and royal name of the imperial crown of the united kingdom, and the said last-mentioned felonious compassing, imagination, invention, device, and intention, did then and there feloniously express, utter, and declare, by divers overt acts and deeds hereinafter mentioned, that is to say, in order to fulfil, perfect, and bring to effect, his most evil and wicked felony, and felonious compassing, imagination, invention, device and intention aforesaid, he, the said Charles Gavan Duffy, on the said third day of June, in the said eleventh year of the reign aforesaid, and on divers other days and times after the said third day of June, to wit, on the seventeenth day of the same month of June, in the eleventh year of the reign aforesaid, on the twenty-fourth day of the same month of June, in the twelfth year of the reign aforesaid; on the first day of July then next following, on the eighth day of the same month of July, on the fifteenth day of the same month of July, on the twenty-second day of the same month of July, and on the twenty-ninth day of the same month of July, in the twelfth year of the reign aforesaid, at, &c., feloniously did publish divers other printings in divers numbers of a certain public newspaper called The Nation, of which he the said Charles Gavan Duffy then and there was the proprietor and publisher, and also divers other writings of him the said Charles Gavan Duffy, by him then and there written, the said last-mentioned printings and writings containing, amongst other things, incitements, encouragements, advices, and exhortations to the liege subjects of our said lady the Queen in that part of the united kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland called Ireland, against our said sovereign lady the Queen, to rise and rebel and treasonably depose our said sovereign lady the Queen from the style, honour, and royal name of the imperial crown of the united kingdom, to deprive and depose against the form of the statute in such case made and provided, and against the peace of our lady the Queen, her crown and dignity." The sixth count was similar to the fifth, but stating the intent to be to levy war.

The prisoner demurred generally to each count. Joinder in demurrer by the crown.

Dec. 23.—Sir Colman O'Loughlen for the demurrer.—The indictment in this case consists of six counts, which, however, resolve themselves into three, as the 1st and 3rd are nearly similar, and so are the 2nd and 4th, and the 5th and 6th, only laying different intents. This is the first question ever raised to the form of an indictment under the Treason Felony Act; for the objection raised in the Queen v. Martin was by writ of error after judgment, and by the 9 Geo. 4, c. 54, sections 31 and 32, it is provided, that if the counts of an indictment follow the words of the statute creating the crime that will be sufficient after judgment, therefore, that case did not apply. By the 3rd section of 11 & 12 Vic. c. 12, the offence charged in the present indictment is defined; and that section provides "That if any person shall compass, imagine, invent, devise, or intend to deprive or depose the Queen from the style, honour, or royal name of the imperial crown of the United Kingdom, or any of her Majesty's dominions, or to levy war against her Majesty within any part of the United Kingdom, in order, by force or constraint, to compel her to change her measures or counsels, or in order to put any force or constraint upon, or in order to intimidate either house of Parliament, or to move or stir any foreigner or stranger with force, to invade the United Kingdom, or any other her Majesty's dominions, and such compassings, imaginations, inventions, devices, or intentions, or any of them, shall express, utter, or declare, by publishing any printing or writing, or by open and advised speaking, or by any overt act or deed, every person so offending shall be guilty of felony, &c." It is clear from the words of the statute that two things are essential; first, the compassing any of the intentions mentioned; and, secondly, the expressing, uttering, or declaring such compassing in the manner pointed out by the act. Both must combine; for there is this distinction between treason felony and treason alone. Treason consists in the compassing, but to constitute treason-felony there must be the compassing and the expression of it; for the words used in the act are, "and such compassings," &c. Treason-felony may be committed in three distinct ways—first, by printing or writing;

secondly, by open and advised speaking; thirdly, by act or deed. The printing and speaking are not overt acts, they are crimes in themselves. That must be the construction; the principle is laid down in Dwarris on Statutes (578 Ed. 1848), that where the words used in a subsequent part of the section are larger, they may include the preceding words—where smaller, they cannot, referring to the cases of King v. Bolton (8 B. & Cr. 74, and 5 Rep. 119). By the fourth section, no one is to be prosecuted, &c., "for open and advised speaking only, unless, &c.," which clearly shows it was the intention of the legislature that open speaking should constitute a crime, and not be an overt act. The two counts last in the indictment were bad for confounding these three crimes, which were made distinct by the act; besides the felonies were stated in too general a manner. These counts were nearly similar, merely varying the intent, the 5th charging the compassing to depose the Queen, the 6th compassing to levy war. The words of the count are, that the said Charles Gavan Duffy, after the passing of the act, &c., did feloniously compass and imagine, &c., to depose the Queen, and did express that felonious intention by divers overt acts, &c. The only overt acts alleged are publications, and if the distinction be correct that there are three crimes, these counts are bad as confounding them. These counts are also bad being too general; the publishing, &c., is part of the corpus delicti, and the writings should be set forth, Sacheverell's case (15 St. Tr. 466). All the words and writings supposed to be criminal must be specified in the indictment. In high treason the words need not be set forth, as the crime consists in the compassing alone, Zenobia's case (6 T. R. 162); but in an indictment for libel, the words must be set forth (2 East. P. C. 1122). In an indictment for writing a threatening letter under the 15 & 16 G. 3, cap. 21, it was held that the letter should be set out; also for burglary, the instrument forged must be set forth, as being part of the corpus delicti, King v. Sparling (1 Strange, 498); King v. Popplewell (ibid. 686); King v. How (ibid. 699); King v. Chene (4 B. & Cr. 902; 2 Hawk. cap. 25, sec. 59), who refers to 3 Inst. 41, which was an indictment under the Statute of Heresy, and Lord Coke held it to be bad, as "a general indictment is insufficient in law, albeit the words of the statute are general." The words of the present indictment are precisely similar to that case, and must, therefore, be bad. By the 7th section of the act it is provided, that any one prosecuted for felony should not be prosecuted for treason on the same facts. If the words, &c., are not set forth, how could a party, upon a subsequent trial, shew that he had been already tried for the same offence? By the 4th section it is provided, "that the words used should be set forth on oath, and that no person should be convicted unless, &c." Now, if the words used are necessary to be set forth in an information, in a preliminary stage of the prosecution, it would seem that they should be also set forth in the indictment. The last two counts are therefore bad on this ground alone. The other four counts cannot be supported, they are bad for duplicity and for being too general. As to the objection of duplicity, it can only be taken advantage of by demurrer and the same rule applies in civil as well as criminal cases. In King v. Roberts (Cather, 226), which was an information against a ferryman for taking more than the regular tolls, it was held that every extortion was a separate offence, and they should not be all joined. All the cases are collected in Gabbett's Crim. Dig. vol. 2, p. 234. In Campbell and Haynes v. Queen (1 Cox, 279)—though not exactly in point—the doctrine of duplicity, as stated in that case, was affirmed on a writ of error, and Lord Denman takes it for granted that the rules in civil and criminal cases are the same. The next question is, do these four counts charge the prisoner with one or several offences? and that will depend on the construction of the act, if three several offences are created, each count cannot contain them. The first count sets forth several different articles, and each of these constitute a distinct felony. The words of the act are “by publishing” or “writing,” in the singular number, and if one article only was published, that would be a complete offence in itself. This statute is highly penal, and must be construed strictly. (Perrin, J.—What do you say to the fifth section?) That section enables the prosecutor to charge different felonies in the same indictment, but not in the same count. There is a similar provision in the Embezzlement Act (9 Geo. 4, c. 55, sec. 41), which enables a prosecutor to charge three acts in the same indictment; that statute has never received a judicial determination in a court of error, but the practice has been not to charge different offences in the same count (Arch. Cri. Pl. last ed. 275). Queen v. Purchase (Car. & Mar. 617), is not exactly in point, but, coupled with the uniform practice, bears out this view; besides, where different offences are charged in the same count, the grand jury may find the bills on one article, and the petty jury find the prisoner guilty on another. These counts are also bad, for not setting out the writings and words which form the gist of the offence. These counts do not set forth the articles, only part of them; and there is not any averment in that part, that the prisoner did declare such compassings, &c., with the meaning attributed to them, for any thing appearing he may have expressed them in a certain other part not set forth. There is no colloquium, no averment of extrinsic facts, and when these are not averred the crown cannot go into evidence of them. Thus it is set forth in the articles that “when the French revolution,” &c., “that the two repeal associations should be dissolved, and that had never more devoted disciples,” “Loyola,” &c., and there is no averment what the French revolution is, what the repeal association, or who Loyola was. It is laid down by Hale and Foster that to constitute treason there must be publishing expressive of a traitorous design then in existence. [Counsel also referred to Hale, 118; Foster, High Treason, cap. 1 sec. 6; Watson's case, (32 St. Tr. 579); Thistlewood's case, (33 St. Tr. 684).]

Dec. 28.—Baldwin, Q.C.—This indictment contains six counts; the first four set out the publications charged as felonious, the fifth and sixth are general. It was argued by Sir Colman O’Loghlin that these counts, though objectionable under the

Treason Felony Act (11 & 12 Vic. c. 12), would be good counts in treason,—taking the distinction between treason, and treason-felony, that in the former, the compassing alone was the offence; in the latter, it was a compassing by publication, which, being incorporated into the offence, should be stated. If we consider what the intention of the statute was, these counts are right, if they follow the precedents in treason, there is no distinction. The general scope and state of the law under the 36 Geo. 3, is applicable to this act. The compassing to depose, or to levy war, were not substantive treasons until they were made so by the 36 Geo. 3, they were merely overt acts of treason. The crime of treason is stated by Abbott, C. J., in his charge to the grand jury in Thistlewood's case (33 State Trials, 684) to “consist in the compassing, imagination, or intention to perpetrate the acts, and not in the actual perpetration of them;” that under the 36 Geo. 3, the law further requires “that the party shall express, utter, or declare his intention, by publishing some printing or writing, or by some overt act or deed. The law has thus wisely provided, that in cases of this kind, which manifestly tend to the most extensive public evil, the intention shall constitute the crime; but the law has, at the same time, with equal wisdom, provided that the intention shall be manifested by some act tending towards the accomplishment of the criminal object.” It is contended that by the 11 & 12 Vic. the crime of compassing, as created by the 36 Geo. 3, under the Treason Felony Act, has become three treasons—three distinct classes of crime—compassing by printing or writing, compassing by open or advised speaking, and compassing by any overt act or deed. I admit there must be an expression of the compassing, but the publication is only the evidence, only one portion of the crime; but there is but one class of crime evidenced by any of these three modes of proof. The third section of the 11 & 12 Vic. is relied upon on the other side, and it is said, that throughout it contemplates the publishing as the offence, that the words are, “if any person shall express, utter, or declare,” by any of the three following modes, that is, “by publishing, by open and advised speaking, or any other overt act.” Where larger words occur in the subsequent portion of the section, they should be construed to mean things ejusdem generis with those previously enumerated. The section would then read thus:—by open or advised speaking, or by any overt act or deed whatsoever; and the latter word should be incorporated in the sentence. The 4th section is altogether conversant with evidence, and enacts, that “no person shall be convicted of any such compassings, &c., in so far as the same are expressed by open and advised speaking only.” The 5th section enacts, that it shall be lawful in any indictment for any felony under this act to charge against the offender any number of the matters, acts, or deeds, by which such compassings, &c., or any of them, shall have been expressed,” &c. The expression felony in the singular there means the compassing; if the argument on the other side be true, it should be felonies; and we would then have as many felonies as there are evidences of it. It is said the concluding words “or any of them," are large enough to admit of the construction contended for. How can they possibly be applied to the felony with the same effect as to the "printings and publishings" which are the expressions of the offence? The law appears to me to be, that the felony is complete by the compassing alone, and that any number of matters may be urged as expressions of the intention. The mode of laying the offence in the indictment is identical with that under the 36 Geo. 3. This is admitted to be a good count in treason. (Perrin, J.—Suppose the indictment contained a charge of compassing only, could you have judgment?) There are two things necessary to constitute the offence; but there is only one offence, the evidence of which must be stated in the indictment. There are mental treasons, and the law requires that some evidence of the intention, or proof of the offences, should be stated in the indictment. The 36 Geo. 3 applied to England alone, a portion of it is, by the 11 & 12 Vic. c. 12, extended to Ireland. The intention of the legislature was to abate the punishment applicable to treason, by assigning the latter to the class of felonies. These counts would be good under the 36 Geo. 3, as for treason, and are so under the 11 & 12 Vic. c. 12, which makes the treason a felony. The offence is the compassing under the 36 Geo. 3, and there is the same language in the 11 & 12 Vic. It is absurd to contend that what was a single offence on the 1st of April became a threefold offence on 1st of May; and it is now too late to say that every proceeding under the 36 Geo. 3 has been erroneous. In Watson's case (32 State Trials, 87-89) it was objected that no overt acts were set out. (Perrin, J.—That indictment was not under the 36 Geo. 3.) The 7th section shews that the intention of the legislature was, that the offences should be identical; it enacts, that no indictment shall be deemed bad because the facts or matters therein contained shall amount to treason. If we can shew that there can be no distinction, then there is but one crime evidenced by the writings; and in that case not to set out the writings in extenso is more in accordance with the practice of the court, and less embarrassing to the prisoner. The articles set out clearly amount to treason under this act. In the Queen v. Martin (1 Ir. Jur. 54), all the articles were set out in full, only some here, and there the general counts were held to be good. (Perrin, J.—My Lord Chief Justice expressed no opinion as to the general counts; he merely observed that they were conformable to the precedents in high treason under the 36 Geo. 3.)

Butt, Q.C., in reply.—This indictment contains six counts. The first and third are framed on the provisions of the statute 11 & 12 Vic. c. 12, relating to publishing "by printing or writing," and are similar, with this exception,—that the first states the felonious compassing to be with the intent to depose the Queen; the third, with an intent to levy war against our lady the Queen, in order by force and constraint to compel her to change her measures and counsels; and both counts state the expression of the intent by feloniously publishing, &c. These counts are bad upon three grounds; first, the writings by which the compassings are said to be expressed are not set out with sufficient certainty; secondly, they severally charge distinct felonies in a manner not allowed by law; and, thirdly, the printings and writings are not introduced with the inducements and averments necessary to fix the felonious meaning imputed to them by the indictment. With respect to the first objection, the first count alleges nine distinct printings, seven of which are set out partially, two (the 3rd and 9th) are entire. From the mode adopted of stating these writings, it is impossible to say whether they constitute an offence within the meaning of the statute. It is only necessary to read the language of the act to shew that the publishing the printing or the writing is a necessary ingredient.—"If any person shall compass, &c., and such compassings shall express, utter, or declare, by publishing any printing or writing," &c. This shews that the expressing and uttering was the previous offence. The "expression" is as much a term of art in an indictment under this act, as the word "murder" in an indictment for that offence. This being a new felony created by this act, it is only confusing to refer to the forms of indictments in cases of treason. A man might be indicted under this act when he could not be indicted for treason, as if the limitation of three years given by the 1 & 2 Geo. 4, c. 24, Ir. had passed. If then the publishing of the printings or writings be a material ingredient in the offence, the writings or printings should be set out. In 1 Hale, 169 it is said, that "in the narrative of the offence all circumstances should concur which are necessary to ascertain the fact and its nature" (Dyer, 198); King v. Horne (Cowp. 672); and it is important the court should have the whole writings complained of before it, when the amount of punishment is so much in its discretion. In 2 Hawk. c. 25, s. 57, p. 310, it is said, "that the special matter of the whole fact ought to be set forth with certainty, that it may judicially appear to the court that the prosecutor has not gone on insufficient premises." In this case it is impossible to say whether the grand jury have not found the bills on improper evidence, perhaps on the portions of these articles not set out; and in 2 Hawk. P.C. c. 25, s. 59, it is said "every indictment must charge a man with an offence particularly and certainly expressed; for no one can plead to an uncertain charge, neither can it appear that the facts given in evidence are the same of which the indictors have accused him, neither can it judicially appear to the court what punishment is proper for an offence so loosely expressed. "And in Sacheverell's case (15 State Trials, 1), it was said, the particular words supposed to be criminal ought to be expressly specified. Cases of libel afford the most natural analogy; and in these the words asserted to be libellous must be set out fully, Wright v. Clements (8 B. & Al. 503); Gutale v. Matthews (1 M. & W. 495); Woods v. Brown (6 Taun. 169, S.C.; 1 Marsh. 522); Zenobio v. Astell (6 T. R. 162). In King v. Nield (6 East. 417), Lord Ellenborough doubts the authority of King v. Fuller (1 Bos. & Pul. 180), and says, "I do not know any case where an offence consists in words when the same general and compendious method of describing it has been deemed sufficient, without stating the words in writing necessary to constitute the offence." In Wright v. Clements Bayley, J., says, "A defendant in a case like this has a right to expect that the plaintiff, in his declaration, will set out the very words used, or so much as he means to rely upon." That case fully establishes the principle of the rule contended for. It is quite consistent with the statements in this indictment that the guilty portions are not set out. (Perria, J.—The case of the King v. Williams, which was an indictment for publishing Paine's Age of Reason, is a strong authority against you. I will go this length with you, that if the portions of the articles set out do not express a treasonable intent, the count must fail.) In Clements v. Fisher (7 B. & C. 459), the declaration was held bad for not averring that the words were spoken "of and concerning the plaintiff." In criminal cases no colloquium is necessary, but every averment necessary to constitute the crime must be set out. It is by the writings and printings in this case that the prisoner is said to have expressed, uttered, and declared his intention, and is different from cases of libel in this respect, that here the court cannot look to the import of the words. This principle will be found fully established in several classes of crimes. In cases of forgery, before the 2 & 3 Wm. 4, c. 123, s. 3, the instrument forged should be set out; and the same rule existed in cases for administering unlawful oaths before the 27 Geo. 3, c. 15, s. 7. In perjury, before the 31 Geo. 3, c. 18, s. 1, and in indictments for false pretences the same rule will be found. Murray's case (2 Strange, 1127); Perrot's case (2 Man. & Sel. 379); Young v. The King in Error (3 T. R. 102). If a prisoner be indicted under the statute of Ed. 3, it is necessary to set out the overt acts, which before that statute was unnecessary, the compassing being considered as the treason, and the overt acts the means made use of to effectuate the intention (Foster, 193). In Kelyng 8, it is laid down that if the indictment alleges one overt act it is sufficient, and that the prosecutor may prove as many others as he thinks fit. The 36 Geo. 3, Eng. first required the setting out the overt acts. There is no analogy between the overt acts under the statute of Edward and this act; the overt acts under that statute and that of 12 & 13 Wm. 3, c. 2, Eng. (2 Anne, c. 5, s. 1, lc.) were merely evidence. If it be true, then, that the printing or writing is the gist of the offence, the grand jury have not, on this indictment, given the court the means of knowing whether it has been found on sufficient evidence. The omitted passages of these articles may be those on which the grand jury have acted. The indictment should shew on what articles the bills were found (4 Went. Pl. 199), and no view of the writings themselves will supply the defect. It will be argued, that there being two writings fully set out, it will be sufficient (Foster, 194), and the analogy of treason will be relied on, Lowick's case (13 State Trials, 267). Assuming these counts bad on the first point, there are two articles free from this vice. In Laver's case (16 St. Trials, 93), it is said that if the overt act be badly laid, it should be taken as if it were out of the indictment, and no evidence should be given thereon. The cases of assignments of perjury are analogous; and if one perjury be well assigned, judgment may be given thereon: Queen v. Rhodes (2 L. Ray, 886). This case was commented on, and approved of by, Lord Denman in Queen v. O'Connell (11 CL & F. 379); Queen v. Harris (1 Car. & Mar. 665). If this count, as regards these two articles, be good, the court will treat this demurrer as divisible, and call on the prisoner to answer the good portions only. This was the old practice of the courts, and the recent authorities shew an inclination to return to it. These letters cannot have the meaning attributed to them; there is no allegation to shew the guilty intent, and there is nothing in the writings themselves to bear the meaning attributed to them. Does the statute of the 36 Geo. 3 enable the prosecutor to charge any publication as an overt act not permitted by the statute of Edward? The Attorney-General should go further, and say whether this be a treasonable writing, within the statute 11 & 12 Vic. c. 12, and if it have two meanings—one an innocent, and the other a guilty intention—the prosecutor should set out clearly the guilty intention. There is no precedent of an indictment under the 36 Geo. 3 which adopts this mode of setting out the publications. The writings in this and the third count are set out as publications, and not as overt acts. If your Lordships should think that one portion of the count is good and another bad, the proper judgment is that we should answer the good part, Monkman v. Shepherdson (11 Ad. & El. 411); Hinde v. Gray (1 Man. & Gr. 201, note); Pinkney v. the Inhabitants of Rutland (2 Saund. 379; Com. Dig. Pl. c. 32); Briscoe v. Hill (10 M. & W. 735); Queen v. Burraston (4 Jur. 698), shews that where there are several acts laid as one offence, there may be a demurrer to the whole. The precedents in O'Coigley's case (26 State Trials, 1191), Despard's case (28 State Trials, 345), O'Connor's case (26 State Trials, 1191), Watson's case (32 State Trials, 1), Brandreth's case (32 State Trials, 755), Thistlewood's case (33 State Trials, 681), all infer but the one declaration, but the one compassing. Watson's case is no authority against us, as the evidence was given on the third count, which was for levying war, and therefore no authority either as to the general count. The compassing is laid on the 3rd of June, and that the prisoner further expressed it by publications on subsequent days. The act allows of several felonies being charged in an indictment under its provisions, but confines the party to one compassing. The only mode of satisfying the statute is to lay all the acts as one transaction, with a continuando on the following days, Thistlewood's case. The second count is bad for repugnancy; the time is in this case essential (2 Hawk. P. C. c. 25, s. 27, 324). The publications are laid as overt acts, first, on the 3rd of June, and that the prisoner did "then and there" feloniously publish, &c., and then, that to fulfil the said last-mentioned compassing, on the 17th day of June he published, &c., and so on several subsequent days. The word "feloniously" is not laid except to the first act, although several acts are stated to have been committed at subsequent periods. This could have been avoided by following the precedent in Thistlewood's case; the prosecutors fell into this mistake in avoiding the evil pointed at in the note to Mr. Cox's edition of this act. The case of Dennison v. Richardson (14 East. 296), shows in civil cases how strong the court will lean against the objection of repugnancy. The 5th and 6th counts are open to the same objection; in both, the overt acts of compassing are laid on the 3rd of June and on several days after. This count is also bad for misdescription of the offence. These writings should be set out as publications, and not as overt acts. There may be publications which are not overt acts, and the statute includes such, as is shewn by the words of the 4th section—"no one shall be indicted for any compassing, so far as same may be expressed by open and advised speaking only," Rex v. Douglas (1 Camp. 212); Rex v. Howell (6 Car. & P. 148, S. C.; 1 Mood, C. C. 405; 1 Arch. C. P. 99, ed. 1846).

Dec. 29.—The Attorney-General in reply.—The indictment follows the precise words of the third section, "That the prisoner feloniously did compass, &c., and the same feloniously did express, &c.," by publishing a certain printing, containing among other things according to the tenor and effect following, setting out the portion of article relied upon. First, it is alleged that this count is not sufficiently certain, there being no sufficient expression of the compassing. Secondly, that there are no explanatory averments or innuendoes; and lastly, that it is bad for duplicity. The first and third counts being similar, with this exception, that the first states the intention to be to depose the Queen, the latter to levy war against her, must abide the same rule. I will consider these objections in their order in the indictment. It cannot be denied but that if this were an indictment for libel, forgery, or sending a threatening letter, it would be necessary to set out the portions of the libel alleged to be injurious, and several cases were cited for that position. The strongest was Clement v. Fisher, (7 B. & C. 461). With the doctrine of that case I agree, but it is to be observed that those decisions were nearly all after verdict. The Queen v. Martin is an express authority. These counts are similar to those used there, except that the record contained the whole of the articles, which was not necessary. This count sets out portions of the articles only, as evidence of the compassing charged in the first part of the indictment, and follows literally the precedents in libel. Lord George Gordon's case, (22 St. Tr. 177). (Perrin, J.—Lord George Gordon had no counsel). Paine's case, (22 St. Tr. 360); Holt's case, (ib. 1200); Williams' case, (26 St. Tr. 646); in each of these cases portions of the articles relied upon are set out, introduced by the averment, "containing among other matter." In Tabart v. Tipper, (1 Camp. 350), Lord Ellenborough, p. 353, says—"The more correct way would have been to have said, 'in a certain part of which said libel there was and is contained, &c., and in a certain other part of which said libel there was and is contained, &c.'" As to the objection of the grand jury finding bills on the portions not set out, it does not apply. The prosecutor sets out the matter he relies on, and they are to judge whether the articles are sustained in the manner they are set out. The sole question for the court is whether the writings bear the meaning we allege they do; that is, the compassing charged in the first part of the indictment. It is clear from the articles themselves that they bear the meaning attributed to them by the crown. An innuendo is only necessary when the document relied on does not palpably bear the meaning attributed to it. If any portion of the indictment be good, the demurrer must be overruled. Queen v. Rhodes, (1 Ld. Raym. 886); Queen v. O'Connell, (11 Cl. & Fi. 379), per Denman, C. J. As to the objection of duplicity, if several distinct publications, within the meaning of the act, be alleged, they are admissible. The statute of Ed. 3, states treason to be a compassing the death of the king. From the earliest periods the practice has been that the prosecutor should be at liberty to prove as many overt acts of treason as he pleased. The fifth section of the 11 & 12 Vic. c. 12, enacts that any number of the acts or deeds by which such compassings shall have been expressed, may be set forth; the object of which was, that having assimilated the law to treason, and, as in treason any number of overt acts might be alleged, to assimilate the course of pleading also; and it is only in this way the prosecutor can avail himself of the power given him by the statute. In cases of embezzlement the offence is single—the taking of the property—therefore the facts constituting it need not be set out. Here you may, exactly as in treason, set out as many of the means of compassing as may be necessary. The language of the 36 Geo. 3, is a strong authority for my position. That statute introduced a new treason not in existence under the statute of Ed. 3, viz. compassing to levy war or to depose the king, evidenced by publishing any writing, or by any overt act or deed, being in every respect identical with the 11 & 12 Vic. except as to the commission of the offence by open and advised speaking. In Thistlewood's case, and in Watson's case, there were two counts under the 36 Geo. 3, and one under the statute of Ed. 3; the count under the former, as in this case, contained several overt acts. Fitzharris's case, (8 St. Tr. 337-8). The second and fourth counts are similar, both charging the publications as overt acts of compassing, one to depose, the other to levy war, and are objected to for setting out the publications as overt acts; an overt act at common law, and under the statute of Edward was anything done in furtherance of the object, to fulfil the purpose or bring into effect the treasonable purpose. In an indictment for levying war, the levying war was of itself an overt act. In treason for compassing, before the passing of the 36 Geo. 3, publishing might be an overt act, Fitzharris's case (8 State Trials, 337); and so have written documents been considered, Cole's case (7 State Trials, 7). The 36 Geo. 3 took the distinction between publications and overt acts. In Thistlewood's case publications were relied upon, and may be so still, if in furtherance of the particular object. It is quite possible there may be a publication not an overt act. Any printing is an overt act, if in furtherance of the criminal object; and when the documents—as in this case—themselves shew the intent, and we know that the publication of them was in a public newspaper, it is impossible not to hold them to be overt acts. The letter to Mr. W. S. O'Brien, and several other passages, are clearly overt acts done in furtherance of the criminal object, and in which the intention is clearly expressed. The second objection is, that the whole of the publications are not set out. There is no case which professes to set out the documents or any part of them in terms. (Perrin, J.—That is not an universal proposition.) Francia's case (15 State Trials, 898-938) best illustrates this proposition; the letter was the overt act, the contents only the evidence of that act. This case is also distinguishable from the cases referred to on other grounds. In cases of libel the document must be set out that the Judges may see whether the publication be libellous or not. So in the case of a threatening notice, whether it be such is matter of law; and in the case of forgery, whether the documents be of that particular description, the forging of which will constitute that crime, it not being a general charge to be evidenced by writing. The next objection is, that this count is repugnant and inconsistent as to time, and this objection is also applied to the fourth, fifth, and sixth counts. There is but one compassing evidenced by several overt acts, and the time is not material; the compassing is correctly alleged as on the 3rd of June, and that felonious compassing is charged to be expressed by several publications hereinafter mentioned. It is argued that the "then and there" means on the 3rd of June, and that the expression on that day by divers acts on subsequent days, is repugnant. The demurrer does not apply to that portion of the count which sets forth the documents constituting the overt acts of the 3rd of June, and being to the whole count, is too large and must therefore fail, Queen v. Rhodes (2 Lord Ray. 886) Webb v. Baker (7 Ad. & El. 841); Boyce v. Williams (2 Jones, 214). This objection is ill founded. The count charges that the prisoner "did then and there feloniously express by divers overt acts hereinafter mentioned." "Divers acts" mean others than those on the 3rd of June. This is not an averment of two distinct things; it is, that on the 3rd of June the prisoner did a certain act, and on another day, another act as evidence of the same compassing, King v. Shepherd and Agnew (5 East. 244). The time not being material, the objection is unfounded. Townley's case (Foster, C. C. 7), and Deacon's case (ib. 9), shew the true meaning of the rule; and all the publications being laid on the 3rd of June, it is clear from these cases we may give in evidence publications on different days. (Perrin, J.—It is clear if you laid the acts "on the day, &c. as aforesaid," you might give them in evidence. The question is whether, their being laid in the indictment on two different days, it is not a repugnancy.) In Thistlewood's case the indictment was upon the 36 Geo. 3, which is in the same terms with this act (2 Hawk. P. C. c. 25, s. 82). The act of publishing may be done on several days; it is otherwise as to the compassing. As to the fifth and sixth counts, they are general. It is first objected that the articles are not fully set forth; and, secondly, that they are repugnant as to time. These counts would be good under the 36 Geo. 3, Thistlewood's case and Francia's case. The objection as to repugnancy of time is equally inapplicable to these counts, as to the second and fourth.

Jan. 4.—PERRIN, J.—The prisoner is charged under the 11 Vic. c. 12, with feloniously compassing to depose the Queen, and to levy war against her majesty. There was another indictment for the same offence pending in the county of Dublin, this, the Court is of opinion, should be quashed. This indictment contains six counts, the first four charging several distinct matters, publications, and overt acts, as the expression of the compassing. The fifth and sixth charge the same matters more generally, and to each there was a several demurrer and joinder therein. The first count charges "that the prisoner on the 3d of June, in the eleventh of the Queen, did compass, imagine, and intend to depose the Queen, and that compassing did express, utter, and declare, by feloniously publishing a certain printing or writing, which said printing contains, among other passages," the several following ones, and to which it is material to advert:— "When the French revolution raised the hopes of Ireland in a speedy deliverance, I asked to have done what seemed to me to be the manifest duty of the hour, I proposed that the two existing Repeal associations should be forthwith dissolved, and a new one, kindled with the new spirit of the times, set in their place; that it should be open to all repealers without pledge or qualification; that its government should be committed to a legislative counsel of three hundred repealers, the foremost in Ireland for capacity and devotion, and its direction to an executive committee of five, competent to act as the cabinet of the movement. That commissioners should be sent forth to organize the entire country into local clubs. That permanent agents should be established in England to organize the Irish, and the friends of Ireland, in every city in that island. It was my conviction that nothing ought to be left to chance, which forethought could prepare. That every foot of Irish soil ought to be made vital with the passion for daring changes, and for results that glowed in the heart of the capital. That the hot blood engendered there ought to be sent burning and thrilling to the coldest extremities. That organization ought to be extended and systematized, till literally every hamlet and parish had its club, every town and city its brigade of clubs. Had this been done, Ireland, instead of pleading a shameful want of forethought, would at this hour possess a popular cabinet, treasury, and legislative counsel, trusted by the whole country, and a national guard of disciplined clubs." "Give Ireland a native power which she can love and obey, and you give all she requires for strength or victory. A popular executive set up by the Irish nation would overtop the officials of Dublin castle in a week, and if they are worthy of their office, would centre round themselves the love and reverence of the whole nation." These passages are set out as expressive of the compassing charged, and with the intent to depose the Queen. In the second publication we find the following extracts—"Frankly we go into this league to establish clubs universally, to regain for Ireland the generous aid of our foreign friends, to compass a national council of three hundred elected representatives, fit to confront the majesty of England, or the sterner majesty of death." "The ministers of Ireland prefer a civil war to an Irish legislature—the base aristocracy of Ireland have declared for the minister, and against the soil on which they live—the Irish government now becomes simply a question of force, force of will, and force of organization. It has ceased to be a debatable question, a propagandism, or a demonstration. With petitions, motions, resolutions, and all oratory of the remonstrative order, it is done for ever. Does Ireland really will national institutions? If so, Ireland must prepare herself to assert them by union and by action. Every town, village, and barony must have its club, every club its committee, every committee its plan of operations, adhering with the general policy. When this is done, and Ireland, from end to end, is bound together by a spirit of sympathy, and cords of combination, it will be a feasible work to emancipate her from the British yoke, and give her whatever form of government the national will decrees." That expressly shews an intention to depose. The charge in the first count against the prisoner was, that he had compassed the deposition of the Queen, and expressed that compassing or intention by the articles therein set forth. I am of opinion that the passages I have read do not only contain evidence of the existence of that design, but also an advice to others to effect that purpose. To seek to change the government shews an intention to depose the Queen, and is an overt act evidencing that intention. The count charges an intention of compassing to depose the Queen, and of creating a popular revolution, which was treason under the 36 Geo. 3; it is clear that it was not the intention of the legislature to deprive the crown of the protection it was theretofore entitled to, and the fifth section expressly provides that "it shall be lawful, in any indictment for felony, to charge against the offender any number of the matters, acts, or deeds by which such compassings, or any of them, shall have been expressed, &c." It is argued for the prisoner, that the word indictment is not equivalent to count, but that it might mean that the acts or deeds should be charged in several counts; no authority has been shewn me that the word indictment there means one, and not several counts; and, if that were so, there would have been no necessity for any legislative enactment, as the different offences might, previously to the passing of the act, have been set out in several counts. In 1 Hale, P. C. 122-3, it is said "that more overt acts than one may be laid in an indictment, and then the proof of any of them so laid—being in law sufficient overt acts—maintains the indictment." Indictment there means count, and must be taken so under this act. It has been argued that there is a distinction between the offences created under the 36 Geo. 3, and the 11 & 12 Vic. c. 12. That under the first act the compassing alone was the offence, but that under the latter there was the compassing, and the expression of it. No authority has been cited to establish that distinction, and is in my mind untenable. The explanation, construction, and import of the same word in this act must receive the same construction as in the 36 Geo. 3. It cannot mean different things, and, to sustain this argument, we must go further, and hold that it means different things in the same act, that is, in the section extending the 36 Geo. 3 to this country, it should have one meaning, and in the fifth section another. That what would be a good count in treason should be bad when changed into treason to felony; the crime, the offence under the 36 Geo. 3, is the same as that under the 11 & 12 Vic. c. 12. The thing prohibited was the compassing, and the expression of it by publication, or by any matters, acts, or deeds. It is equally erroneous to hold that the publication was not included in the word "matter." An indictment under the 36 Geo. 3, would be erroneous if the charge was of compassing alone, and would be insufficient if the overt act were not expressed. The same rule must also be necessary under the 11 & 12 Vic. c. 12; under either act it is necessary to express the things or matters expressive of the offence. If, therefore, the compassing alone is the crime, it is erroneous, and over-refined, to say that there are three felonies—publishing, open and advised speaking, or any other act or deed. There is nothing to shew that the expression should be laid in more than one count, or that the overt acts were to be laid otherwise in felony than in treason. The proper mode is to set out the overt acts in the count charging the felony of which they are the expression. Authorities were referred to, but they do not support the position they were cited for; and this count is conformable with the practice and precedents in cases of perjury and conspiracy. No possible inconvenience or disadvantage can possibly arise to the prisoner, and so far the case of the Queen v. Martin is in point, therefore I think there is nothing in this objection. The second objection is, that the count is too general in not specifying fully the words charged, and that there is no colloquium or innuendo expressive of the intent charged. I think that the passages themselves plainly express the intention charged, therefore no innuendo is necessary. In Clement v. Fisher, (7 B. & C. 450,) though the count was held to be bad for not setting out the meaning, yet the court says that "such an allegation would not have been necessary if there had been in the libel set out anything which clearly applied to the plaintiff, or any distinct innuendo so applying to the libellous matter, or if, upon the perusal of the matter set out, it had manifestly appeared that it related to the libel in respect of which the plaintiff had recovered damages." In the present case it is quite impossible to read the passages I have referred to without seeing that they do directly refer to the object of compassing, and that they suggest the means of carrying it into effect. "The problem that lies before us is to seize the whole force of the country—now scattered and chaotic—to reduce it promptly to order, and discipline it to a system, that it may be wielded like a sword against England. We are playing for the life of Ireland, and anything short of this is flinging away the last hope of the Celtic race." The court is to read these words as they would be read elsewhere, according to their literal meaning. Could it be suggested that the intent was not to depose the Queen? What averment could make the intent clearer than that passage itself has expressed it. "A popular executive set up by the Irish nation would overtop the officials of Dublin castle in a week, and, if they are worthy of their office, would centre round themselves the love and reverence of the whole nation." That expresses an intention in the prisoner, and an advice to others to seek to change the government. That could not be done without levying war and deposing the Queen. It was suggested, but it was not shewn, that some other meaning might be attributed to them. The case of the Queen v. Martin is an authority on this point also. This case is even stronger, for there the passages were not, as here, either specified or selected. I cannot conceive the necessity for expressing the intent, there is no ambiguity. In the King v. Agnew, (5 East. 258,) the rule is thus stated. There is no rule that other words shall be employed than those in ordinary use, or that in indictments or other pleadings a different sense is to be put on them than they bear in ordinary acceptation. "And if, where the sense may be ambiguous, it is sufficiently marked by the context, or other means, in what sense they are intended to be used, no objection can be made on the ground of repugnancy which only exists where a sense is annexed to words which is either absolutely inconsistent therewith, or being apparently so, is not accompanied with anything to explain or define them." In the case of Rex v. Horne, (Cowper. 672,) referred to in the argument. De Grey, C. J., at page 683, says, "To apply these principles to cases of libel, it may happen that a writing may be so expressed, and in such clear and unambiguous words as may amount of itself to a libel. In such a case the court wants no circumstances to make it clearer than it is of itself, and therefore all foreign circumstances introduced upon the record would be only matter of supererogation." In the present case the passages are not merely capable of being connected with the offences charged, but directly relate to the compassing and effectuation of it, and I approve of the rule cited by Sir C. O'Loughlin from Foster Treas. c. 1, s. 7, p. 198, that "the words must be published, and that they import such compassing;" and, applying it to the present case, it appears to me that these passages denote, and are expressive of the design charged, and are in furtherance and contemplation of it. This objection is repeated in another form, viz., that the whole of the writings should be set forth, and that nothing should be left to intendment. If the whole were set out it would be most injurious to the prisoner to have voluminous and long continuances set out upon the record, and, as expressed by Lord Denman, "a grievance and an oppression." The doctrine is also correctly stated in Sacheverell's case, (15 St. Tr. 1,) and this indictment follows that course, and gives the prisoner an advantage by selecting the passages relied upon, and I do not think the Attorney-General could rely on other portions of the publications, than those set out, to support his case. Several cases were cited in which it was necessary to set out the whole matter of the publication, as in indictments for administering false oaths, &c., they do not apply to the present case. I agree with the doctrine of Lord Hale, (1 Pl. Cr. 109,) that the words must shew not only a purpose, but a settled intention in the mind. I will test the count by this rule; it charges the prisoner with compassing to depose the Queen, &c., by publishing certain writings; and I find by the passages I have referred to, which appear to me plainly to import the intention imputed to them, that the intention of all these is so clearly set out as to denote the settled purpose necessary to constitute the charge; but if the words do not of themselves express the guilty purpose, then it should be shewn. I think the count does express the compassing, and that the prisoner evidenced the intention of perfecting that compassing by the passages I have referred to. In Thistlewood's case (83 State Trials, 684), Abbott, C. J., in his charge to the grand jury, speaking of the 36 Geo. 3, says, "that the intention shall constitute the crime, which shall be manifested by some act tending towards the accomplishment of the criminal object." I adopt that view; it is not merely necessary that a vague intention should be expressed in the count, but a settled purpose. What was there set out was, in the object of law, an overt act, and evinced a settled purpose to effect the intention charged, Despard's case (28 State Trials, 345). In Sacheverell's case (15 State Trials, 1), two passages were referred to as not being set forth; he was impeached for preaching a sermon against the then recent revolution in England. The question was referred to the Judges, and from the resolution arrived at, it will distinctly appear, that the objection was, not that the passages were not fully set out, but that none were specified; in fact, the very thing done in the present case was that, the want of which was complained of there, R. v. Mason, (1 Leach, 487,) was relied on to shew that the passages should be set out, that the court may see if the offence is that contemplated by the statute creating it; and Clements v. Fisher (7 B. & C. 459) was cited to the same effect. It was also said that the whole publication should be set out in order that the court might be in a position to measure the punishment to be inflicted. It is in the power of the court to have the whole document before it, and to use it for that purpose. Another argument was urged that the whole publication should be set out, that the true meaning might be arrived at. I think the passages of themselves shew that. It was further argued, that the grand jury may not have found the bills upon the passages alleged to be expressive of the offence. It is not to be presumed that the grand jury did so; and, in my judgment, it is more likely that both the grand and petty jury would be more embarrassed by long statements than those confined to particular charges, and that justice would be better administered, and the prisoner have a better opportunity of defence, than if he were distracted by passages not bearing on the case, or under the consideration of the prosecutor; and, in addition to this, the authorities and precedents appear to shew plainly that this course of pleading is proper; and in Sacheverell's case, to which I have already referred, the objection was that no entire passage of the sermon had been set out. The objection was not allowed, and this count appears to be entirely in accordance with that authority; and precedents to the same effect will be found in Stockdale's case (22 State Trials, 237), Finerty's case (26 ib. 901), Williams' case (26 ib. 653), and particularly in Francis's case (15 ib. 897), where the same words, "containing, among other things," are used. And in Thistlewood's case (33 State Trials, 681), a part of the proclamation only was set out. For these reasons, it appears to me that this count does set forth an offence within the statute; that there is no necessity for any innuendoes to support it; and therefore there must be judgment for the crown on the first count. The second count was objected to as being repugnant and inconsistent as to time, in stating that the prisoner did compass on the 3rd of June, and the same compassing did further express, on the 17th of June, and so on several subsequent days; and, secondly, it is objected that the publications are set out as overt acts of felony. It is not necessary to give any opinion on this objection, as I am of opinion the first is well founded. The expression on the 17th, of a compassing on the 3rd, is repugnant and insensible, and this is clearly established by authority; in 2 Hawk. P. C. 324, it is said, "if an indictment lay the offence on an uncertain or impossible day, or where it lays it on a future day, or lays one and the same offence at different days, or lays it on such a day as makes the indictment repugnant to itself, it is void." The reading of that passage is, that if any portion of the count be repugnant to itself, it is bad; and the case of King v. Agnew (5 East. 257), and the authorities there cited, support this view. I do not think this defect can be successfully obviated; but on the authorities, I think that all the charges subsequent to the first overt act must be rejected, but that the count may be sustained with respect to the overt acts laid on the 3rd of June, and prior to that day. During the course of the argument, I thought that this course of pleading was that objected to in Thistlewood's case. I find I was in error. The statement of the compassing is on a particular day, and on several days before and after; that was not repugnant. On these authorities, I think the second and subsequent overt acts are repugnant and inconsistent, and must be rejected; but, according to the authority of Lord Holt, the first is not consequently to be rejected. The second objection is not well founded. The publications are well laid as overt acts. It will appear on reading the averments charging the publications, that it is charged that they were published in order to carry out the alleged compassing—that they were charged to have been used as an encouragement or incentive to others, and to create revolution. I think, on the authority of Hale, P. C., 118, Foster, 119, of Lord Ellenborough in Thistlewood's case, and of Bayley, J. in Watson's case, these publications are properly laid as overt acts. So far as this count is bad, the demurrer should be allowed; and perhaps the proper course would be to say that so much be allowed and so much quashed. The cases cited to shew that where a demurrer is too large it should be overruled, are applicable to civil cases only.

I cannot hold the same rule in criminal cases. I think the demurrer is to be allowed to that portion which is bad. The rule to be pronounced on the first count governs the third, and that on the second governs the fourth. The next objection is to the fifth and sixth counts. First, that they are repugnant and inconsistent in point of time; and, secondly, that the contents of the overt acts should be clearly shewn. The rule I have made on the second count applies to this; therefore, all the charges subsequent to that on the 3rd of June must be rejected. The other objection I do not think to be well founded. The count charges that the prisoner "did feloniously publish divers other printings, and contains, amongst other things, incitements, encouragements, advices, and exhortations to the liege subjects of the Queen to rise and rebel treasonably, &c. It appears to me that the count does charge divers overt acts on the 3rd of June, the tendency of which is plainly the accomplishment of the deposition of the Queen; and I think such overt acts might be given in evidence. And as to the objection that the overt acts should be fully set out, I think that would be unnecessary, and that it is quite sufficient to charge the intent and purpose. There are no authorities cited to the contrary, with the exception of the alleged opinion of the Lord Chief Baron and Baron Pennefather. They had expressed no such opinion; they felt some difficulty, not as to whether it was evidence, but whether it could be used to support another count, as to use it so would be a surprise upon the prisoner, by using evidence not charged; but they offered to receive the evidence if the verdict were taken on the count in question; and a count of this nature will be found in Francis's case (15 State Trials, 903), decided shortly after Sackverell's case. And also in Laver's case (16 State Trials, 95-6), Watson's case (32 State Trials, 1), and Thistlewood's case (33 State Trials, 697), the indictment is in the same way. I cannot, therefore, hold it necessary to specify the particular words. The demurrer must, therefore, be overruled on this ground, as to the first overt act; and the same rule will apply to the sixth count.

RICHARDS, B.—After the judgment that has been pronounced by my brother Perrin, it is not my intention to go at any length into the nice and technical points of pleading that have been raised upon the demurrer in this case. But there are some new and important questions involved in the arguments that have been addressed to us, and upon those questions I propose to offer a few observations. It is insisted by the counsel for the prisoner that all the publications relied on, and stated in the indictment as expressive of the alleged guilty compassings of the defendant, should be set forth with the same certainty that it is necessary written or printed matter should be stated in an indictment or action for a libel, for it is said that under the provisions of the 11th Vic. c. 3, the published matter is made part and parcel of the crime itself—part of the corpus delicti—and it has been insisted that several of the learned judges in this country, before whom prosecutions have been had under this recent statute, have expressed themselves in language involving that consequence.

and we have been referred to the several cases as reported by Mr. Hodges, of the Queen v. Martin, and the Queen v. O'Doherty, and to the expressions of the several learned judges before whom those cases were respectively tried, and it must be admitted that the language attributed to the learned judges who presided on those several occasions, does give colour to the position insisted on by counsel for the prisoner. If the expressing of the compassing, by matter published or written, is to form, in the sense contended for, a part of the crime, it is difficult to understand upon what principle of law the prosecutor can be excused from setting out in terms in his indictment that writing or printing. The cases to which we have been referred, from Sacheverell's case downwards, establish the position that where the written or printed matter forms part of the corpus delicti, it should be set out distinctly, and in terms so that the offence charged may appear upon the record, and be judged of accordingly. But writings relied on, in cases of treason, for the purpose of establishing the guilty intent, have never been considered—at least never that I am aware of—to come within the principle established by the class of cases to which I have last adverted, but the contrary, as will appear by reference to various very eminent writers on the law of treason, and to adjudged cases. And first, with respect to the course of pleading adopted in prosecutions founded on the statute of Edward 3, I would refer to Foster, c. 1, s. 1, p. 194, where, speaking of the crime of compassing or imagining the death of the king, or of his queen, or eldest son, he writes thus:—"The words of the statute descriptive of the offence must be strictly pursued in every indictment for this species of treason; it must charge that the defendant did traitorously compass and imagine, &c., and then go on and charge the several overt acts as the means employed by the defendant for executing his traitorous purposes. For the compassing is considered as the treason, the overt acts as the means made use of to effectuate the intentions and imaginations of the heart." Undoubtedly by the common law, as well as by the express provisions of 7 W. 3, no evidence was admissible of any overt act that was not laid in the indictment, that is to say, no overt act of a distinct nature from the act alleged, though falling under the same head or class, was allowed to be given in evidence where not laid. But facts, and circumstances, evidence falling within, and going to support, the general overt act alleged in the indictment, were receivable, though not expressly laid. Rockwood's case, (13 St. Tr. 139); Lowick's case, (ib. 267); and Francias' case, (15 St. Tr. 988); where the Chief Baron of that day expresses himself very fully and distinctly on the subject. I would also refer to Sayer's case (16 St. Tr. 93), also Deacon's case (Foster's Cases, 9), all those were cases founded on the statute of Edward 3, and were decided before the 36 Geo. 3; and many other cases of a similar kind could also be referred to for this purpose, if necessary. But subsequently to the 36 Geo. 3, cases involving the same principle have also occurred, and a like doctrine appears to have been held and laid down by the Judges in regard to the manner of stating the overt acts and publications expressive of the guilty compassings of the party charged, as that which prevailed before the passing of the act of 1795; accordingly, on looking into the charge of Mr. Justice Bailey to the grand jury before whom the bills of indictment in Watson's case were to be laid (32 St. Tr. 5), I find that he, in the most express terms, draws the distinction between treason and the means by which the treason is expressed and by which it is to be established. His words are these:—"In order to support those different acts, the law expects that what are called the overt acts shall, with reference to most of these treasons, be stated in the body of the bill of indictment to be preferred. These overt acts do not constitute the treason; that is comprised in the compassing the King's death, in the compassing the deposal of the King, in the conspiring to levy war, or in the actual levying of war; but these which are called overt acts are necessarily introduced into the indictment, and are the evidence by which the charge is afterwards to be supported; and they are introduced into the indictment, that each person against whom the charge is made may have the opportunity of knowing, before hand, what is the evidence by which he is affected, in order that he may prepare himself to meet that evidence." And it is to be recollected that these observations are made generally, and as well with regard to treasons under the act of 1795, as under the act of Edward. Again, Chief Justice Abbott, in charging the grand jury, in the year 1820, before whom the bills of indictment were sent in Thistlewood's case (33 St. Tr. 684), goes into a very full disquisition on the law of treason, under both the statute of Edward and of 36 Geo. 3, and proceeds thus:—"You will have observed that, in the several descriptions of offence which I have enumerated here (except the levying war mentioned in the ancient statute) the crime is made to consist in the compassing, imagination, or intention, (which are all words of the same import) to perpetrate the acts, and not in the actual perpetration of them." And the indictment in that case (the form of which is given in pages 701-2 of the same book) is in conformity with the rule of pleading so laid down by both these learned Judges. Since the passing of the 11 Vic. the cases that have occurred are, perhaps, too few to be regarded as establishing any law or course of pleading under that statute, except so far as the judgment of the Court of Queen's Bench in the Queen v. Martin, to which we have been referred on the part of the crown, may be considered as having done so. But let us look to the two corresponding sections in the acts of 36 Geo. 3 and 11 Vic., and collate them together; and on doing so, they will be found in principle the same, and, indeed, alike in all respects, save that in the statute of 36 Geo. 3, the crime which is the subject of the present indictment is declared to be treason, and in the act of Vic. it is declared to be felony; and save that the words "open and advised speaking" are introduced into the later statute, and are not in the former; but that portion of the recent act upon which any question as to pleading could be supposed to turn, is, with the exception that I have mentioned, totidem verbis with the former statute. And it certainly does not appear to me (though a good deal of argument has been expended on the subject), that the introduction of open and advised speaking, as one of the modes of expressing a guilty intention to depose the Queen, &c., can or ought to make any difference in the construction which the other words in the same member of the section would and ought to receive in case the words "open and advised speaking" had not been introduced into it, and for this reason, amongst others, that open and advised speaking might at all times, under circumstances, have been relied on as an overt act in treason. Let me not, however, be misunderstood in this. I do not say that open and advised speaking, or any speaking, could formerly, nor can now, be relied on for that purpose unless the words used have relation to some determined purpose of a treasonable, or, we may now say with reference to this Act of Parliament, of a felonious character, in hand or about to be undertaken, or words of advice or persuasion to commit such offence; and I should hope those words in the recent statute will not at any time receive a more extended construction than has already, upon the fullest consideration, been given in law to the terms "open and advised speaking," by the different learned Judges in England who have had to consider and expound their import and meaning. It therefore does strike me, that the introduction of those into the 3rd section of the act was nothing more than was implied in the former statute, and in support of that view of the case. I would refer, first, to Sir Michael Foster's Discourse (ch. 1, sec. 7, p. 200), where he says, "As to mere words supposed to be treasonable, they differ widely from writings in point of real malignity and proper evidence. They are often the effect of mere heat of blood, which, in some natures otherwise well disposed, carrieth the man beyond the bounds of decency and prudence. They are always liable to great misconstruction, from the ignorance or inattention of the hearers, and too often for a motive truly criminal." And therefore I choose to adhere to the rule which hath been laid down, on more occasions than one, since the revolution, that loose words not relative to any act or design, are not overt acts of treason;" but words of advice or persuasion, and all consultations for the traitorous purposes treated of in this chapter are certainly so—they are uttered in contemplation of some traitorous purpose actually on foot or intended, and in prosecution of it. And next to the language of Chief Justice Holt, on the trial of Charnock and others (12 St. Tr.), and quoted in Despard's case (28 St. Tr.) I would also refer to Lord Ellenborough's judgment in Despard's case (p. 497 of the same book), when, in speaking on this subject, he expresses himself thus:—"It has been urged that the crime consists only in words, and that words are not of themselves overt acts of high treason. If it be said that loose words referable to no particular design, words merely calumnious, or seditious words expressive of an irritable and angry mind, and of sentiments highly indecent and criminal in a subject towards his sovereign, but words neither indicating or conducing to the execution of any definite purpose of a treasonable kind on his own part, nor persuading or exciting others to concur in the execution thereof on theirs, I readily admit that loose words of this description are not to be considered as constituting overt acts of high treason, and that it would be too much to infer from the random and careless, though highly blameable, use of expressions of this kind, so mischievous and abominable a purpose as the destruction of the king. But if words of this kind are used at meetings held for the purpose of forwarding designs of a treasonable nature, and if they are addressed to persons with an intent to excite, and to confirm them in the prosecution of measures which have for their declared object the assassinating or deposing of the king by force and arms. And where words are the immediate vehicle by which treasons such as these are communicated, and by which they are sought to be carried into full completion and effect, it never was, since the promulgation of law in this land, by any one lawyer, ever doubted that words of this nature, uttered for such a purpose, at such meetings and consultations, and being themselves the very instruments and means of exciting other persons to take part in measures which had for their end and object the personal destruction of the king, were in their very nature and essence the clearest and most absolute overt acts of high treason that can be stated. This point never yet admitted of a doubt; it never was questioned, it never can be so." Now I take it, we must assume that the legislature was aware of the state of the law, and of the established course of pleading under the 36 Geo. 3, at the time of framing and passing this act, 11th Vic and was aware that the words used in the 36 Geo. 3, did not make the expressing of the guilty compassing in law part of the crime in the sense contended for, and, if it were intended to make such an important change in the law as that insisted on, I apprehend the legislature would not have followed so exactly the words of the previous statute, upon which an opposite construction to that now contended for had been put. The word "other" does not precede the words "overt act," in the 36 Geo. 3, no more than in the 11 Vic., and yet the publishing of any printing or writing was in all respects placed upon the same footing as any other overt act under that statute. Under those circumstances, I feel myself bound, upon the question now under consideration, by what has been laid down by former judges, and by the decisions in the cases of treason to which I have already referred, and I therefore am of opinion that although the printing or writing relied on, as well as every other overt act, should all be stated in the indictment in this case with convenient certainty as they should in treason, yet that publications such as those referred to in this indictment need not be set out verbatim, or with that strictness that would be necessary in the case of libel. But it has been said, and truly, that a party tried for felony under the 11th Vic. is, by the express terms of the seventh section, protected from a prosecution for treason upon the same facts upon which he had been tried for felony; and it has been argued, that unless the writings and matter relied on are set out in the indictment, as strictly as would be necessary in the case of libel, it will be impossible for a defendant to avail himself of a plea of autre fois acquit. With respect to that argument, I would say, in the first place, that if the indictment be as certain and precise, in regard to the matters charged to make out the felony, as would, before the recent act, have been sufficient in a prosecution for treason upon the same facts, it is plain that the party is as well protected now from a double prosecution for felony and treason as he was before from two prosecutions for the same alleged treason; and as we never heard of a man's having been (even in the worst of times) indicted twice for the same alleged treason, I must confess I do not see the reason nor necessity for the legislature putting him in a different situation in that respect than he would have been in before the recent statute. But, inasmuch as all the overt acts must, as I have already said, be stated in the indictment with sufficient certainty to inform the party charged of that which is to be relied on against him; and as that is necessary, both in an indictment for treason as well as in an indictment for felony, I see no real difficulty in a party availing himself, by plea, with proper averments of the provision to which we have been referred in the 7th section, if at any time, so outrageous an attempt should be made as to prosecute a party, first for felony, and afterwards for treason upon the same facts. The next objection which I think it material to notice is that of alleged duplicity in the indictment, by reason that several different publications have been relied on in the same count, in order to make out the compassing and guilty intention of the prisoner. But what I have already said, as to the nature and essence of the crime, goes far, if I am right in that, to dispose of this objection also. A man may declare the same guilty intention by several distinct publications. Nay, he may declare or express his intention, partly by writing or by printing and publishing, and partly by open and advised speaking, and partly by some other overt act or deed, and all those several matters may be necessary to make out the case against him, or at least all may be relied on for that purpose. It requires no great ingenuity of mind to imagine a case in which those several matters may be so linked and connected together, and may all converge so completely to one point, that the statement of each may be in a manner necessary to shew the bearing of, and to explain the whole. And I think it very plain, that the legislature contemplated that it might be necessary, as no doubt it might, to resort to means as compound as I have suggested, to make out the offence. On turning to the fourth section, a provision of a peculiar description is made, with respect to cases where the guilty intention is expressed by words "only." The word "only," as used in that section, shews that it was considered by the framers of that act that the felony may be established partly by open and advised speaking, and partly by other means. But it may be said, that in the case I have put, I have supposed a necessary connection between all the matter suggested, all converging to the one point, and each link in the chain depending on the other, and that here that does not appear to be the case; and perhaps it does not. But the argument that each separate expressing of the same guilty intention, by a different and distinct publication, makes a new crime, is put out of the way at once, if I am right in likening this offence, in its essential nature, to that of treason under the 36 Geo. 3, though mitigated in character. Indeed, the proposition that a new crime could be eked out by each fresh expressing of the same compassing, is so extravagant, and so difficult to be reconciled with any principle of law or justice that I am aware of, that I think the announcement of such a doctrine carries its own refutation with it, and indeed goes far to prove that felony, under this act, can and ought no more to be considered, in point of law, as compounded of the guilty compassing and the means adopted for expressing the same, than treason could be compounded of the same two things under the 36 Geo. 3. To construe the act in the way contended for on the part of the prisoner, and to hold that each and every publication of written or printed matter, expressive of the same compassing, would be a new crime, would multiply offences greatly under this act, and would, in my mind, be a most cruel and mischievous construction, and a construction that could not fail to operate most oppressively and unjustly upon the subject, as must be obvious to every one. But the fifth section removes all doubt upon this part of the case. It is manifest that the meaning of the fifth section is, that any number of "matters, acts, and deeds, by which such compassings," &c., "or any of them, shall have been expressed, uttered, or declared," may be charged in the same count in the indictment. The section would be useless if it was introduced to allow different matters of the description mentioned to be introduced into different counts in an indictment. The case to which we have been referred on the Embezzlement Act, has no bearing on the subject. In that case no one act of embezzlement could be aided, or in any way worked out, by proving any other act of embezzlement. Each act charged was perfectly independent of the other, and the corpus of the crime in each case was the particular act of embezzlement charged, and not a general intention or design to embezzle. I therefore think it right that the different acts of embezzlement, neither having any legal connexion with the crime involved in the other, should be stated in different counts. If, indeed, it had been enacted that a party guilty of three several acts of embezzlement within a certain limit of time, should be subject to a greater punishment than if only guilty of one; it might be necessary in that case, to charge the three several acts in the one count, as is the case with regard to some other offences. But that is not the end or object of the act. The punishment is the same whether the party be guilty of one or three of those acts of embezzlement; but, for the sake of convenience, the prosecutor is allowed to charge three different acts of embezzlement, if committed within a certain time, in the one indictment, and the usual, and I think proper course, is to do it in different counts.

The cases referred to on this statute do not, in my opinion, apply to any of the questions that have been raised before us. As to the objection to certain of the counts in the indictment, on account of the introduction of the words "amongst other things," in setting out the articles and published matter, if I am right in the view which I have taken of the act generally, and that no more certainly is necessary in this case than would be necessary in an indictment for treason, the introduction of the words "amongst other things" cannot be relied upon as making the count bad. But, in any case, I should think the introduction of the words would not vitiate the count, if sufficient appeared on the record to support prima facie the charge contained in the counts; and I find those words "amongst other things," or words of similar import, adopted in setting out matter in cases where the matter professed to be set out must be stated exactly and precisely,—in libel cases, for instance, Paine's case (22 St. Tr. 360), Holt's case (same book, 1200), both for seditious libels; also William's case for publishing a blasphemous libel, viz., Payne's Age of Reason (26 St. Tr. 606); and in the several other cases to which my brother Perrin has referred, and which I think it unnecessary again to mention. Then as to the objection on account of the omissions of a proper colloquium, and of averments and innuendoes, I admit all these are necessary where the sense of the matter is doubtful; but, in my opinion, in this case the sense and meaning of the matter introduced into this indictment may be fairly enough collected from the passages themselves without the aid of a colloquium, averment, or innuendo, beyond what have been introduced into the indictment. With respect to the objection, that several of the articles relied on in the indictment, being part of the published matter charged and assigned as overt acts, are inconsistent with the time at which the alleged felony has been laid, my opinion is that there is an inconsistency in that respect, in certain of the counts in the indictment. But in each count there is one overt act well laid; and with regard to the publication so well and sufficiently laid, this objection does not hold. And, that being the case, my opinion further is, that the other subsequent assignment of inconsistent or repugnant matter laid in the indictment may be rejected, and ought to be rejected; but I do not think such repugnant matter can vitiate the whole count, the statement of the offence being well laid, and there being one overt act or expression of guilty intention well and sufficiently laid in each count. Some of the cases to which I have already referred, and especially the charge of Mr. Justice Bailey and of Chief Justice Abbott, supports this view of the case. And, in addition, I would refer to 2 Hawk. Pl. of Cr. (Book 2, ch. 25, sec. 82), and to the Queen v. O'Connell (11 Clark & Fin.) where Lord Denman's interpretation and reading of Lord Holt's judgment in the case of the Queen v. Rhodes will be found. It is, however, another question, whether we should not guard the prisoner against being prejudiced by pleading over (in case he shall now be allowed to plead, upon which question something still remains to be considered) by reason of those ill-assigned overt acts. Mr. Justice Bailey's charge to the grand jury in Watson's case, shews very clearly that the overt acts which are not supported in an indictment for treason may be rejected by the grand jury in finding their bill, and that they ought to do so, and find their bill on the overt acts that have been sustained before them in proof. Now, I should say that where the court finds some of the overt acts insufficiently laid in the indictment, that such ill-laid overt acts ought to be expunged from the indictment, or, in technical language, quashed, and the indictment treated and considered in all respects as if no such ill-laid overt acts had been introduced into it.

ROLLS COURT.

OGLEBY v. CAMPBELL—Nov. 20.

Fee-farm Rent—Receiver.

A bill having been filed to recover a fee-farm rent, a Receiver was granted, the bill containing a statement that there was a loss of title-deeds and confusion of boundaries.

The bill in this case was filed to raise the arrears of a fee-farm grant, and the cause came on to be heard pro confesso.

Henderson now moved for a Receiver. The bill in this case contains statements of confusion of boundaries and loss of title-deeds, which is sufficient to give this court jurisdiction, Sterdy v. Murphy, (2 I. E. R. 448); Holder v. Chambray, (3 P. W. 256); Benson v. Baldwin, (1 Atkyns 586); the cases of Roberts v. Hughes, (Beatty, 417), and Cremen v. Hawkes, (8 I. E. R. 153,) do not appear, as here there is a statement of the loss of title-deeds and confusion of boundaries, which must be considered as true—the cause being heard pro confesso, sufficiently distinguishes the present case. In the case of Brady v. Fitzgerald,* there was not any statement of confusion of boundaries; it cannot therefore be considered an authority against this application; also, in that case a Receiver was appointed over the estate of the defendant, John Westropp, who allowed the bill to be taken pro confesso against him.

MASTER OF THE ROLLS.—I do not think the case of Cremen v. Hawkes is opposed to the decision of Sir Michael O'Loughlin in Sterdy v. Murphy. Mr. Butler, in his note to Coke Littleton, states that a fee-farm rent can be recovered as rent charge. In this case I will grant a Receiver, taking down on the order that the bill contained a statement that there was a confusion of boundaries.

M'DERMOTT v. O'CONNELL, MAHONY v. O'CONNELL—Dec. 14.

Accounts—Reference to Ascertain Priorities.

Upon an application before hearing for a reference to ascertain priorities and take accounts, the motion was refused, it appearing that there was another suit, for a sale of the same lands, set down for hearing in the Lord Chancellor's list, in which the same accounts must be taken.

This was an application on behalf of the plaintiff.

* Rolls, July, 1848, not reported.

in the first cause, that it might be referred to the Master to inquire and report what was due to the several parties and creditors in these causes, on foot of the charges and incumbrances affecting the lands in the pleadings mentioned, and the nature, priority, and amount thereof, and arrears for interest due on same, and the parties entitled thereto respectively; and that the Receiver might be at liberty to apply the rents in payment of same. In this case it appeared that on the 27th March, 1848, the bill in the cause of McDermott v. O'Connell, was filed to raise the amount of a mortgage granted by the defendants, J. O'Connell and M. J. O'Connell, to the plaintiff, but no answer had been filed, nor had the bill been taken pro confesso against any of the defendants. The bill in the second cause had been filed in July, 1847, for the purpose of obtaining a sale of the same lands, and the cause was then set down for hearing in the Chancellor's list.

Leahy for the motion.

Green, Q.C. and Berkeley, contra.

MASTER OF THE ROLLS.—Under the circumstances, I do not think there is any precedent for this application. The late Master of the Rolls made orders to ascertain the amount of incumbrances before hearing, but there was no other suit pending for the same purpose; and there is no instance of such an order being made when there was another cause in the list, in which a decree would be obtained probably in the course of the next Term. The accounts could not be taken for three or four months, and in the meantime there would be a decree to take the very same accounts probably before a different Master, in the suit now in the Chancellor's list. I am called on to direct the reference which will be directed by the Lord Chancellor. It appears to me the object of this motion is, that next Term the proceedings in the first cause may not be stayed, in consequence of my order; for if I make the order now sought, the parties will treat it as a decree. I must refuse this motion with costs.

EX PARTE HUTTON.—Jan. 14.

IN THE MATTER OF THE ACT TO FACILITATE THE SALE OF INCUMBERED ESTATES IN IRELAND.

Incumbered Estates Act—Suit—Pleading.

A bill having been filed for redemption of a mortgage and a sale of the lands, a decree was pronounced, directing that the plaintiff should pay to H., a prior mortgagee, the sum found due by the Master's report, within six months from the date thereof, or, in default, that the bill should stand dismissed with costs, as against H., after the expiration of the six months. H., being the first incumbrancer, and in possession of the title deeds, and not having been paid, presented a petition, under the Incumbered Estates Act, for a sale. The court directed proceedings in the suit to be stayed, and made an order of reference upon the petition. The plaintiff was given her costs in the cause, with the exception of those which she was liable to pay H., whom she should have been prepared to redeem, according to the terms of the decree.

The facts of this case are stated, ante, page 34.

MASTER OF THE ROLLS.—A petition has been brought before the court in this matter, which raises a question as to the course of proceeding in the Court of Chancery, in a suit for redemption and sale. The facts are these:—Mr. Robert Hutton presented a petition for the sale of certain lands which were mortgaged to him on the 1st of Nov., 1833, by a Mr. Robert Young and others. Mr. Hutton states that he is the first incumbrancer, and also that he has the title deeds, and in either character he is entitled to present a petition under the second section of the Incumbered Estates Act, unless prevented by the provisions of the 67th section. That section provides that the act shall not authorize the presenting any petition for sale in any case where, at the time of presenting such petition, any suit for foreclosure, redemption, or sale of the encumbered land, which shall have been commenced before the 1st of July, 1848, shall be pending, unless with the consent of the parties competent to consent to the dismissal or staying of the suit, and certain powers are given to the court as to staying such suit. The first question which arises is, whether there is a suit pending within the meaning of the 67th section of the act. The facts as to the alleged pending suit are as follow:—A Mrs. Leslie, being a puisne incumbrancer, filed a bill in the Court of Chancery, and on the 19th of January, 1848, a final decree was pronounced by the Commissioners for hearing causes. The substance of that decree, so far as it is material to state it, directs that the plaintiff, Mrs. Leslie, should pay to the defendant, Mr. Robert Hutton, within six calendar months from the 19th of November, 1847, (being the date of the Master's report) the sum of £31,346 0s. 1½d., the sum found due to Mr. Hutton by the said report, and that thereupon Mr. Hutton should convey to the said Mrs. Leslie; and that in default of payment by Mrs. Leslie of said sum, with interest and costs, within said time, it was further ordered that Mrs. Leslie's bill should stand dismissed with costs "as against the defendant, Robert Hutton." The decree then orders that the defendants, or such of them as ought to do so, do, within six calendar months from the date of the decree (i. e. from the 19th of January, 1848), pay to the plaintiff, Mrs. Leslie, £5,856 2s. 2d., found due to the said Mrs. Leslie, with interest and the costs of the suit; and do also, within the time aforesaid, pay to the said Mrs. Leslie the sum directed to be paid by her to Mr. Robert Hutton, "provided the said plaintiff shall have then paid the same," and in default thereof, the Master is directed to sell the lands, and that out of the produce of the sale, &c., the plaintiff and the other persons whose demands are found due to them by the said report, be paid the same in the priority reported, and that the plaintiff be paid, in like manner, the sum which she shall pay to the said defendant, Robert Hutton. The decree then directs the payment of the plaintiff's costs, in the same priority with her demand, and also the costs which she would pay to Hutton in the same priority with his demand. Then follow some further directions as to costs, not material to the question which arises; and it was further ordered that the Receiver should be continued until the sale. The money reported due to Mr. Hutton was not paid to him by Mrs. Leslie, and the six calendar months expired on the 19th of May, 1848. Mr. Hutton's counsel insist that the bill now stands dismissed with costs, as against him; and such is the case; as the English practice of obtaining a final order to dismiss, as laid down in Faulkner v. Bolton (7 Simons, 319), and by Stuart v. Worall (1 Brown's Chancery Cases, 581), and in Daniel's Chancery Practice, second edition, 989, has not been adopted in Ireland. The form of the final order to dismiss in a redemption suit in England will be found in Seton on Decrees, 147. Mrs. Leslie, the plaintiff, has signed a consent that her proceedings in said suit should be stayed. The defendants, however, who are entitled to the equity of redemption, have declined to sign the consent. The question then arises, whether in a suit for redemption and sale, where the bill stands dismissed with costs, as against the mortgagee, in consequence of the sum reported due to him not having been paid within the six calendar months, the suit can in general be proceeded with, and is to be considered a pending suit. I have communicated with Mr. Long, the Registrar of the Court of Chancery, on this subject, and there is much doubt on the question. He has furnished me with the papers in two cases—one in this court, and another in the Court of Exchequer. In the case of Joly v. Rumley, a consent order was made in this court on the 8th of November, 1844—after a bill for redemption and sale had been dismissed, with costs, as against the mortgagee—that the proceedings should be carried on and a sale had, the said mortgagee undertaking to execute the necessary deed of conveyance. In the case of Holden v. Baillie, in the Court of Exchequer, (which Mr. Teuch has been so good as to furnish me with a very full note of) the Court of Exchequer granted the carriage of the proceedings in the cause to the mortgagee, after the suit had been dismissed with costs as to him, in consequence of his not having been redeemed within six calendar months after the date of the Remembrancer's report, and in that case the mortgagee had taxed his costs as upon a dismissed suit, and had been paid those costs by the plaintiff in the suit at the time when the court made the order giving him the carriage of the proceedings. The Court of Exchequer must have considered the suit as a pending suit, or the carriage of the proceedings could not have been given to the mortgagee. Mr. Long having, as I understand, communicated with Master Henn on the subject, he appears to consider that if the title deeds were under the control of the court, and lodged in the Master's office, that he might proceed to sell the lands, but not the equity of redemption. If the produce of the sale was more than sufficient to pay the amount reported due to the mortgagee, and his costs, and that an allocation order was made by the court on the consent of the purchaser to pay the sum reported to the mortgagee, and his costs, and that he should decline to receive the amount, or execute the deed of conveyance, a question would arise,—whether a supplemental bill might not be filed against him to compel the execution of the deed, and to charge him with the costs of such supplemental suit. If any case should arise where the title deeds shall be under the control of the court, and in other respects similar to the present, I shall request the Masters to state to me the course adopted in their offices, where a decree for a sale has been made in a suit for redemption and sale, and where the bill stands dismissed with costs as against the mortgagee, in consequence of his not having been redeemed within the six calendar months. However, under the particular circumstances of the case, I think I may make an order without deciding what the course of proceeding should be in ordinary cases of decrees in such suits. The petitioner is not only the first incumbrancer, but he has the title deeds. Under the 138th general order of the court, no lands can be set up for sale by any Master of this court until the title deeds and other documents necessary to make out title shall have been deposited with the Master. I do not think that I have any jurisdiction in the cause of Leslie v. Young, to order Mr. Hutton, against whom the suit has been dismissed with costs, to bring in the deeds. I do not therefore see how there can be a sale in said suit, unless Mr. Hutton should consent to such an order as was made in the case of Joly v. Rumley, or apply for the carriage of the proceedings, as in the case in the Court of Exchequer. I am of opinion, therefore, upon the whole, that as the suit of Leslie v. Young cannot be proceeded with, and as no sale can take place thereunder, by reason of the petitioner being in possession of all the title deeds, I have authority under the 67th section of the Incumbered Estates Act to direct that the proceedings in said suit shall be stayed. Mrs. Leslie, on the terms of being entitled to her costs in said suit, consents to such order. I shall make the usual order of reference under the 10th section of the act; and I shall order, under the 68th section of the act, that all proofs of debts and other proceedings, and such evidence as shall have been taken in the said cause of Leslie v. Young and others, may be adopted and used in the proceedings under this petition in the same manner as if the same had been originally taken under this petition. I shall entitle the order in the petition matter and in the cause, and therefore the report of the Master should not repeat over again what has been already found in the cause of Leslie v. Young. It should only refer to what has been already found. As the several proceedings already had in the cause of Leslie v. Young are to be adopted in this matter, I think the plaintiff in that suit will be entitled to her costs. I shall not, however, give her any costs of appearing on this petition. I must add that I disapprove of the course pursued by the petitioner of presenting to the court so voluminous and prolix a petition. I wish it to be understood that I shall not sanction or permit the abuse which has grown up as to equity pleadings, to be applied to cases under the Incumbered Estates Act. Every deed set out in such a petition must be abstracted with as much conciseness as is consistent with clearness, and as I shall have to read over every petition, I shall either adopt the course of dismissing prolix petitions without prejudice to presenting petitions in proper form, or I shall make such order as to the costs as shall prevent such a document as the petition in this matter, from being again presented. The petitioner must take care in carrying on the proceedings before the Master that no unnecessary expense shall be incurred. The Master under the proposed general orders will have to state the number and dates of the meetings before him, and I shall be able to form a judgment when the case comes back whether the case has been fairly conducted in the office, or whether it has been carried on with the view of accumulating costs. Mrs. Leslie is not entitled to the costs she is liable to pay to Mr. Hutton, as she ought to have redeemed him, for she was not justified in filing a bill unless she was prepared to redeem the prior incumbrancers.

The petitioner, R. Hutton, undertaking to submit to such order as the court may think proper to make, in the event of its appearing on the inquiries hereafter directed that the petitioner is not a person authorized by the statute to present the petition in this matter, and the petitioner stating to the court, by his solicitors, that there is not, to their knowledge or belief, any person having any estate or interest in the lands and premises in the said petition mentioned, or having any incumbrances or charge thereon, or whose consent is necessary to a sale thereof, other than the persons severally named as such in the said petition; and the petitioner further stating to the court, by his said solicitors, that there is not, to their knowledge or belief, any suit now pending, either in this court or the Court of Exchequer, for the foreclosure, redemption, or sale of the lands and premises in the petition mentioned, or of any part thereof, unless the suit of Leslie v. Young and others, he considered a pending suit within the meaning of the said act. It is ordered, &c., that it be referred to the Master to inquire and report what estate or interest, if any, the petitioner has in the lands, &c., in the petition mentioned, and the uses, &c., to which said lands, &c., stand limited or settled; and further, to inquire and report the incumbrances and other charges affecting the same, including, as well, such as are claimed by the petitioner and the parties to whom sums have been reported in the said cause of Leslie v. Young and others, and by the persons who shall come in under this order, as all such others as shall appear from the title deeds, or on search, or otherwise, as far as the same can be ascertained, and including, also, debts, &c., due or belonging to her Majesty, her heirs and successors; and the Master is further to inquire and report the persons entitled under such uses, &c., and the persons in whom same are vested, in the order and priority of such incumbrances and charges, and the amount due thereon respectively, distinguishing principal names from interest, and making all just allowances, and let all further proceedings in the said suit of Leslie v. Young and others be stayed; and, in pursuance of the provisions of the 68th section of said act, let all such proofs, and debts, and other proceedings, and such evidence as shall have been taken in such suit, be adopted and used in the proceedings under this petition, in the same manner as if the same had been originally taken under the present order of reference, so that no duplicate costs shall be incurred or reported to any incumbrancer whose incumbrance is already reported in the said cause of Leslie v. Young and others, and declare the several parties to whom costs are decreed in said cause entitled to same in the proceedings under this order of reference, save and except the costs of the petitioner, Robert Hutton, as defendant in said suit, and declare that the said Robert Hutton is not entitled to such costs under this order, and that Mrs. Leslie shall not be entitled to said costs when she shall have paid same; and let the Master further inquire and report the value of the said lands, tenements, and premises, and the annual head rents, quit rents, or crown rents, if any, payable out of same respectively, or out of any part thereof, and whether a good title can be made to the said lands, tenements, and premises, or to any and what part thereof, and whether it is expedient that said lands, tenements, and premises, or any and what part thereof, should be sold; and, in case it should appear that the petitioner is not the first incumbrancer on said tenements and premises, the Master is to report whether the said petitioner is in possession of the title deeds and writings relating to the said lands and premises; and, the better to enable the said Master to take the said accounts and make the said inquiries, the petitioner and all other persons to whom any sum is reported in said cause of Leslie v. Young and others, and all other persons coming in under this order, or bound thereby, are to produce before the Master all deeds, &c., as the Master shall direct, save in such cases as are excepted by the 10th section of the said act, and the petitioner and such other persons are to be examined on interrogations as the Master shall direct, who, in taking the said accounts, is to make unto such persons all just allowances; and the Master is to cause the advertisements, as by the said act is directed, and let the said C. P. Leslie and W. P. Young, &c., who have appeared on the hearing of the said petition, abide their own costs; and let the Receiver appointed in the said cause of Leslie v. Young and others, be extended to this matter, and reserve further directions until the return of the Master's report.

Rolls Petition Book, No. 26, fo. 419.

COMMON PLEAS.—HILARY TERM.

EVANS v. FIGGIS.—Jan. 18.

Practice—Allowing Demurrer—Amendment—Venus.

A change of venue is not such an amendment as can be made under a general liberty to amend upon allowing a demurrer with costs, and will not be permitted in such a case without special grounds being assigned.

Declaration in assumpsit—count on a bill of exchange and the common counts—special demurrer to the first count, and a plea of the general issue to the residue of the declaration.

Johns now moved to change the venue and to amend the declaration in the points demurred to, upon allowing the demurrer taken to the first count with costs, and cited Brown v. Lambert (4 Law Rec. O. S. 266); Anonymous (3 Ir. L. R. 216); Nesbitt v. Barrett (Batty's Reports, 493), in support of the first part of his application.

Mockler, contra.—There is no affidavit of special grounds for changing the venue. The case of Aungier v. English (7 Ir. L. R. 226) overrules Brown v. Lambert; as does also Administrators of King v. Sherry, cited in the note to the former case, [Fife v. Bowstead (7 Jurist, 491).]

DOUGARTY, C. J.—The plaintiff is seeking two things entirely distinct. He is entitled to amend his declaration generally on allowing the demurrer with costs; but he goes farther, and asks for liberty to change the venue, which is not, strictly speaking, an amendment, and which is never permitted after plea pleaded without shewing special grounds. The defendant was entitled to come in and oppose that part of your application, and we must, therefore, refuse it, and give the defendant the costs of this motion.

EXCHEQUER OF PLEAS.

CIVIL BILL APPEALS BEFORE THE LORD CHIEF BARON.—Dec. 11, 18.

FITZGERALD, Appellant, and LACY, Respondent.

Loan Office—Usury—Promissory Note—2nd and 3rd Vict. ch. 37, 8 & 9 Vict. c. 102.

A. applied to B., the proprietor of a loan office, for a loan of £5, which B. agreed to advance upon A.'s giving his joint and several promissory note with two sureties, payable to B.'s order twenty-one days after date, B. to deduct from loan 1s. per £1 as discount, and 1s. for expenses of inquiring after the solvency of the sureties, the £5 to be repaid by weekly instalments of 5s. each; the first payment to be made in seven days from the giving of the note; but in the event of A. allowing three weeks to be in arrear, the twenty-one days specified in the note having expired, then the note was to be put in suit. Held that the note was within the protection of the Statute, 2 & 3 Vict. c. 37.

Appeal from the Recorder's Court. The respondent had obtained a civil bill decree on a promissory note for £5, made by the appellant and two sureties, in favour of the respondent or his order, at twenty-one days after date; and the appellant now appealed on the ground that the transaction was usurious. It was agreed that the appeal should be argued on the following statement of facts.

Respondent, being the proprietor of a loan office, was applied to by appellant for an advance or loan of £5, which respondent agreed to advance upon appellant passing his joint and several promissory note with two solvent sureties, payable to respondent's order at twenty-one days after date, respondent to charge therefor, as discount, 1s. in the £1, and 1s. for card, and expenses of inquiry after sureties, the £5 to be repaid at 5s. per week, the first payment to be made in seven days from the passing of the note; but in the event of appellant allowing three weeks to be in arrear (and twenty-one days specified in note having expired), then the sureties to be sued. Appellant thereupon filled the annexed application paper, and respondent having approved of the sureties therein, appellant, together with said sureties, perfected and delivered to respondent the following form of promissory note:

"£5 Dublin, 27th July, 1847.

"Twenty-one days after date, we jointly and severally promise to pay Mr. Wm. Lacy, or order, at No. 6, Fleet Street, five pounds sterling, value received in cash.

"John Fitzgerald, John Smith, Terence Byrne."

Upon the perfection and delivery to respondent of this note, £4 14s. was advanced by him to appellant, thereby retaining 6s., being the discount at 1s. per £1, and 1s. retained for the expenses attendant on inquiry after the sureties, as previously agreed on; and the annexed form of card was, at the same time, handed by respondent to appellant, in order to have the repayments entered thereon according as they were made by appellant. Appellant, not having made any repayment at all, was proceeded against by civil bill and decreed against, and against that decree the present appeal has been brought. It was solely upon the security of the promissory note respondent advanced the money to appellant. He would not advance the money until it was first perfected and delivered to him.

The application paper and card referred to in the foregoing statement, not being material to the question before the court, are omitted.

Macdonagh, Q.C., for the appellant.—This is a loan under £10, and as to such the statute of Ann. sess. 2. c. 16, is not repealed, the promissory note is a mere contrivance to evade the statute, and does not render the illegal contract valid. In Berrington v. Colles (7 Scott, 302) it was decided that a loan upon usurious interest, secured by the deposit of a lease and a warrant of attorney, was not brought within the protection of the 1 Vic. c. 80, by the addition of a promissory note as a further security. In Doe v. Houghton and King (11 M. & W. 333), the same principle is recognised. The clear object and policy of the statute 2 & 3 Vic. ch. 37, was to protect the poor by leaving loans under £10 to the operation of the usury laws, and was passed with a particular view to pawnbrokers and loan offices. The 3rd section plainly shews the true construction of this statute is, that any loan of money under £10, whether secured by a note or not, at usurious interest, is prohibited. The 39 & 40 Geo. 3, c. 99, relating to pawnbrokers, fixes the maximum sum which they can lend at £10. In Pennell v. Attenborough (4 Q. B. 886), a loan by a pawnbroker of more than £10, at usurious interest, was upheld, but solely on the ground that it was above £10, and therefore within the protection of the 2 & 3 Vic. c. 37. The policy of the legislature respecting pawnbrokers has been extended to loan societies by 6 & 7 Vic. c. 91. The 1 Vic. c. 80 applies only to cases where the bill or note is the primary transaction. The 2 & 3 Vic. c. 37, extended the provisions of that act to loans of money exceeding £10 if there were no real securities; and the third section continues the protection of the pawnbroking acts to loans under that sum, clearly shewing that the policy of the legislature was to preserve such loans from the operation of these statutes, whether advanced on the security of bills or of goods and other securities, as in the case of loan and pawn offices, and to avoid which this transaction is a mere device, Floyer v. Edwards (1 Cowp. 112). [Ex parte Terrewest (Mon. & Ch. 146, 351.)]

Napier, Q.C.—If a note have not more than twelve months to run, and the money be lent on the security of the note, the loan is good. In this case it is admitted the money was advanced solely upon the security of the note. The 2 & 3 Vic. c. 37, limits the time which notes, to be within the act, have to run to twelve months, but prescribes no limit of amount, and provides that no party to any such bill of exchange shall be affected by reason of any statute or law in force for the prevention of usury. Holt v. Myers (5 Mee. & W. 168), and King v. Braddon (10 Ad. & El. 675, S. C., 2 Per. and D. 546), clearly shew that if the bill be the security, however usurious the contract may be, the statute will uphold it. Ex parte Terrewest appears to be overruled by Holt v. Myers. In

* Overruled on appeal (3 Jur. 994, Chan.)

Turquand v. Moesdon, (7 M. & W. 504), Alderson, B. says, "the proviso at the end of the first section that nothing herein contained shall extend to the loan of any money upon the security of any lands, &c., applies to mortgages, clearly not to bills of exchange or promissory notes." Pennell v. Attenborough (4 Q. B. 868) bears out that decision. Then with regard to the subordinate arrangements as to the payment of the money; if the note is good the parties may make any arrangement they like. There is no difference between discounting a bill and giving a bill for an antecedent debt. Holt v. Myers and King v. Braddon decide that, and the general policy of the Acts of Parliament contemplate and warrant this construction. The subsequent act did not intend to repeal the previous acts, as to bills of exchange, which the construction on the other side would make it do. The law stands thus: if bills of exchange or promissory notes are the security, and if they have not more than twelve months to run, they are not usurious; and in other contracts, all loans above £10 are exempted from the usury laws, unless they are secured on land.

Macdonagh, Q. C., in reply, referred to Scott v. Gilmore (3 Taun. 226).

Cur. adv. vult.

Dec. 13.—PIGOT, C.B.—Upon the facts appearing upon the statement agreed upon by both parties, the defence to the civil bill was rested on two grounds; first, it was contended, that the words "above the sum of £10 sterling," in the first section of the 2 & 3 Vic. c. 37, applied not only to the next antecedent words in the sentence, "any contract for the loan or forbearance of money," but also to the previous part of the sentence relating to Bills of exchange and promissory notes. The effect of that construction would be, to exempt any bill of exchange or promissory note for a sum not exceeding £10 from the operation of the statute. Such a construction would be inconsistent, not only with the course of previous legislation upon this subject, but with the express intention of the legislature declared in the preamble of this Act of Parliament. The previous statutes (3 & 4 Wm. 4, ch. 98, sec. 7) exempted from the laws for the prevention of usury all bills of exchange and promissory notes made payable at or within three months from their date, or not having more than three months to run. The 7 Wm. 4, and 1 Vict. ch. 80, extended that provision to bills and notes made payable at or within twelve months from their date, or not having more than twelve months to run. The act of 2 & 3 Vic. ch. 37, on which the present question arises, recites that the 7 Wm. 4 and 1 Vic. ch. 80, was limited to the 1st of January, 1840, and that it was expedient that its provisions should be extended; and then proceeds to enact, "that from and after the passing of this act, no bill of exchange or promissory note, made payable at or within twelve months after the date thereof, or not having more than twelve months to run, nor any contract for the loan or forbearance of money, above the sum of £10 sterling, shall, by reason of any interest taken thereon or secured thereby, or any agreement to pay, or receive, or allow interest in discounting, negotiating, or transferring any such bill of exchange or promissory note, be void, nor shall the liability of any party to any such bill of exchange or promissory note, nor the liability of any person borrowing any sum of money as aforesaid, be affected, by reason of any statute or law in force for the prevention of usury." The act received the royal assent on the 29th of July, 1839, when the 7 Wm. 4, and 1 Vic. ch. 80 had still several months to run, and, by the fourth section, the act was to remain in force till the 1st of January, 1842. It has been since continued by the 3 & 4 Vic. ch. 83; 4 & 5 Vic. ch. 54; and 6 & 9 Vic. ch. 102. The preamble of this statute plainly indicates two purposes; first, to prevent the expiration, on the 1st of January, 1840, of the protection which the then existing law gave to ALL bills and promissory notes payable within twelve months from their dates or negotiation; secondly, to extend the provisions of the statute then in force. The first of these purposes is effected by enacting the continuance of the protection for two years longer. The second is effected by extending the protection to contracts not connected with bills or notes, for sums not exceeding £10. But if the limitation to sums exceeding £10 were applied, not to general contracts for loans only, with which in the context that limitation is coupled, but also to bills and notes, this would be a most material restriction of the previous Act of Parliament, which it was the declared object of the legislature, as stated in the preamble to extend. Unless the context clearly expressed the intention thus to narrow the then subsisting law, it ought not to be construed as so doing. The words used in reference to bills of exchange, in the 2 & 3 Vic. ch. 37, are precisely the same as those used in the preceding statute, save that the word "such" is introduced, for greater clearness, before the words "bill of exchange or promissory note," in the clause providing that the liability of any party to any such bill or note shall not be affected by reason of any law in force for the prevention of usury. The context is plainly susceptible of the other construction by which the restrictive words shall be confined to the next preceding clause of the sentence, in immediate connection with which we find them used by the legislature. I am clearly of opinion that such, upon the language used by the legislature, must be taken to be the true import of this enactment; and that bills of exchange and promissory notes, whether for sums exceeding or not exceeding £10, are within the protection of this Act of Parliament, if they are payable at or within twelve months, or have not more than twelve months to run. It was argued, that the intention of the legislature to protect borrowers of sums not exceeding £10, being shewn by the clause relating to contracts for loans, and shewn also in the third section relating to pawnbrokers, whose advances must not, by law, exceed that amount, ought to govern the construction of the provision relating to bills and notes, and that in order to execute that intention, the restriction to sums exceeding £10, ought to be applied to the protection given by the first section to bills and notes, as well as to the protection given to loans of money. Possibly that may have been designed by the framers of this statute; but I do not feel myself at liberty to speculate upon the intention of the legislature by inference drawn from other enactments. I must infer their intention from the words which they have used in the enactment itself, and in the preamble which expounds it. Secondly, it was contended on the part of the defendant, the appellant in the appeal, that the enactment of the statute did not apply to the present case, because there was, in the first instance, a loan upon a contract for usurious interest, which, as a loan, the statute did not protect, because it was for a sum not exceeding £10, and that the note being given to secure the unlawful loan, was a device to evade that provision of the statute, and was void for that cause; and the principle of some decided cases was referred to, Foster v. Edwards (1 Cowper, 114), Berrington v. Colles (7 Scott, 303, S. C. 5 Bing. N. C. 332), Doe v. King (7 M. & W. 303), in support of the proposition that if the primary object was the loan, and the promissory note was given as a cover to the transaction, the note derived no protection from the statute. What may be the effect of a promissory note given after the completion of an unlawful loan, in a distinct and by-gone transaction, I am not called upon to decide in the case now before me. In the present case, the loan and the note were parts of one and the same transaction. The loan would not have been made, if the note were not given as a security. In the statement of the case agreed on between the parties, it is expressed that the money was advanced solely on that security. The act, in terms, provides "that no such bill or note" as it specifies (that is, payable within twelve months, &c.), "shall be void," "by reason of any interest taken thereon, or secured thereby, or any agreement to pay or allow interest in discounting, negotiating, or transferring any such bill of exchange or promissory note." It was argued, that if the agreement for the loan preceded, by any interval of time, the making of the note, the principle of Berrington v. Colles and Doe v. King applied; and the loan being void, the note was void also. It is, in my opinion, impossible so to hold. The agreement for a loan on the security of a bill or note may, and often must, precede the actual making of the instrument; because it is useless to make the note, or to draw the bill, until the lender has agreed to advance the money on its security; nor, until he shall have so agreed, can, in many instances, the parties to the bill or note, and their position as makers, or as drawers or acceptors, or indorsers, be determined. But when the agreement is completed, and the bill or note is given, the interest which it secures is the interest, which, by the contract for the giving the instrument, the bill or note itself is framed for the purpose of securing, and is within the very terms of the protective enactment, as well as within the plain purpose of the statute. The statute is not confined to transactions in which the usurious interest is the subject of agreement upon the discounting or negotiating of bills or notes previously made. It confers its protection in alternative words, which include, plainly, bills and notes otherwise dealt with. Its terms are, that no such bill or note shall be void "by reason of any interest taken thereon, or secured thereby, or any agreement to pay or allow interest in discounting, negotiating, or transferring any such bill of exchange or promissory note." In the present case, the note secures interest upon the sum advanced upon its security, the sum actually advanced being £4 14s., and the amount of the note being £5. I should, therefore, be of opinion that this note is within the protection of the 2 & 3 Vic. ch. 37, if there were no previous decision to guide me to that conclusion. But the case of Holt v. Myers (5 M. & W. 168) appears to me to be a direct authority. It was decided, as Mr. Macdonagh has observed, upon the 7 Wm. 4, and 1 Vic. ch. 80, which left the usury laws, in reference to contracts for loans not connected with bills of exchange and promissory notes, as they stood before the statute, and as they now stand, where, as here, the loan is for a sum not exceeding £10. In Holt v. Myers the contract was for advances of money, to be secured by promissory notes successively renewed until the advance should be repaid, each note to be payable one month after date, and to secure interest at the rate of 1s. in the £1, the interest thus secured being at the rate of £60 per cent. per annum. It was argued there, as here, that the contract for the loan being unlawful, and the note being given to secure it, the note was a contrivance to evade the usury laws and to cover the unlawful contract, and was therefore void. But the court held the note was within the very terms of the protective words of the statute, the interest on the loan being "the interest secured thereby." Baron Parke says (p. 173), in reference to the statute 3 & 4 W. 4, ch. 96, "the words are, 'no bill of exchange or promissory note made payable within three months—here is a promissory note made payable within three months—' shall, by reason of any interest taken thereon or secured thereby, be void; and here is a case where one of the objects of the promissory note was to secure the payment of the interest, although it was also intended thereby to secure payment of the principal too." Baron Parke, indeed, adds, that any doubt respecting this part of the statute was removed by the general words which follow, "that the liability of any party to any bill of exchange or promissory note shall not be affected by the usury laws. In the subsequent statutes the word 'such' was introduced before the words 'bill of exchange or promissory note;' and that is the form of the enactment in the 2 & 3 Vic. ch. 37, with which I have now to deal. But this does not affect Baron Parke's view (which I think is the correct one) of the previous part of the section: nor does it at all affect the construction of the entire clause, when once it is decided—as I feel bound to decide here—that the statute applies to every bill of exchange and note, whatever be the amount of the sum secured by it, which is made payable within twelve months from its date, or has not more than twelve months to run. On the whole, I am of opinion that this note is within the protection of the statute. The decree must, therefore, be affirmed, with costs.

ROLLS COURT.

CROFTS v. ALLMAN.—Nov. 16.—Jan. 12.

Pleading—Demurrer—Multifariousness.

A bill by A. B. and C. to foreclose a mortgage against X, tenant for life, and Y, tenant in tail in remainder. Y. files a bill against A. B. and C., and D., solicitor for the plaintiffs in the original cause, praying that the bill might be taken as a cross bill against A. B. and C., and that the mortgage and other deeds executed to give effect to the same, might be declared fraudulent and void, and that A. B. and C. might be directed to account as mortgagees in possession, and that an account might be taken of the sum due on foot of a judgment obtained by D. subsequent to the mortgage, and that certain bills of costs, which formed part of the sum secured by the said judgment, might be taxed.

Demurrer for multifariousness by A. B. and C., another by D., both demurrers allowed.

The original bill in this cause was filed on the 27th September, 1847, by Geo. J. Allman, Richard Lane, and Elizabeth Lane, against George Crofts and others, praying a foreclosure and sale in respect of a mortgage of the 28th February, 1844. A cross bill was filed by Christopher Crofts against George James Allman, Richard Lane, and others. It stated the marriage settlement of George Crofts, the father of the plaintiff, under which the plaintiff was entitled, as tenant in tail in remainder, to the lands and premises mortgaged, subject to a power of appointment to the said George Crofts in favour of any one or more younger son—that in the year 1842, George Crofts, the father of plaintiff, borrowed from the defendants, George J. Allman, Richard Lane, and Elizabeth Lane, and from one N. D. Lane, deceased, the sum of £300, and that said sum was secured to them by the bond and warrant of the said George Crofts, and also further secured by a policy of assurance effected on the life of George Crofts, in the Asylum Office, in Cork; and by an indenture of mortgage, of 13th September, 1842, whereby George Crofts conveyed the lands of Ballyellis (which were not included in his marriage settlement) for a term of 200 years, subject to redemption, to N. D. Lane and George J. Allman, their executors, administrators, and assigns, to secure the said sum with interest—that in all those transactions the defendant, James Lane, acted as the solicitor of all the parties, and was also agent of the Asylum Office—that George Crofts, about the end of the year 1842, when the plaintiff was still a minor, having had occasion to borrow some money to meet his own personal demands, made an agreement with the said James Lane, who was his solicitor, that James Lane should draw on him bills of exchange, that several bills were drawn, the first on the 12th of January, 1843, and the last on the 29th of January, 1844, the amount of which were applied to the personal demands of George Crofts, and part of which was repaid to James Lane out of the rents of the lands of George Crofts, which he had permitted James Lane to receive—that James Lane, at the time of the above agreement, also entered into an arrangement with

George Crofts, whose solicitor he then was, that the moneys so to be procured should be charged on the inheritance of the plaintiff, and not only so, but should be exclusively charged upon the inheritance, without any information being given to him, or any person being employed on his behalf—that James Lane, being the solicitor of the plaintiffs in the original bill, applied to them to advance him certain sums of money for the purposes before mentioned, stating that he would procure the execution of deeds by the plaintiff, Christopher, having the aforesaid effect. The bill charged that whatever sums were so advanced by them were advanced with their full knowledge of James Lane's agreement and intentions, and that if they did advance any sums of money as in their bill stated, they had actually, and through their solicitor, notice of all the dealings of the parties, and the transactions relative to the three deeds of the 28th of February, 1844, aftermentioned—that the plaintiff had not attained the age of 21 years until three months previously to the execution by him of the deed of mortgage of the 28th of February, 1844, and that he was not aware of his rights under his father's marriage settlement, farther than that he believed he was tenant in tail; nor did he know with what debts his estate was chargeable, and that James Lane, being his solicitor as well as the solicitor of his father, should have informed him of his rights, and should not have sought such a security from him without having him first properly advised relative thereto—that previously to the execution of the deeds of the 28th of February, 1844, James Lane had furnished several accounts to George Crofts relative to the bills of exchange, and by the last account, dated the 23rd of February, it appeared that the mortgage money, being the consideration of the deed of the 28th of February, 1844, was applied in the payment of the balance due to James Lane on account of the bills of exchange—that James Lane, being the solicitor of the plaintiffs in the original bill, and of George Crofts and the plaintiff Christopher, prepared for the execution of plaintiff Christopher and of George Crofts three deeds; the first, a disentailing deed; the second, the mortgage to the mortgagees in the original bill; and the third appointing Lane receiver over the mortgage lands, and directing him to pay out of the rents thereof the premiums on certain policies of insurance to be effected on the life of George Crofts, as a further security for the mortgage moneys, and for the £300 secured by the said bond and warrant of George Crofts. It charged that while J. Lane applied the rents to pay his own personal demands (as appeared by the said accounts) and also untaxed costs, he had allowed, while in possession of the said lands as agent of the mortgagees, the head rents of some of them to be in arrear, and that in the bill filed by the mortgagees it sought to have those arrears raised out of the inheritance of the plaintiff—that it appears, by other accounts, J. Lane had paid several personal debts of the said George Crofts as well as untaxed costs to himself, and that he had not used due diligence in the receipt of the rents, whereby a large amount thereof was lost—that James Lane, claiming a balance of £600 on an account current between him and the said George Crofts, and having the entire control of all the property of the said George Crofts, upon which all his family were dependent, including plaintiff himself, called upon George Crofts and plaintiff to execute a bond and warrant for the penal sum of £1,300, which they had done, and on which he had entered two separate judgments. The bill prayed that the mortgage deed of the 28th of February, 1844, should be set aside as fraudulent and void, so far as the same purported to charge the estate in remainder of the said plaintiff, he being willing to forego any advantage which he might derive under the disentailing deed, and prayed that any provision in the said third deed which purported to create any charge or liability against the plaintiff or his estate, might be set aside as fraudulent and void against him; or, that in case the mortgage deed should not be set aside, then that the policies should be directed to be kept up for the benefit of plaintiff out of the rents of the said estate, to indemnify him against the charge created by the said mortgage of the 28th of February, 1844, and that it might be declared that Richard Lane, George James Allman, and Elizabeth Lane, being in receipt of the rents of the said estate were bound to pay the head rents and other charges affecting the inheritance, before they paid any portion of the rents to the said George Crofts, and that they should account for all rent which they might have received, without wilful default, to the extent of such head rent and charges, and that such of the defendants, as to the court should seem fit, should be decreed to pay such arrears. And that an account should be taken of the amount bonâ fide due to the said James Lane, on foot of the accounts for which the judgment of the 23d of November, 1846, was obtained, and that the bills of costs in said accounts mentioned should be duly taxed. And that the bill should be taken as a cross bill so far as the same related to George J. Allman, Richard Lane, and Elizabeth Lane. Allman and the other mortgagees demurred to this bill. The grounds of the demurrer by the mortgagees was, first, that several and distinct matters are joined in the bill, in some of which those defendants are in no way interested; that it appears by the bill James Lane is a necessary party to the bill, and that it does not appear he is interested in so much of the bill as relates to the subject matter of the original bill, and that he appears to be a material witness, and that the bill is not a cross bill as to those defendants, nor is the matter thereof proper for a cross bill. Secondly, that it prays inconsistent relief, and relates to matters not referred to in the original bill, and forming no answer thereto, and in which those defendants are not interested. The demurrer of James Lane was for the grounds following, first, want of interest in the original bill mentioned, and that the bill is exhibited against this defendant and several other defendants for several and distinct matters which have no relation to each other, and wherein, or in the greater part whereof, this defendant, or the said complainant, is no way interested, and it appears that in relation to them this defendant ought to be a witness, and that there is no privity between this defendant and complainant. Secondly, that it appears part of the relief sought against him is in respect to matters in which he acted as the agent and solicitor of others, and other parts in which he acted for himself.

Chatterton, for the demurrer of the mortgagees, submitted that the bill was demurrable on two grounds, firstly, for multifariousness, secondly, for praying inconsistent relief. The question always is, whether the plaintiffs have a general right against all the defendants? Here, the first part of the relief prayed is to set aside the right of the mortgagees, and the second part is the relief prayed against James Lane, who has no interest in the mortgage, and no costs are prayed against him. James Lane is not a necessary party as to the relief prayed in the event of the mortgage deed not being set aside, for he is in any case bound to keep the policies up. The third part of the relief prayed is, that the plaintiffs in the original bill should be charged as mortgagees in possession, and they alone are chargeable, and no relief is here prayed against Lane, and it was improper to join him as the agent of the mortgagees. The fourth part of the relief is the account prayed of sums paid to Lane on foot of the accounts for which a security had been given to him, and the mortgagees are in no way interested in those accounts. Steel v. Smith, (8 L.R.N.S. 51); Salvidge v. Hyde, (5 Mad. 138); gives a criterion of multifariousness. Now, in this case is the object of the suit single? Attorney-General v. Goldsmiths' Company, (5 Sim. 670). He distinguished this case from the following cases, Campbell v. Mackey, (1 M. & Cr. 603); Manu v. Rowley, (10 Sim. 470); Parr v. Attorney-General, (8 C. & F. 409); shews that the case must be an entire case. As a cross bill it is more objectionable, charging the mortgagees as in possession, for this might be done much better by answer in the original bill. He admitted that in some cases the relief is so mixed up that it does not render a bill multifarious to pray various relief, from the inseparable nature of the relief, but it is not so in this case. Second objection, the relief here prayed is inconsistent; the bill first prays that the mortgage should be set aside as fraudulent, and then it prays that if the court should not think so, that it should carry out the arrangement made by the deed. Edwards v. Edwards, (1 Jacob, 335); Attorney-General v. Brereton, (2 Vea. S. 425); Lindsay v. Lynch, (2 S. & Lef. 1).

Robert Warren for the demurrer of James Lane. There is no relation between the relief which is prayed against the mortgagees in respect to the mortgage, and against Lane in respect to the judgment. Attorney-General v. Moses, (2 Mad. 305); Attorney-General v. Craddock, (3 M. & Cr. 95); Salvidge v. Hyde, (1 Jacob, 151).

Henry Leslie, for the bill, relied on two propositions to shew that the bill was not multifarious, first, that the parties were so mixed up in the transactions sought to be impeached, that they ought to be joined, and secondly, that Lane was connected with all the relief, and that the mortgagees were connected with nine-tenths of it. He referred to the statements in the bill to establish those two propositions. The mortgagees are charged in the bill to have had notice of all the dealings between Crofts and Lane, and the clause in the deed, appointing a receiver, extends to all incumbrances; this shews that Lane has an interest in the mortgage deed, and the bill also charges that the three deeds were obtained for the purpose of having Lane paid his claims. It is unnecessary to cite authorities in support of the first proposition. The second proposition is supported by (Story, Eq. P. 271.) (Mitford, 211, note.) Campbell v. Mackey, (1 M. & Cr. 614); Attorney-General v. Cradock, (3 M. & Cr. 95); Attorney-General v. Parr, (8 C. & F. 438); Lund v. Blanchard, (4 Hare, 9); Lewis v. Morgan, (5 Price, 42). It is the object of this court to prevent multiplicity of suits. As to the objection of the relief prayed being inconsistent, the bill does not pray that the mortgage should be set aside altogether, but only so far as the plaintiff is concerned, and merely is alternative in the relief it seeks.

Green, Q.C., same side.—The prayer of the bill is not the only criterion of multifariousness, you must also look to the statements in the bill, and see whether they make a consistent case against all the parties, and give a unity of case against all. The pleader is often involved in a dilemma between multiplicity and defectiveness. [He cited Brown v. Douglas, (11 Sim. 283); Addison v. Walker, (4 Y. & C. 442).] The accounts between Lane and Crofts are charged by the bill to have been mixed up with the mortgage accounts, and he contended that those accounts were so mixed up, that, under the authorities, the case was inseparable.

Lane, Q.C. in reply.—There is no relief prayed against Lane in respect of the case made against the mortgage, and it is necessary to pray relief against a party who is brought before the court, and even costs are not prayed against Lane. Le Tesier v. Margravine of Anspach, (15 Ves. 164); Beadle v. Burch, (10 Sim. 338); Roddy v. Williams (3 Jones & La. 1); Fenwick v. Road, (1 Merivale, 114). There is no case of cestui que trust made against Lane, he is called agent and solicitor through the whole bill. The case as to the mortgagees is somewhat different, the bill is objectionable as to them, in seeking to keep them before the court while accounts are being taken between Lane and Crofts as to their dealings relative to transactions in which the mortgagees are in no way interested. Benson v. Hadfield, (5 Bev. 554); Pearse v. Hewitt, (7 Sim. 471. As to its not being a proper subject for a cross bill, (Story, E. P. s. 401.) As to inconsistent relief, Mole v. Smith, (1 Jacob, 490); Howe v. Best, (5 Mad. 19). Suppose Lane were to join the mortgagees in a bill to raise the amount of the mortgage, could there be a doubt that the bill would be demurrable?

Jan. 12th 1847. MASTER OF THE ROLLS.—The original bill was filed on the 27th of September, 1847, by George James Allman and others, against Christopher Crofts, George Crofts, and others, and prays for a foreclosure and sale of certain lands contained in a mortgage of the year 1844. The second bill was in chief part a cross bill filed by Christopher Crofts; its prayer may be divided into four parts—the first prays that the deed of mortgage of the 28th of February, 1844, may be declared fraudulent and void, and set aside, so far as it seeks to charge the sum of £2,550 on the estate in remainder of the plaintiff; the plaintiff foregoing any advantage which he might derive under the disentailing deed. The second part prays that if the court should not think fit to set aside the deed of mortgage, that the three policies of insurance for £1,000, £1,200, and £350, might be kept up for the benefit of the plaintiff, out of the rents and profits of the real estates, to indemnify him against the said charge of £2,550. The third part prays that it might be declared that the said Richard Lane, George James Allman, and Elizabeth Lane, being in receipt of the rents, were bound to keep down the head rents and interest of charges affecting the inheritance, and were bound to pay same before payment of any part thereof to the said George Crofts, and that they are bound to account for all rents received by them, and may be decreed to pay all arrears of head rent and interest upon the charges. The fourth part prays that an account might be taken of the sum due to James Lane, as a collateral security for which the judgment of the 23rd November, 1846, was obtained, and that the bills of costs of said James Lane, mentioned in the accounts, might be taxed. It is to be observed that no direct relief is prayed against James Lane, unless what is stated in the fourth part. To this bill a demurrer has been taken by the defendant, James Lane—first, that it does not appear that he is interested in the matters contained in the original bill, and is not a necessary party to any cross bill filed thereto; secondly, for multifariousness; thirdly, want of priority. A demurrer has also been taken by the other defendants—first, for multifariousness; secondly, that J. Lane appears to be a material witness; thirdly, that the present bill is not a proper subject for a cross bill. I shall, with respect to J. Lane, in the first place, consider the demurrer on the ground of multifariousness. From the statements in the bill, it appears that upon the marriage of George Crofts a settlement was executed, bearing date the 1st of April, 1815, by which the estate was limited in tail, or quasi tail, upon the first and other sons of the marriage, subject to certain charges, and a power was given to George Crofts to appoint the estates to any one or more younger sons. The plaintiff was the eldest son. That in the year 1842 James Lane, who was solicitor for George Crofts, entered into an agreement that certain moneys which were to be procured by James Lane were to be charged upon the estate in remainder of the plaintiff—that J. Lane applied to G. J. Allman, R. Lane, and E. Lane for the money—that any sums advanced by these parties was with full notice of this agreement—that the plaintiff was under age when this agreement was entered into, and attained age only three months before the deed of mortgage was executed—that he was unacquainted with his rights—that J. Lane furnished accounts to G. Crofts, shewing sums due to himself—that J. Lane was solicitor for Allman in all these matters—that there was no other solicitor—that the deeds were not read by plaintiff—and that the sums raised were charged exclusively on the estate of plaintiff, which was not in any way liable thereto. The bill then sets out the disentailing deed, and the deed of mortgage of 1844, which contained a covenant that J. Lane was to be receiver over the lands, and was to have £5 per cent. poundage fees; it also provides for the appointment of a new receiver, in case of necessity, and the rents were to be applied in payment of head rents, interest on the mortgage money, and the residue of the payment of fees and expenses was to be paid to George Crofts for life, and after his death to the plaintiff; it also provided that the costs of all necessary proceedings were to be paid out of the rents, and that George Crofts should be liable to pay the interest only of the sum advanced. The third deed is then set out, which related to the policies of insurance. The bill then charges that the three deeds were procured by the said J. Lane for the purpose of securing payment of £2,550—that they were never read to plaintiff, and that he was unaware the disentailing deed contained a clause releasing the power of appointment in favour of younger children, and contains a statement that the rents were mismanaged by J. Lane. It was contended by the plaintiff that the plaintiffs in the original cause are, in fact, trustees for James Lane, and that the money advanced was his altogether, or chiefly so. But I consider there is no foundation for this argument. By the third account, J. Lane debited himself with the entire amount of the mortgage, and it does not appear that he advanced any part of the consideration for the mortgage; it is not once positively so stated in the whole cross bill. It is contended, further, that the entire transaction is fraudulent, but no relief, not even to make him liable to costs, is prayed against J. Lane, Beadles v. Burch (10 Sim. 332); Roddy v. Williams (3 Jon. & Lat.; Mitford Pleading, 4th ed. 189); and there is no provision in the deeds entitling him to any provision out of the inheritance. Therefore, in this bill, which relates to the inheritance, he is not properly made a defendant, nor is his interest as agent sufficient to render him a necessary party, Finder v. Stephens (2 Phil. 147). I am of opinion, therefore, that the bill is multifarious, J. Lane being brought as defendant upon a record, with a great part of which he is not connected. Campbell v. Mackay is decided on the principle that there is a common interest in all the plaintiffs, and all the defendants were interested in all the questions raised, and were accounting parties. It is not necessary for me to give any opinion upon the other grounds of demurrer, but a serious question arises, whether the bill is not objectionable on the ground of misjoinder, but it is not necessary to decide that question. As to the other demurrer, I am of opinion that it also should be allowed. The defendants, the mortgagees, had no concern with a great part of the bill; Attorney-General v. Poole. I shall allow the demurrer with costs.

Allow the demurrer with costs, and let the bill stand dismissed as against the defendants, James Lane, George James Allman, Richard Lane, and Elizabeth Lane, with costs.—Lib. 20, fol. 59.

BRABAZON v. LORD LUCAN.

Ecclesiastical Lease—Perpetuity—Purchase—Renewal Leases—Interest.

The immediate lessee of an ecclesiastical lease purchasing the perpetuity under the 3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 37, is entitled to interest on the renewal fines payable by the sub-tenant.

In this case—the facts of which will be found fully reported in 9 I. E. R. 441—Lord Lucan, being possessed of certain lands under a lease from the see of Tuam, demised same to Sir Wm. Brabazon, with a toties quoties covenant for renewal; on the 28th of September, 1837, Lord Lucan having obtained a conveyance of the fee under the Church Temporalities Acts, by order, bearing date the 30th day of June, 1846, it was referred to the Master to inquire and report what sum was due, by the representatives of Sir Wm. Brabazon, for interest, upon their proportion of the purchase money; and, also, what was due for rent and arrears, and fines and fees for renewal, and if interest was customarily paid and payable on such fines for renewal, and also what was due and payable for such interest and such fines, and to settle a proper deed of conveyance. Upon appeal before the Lord Chancellor, on the 23rd of December, 1848, this order was varied, so far as it directed a reference to ascertain the interest due upon the purchase money. On the 24th of June, 1848, the Master made his report, and thereby found that there was due, for rent and arrears of rent, by the petitioners to the respondent, £798 16s. 10d. for fines for renewal, £2,269 11s. 10½d. The report then proceeded as follows:—“And having regard to that part of said order of references by which I am directed to inquire and report whether interest had been customarily paid upon such renewal fines, no evidence has been offered to me by either party; but, being under the impression that in all similar cases it has been the habit of Courts of Equity in Ireland to allow such interest, I have made my calculation on the supposition that, in the absence of express evidence of any local custom, interest ought to be paid upon fines for renewal of leases of the lands and premises.” To this report the petitioner excepted that the Master ought not to have found that there was due to the respondent the sum of £770 10s. 4d. for interest on the renewal fines, because interest was not payable upon same, nor was the Master authorised by the order of reference to compute or allow interest thereon, unless he should find that interest had been customarily paid on such fines; and it appeared by the report there was not any evidence laid before the said Master to shew or prove that interest had been customarily paid on such fines.

Sergeant O'Brien for the exceptions.—There was no evidence given before the Master that it was customary to pay interest on the renewal fines, and he ought not to have so found. Also the covenant to renew is silent upon that point, and there is no specific time limited within which the renewals must be taken out. This is not the case where the tenant is obliged to come into a Court of Equity for relief, but the statute 6 & 7 Wm. 4, c. 90, sec. 1, enables him to obtain a renewal upon terms which do not include payment of interest on the line.

Nov. 29.—Attorney-General and S. B. Millar for the report.—Independently of the act, Sir W. Brabazon, the tenant, upon the renewal of his lease, is bound to pay the renewal fines and interest; and if a bill was filed in a Court of Equity, a renewal would not be decreed unless upon payment of fines and interest. In the case reported in 9 I. E. Rep. 540, the Lord Chancellor was coerced by the Act of Parliament, and did not give interest on the purchase money, which was a new thing created by statute; but by the 141 sec. of the 3 & 4 Wm. 4, cap. 37, before obtaining a conveyance of the perpetuity, a tenant must renew his lease, and all rent and arrears of rent must be paid.

Maley, in reply, cited Swanton v. Biggs (Beatty, 240); Revell v. Hussey (2 Ball & B. 280).

Jan. 14.—MASTER OF THE ROLLS.—On the 30th of June, 1846, an order was made in this case, that it be referred to the Master to inquire and report what sum was due by the representatives of Sir W. Brabazon for interest upon the purchase money and rent, and whether interest was customarily paid on the renewal fines contained in the lease of the 19th day of June, 1832, and on the 23rd December, 1846, that order was varied so far as it directed the Master to ascertain the amount of interest payable on the purchase money. The Master, having made his report, finds that there is due, for rent and arrears, £793 16s. 10d.; he then proceeds, that no evidence was brought before him of interest being customarily paid upon renewal fines, but that his impression is, that interest has been allowed in all similar cases by Courts of Equity, and finds accordingly. To this report, exceptions have been taken by James O'Dowd, the surviving trustee of Sir W. Brabazon's representatives, because the Master found that interest was payable on fines, while the Master was not authorised to do so. The renewal of 1832 recites a payment made by Sir W. Brabazon of renewal fines and interest previously to its execution by the Earl of Lucan, and therefore supplies some evidence, at least, that interest was customarily paid upon the renewal fines. There is no covenant to pay interest upon the renewal fines; for, from the nature of the toties quoties covenant, the renewal was to take place as soon as the lease was obtained, and it became the duty of the inferior tenant to pay his proportion immediately; also, upon looking to the statute 3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 37, sec. 141, I find it is there directed that "no tenant or lessee, as aforesaid, shall be entitled to have any such conveyance of the fee simple and inheritance, &c., of whose lease if holding by lease for the term of 21 years, 20 years shall not be then unexpired; or for the term of 40 years, 39 years shall not be unexpired; or if holding for 21 years or three lives, or for three lives, and all the lives shall not then be in being, unless he or she shall, previous to the execution of such deed of conveyance, pay all the renewal fines payable for the renewal of such lease, &c., or unless all rent and arrears of rent shall have been fully paid and satisfied." The 30th section of the 4 & 5 Wm. 4, cap. 90, does not contain this provision, but the 6 & 7 Wm. 4, c. 99, sec. 35, enacts that these statutes are to be considered as one act; and by the first section of the latter statute, an inferior tenant may apply to his immediate landlord for a conveyance of the perpetuity, "provided that such tenant shall previously have paid or tendered to such landlord, &c., such sum as shall be payable for contribution for the purchase money, &c., together with all rent, and fines, and fees for renewal, and all arrears thereof, then due and payable by such tenant, by virtue of such lease or contract." All these statutes are to be considered as one act, and no person is to be entitled to a conveyance unless all fines and arrears of rent are paid. On the part of Sir W. Brabazon, it is contended that in the case reported in 9 I. E. Rep. the Lord Chancellor decided that interest was not payable on the purchase money, however long payment was delayed. I am of opinion that Sir Wm. Brabazon ought to pay the entire fines with interest, and the statute ought to be construed with reference to what was the practice of Courts of Equity previous to the passing of it; for nothing could be more unjust than that a tenant should, after a considerable time, be at liberty to pay up the fines without any interest. I would not have any difficulty in the present case, were it not for the Lord Chancellor's opinion expressed upon the former case. However, without acting against that decision, I think that interest upon these renewal fines was customarily payable.

Overrule the exceptions with costs, and declare Lord Lucan entitled to the costs of the reference under the order dated the 30th day of June, 1846, and the costs of this hearing against the surviving petitioner James O'Dowd, and let the deposit be paid over to Lord Lucan, in part payment of said costs, and refer it to one of the Taxing Masters of this court to tax same.

Lib. 20, fo. 52.

HORNEBROKE v. WARE—Dec 18.

Practice—Amendment.

After a demurrer allowed as to one defendant by the operation of the 64th General Order. The plaintiff having paid the costs of the suit to that defendant, amended the bill and issued subpoena against that defendant, who appeared. Held that the plaintiff could take the bill pro confesso against him.

This was a bill filed by judgment creditors. The defendant Ware demurred for want of parties, and the plaintiff not having set down the demurrer for argument, it was allowed under the 64th General Order. On the 10th of January, 1848, the plaintiff served notice of motion for liberty to amend the bill by adding parties, and on the 20th of January that motion was refused. The plaintiff afterwards amended the bill on the 9th of May, and served subpoena on the defendant Ware, having first paid him the costs of the demurrer. Ware appeared, but served a notice on the plaintiff that his appearance should not waive the irregularity of the amendment of the bill.

Lawson now moved to take the bill pro confesso against Ware.

R. Longfield, contra.—Under the 64th General Order, the amendment of the bill is irregular, Lautour v. Holcombe (11 Sim. 71; 10 Bea. 256); Assignee Cornwall v. Speering, decided in this court, 7th May, 1842.

Lawson, in reply.—In this case the costs of the suit have been paid, and that distinguishes it from Lautour v. Holcombe. The amendment makes a new record; it is a new bill quoad this defendant; even if the amendment had been irregular, the irregularity has been waived by appearing; for Denny v. O'Connell (1 S. & Sc. 111) shews that it was not necessary to appear, and the notice served by the defendant does not alter the effect of appearing.

MASTER OF THE ROLLS.—In this case the defendant, T. Ware, having demurred to the bill, the demurrer, not being set down for argument, was allowed. In January, 1848, the plaintiff moved for liberty to amend the bill, upon payment of costs. That motion was refused. On the 20th of May, the plaintiff, notwithstanding, having amended his bill, served a subpoena upon the defendant Ware, who, upon the 2nd of September, 1848, entered an appearance, and no notice has been served of any application to set aside the subpoena. The defendant served notice of the irregularity, but that was not the proper course; he should have moved to set aside the service of subpoena. The time for answering having expired, the plaintiff now moves to take the bill pro confesso. According to the argument of Mr. Ware's counsel, if there were a great number of defendants, and one demurred, if the demurrer be not set down for argument, the plaintiff would be obliged to dismiss the bill as against the rest, although they had all answered. In the case of Cornwall v. Speering,* (which is not reported) decided by Sir. M. O'Logh-

* In this case Mr. Sergeant Warren moved that the parliamentary appearance entered by the plaintiffs on the 19th day of March, might be set aside, and that all costs incurred by Andrew Speering, Charles Sugrue, and Robert Delacour, since the order of the 10th of February, (by which the bill has been dismissed for want of prosecution) might be paid to the plaintiffs, and it was ordered that the parliamentary appearance entered by the plaintiffs be set aside. "The said defendants not having been made parties to this suit by any proceeding subsequent to the pronouncing of the order of the 10th of February last, by which the bill in this case was dismissed as against them, and it being admitted on the part of the said defendants, that the costs awarded to them by the said order hath been paid, and counsel for the plaintiffs' informing the court that said defendants are decreed to be necessary parties to this suit, it is further ordered that the said plaintiffs be at liberty at any time within 10 days from the date of this order to amend the bill in this cause, by again introducing the names of the said A. Speering, C. Sugrue, and R. Delacour, as defendants, and the said A. Speering, C. Sugrue, and R. Delacour, having appeared on this motion, by J. H. Garde, as their solicitor, it is further ordered that they do, within eight days after service on the said J. H. Garde, their solicitor, of a notice stating that such amendment has been made, and of copies of subpoena to answer said bill, cause appearances to be entered to such subpoena, and that in default of their so doing, the plaintiffs be at liberty to enter appearances for them pursuant to the statute." The order then directed payment by the plaintiff of the costs incurred by defendants subsequent to the order of the 10th February.—Lib. 330, fo. 343.

len, in May, 1842, there was an application that a parliamentary appearance should be set aside, and it was ordered that the appearance entered on the 19th of March should be set aside, the defendants not being parties to the suit subsequent to an order of February previous by which the plaintiff's bill had been dismissed for want of prosecution, but the plaintiffs were allowed to amend the bill by bringing these parties on the record. So that where a bill was dismissed for want of prosecution—which is not distinguishable from the case of a demurrer allowed—the parties were afterwards permitted to amend the bill, and enter a parliamentary appearance, and Sir M. O'Loughlin considered the amendment regular. The effect of this decision is, that a bill being dismissed against any defendant for want of prosecution, you may bring him again on the record by amendment, and may subpoena against him. I concur with the rule that order made. There is no difference in principle between that and the present case, and I will make the order that the bill be taken pro confesso.

"Declare that plaintiff is entitled to take said bill pro confesso as against defendant, Thomas Ware, and counsel for said defendant, Thomas Ware, having applied for time to answer, let the said defendant have three weeks' time to answer; and let him pay plaintiff £5 costs of this motion, and in default of his answer being filed within said period, let the bill be taken pro confesso against him without further order."

QUEEN'S BENCH.—HILARY TERM.

HOLT v. KELLY.—Jan. 15.

In an issue under the Interpleader Act (9 & 10 Vic. c. 64), to try whether a certain deed of assignment was fraudulent or not, the simple question as to whether it was intended to defeat or delay particular creditors is not a sufficient test of its bona fides. Semble, that it is enough for the party impeaching the deed to shew that it is within section 10 of Car. 1, sess. 2, c. 3, Irish, so as to enable him to make out a prima facie case; and that it then rests with the other party to prove that he is exempted from the operation thereof, and protected by the 14th section of the same statute.

This was an issue under the Interpleader Act (9 & 10 Vic. c. 64), to try the validity of a certain deed of assignment of stock in trade and other property, and bearing date the 18th of December, 1847, and purporting to be made between Michael Creagh Mangan of the first part, the plaintiff Holt of the second part, and the other creditors of Mangan of the third part. The assignment purported to be for the behoof of such creditors as should execute the deed, or otherwise assent thereto, on or before the 1st of February, 1848. The defendant Kelly was a creditor of Mangan, but never executed or assented to the deed in question. An agent, named Lees, was sent by Holt to Limerick, ostensibly on behalf of some English creditors, to take possession of the goods, which he accordingly did, employing Mangan in the winding up of the business. The shop was closed on the 24th of December; subsequently, but prior to the 1st of February, 1848, the goods in question were seized by the Sheriff of the city of Limerick, by virtue of a fi. fa. issued at the suit of the defendant, and on the 27th of January the order to interplead was obtained. The cause was tried at the Limerick Spring Assizes, 1848, before Ball, J., and on that occasion the learned Judge told the jury that "if they believed that the deed was executed to hinder, delay, or defeat creditors, they should find for the defendant." Counsel, at the trial, objected to this charge, and called upon his lordship merely to leave with the jury the question whether the deed was executed bona fide, and for valuable consideration. The jury having found for the defendant, a conditional order was obtained in last Easter Term to set aside the verdict, on the ground of misdirection of the learned Judge; and this day

Copinger moved, that the said order be made absolute. The charge was wrong, as the only matters for the jury to consider were those relating to the valuable consideration and bona fides of the transfer; and it is quite beside the question to inquire whether the deed was executed in fraud of certain creditors. The case rests on the construction of the statutes 18 Eliz. c. 5, English, and 10 Car. 1, sess. 2, c. 3, Irish, Pickstock v. Lyster, (3 Manle & Sel. 371); Holbird v. Anderson (5 T. R. 235); Wood v. Dixie (7 Q. B. 892, per Lord Denman, C. J.)

J. D. Fitzgerald, Q. C., and Sir C. O'Loughlin, contra.—The deed in question belongs to the class adverted to by Dampier, J., in his judgment in Pickstock v. Lyster, who there says, that if it could have been shewn "that the whole transaction was fallacious, that the trustee was, in effect, only a trustee for some particular creditors, and not, as he is stated, for all, the case would have been different; that might have given it a fraudulent complexion." It is also laid down that no creditor can take advantage of a deed if they be not parties to it, and have not executed it, Garrard v. Lauderdale (3 Sim. 1); Simmonds v. Pallas (2 Jones & Lat. 494). Here no creditor had executed the deed before the 1st of February; no notice of the execution of the deed was published in the Gazette, as is usual in such cases. Judging of the intentions of parties by their acts, it is quite evident that Holt got up the deed for his own purposes, and not bona fide for the benefit of the creditors in general. By the terms of the deed, Holt was not bound to give notice to a single creditor. There were only the representatives of three creditors present when the arrangement was agreed on. (Moore, J.—If any creditor had assented to this deed, would it not suffice?) It does not appear from the evidence that there was any express assent thereto from any party but the plaintiff. It is contended that although the deed was ostensibly for the general body of the creditors, it was in reality but for a few. (Perrin, J.—Is a deed fraudulent where some creditors are excluded?) A creditor at common law may prefer particular creditors, but here the deed is exclusively for the benefit of one. How could a deed intending to defeat a class of creditors be bona fide? The case of Owen v.

Body (5 Ad. & El. 28) also bears on the present case, as appears by the trusts of the deed. (Moore, J.—The 10th section of the 10 Car. 1 appears to render void deeds executed under certain circumstances, and the 14th section to qualify the general words of the former. Thus he who desires to have the protection of section 14, ought to shew his case to be within it.) (Crampton, J.—The charge in this case seems to rest on section 10, and the objections to be founded on section 14.) It was impossible to bring the deed in question within section 14. In any event, the direction which was called for was wrong in part, being based on the 14th section alone, exclusive of the 10th, which the former was only intended to qualify; and the court ought to allow the verdict to stand, unless satisfied that the charge which the plaintiff called upon the Judge to give was the correct one.

Thomas Graydon, in reply.—The 14th section of the statute does not warrant the position that the mere circumstance of an assignment, having for its object the defeating of a particular creditor, would avoid it, Wood v. Dixie (7 Q. B. 892). Here the goods were seized by the defendant but a few days after the deed was executed. The case of Owen v. Body, relied on by the other side, has no application whatever to the present one. Five creditors intimated their intention to accept a benefit under the present deed.

BLACKBURN, C.J. (after briefly stating the case).—The question depends upon the effect of a certain deed, by which Mangan assigned all his property to the plaintiff Holt, in trust, for the benefit of his creditors. The transaction may possibly have been a fraudulent one, but nevertheless we think that the jury may have been misled by having had their attention so pointedly directed to the question, whether the deed was executed for the purpose of delaying or defeating creditors, on the assumption that such was the proper test of its validity. On the other hand, we think that the direction called for by the plaintiff was too large. The verdict in this case, therefore, is not satisfactory, and there must be a new trial, on payment by plaintiff of costs of former trial.

Order absolute.

COMMON PLEAS.

ALLINGHAM v. WALKER.—Jan. 17, 20, 24.

Pleading—Special Demurrer—False Plea—Plea in Discharge of Action—Replication de injuriâ.

Where the plea denies the cause of action instead of being in confession and avoidance, the replication de injuriâ is bad, and a demurrer must be allowed, although the plea is itself specially demurrable as amounting to the general issue. A demurrer to a replication putting in issue a false plea, will be set down for immediate argument. Signing the name on a blank bill of exchange stamp, with an express agreement to draw it for a specified amount, is not a contract to pay any sum which may afterwards be inserted in the bill as between parties having notice of the agreement.

This was an action in assumpsit by the indorsees against the acceptor of a bill of exchange for £74 11s., drawn by Messrs. Hamilton and Ruskell. The declaration contained a count upon the bill of exchange and the indebitatus counts. The defendant pleaded as to the indebitatus counts the general issue, and as to the first count, the following plea:—"That heretofore, to wit, &c., he, the said defendant, delivered to the said certain persons using the name, style, and firm of Hamilton and Ruskell, a bill of exchange stamp of the amount of 4s. 6d., accepted in writing and in blank by the said defendant, and it was then and there agreed by and between the said defendant and the said Hamilton and Ruskell, that they should draw on the said stamp their bill of exchange, and thereby require the said defendant to pay to their order the sum of £65 1s. 2d. three months after the date thereof, to wit, the 19th of December, 1846; and the said defendant says, that the said Hamilton and Ruskell, without the knowledge or assent of the said defendant, then and there drew on the said stamp their bill of exchange, and thereby required the said defendant to pay to their order £74 11s., three months after the date thereof, to wit, &c., and afterwards, to wit, then and there indorsed the same to the said plaintiffs, who then and there had due notice of the aforesaid matter in this plea set forth, and this the said defendant is ready to verify," &c.

Replication—"That the said plaintiff's, by reason, &c., because they say that the said defendant of his own wrong, and without the cause by him in his said second plea alleged, broke his said promise in the said first count of the declaration mentioned in manner and form," &c.

Demurrer to the replication, assigning as special cause, "that the defendant's said second plea is in discharge of said plaintiff's cause of action, and that it denies the said plaintiff's said cause of action, and that it is not by way of confession and avoidance."

R. Johnson, with whom was Brooks, Q.C. now (17th January) moved that the demurrer should be set aside as frivolous, or that it should be set down for immediate argument.

Codd, contra.—It is certified that this demurrer is tenable.

DOHERTY, C. J.—Where counsel appears at the bar in support of his demurrer, we cannot set it aside as frivolous. We shall hear it argued on Saturday.

Jan. 20.—The case having been now called on,

Cuffs (with whom was Codd) in support of the demurrer.—It is clearly laid down in all the books that the replication de injuriâ is applicable only where the plea confesses the cause of action and avoids it, Crogate's case (8 Rep. 66, b. 2; Saunders, 295); Edwards v. Greenwood (5 Bing. N. C. 476). Fisher v. Wood (1 Dowl. N. 54) is an express authority in favour of this demurrer. Here the plea is in denial of the contract stated in the declaration, and not in excuse.

Johnson, R. (with Brooks, Q.C.), contra.—Fisher v. Wood is overruled by Cowper v. Garbett (13 Mees. & W. 33). Pollock, C. B., there says, "Though these circumstances render the contract not binding, and so amount to a denial that there was a binding contract, they admit a contract in fact and excuse its performance, Lansdale v. Clarke (1 Ex. Rep. 78). (Ball, J.—If you can establish that the defendant's putting his name upon a blank stamp is a contract in fact for whatever sum is afterwards inserted, notwithstanding an express agreement for a particular amount, you overthrow this demurrer.) It is impossible to contend that this is not a contract in fact, as to the whole world; and a contract in law, as to all persons not having notice of the fraud, Isaac v. Farrier (1 Mees. & W. 85); Rowland v. Evans (4 Jur. 460; 2 Arch. N. P. 40); Shultz v. Astley (2 Bing. N. C. 544); Watson v. Wilks (5 Ad. & El. 237); Emanuel v. Rendal (8 Dowl. P. C. 238); Reynolds v. Blackburn (2 Nev. & P. 136); Tolhurst v. Nolley (17 Law. l. 97); Noel v. Rich (4 Dow. P. C. 228). (5 Tyr. 692, S. C.) is exactly in point. If this were not an acceptance in fact he ought to have pleaded non assumpsit, Grant v. Enthoven (1 Ex. Rep. 382).

Codd, in reply.—We admit that this plea is open to special demurrer, as amounting to the general issue. But the plaintiffs have not taken that course; they have put a bad replication upon the record, and this demurrer must therefore be allowed, Whittaker v. Mason (2 Bing. N. C. 359).

JACKSON, J.—Noel v. Rich is not the same as this case.

PER CURIAM.—This demurrer must be allowed. It is said that Fisher v. Wood has been overruled, but that does not appear to be so. We decide this case on the authority of Fisher v. Wood.

Demurrer allowed with costs.

Codd applied for the costs of the former motion.

Johnston, contra.—Before the court makes such an order, it will hear the affidavit of the Messrs. Hamilton and Ruskell as to the falsehood of the plea.

DOHERTY, C. J.—This is a branch of the case much too important to be disposed of lightly. Let the defendant apply for these costs on Wednesday next.

Jan. 24.—Codd for the defendant, in pursuance of the leave given, applied this day for the costs of the motion to have the demurrer set down for immediate argument.

Johnston, contra.—We have the affidavit of one of the firm of Hamilton and Ruskell, the drawers of the bill, stating the matters contained in the plea to be false, and that the figures £74 11s., written in the margin of the bill, are in the handwriting of the defendant himself, Horner v. Keppel (10 Ad. & El. 17); Haworth v. White (1 Arnold, 278). The answering affidavit of the attorney for the defendant does not even allege that he had any authority from his client for putting such a plea upon the record.

DOHERTY, C. J.—This case was a very proper one to be set down for immediate decision. The replication is one fairly putting in issue matters alleged in the plea, and now admitted to be false. We refuse to give the defendant any costs, and we regret that we cannot give them against him.

COURT OF CHANCERY.

DUNDAS v. BLAKE.—Oct. 26, 27, 1848, Jan. 16, 1849.

Statute of Limitations—Effect of a general charge in a will for payment of debts. Held that where a testator devises lands, subject to the payment of his just debts, directly to the devisee, and without the intervention of trustees, that there was no trust created, so as to save a debt from the operation of the statute.

The bill in this case was filed to raise a sum of £1,000 and a sum of £400 claimed to be charged upon certain lands called Crumlin and Cloncum. The case relied on was as follows:—

That by indenture of mortgage, bearing date the 25th day of May, 1796, and made between Stephen Blake of the one part, and Joseph Callinan of the other part, the said Stephen Blake, in consideration of the sum of £1,000, conveyed to the said Joseph the said lands of Crumlin and Cloncum, together with certain other lands, not the subject matter of the suit, by way of mortgage, to secure payment of the said sum of £1,000.

That the said Stephen Blake and Robert Blake, his brother, jointly executed their bond and warrant for confessing judgment thereon, in the penal sum of £2,000, with interest thereon.

That the said indenture of mortgage was duly registered on the 18th day of June, 1796.

That in Trinity Term, 1796, separate judgments were obtained against the said Stephen and Robert Blake, and that the judgment obtained against Robert was redocketed in Michaelmas Term, 1833.

That the said Stephen Blake died some time in the year 1813, unmarried and intestate, leaving his brother Robert his heir-at-law, him surviving, who, immediately after the death of Stephen, entered into possession of all his real property, inclusive of Crumlin and Cloncum, and continued in possession thereof to the time of his death.

That Joseph Callinan died on the 8th day of February, 1812, having first duly made his will, dated the 6th day of September, 1807, and, after certain specific bequests, devised the residue of his property to his son John, and appointed his brother, John Callinan, and Francis Farrell executors thereof, by whom same was duly proved.

That John Callinan attained his full age some time in the year 1817, and became entitled to the moneys secured by said indenture of mortgage.

That Robert Blake was liable to pay said debt, not only as joint obligor in the said bond, but because, as heir-at-law of Stephen, he applied to his own use the rents and profits of Stephen's real estate, from the time of his death in 1813, till the year 1819, when the said Robert died.

That on the 26th day of November, 1817, the said Robert Blake wrote to C. J. Moore, the solicitor for the said John Callinan, the following letter:—

"Sir,—I am this day favoured with your letter of yesterday's date. I wrote to Mr. John Callinan on the 2nd instant, that I had about 220 acres of good land out of lease, which I would agree to sell him to discharge his mortgage, and take his security for the balance; and that the business might be settled without the expense of foreclosing, and that the value might be left to two gentlemen of understanding. This I am ready to do at any time. I am, Sir, your obedient servant,

ROBERT BLAKE."

That the purchase or sale proposed by said letter never took effect, and the mortgage debt remaining unpaid on the 2nd day of June, 1818, John Callinan, the devisee, and Francis Farrell, the surviving executor of the will of Joseph Callinan, filed their bill of foreclosure against the said Robert Blake, who, having neglected to appear and answer, process to a sergeant-at-arms was entered against him; and, by order of the 16th of December, 1818, it was referred to one of the Masters to appoint a receiver.

That process to a sequestration was carried on against the said Robert Blake, and said cause was about to be heard when the said Robert Blake died, about the 6th day of February, 1819, whereby said suit became abated.

That the said Robert Blake made his will, duly executed for passing real estates, and after reciting that he was seized of the lands of Crumlin, he specifically devised same, and the will proceeded in the words following:—"I give, devise, and bequeath my said estates of Cloncum and Grange, with all rights, &c., unto my sister-in-law, Mrs. Jane Blake, for and during the term of her natural life, subject to all my just debts, legacies, and funeral expenses, and after her death, to such of her children, in such proportion as she, by any deed or will by her duly executed, shall limit, direct, or appoint, and for want of such appointment, I order that the issues and profits arising therefrom may be divided, share and share alike, among all her children, male and female, save only Mrs. Mills, who has been already provided for; and whereas George M'Entaggart holds my security for £300, for which I never received any value, I think it but right to declare that it was my intention to resist the payment thereof, and consequently I do not conceive it to be a demand that comes under the term of my just debts." And, after certain specific bequests, the testator bequeathed all his personal property, of every nature and kind whatsoever, unto his sister-in-law, the said Mrs. Jane Blake, the better to enable her to pay all his debts, legacies, and funeral expenses; and he appointed the said Mrs. Jane Blake, the Rev. Robt. Marsh, and Paul Dolphin executors of his will. That the said Robert Blake died without having altered or revoked his will, which was, on the 8th of February, 1820, proved by Mrs. Jane Blake alone, the other executors having renounced probate. That the said Jane Blake and her second son, Stephen, having notice of said mortgage debt, by indenture dated the 28th day of October, 1819, appointed to the said Stephen the said lands of Cloncum and Grange, after her death; and by the said indenture, Stephen covenanted to indemnify her from all charges affecting said lands, and particularly from said mortgage debt, and that said deed was not registered till July, 1842.

That in the year 1819, Stephen Blake intermarried with Jane Creighton, and by indenture of marriage settlement, dated the 4th day of December, 1819, the said lands of Cloncum, amongst others, were, subject to the debts scheduled in said deed, and to the life interest of the said Jane Blake, and to a jointure for the said Jane Creighton, conveyed to the use of the said Stephen for life, remainder to the children as Stephen should appoint, and in default, to the children equally.

That Peter Blake, a defendant, was the eldest son and heir-at-law of G. E. Blake, who died in 1842, and who was the heir-at-law of Robert Blake, the testator, and of Stephen, the mortgagor.

That by deed, dated the 5th of May, 1819, a judgment of Trinity Term, 1808, obtained by John Montgomery against the said Stephen Blake, for the penal sum of £400, was assigned to the said John Callinan. That in the year 1773, one Clare Civile obtained a judgment against Patrick Blake, the father of Stephen, the mortgagor, and Robert Blake, the testator; and that same became vested in Edward Callinan, who, in the year 1818, issued an elegit on foot thereof, and having obtained a finding, brought an ejectment against the said lands of Cloncum; and, having obtained judgment in the year 1819, an habere was executed, putting him in possession of one moiety thereof, and that he continued in possession of same and received the rents thereof till the time of his decease, and that Celia Callinan, his administratrix, continued in possession thereof for several years, till her demand was paid off. That in the year 1820 a bill of revivor was filed in the cause of Callinan v. Blake, that same having become abated by the death of Edward Callinan, the elegit creditor, a bill of revivor was filed in 1825, to which Giles E. Blake appeared—that on the 21st of December, same year, G. E. Blake became an insolvent, and the suit again abated. This was the last proceeding in that cause. That in the year 1825, Thomas Seymour, a judgment creditor of the said Robert Blake, and Giles E. Blake, filed his bill to recover the amount of his claim, and a receiver was appointed in the suit of Seymour v. Blake, who continued in possession for several years. That Joseph Burke, a creditor of the said Robert Blake, in respect of a judgment of 1810, in the year 1838 obtained an order for the extension of said receiver. That in the year 1832 John Callinan died, and in 1835 his widow, one of the plaintiffs in the present suit, obtained administration to him, and also in the year 1838 she obtained administration de bonis non to Joseph, the mortgagee. That on the 20th day of November, 1843, an application was made to the Master of the Rolls for liberty to proceed in the cause of Callinan v. Blake,* notwithstanding the 81st General Order of 1843, and same having been refused, and upon appeal to the Lord Chancellor this decision was confirmed. The bill prayed that the will of Robert Blake might be established against the defendant, Peter Blake, and the trusts thereof carried into effect—that an account might be taken of the sum due on foot of the mortgage and judgment, and an account of the real assets of Stephen received by Robert, the testator, and of the amount to which he was, at the time of his death, a debtor to the real assets of Stephen, and as such, bound to discharge the judgment of 1808, and a sale. The bill was taken pro confesso against the defendant, Jane Blake, and on her death was revived against her executor. The bill was resisted by the heir-at-law, on the ground that his father, on the death of Robert, took possession of the said lands, adverse to all the world, the entry was proved in the cause; and he also relied on the Statute of Limitations. He relied, further, that Robert was tenant for life, and had no power to make a will; but this point was not pressed in argument, nor proved. Stephen Blake and his wife admitted notice of the will, and of the mortgage for £1,000 and judgments collateral, and also of the judgments of 1808, at the time of the appointment and marriage settlement; and in a schedule to the latter, those debts were scheduled, subject to which the lands were conveyed to the trustees of the settlement. They insisted, further, that the trust in the will, if created at all, was only for the life of Jane Blake.

R. W. Green, Q. C., Christian, Q. C., Mr. Hickey, and Mr. Dundas, for the plaintiff, relied on the trust in the will as taking the demand out of the Statute of Limitations, and cited Dillon v. Cruick (3 I. E. Rep. 70); Jones v. Scott (1 Rom. and M. 255); Hunt v. Bateman (10 I. E. Rep. 360); Commissioners of Charitable Donations v. Wybrants (2 Jur. & Lat. 182; Sc. 7 I. E. R. 580); Bailey v. Ekins (7 Ves. 323); Shaw v. Borror (1 Keen. 577); Young v. Lord Waterpark (13 Sim. 202); Hargreaves v. Mitchell (6 Mad. 326); Fergus v. Gore (2 Sch. & Lef. 107); Burke v. Jones (2 Ves. & B. 286); Morse v. Langham (stated in judgment of Burke v. Jones, 2 V. & Bea.); Crallan v. Oulton (3 Beav. 1), as to the fact, that the possession by the receiver was inconsistent with the adverse claim of Peter Blake, Gressley v. Adderley (1 Sw. 571); Kellett v. Kelly (5 I. E. R. 34); Adair v. Shaw (1 Sch. & Lef. 243-262); Elliot v. Merryman (2 Barnard. 78); Walker v. Smallwood (Amb. 676); Shepherd v. Lutwiche (8 Ves. 26).

Attorney-General, F. Fitzgerald, Q. C., and F. Meagher for the defendant—Peter Blake—relied upon the adverse entry of G. E. Blake and the statute of Limitations, and contended that there was not such a trust created by the will as would take the case out of the statute, and relied upon the cases of Knox v. Kelly (6 I. E. Rep. 279); Harrison v. Duignan (2 Dr. & W. 295); Hughes v. Kelly (3 Dr. & W. 48); Francis v. Grover (5 Hare, 19); Hunt v. Bateman (10 I. E. R. 366).

Brewster, Q. C., and Mr. David Boyle, for the children of Stephen Blake, contended that the trust in the will was only implied, and did not come within the exceptions contained in the statute, Hunt v. Bateman (judgment of Lefroy, B.); Young v. Wilton (10 I. E. R. 10); Lawson v. Lawson (3 Bro. P. Cas. 424); Hamilton v. Worley (2 Ves. Jun. 62); Bassett v. Percival (1 Cox 268); Evelyn v. Evelyn (2 P. W. 664); Barry v. Harding (1 Jones and Lat. 475).

Mr. Blackham and Mr. P. Blake appeared for other parties.

LORD CHANCELLOR.—In this case, Lorenzo and Ellen Dundas seek relief as creditors of a person named Robert Blake, and their bill is filed to establish the trusts of his will against his heir-at-law, Peter Blake, and others, and prays an account in respect of a mortgage and two judgments vested in the plaintiffs. The mortgage bears date the 25th day of May, 1796, with which one of the judgments is collateral; and the second judgment is of Trinity Term, 1808. It appears that in the year 1796, Stephen Blake, the brother of Robert, being seized in fee of the lands of Cloncam, mortgaged same to Joseph Callinan for the sum of £1,000; and on that occasion two bonds were passed—one by Stephen, the mortgagor, and the other by Robert, whose will this suit seeks to establish—on which judgments were entered in Trinity Term, 1796. In the year 1833, the judgment against Robert was redocketed; with respect to the judgment against Stephen, and the mortgage; no claim is now made on them, and the Statute of Limitations is conceded to be a bar to both. The judgment against Robert was given as collateral security to the mortgage, and that is the first security upon which the plaintiff's claim is rested. The second judgment is of Trinity Term, 1808, not against Robert, but against Stephen; and that claim is rested on the ground, that Robert having succeeded to the real estates of Stephen, which were real assets, Robert is liable to the extent of those real assets. That, I think, is the position of the parties. The defendants are of two classes—those persons deriving under the will of Robert Blake and those claiming by a title adverse to that will. As I before said, it is admitted that the mortgage of 1796 is barred by the 40th section of the 3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 27; and by the effect of the Redocketing Act the judgment against Stephen is also barred; and the case upon the judgment which was redocketed, in 1833, against Robert, is not rested upon that, but the plaintiffs claim relief solely under the trusts of his will, when that will was made, and at the time of his death, it being a subsisting demand. And as to the judgment of 1808, no relief ex directo is claimed; but it is alleged that Robert was a debtor to the real estate of Stephen. The defendants are the persons claiming the estate under the devise in the will. Mrs. Jane Blake, the tenant for life, is now dead, and so is her son, Stephen—his children are entitled in remainder, and form one class of defendants. The other principal defendant, Peter Blake, is in a peculiar position: he is the heir-at-law of G. E. Blake, who was heir-at-law of Stephen and Robert, and claims by the title of adverse possession. He has shewn an actual entry by his father, G. E. Blake, upon the death of Robert, nearly thirty years ago; and if his rights be well founded, they will exclude the plaintiffs' claim. An important question also arises between Peter Blake and the other defendants. The plaintiffs have relied on certain proceedings by creditors of Robert as taking the possession from G. E. Blake, and thus preventing the effect of the statute. Without expressing any opinion upon that, the important question now is, whether, upon a bill filed in 1846, the plaintiffs can sustain their claim, even supposing the devisees under the will to have remained in possession since 1819. [His lordship here read the will.] It is argued that by this will the debts of Robert Blake are charged upon his real estate, and no doubt they are so. It is also argued, that a trust is cast upon the devisees, and that they have become trustees for the payment of the debts—that such trusts do not come within the 40th section of the Statute of Limitations, or, the case being that of trustee and cestui que trust, are within the saving contained in the 25th section of the same statute. Although not many cases have been decided upon the effect of a trust in a will since the passing of the act, the decisions have given rise to some difficulty. Prima facie the case comes within the simple words of the 40th section, which applies to all sums of money charged on lands where a present right to receive same accrued more than twenty years before to a person capable of giving a discharge; and prima facie this demand is not within the 25th section; this not being a demand for land or rent, or what can be regarded as land or rent. It would thus seem to come within the plain words of the 40th section, if no case had been decided on the point. The plaintiffs, however, insist that they are entitled to recover on this ground, that the charge in the will creates a trust, and therefore the claim is not within the operation of the 40th section, or is within the saving of the 25th—that by the established operation of the doctrine of trusts, this demand is to be considered as one which no lapse of time can affect, and which cannot be barred by the statute. In considering this question, I think the decisions which would seem to shew that such a demand as the present would not be barred by the old Statute of Limitations, have little or no application to the question which now arises. The 40th section of the late statute contains no exception in favour of such a claim; on the contrary, it would seem to be framed for the purpose of discouraging stale demands, and to relieve the possessors of land from them. I see nothing in the words of the act, nor in its policy, which excepts this claim from its operation. It remains, therefore, to be considered how far, upon the authority of the decided cases, this demand can be sustained; and upon this part of the case, I am relieved from a great deal of embarrassment by the recent judgment of the Court of Exchequer in the case of Hunt v. Bateman; and I think, from the expressions used by the learned judges, I am warranted in saying that if the present case was before them, they would have considered the plaintiffs' demand to have been barred. In that case, there was a trust for payment of the debts of the testator, who devised to trustees for the purpose of their payment, and the court held that the trustees took the estate for that purpose, and stood between the estate and the creditors. The Chief Baron says in his judgment, in page 366, "the question involves two considerations; first, whether when money is secured upon land by means of an express trust for its payment, the Statute of Limitations bars the claim to the money so long as the trust is subsisting; secondly, whether in this case such a trust was created by the will, &c., in favour of the creditors, and if so, whether that trust was subsisting at the time of the sale by which this fund was realized." The Chief Baron then proceeds to consider whether the trust for raising money was, or not, within the 25th section; but he considers that question closed by authority, and that the statute did not apply where the relation of trustee, and cestui que trust, existed between the owner of the estate and the owner of the charge. He then says the next question is, whether, between the person entitled to the debt and the person representing the estate devised, the relation of trustee and cestui que trust subsisted; and, after considering the whole context of the will, he says, "I think it is quite clear the trustees took the legal estate in the lands," and that the case was not affected by the decisions in Hughes v. Kelly, Harrison v. Duigenan, and Francis v. Grover; and, in the conclusion of his judgment, he says, "it may be well to add, that we concur in the decisions of Harrison v. Duigenan, Hughes v. Kelly, and Francis v. Grover, ruling that a charge and a devise to a person for his own benefit, subject to that charge, is not enough, without more, to create a trust which prevents the bar of the Statute of Limitations; and our judgment in this case involves no assent to the proposition, that if the right of the trustee to the estate devised to him, in trust, were barred by the Statute of Limitations, the cestui que trust of the charge could successfully rely upon the trust for the purpose of recovering it out of the lands." Baron Pennefather, in his judgment, (page 380) says, "The principle which appears to me to be extracted from the cases seems to be this, that charges upon lands in the hands of the beneficial owner of the estate, are not within the meaning of the exception in that statute." And in another part of his judgment he says, "It is quite a different case if the legal estate is not vested in a trustee." These two judgments are express declarations on the point in question, that a mere charge on an estate in the hands of the beneficial owner, would not constitute a trust. In all the cases in England, and before Sir E. Sugden, in which it was held that the demand was not barred, there were trustees appointed, and the estate of the trustees was not barred, as in Young v. Lord Waterpark, Blair v. Nugent, and Commissioners of Charitable Donations v. Wybrants. It may be said of the case of Hunt v. Bateman, that the opinions expressed by the judges were upon the words of the will, and should not be considered as an authority, unless in similar cases. I shall now, therefore, consider the other authorities upon the point. The opinion thrown out by the Vice-Chancellor in the case of Lord St. John v. Boughton (9 Sim. p. 223), would have been a strong authority against the plaintiffs, but that it was decided on other grounds. There was an acknowledgment to take the case out of the statute. The first case in Ireland after the statute was Kelly v. Kelly (6 L. Rec. N. S.), in which there was also an acknowledgment, but there, no doubt, Sir M. O'Loughlin seems to be of a different opinion from the Vice-Chancellor in Lord St. John v. Boughton, and states as the grounds of his decision that the trust took the case out of the operation of the statute, and rests his judgment upon the decisions in Scott v. Scott, and Phillippo v. Munnings; the former of which was afterwards reversed by the House of Lords. The case of Dillon v. Cruise (8 I. E. R. 70) was also much relied on by the plaintiffs, and the general proposition as stated in the marginal note, would seem to sustain their view. But, on examining that case, it should be borne in mind, that the devise of the property was subject to the payment of the testator's debts, which he directed to be paid in the first instance, and the devisees were not, therefore, to take anything till that direction was performed; and Lord Plunket (in page 79) rests his judgment on that circumstance. There, also, the property was under the jurisdiction of the court; a receiver had been appointed, and the question arose as to a surplus which was then in court. In the case of Kear v. Kelly (6 I. E. Rep.), which was that of a legacy charged on land, the Master of the Rolls (the present Lord Chief Justice) entertained no little doubt of the authority of the decisions in Kelly v. Kelly and Dillon v. Cruise, and certainly did not consider the question settled by the opinions expressed in those cases. It is impossible to read his able and convincing judgment without arriving at the conclusion that it was impossible, against the strong words of the statute, to hold that the demand was not barred. After a review of all the cases, I do not consider that a devise, subject to the payment of debts will constitute the devisee a trustee. In Harrison v. Duigenan, it was held that it would not; also in Hughes v. Kelly, and in Francis v. Grover. In Harrison v. Duigenan (2 Dr. & W.) Sir E. Sugden says, "On the part of the plaintiffs, it is argued, that the effect of the deed of conveyance of 1831 was to create a trust in favour of Bryan Kyne. I am clearly of opinion there was no trust created; there was an obligation imposed on the purchaser which this court would enforce." In Hughes v. Kelly (3 Dr. & War. 489), he says, "there was an obligation imposed, but no trust created." There was no relation of trustee and cestui que trust to take the case out of the operation of the statute; and in Francis v. Grover (5 Hare, 39), where the question arose on a will which charged the annuity expressly on land, and not, as here, by implication, it was held that the devisee was not a trustee within the 25th section, or otherwise; and in page 49 the Vice-Chancellor says, "I have no doubt as to the construction of the 42nd section of the act. The present case is one of land devised to a person, not upon trust, but subject to, and chargeable with, an annuity; and the question is, whether the beneficial owner of an estate charged with payment of an annuity, under a will, is a direct trustee"—"but this is a devise of land to a person beneficially, subject to a charge;" and he concludes by saying, "neither upon principle nor authority can this be considered an express trust within the act." Unless there is some distinction between a general charge of debts and a charge of a specific sum, the case of Francis v. Grover would rule the present case. So in the case of Gough v. Andrews (1 Coll. C. C. p. 69), where there was a pre-existing charge on certain lands, and a subsequent devise of those lands and other real estate, "subject to the payment of the testator's just debts, funeral and testamentary expenses," it was held that the words of the will were only a recognition of the debt, but did not create a charge on the other lands in favour of it; and is those cases where Courts of Equity have given effect to charges for payment of debts, as in Ball and Harris (4 My. & Cr. 267), and Bailey v. Ekins (7 Ves. 322), they constitute themselves trustees to carry out the intention of the testator. What is done, is done in aid, not in consequence of the will—the court carries out the object of the testator—but does not create the charge; and entirely in accordance with this view, are the observations of Baron Lefroy in Hunt v. Bateman (p. 383)—“In my opinion, the fact of charging a sum of money upon land, neither creates an express trust within the meaning of this act, nor, if it did, would a bill to raise it come within the provisions of the 25th section, respecting express trusts;” and he cites the opinion of Lord Eldon in Bailey v. Ekins, where he says, “I am confident that Lord Thurlow’s opinion was, that a charge is a devise of the estate in substance and effect, pro tanto, upon trust to pay the debts,”—and, “a mere charge is no legal interest,”—“it is that declaration of intention on which a Court of Equity will fasten.” And Sir E. Sugden, in 3 Vend. & P. 160, says, “In the case of a charge, the trust arises by construction of Equity, whereas in the case of a conveyance or devise, it is produced by the express declaration of the party.” In the Commissioners of Charitable Donations v. Wybrants (2 Ion. & L. 191), he observes, “in the case of the Attorney-General v. Peress, I did not decide that if an estate be devised to A., subject to an annuity to B., A. is a trustee for B.,” and, in the latter part of his judgment, he says, “It is not a case in which the annuities were given to trustees for the charities, and the estate itself, subject to the annuities, was given to others beneficially. If that case should arise, it would be more difficult to relieve.” I cannot find any satisfactory authority to shew that a devise to a party beneficially, subject to the payment of debts, creates the relation of trustee and custui que trust between the parties, so as to take the case out of the operation of the statute; even in the case where there is a trust under the 25th section, it may be found that the Court of Exchequer may have considered that more settled than it in reality is. The argument that the statute does not apply where there is a trust, goes too far; for thus, in no case of trust can a debt be barred. Being of opinion that this debt is barred by the operation of the statute, it is unnecessary for me to give any opinion as to the admissibility of the evidence tendered to prove the debt as subsisting in 1811, or on the case of adverse possession made by the heir-at-law, against whom I dismiss the bill with costs, but in consequence of the conflict of authorities, without costs as against the devisees.

* See case reported 6 I. E. R. p. 100, and 353.

TANGNEY v. HOLMES, GOOD v. HOLMES, HACKETT v. HOLMES, O’KEEFE v. HOLMES—Jan. 27.

Several Suits—Staying Proceedings—Costs of Defendants—Liability of Plaintiff to.

Where there are several creditors’ suits, and proceedings in that which was first instituted are stayed, liberty being given to the plaintiff to go in under the decree obtained in a subsequent one and prove his demand, including his costs properly and necessarily incurred, and the costs of the defendants properly and necessarily made parties in his suit, and to which he would be liable, the plaintiff is personally liable, under this order, to pay the costs of such defendants, who are not obliged to wait until funds are realized in the cause that continues.

This was an appeal from an order of the Master of the Rolls (ante, p. 78). Four different creditors’ suits having been instituted in the order in which they appear above, and a decree having been made in the fourth cause, by order of the 23rd of June, 1848, it was ordered, that all further proceedings in the other three causes should be stayed, upon the terms of the plaintiffs in those causes respectively, being at liberty to come in and prove, under the decree in the cause retained, for the amount of their respective demands, together with their costs properly and necessarily incurred, and the costs of the several defendants in the three other causes respectively, properly and necessarily made parties in those causes respectively, and to which the plaintiffs in those causes respectively would be liable. Menus O’Keefe, a defendant in the cause of Tangney v. Holmes, afterwards applied to the plaintiff, Tangney, for the payment of his taxed costs in that suit, who refused to pay them, contending that he was not personally liable for them under the order of the 23rd of June, and that the defendant must wait until a fund was realised under the decree in the cause that proceeded. O’Keefe thereupon applied to the Master of the Rolls for an order for payment of these costs, and on the 12th December, 1848, the Master of the Rolls made an order for their payment within a week, deciding that the plaintiff was personally liable.

Francis Fitzgerald, Q.C., for the plaintiff.—The order appealed from is founded on two decisions, Croker v. Copley (2 Moll. 469), and Loftis v. Forbes (2 Ir. Eq. 449), decided on the authority of the first case. But there was this important difference between that case and the present; there, one cause was in the Exchequer and the other in Chancery—here they are both in Chancery; and the Master of the Rolls, in Croker v. Copley, gave his judgment on the ground that the defendant had no remedy for his costs in the Court of Exchequer, where the suit was retained, and that consequently, unless the plaintiff paid them, they would be lost; and the whole of the judgment shews how much he felt the stringency of the rule he was pronouncing. There is also this other difference, that there the suit stayed was the second suit, here it is the first. In Croker v. Copley the suit stayed was also the second one. The Master of the Rolls, in that case, says, “Every suitor who comes here for relief, necessarily makes himself liable to the rules and practices of the court. One of the rules is, that where two suits are instituted, and a decree has been pronounced in one of them, under which the plaintiff in the other can have effectual relief, the court will stay the proceedings in the second cause, and oblige the plaintiff to prove his demand under the decree in the first.” Until Croker v. Copley, no case decided that the plaintiff in a stayed suit should be liable, personally, to pay the costs of defendants. Is it possible to sustain the proposition, that though a suit is stayed without the default of the plaintiff, whatever may be the priority of a defendant, and whether the fund be deficient or not, you should give him the first payment out of the fund. There is no authority in the Court of Exchequer here, or in England, for this order. In Crofts v. Poe (3 Ir. Eq. 151), the decree ordered a defendant to have his costs against the plaintiff, and the plaintiff to have them over against the fund; and it was held that the costs were given against the plaintiff only as an ultimate security, and that they were not to be enforced against him, unless it appeared that there were no funds in the cause applicable to their payment, or that the plaintiff was guilty of laches in prosecuting his suit. Suppose the order of the 23rd of June had been in the form of that in Crofts v. Poe, the effect would have been that the relief against the plaintiff would have been secondary, and not primary. If the practice of the Court was to make the plaintiff liable in the first instance, why was not the order of June in that form, and what was the necessity of having a second motion involving additional costs? Where is the jurisdiction of this court to award costs before the final hearing and disposal of the case? I admit it may be done by way of punishment, where there has been any misconduct on the part of the plaintiff; but here the plaintiff is in no default: the suit was stayed against his will, and it is sufficiently plain that in the ordinary course the defendant, to get his costs, must have waited for a decree in the stayed suit, and if Crofts v. Poe be an authority, he must have waited further till the fund was realised. Hall v. Hill (5 Ir. Eq. R.) is an authority to the same effect. (Lord Chancellor.—I am informed the practice is, that in the ordinary decree where the plaintiff is ordered to pay a defendant's costs, and to have them over against the fund, the plaintiff pays them at once. Has the court jurisdiction to dispose of the costs of a suit in this manner on summary motion?)

Gibbon and Chatterton for the defendant, O'Keefe, who obtained the order.—Where a plaintiff files his bill before he is entitled to do so, he must take the consequences. Here the bill was filed immediately after the death of the debtor, before probate was taken out, and while there was no personal representative; and the consequence of his precipitation is, that his suit was properly stayed by another person who had obtained a prior decree. It is admitted on the other side that all the authorities are in our favour, and the only difference between Croker v. Copley, and Loftis v. Forbes, and the present is, that in our case the suit stayed is the first cause, in these cases they were subsequent. But that is disposed of by the case of Hill v. Averell, (6 L. R. N. S. 21.) On principle, independently of authority, this order should be sustained. The defendant looks for his costs of suit to his own plaintiff, who is liable to pay them, if the defendant has been improperly made a party. And, if the plaintiff fails to go on, the defendant has a right to dismiss the bill for want of prosecution; but, when a suit is stayed, he cannot do so, if the costs are paid by the plaintiff. In Croker v. Copley the bill was not stayed for the plaintiff's own benefit. As to the question of hardship, the balance is in favour of the defendant. The plaintiff comes in voluntarily, the defendant involuntarily. The order is to pay these costs, which the plaintiff is properly liable to pay. If the defendant is improperly made a party, and he was obliged to wait till the plaintiff files his charge, if there is no fund to pay it, the defendant would lose his costs. (Lord Chancellor.—How does the order provide for the costs of incumbrances which are not properly payable by the plaintiff?) They are not provided for by the order. Another hardship is, that the defendant cannot file a charge except through the medium of the plaintiff in the stayed suit. (Lord Chancellor.—The next question is, in what right the defendant is entitled.) He is either a mere party on account of title, and the plaintiff must in that case pay him his costs, and have them over, or he is the heir at law of a prior mortgagee, whose costs must be paid by the plaintiff, as he will be obliged to redeem him. Unless the plaintiff is personally liable, the defendant may never get these costs, although they may be all paid to the plaintiff. In a creditor's suit, the plaintiff does not get his costs unless the fund reaches his demand. Gray v. Crawford, (1 Ir. Eq. 274).

McO'Boy replied.

LORD CHANCELLOR.—I am of opinion that this order should be affirmed. I think the proper way to consider this petition is to look at what is the position of the defendant here, whose costs are in question, and what would have been his rights as to these costs, if the cause that was stayed came to a hearing. It is plain that the order would have been that these costs should be paid by the plaintiff, who would have them over against the fund; or the plaintiff, being entitled to redeem the defendant, and failing to do so, he would have been bound to pay these costs without having them over. That is the position of the parties if the cause had come to a hearing. Then the staying order in this case is the same in effect as if both causes had come to a hearing, and as if an order had been made in one cause staying the proceedings, in the other giving the parties in the stayed suit all the advantages which they would have had if the stayed cause had gone on. The order gives the plaintiff a right to prove his demand in the cause that proceeds. It also gives him the power to add to his demand the costs of all defendants properly made parties, and to which he is liable. It stops short of an actual order on the plaintiff to pay these costs; but the manifest intent of the order is, that the plaintiff is to pay them, and to have them over. There is no mode of giving this defendant a right to costs out of the estate. I do not look upon that order simply as a staying order, but as substantially a decree in the stayed suit. The plaintiff then gains a decree precisely on the same terms as if his own cause went to a hearing. He is, in fact, in a better position than if that suit went on, for he gains an earlier decree, and is saved from the payment of the defendant's subsequent costs; and if he is at all injured, he has himself to blame for not prosecuting his own suit with diligence. On examination, it is not difficult to come to a proper conclusion in this case. It is only seeking, on motion, the same decree that would eventually be made; and I think this order is right in point of form, and according to practice. I think it is a just order, and one that causes no hardship on the plaintiff.

Order affirmed.

ROLLS COURT.

SHERLOCK v. DISNEY.—Dec. 22, 1848.

Demurrer—Amendment—Costs.

A demurrer not having been set down for argument within the time limited, was allowed, pursuant to the 64th General Order; plaintiff moved for liberty to amend and serve new subpoenas against the demurring defendants. This motion was refused, the costs of the demurrer not having been paid.

The bill in this case was filed on the 21st of April, 1847, and on the 20th of July was amended on the file, by stating new matter, and by making J. D. Oliver, T. Disney, jun., R. C. D. Oliver, and R. A. Disney parties thereto. Notice of this amendment was served on R. A. Disney, as solicitor for the new parties, who appeared for them, and was furnished by plaintiff's solicitor with a copy of the bill which purported to contain the amendment, but, by some mistake, was incorrect. To this bill the new defendants demurred, for want of equity, and the same not having been set down for argument within the usual time, the bill was dismissed with costs as against them, under the 64th General Order. These costs were duly taxed, but were not paid when the present motion came on to be heard.

F. Fitzgerald, Q.C., on the part of the plaintiff, now moved that the bill, as then standing upon the file, might be considered as an amended bill, so far as same related to a statement of a certain deed of mortgage of the 15th of January, 1842, between P. Disney, sen., J. D. Oliver, R. C. D. Oliver, T. Disney, jun., and R. A. Disney, and that J. D. Oliver, R. C. D. Oliver, T. Disney, jun., and R. A. Disney might be considered as parties to the suit, and might answer said bill within the usual time, and that subpoenas to appear and answer might issue against them; and relied on Matthews v. Chichester (11 Jur. 49); Coningsby v. Jekyll (2 P. W. 300); Lloyd v. Loaring (6 Ves. 773); Baker v. Mellish (11 Ves. 72; 1 Danl. C. P. 552); Watkins v. Bush (2 Dick. 701); Jackson v. Pownall (16 Ves. 204); Bannam v. S. L. Waterworks Co. (2 Mer. 63).

Hughes, Q.C., contra, cited Mathews v. Chichester (11 Jur. 49); Davies v. Davies, (10 J. E. R. 614); Knight v. Majoribank (14 Sim. 198).

Mr. R. Warren, same side.—Mitford, 14, 315; Barry and Keogh, 204; Smith v. Barnes (1 Dick. 67); Watkins v. Bush (2 Dick. 701); Attorney-General v. Poole (2 Keene, 209); Lataur v. Holcombe (11 Sim. 71).

Fitzgerald, Q.C., in reply.

Jan. 15.—MASTER OF THE ROLLS.—This case is somewhat similar to that of Hornebrooke v. Ware.* A demurrer, not having been set down for argument within the time prescribed, was allowed by the 64th General Order. The plaintiff applies for liberty to amend and serve new subpoenas against the demurring defendants. I understand that costs have not been incurred by the other defendants; but, without entering on this, I will refuse this motion, for this reason—the costs of the demurrer were not paid when the motion was moved, and I consider it was an attempt to evade the payment of them. I wish it to be understood, that it is not to be considered as a general rule, or a matter of course, that after a bill is dismissed for want of prosecution, or a demurrer is not set down for argument in time, I will allow the bill to be amended. Before I make an order of this nature, I must be satisfied of the justice of the case. However, I do not consider this such an order as will prevent the plaintiff, after payment of these costs, from again applying to the court.

Refuse the motion with £5 costs.

QUEEN'S BENCH.—HILARY TERM, 1849.

LESSEE READE v. KENNEDY.—Jan 13.

Ejectment—Notice to Quit—Infant—Guardian next Friend.

A notice to quit was given by the mother of the lessor of the plaintiff, who was an infant, describing herself as his guardian and next friend. She was neither a guardian appointed by the Court of Chancery, nor a testamentary one. Held, that the infant could not give authority to her to act on his behalf, and therefore that the notice was insufficient to determine the tenancy.

Ejectment on the title for the lands of Rosduffe, in the county of Waterford. Plea—Not guilty. At the trial before Richards, B., at the Summer Assizes for the county of Waterford, 1848, it appeared that the lessor of the plaintiff was an infant, and resided with his mother, who received his rents and managed his estates. A notice to quit was then given in evidence, which was signed by the mother of the infant, and in which she described herself as his guardian and next friend. The learned judge thought this notice was insufficient, and non-suited the plaintiff, the defendant consenting that a verdict should be entered for the plaintiff if the court above should be of opinion that the notice to quit was properly signed.

A conditional order having been obtained in Michaelmas Term, 1848, to enter a verdict for the plaintiff, Harris (with him Lynch) now shewed cause.—The mother of the plaintiff was neither a testamentary guardian nor appointed by the Court of Chancery, she can therefore only be considered as his natural guardian; and it never has been held that a person filling that situation had authority to determine tenancies.

George and Wall, contra.—The proceedings in this case having been taken by the mother, for the benefit of the infant and on his behalf, the court will support her acts, Long v. Myles (Fox & Sm. 1); Duncan v. Couch (1 Ir. Clr. Rep. 578). (Blackburne, C. J.—I do not think it is for the benefit of the minor that any one should act for him without legal authority.) There was a demise in the name of the lessor of the plaintiff, and another in the name of his mother, as his guardian and next friend. A notice to quit may be given by the Receiver appointed by the Court of Chancery, Doe v. Reads (12 East. 57); also by the steward of a corporation, Roe v. Pierce (2 Campb. 96). There was evidence in this case from which the jury might have inferred that the mother had an implied authority from her son to act on his behalf, and that question ought to have been submitted to them, Doe and Maine v. Walters (10 B. & C. 626). (Moore, J.—An authority may be implied to have been given by a person who had power to give authority, but a minor cannot authorize another to serve a notice for him.) (Blackburne, C. J.—It is the province of the Judge to see that there is some specific evidence which would enable the jury to form an opinion upon the subject.) The defendant has adopted the acts of the mother, by having paid rent to the agent appointed by her.

* Reported ante p. 117.

Lynch, in reply, was not called on.

BLACKBURN, C. J.—We think there was no evidence in this case to go to the jury of any authority in the mother to act on behalf of the minor. She was neither a guardian appointed by the Court of Chancery nor a testamentary one. We must, therefore, regard her as a mere stranger; and I cannot conceive anything more injurious to the tenantry, and to the proprietor of an estate, than that a person should undertake the management of it without being legally authorized.

MOORE, J., concurred.*

Cause allowed.

O'DONNELL v. WATERFORD AND LIMERICK RAILWAY COMPANY.—Jan. 29.

Mandamus—Railway Company—Costs.

Where plaintiff obtained a mandamus to compel a railway company to issue their warrant to a sheriff, to summon a jury, to assess the amount of compensation to which he was entitled; and the jury afterwards awarded him a less sum than the company had previously offered. Held that he was not entitled to the costs of the mandamus.

This was an application on the part of the plaintiff, that the defendants might be directed to pay the costs of a mandamus which had issued to compel them to summon a jury to assess the amount of compensation to which the plaintiff was entitled for a portion of his land which was purchased by the company.

Meagher for the motion.

Lawson, contra.—The plaintiff demanded £1,000 for his interest; the company offered him £650, and the jury assessed the value at only £500. The result of the proceedings, therefore, being unfavourable to the plaintiff, he is not entitled to have the costs of the mandamus.

Meagher, in reply.—The company were called on by notice to issue their warrant, and, having refused to do so, it became necessary to apply for the mandamus to compel them.

PER CURIAM.—The merits are entirely with the company; the plaintiff asked for more than he was entitled to, and ought not now to get the costs of the mandamus.

Motion refused.

EXCHEQUER OF PLEAS.—HILARY TERM.

KINNEAR v. EVANS.—Jan. 31.

Plaintiff allowed to amend his bill of particulars after an abortive trial, on terms.

Sir C. O'Loughlin moved, in this cause, that the plaintiff be allowed to amend his bill of particulars, by the insertion of an additional item of £22, which had been omitted by the mistake of the Dublin agent of the attorney for the plaintiff. The declaration had been filed in Trinity Term, and a bill of particulars, containing one item, had been furnished. Plea—the general issue. The cause went down for trial to the last Cork Summer Assizes, when the jury disagreed.

Joseph H. Reeves, for the defendant, resisted the motion, on the ground that costs already incurred by the abortive trial would be costs in the cause—that they ought to abide the result of the plaintiff's succeeding on the original item only, but that if the new item were introduced, the plaintiff might possibly recover that, and be defeated upon the original one, in which case he would obtain those costs, although he was defeated on what was the subject matter of the former trial.

PER CURIAM.—Let the plaintiff be at liberty to amend his bill of particulars as desired, upon the terms of said defendant's being at liberty to plead anew, if so advised, filing his plea within ten days from the date hereof, and being at liberty to lodge money in court, as of the day subsequent to the filing of the declaration in this cause, and if the said plaintiff shall, upon the trial of the issue in this cause, obtain a verdict only for the cause of action hereby introduced into the said bill of particulars, that he shall not have any costs of the former trial; but, in that case, the said defendant shall be taxed and allowed his costs of said former trial without further motion, and said plaintiff to pay the costs of this motion to defendant.

DOE v. O'BRIEN.

Practice—Service of Ejectment on Married Woman.

If a party treats a married woman as a feme sole, by serving her with an ejectment, the court will not set aside a defence taken by her accordingly.

Saunders moved to set aside a defence which had been taken by one of the parties served with the ejectment, on the ground of her husband being alive. The affidavit on which he rested his application stated that the husband of the defendant emigrated some time previously to America, and was alive, according to information recently received.

Prior, C. B.—Having treated her as a feme sole, by serving her with a copy of the ejectment, you cannot prevent her from taking defence.

No rule on the motion.

* Crampton and Perrin, J. J., were absent.

ROLLS COURT.

M'ALPINE v. ST. GEORGE.—Dec. 21.

Attachment—Third Party—Rents.

When an order has been made for the appointment of a receiver, an attachment will be granted against a third party, who, before service of the order on the tenants, interferes with the rents, when he has notice of the order for the appointment of the receiver.

This was a motion for an injunction to restrain Alexander Graydon from negotiating, or suing upon certain bills of exchange obtained by T. H. Graydon from the tenants of the defendant, and for an attachment against the said A. Graydon, for his contempt of a certain order pronounced by the Lord Chancellor, on the 9th of September, 1848, whereby the said Thomas H. Graydon was directed to furnish to the receiver in this cause a schedule of the particulars connected with the said bills. Thomas H. Graydon, who had been the agent of the defendant, took bills of exchange and promissory notes from the tenants, for arrears of rent. The affidavit of the receiver stated that he believed those securities were obtained after the order appointing the receiver was made—that the order of reference was made on the 16th of February, 1848, and the receiver appointed on the 24th of March following. On the 26th April, an order was made directing the defendant to furnish a rental, which was furnished on the 31st of May, and shewed an arrear of £606 19s. 11d., up to the 1st November, 1847—that on going to the lands, he was informed by the tenants that they had given bills of exchange or promissory notes, dated March, 1848, either to the defendant, St. George, or to T. H. Graydon—that the said securities were obtained by Graydon with the privity of St. George, and as his agent, and that there was an agreement with the tenants that they were not to be called on for the amount of the said bills—that the receiver, on inquiry from the tenants, ascertained that bills were passed to T. H. Graydon for £1,000, which included the arrears of £606 returned on the rental—that the securities were passed by Graydon to other parties to recover the amount, and that Graydon was aware of the order of 16th February, 1848, when he obtained these securities from the tenants.

The affidavit of A. H. Graydon stated, that he had obtained these bills bonâ fide, and that they were indorsed to him, previous to their maturity, by Thomas H. Graydon, who was indebted to him in a sum of £1,000, advanced by said Alexander H. Graydon to his father, for the purpose of paying a bond for that amount which was passed by his father to Mr. Billing, the solicitor for said Thomas H. Graydon—that the proceedings to recover the amount of these securities by civil bill at the Quarter Sessions, in the name of Thomas H. Graydon, was without his consent or privity.

Hughes, Q.C., for the motion.—In no part of the affidavit of A. Graydon does he deny his knowledge of the appointment of the receiver, and that the bills were received from the tenants of the court. On the petition motion before the Chancellor, T. H. Graydon was the admitted holder of those bills, and his solicitor then attended; there was then no allegation that A. H. Graydon was the holder of the bills, and this motion was on the 8th of September, three months after their maturity. If the court have not jurisdiction in this case, there is an end to the protection to which tenants of the estates under its control are entitled; but it has never been doubted that this court has jurisdiction to attach any party who interferes with tenants after the appointment of a receiver.

F. Fitzgerald, Q.C., appeared for the plaintiff in the cause.

Radcliffe, Q.C., contra, denied the jurisdiction of the court to interfere with the rights of A. H. Graydon. He is a holder for value, and it is sworn that these securities were taken before the order for the appointment of the receiver; and though T. H. Graydon might be bound by that order, A. H. Graydon could not be bound by it, for he swears he was ignorant of these proceedings, and that he paid full value for these securities; but even T. H. Graydon ought to be considered entitled to hold these securities under the circumstances of the case, for he had received them before the order for the appointment of the receiver.

Mr. O'Driscoll in reply.—An executory agreement of the kind which is stated to have existed between the inheritor and Mr. Graydon cannot attach the rents in the hands of the tenants. The rule that rents are not considered to be attached till the service of the order, is one purely for the protection of the tenants, but does not apply to third parties, who, from the moment they are fixed with notice of the appointment of the receiver, cannot interfere with the rents under pain of an attachment. The assertion that the court wants jurisdiction in this case is untenable, for it can attach the tenants for non-payment of their rents to the receivers, and, if so, on what principle is it contended that it cannot reach third parties, whose interference with the rents is a direct contempt of the order of the court. Mr. Graydon cannot be injured by the injunction we seek for; he is clearly incapacitated from recovering the amount of these bills at law, inasmuch as they appear to have been indorsed to him after maturity, and the infirmity of title which attached to them in the hands of T. H. Graydon follows them into the hands of Mr. Alex. Graydon, but the court in an instance of this kind will protect the tenants from being forced to the expensive alternative of making separate defences at law.

MASTER OF THE ROLLS.—I allowed this case to stand over for the purpose of giving Mr. Graydon an opportunity of explaining the case made against him; his affidavit has failed in doing so. Although the tenants may, as has been stated, have a good defence at law, I cannot permit them to be harassed by proceedings of that kind. I have no doubt as to my jurisdiction in this case. I find it laid down in Mr. Smith's book, that "the court will attach third parties who interfere with the rents after they are aware of the appointment of the receiver. I shall state upon the face of the order my reasons for granting it.

"And it appearing to the court that Alexander H.

Graydon, Esq., has taken proceedings by civil bill against several of the tenants of the lands over which the receiver in this cause has been appointed for the recovery of several promissory notes passed by said tenants on or after the 6th of March, 1848, for rent, and arrears of rent, due by said tenants on the 1st of November, 1847, and it also appearing that the order of reference for the appointment of the receiver was made on the 15th of February, 1848, before said notes were passed, and that T. H. Graydon had full notice of said order when he took such promissory notes from the tenants, and it further appearing that A. H. Graydon had notice of such order, for the appointment of said receiver, before the said notes were endorsed to him, and had also notice, before such endorsement, of the consideration for which such notes were passed, and has, notwithstanding, served civil bill processes to recover such promissory notes. Let an attachment issue in this cause against said A. H. Graydon for his contempt in interfering with, and disturbing, the possession of the said receiver in this cause, such attachment not to issue till further order; and let A. H. Graydon pay to plaintiffs, and to the receiver, their costs of this motion, when taxed and ascertained, and refer it to one of the Taxing Masters of this court to tax said costs."—Lib. 278, fol. 217.

WYSE v. WATERS.—Jan. 18.

Bill filed by an uncertificated bankrupt to raise the arrears of an annuity, making the assignee a defendant, and charging that the arrears due amounted to £646, that of the creditors who proved under the commission all had signed a composition deed save one, to whom the sum of £130 was due, and also charging specific collusion between the assignee and the debtor. Demurrer by the assignee allowed without costs.

The bill in this case was filed to raise the arrears of an annuity, and stated that in the year 1790 Thomas Wyse married F. M. Bagge, and had issue three sons, Thomas, George, and Francis, the plaintiff. That one Francis Wyse having devised certain lands to Thomas the elder, same were conveyed to the use of P. C. Dalton and J. Scully, their executors, administrators, and assigns for 100 years, upon trust, in case the said F. M. Bagge survived her husband, to pay an annuity of £100 per annum, late Irish currency, for every younger child of the said T. Wyse the elder, for their support and maintenance, during their lives, provided their mother should so long live. That in July, 1835, Thos. Wyse the elder died, leaving Frances, his wife, surviving him, who died on the 28th of October, 1842. That on the 21st of September, 1833, a commission of bankruptcy, on the petition of T. M. Waters, issued against the plaintiff, and said T. M. Waters and R. Greene were appointed assignees of plaintiff's estate. That R. Greene went to reside in America, where he then was. That in January

1842, plaintiff instituted certain proceedings in the Court of Common Pleas against the said T. M. Waters, and that a compromise was entered into, by which the said T. M. Waters and certain other creditors agreed to release all claims against plaintiff, to aid him in superseding the commission of bankruptcy, and execute a release which would permit plaintiff to possess and enjoy any property which he then might have in possession or expectancy, or then vested in his assignees, and in consideration thereof plaintiff agreed to pay a composition of one shilling in the pound, one moiety upon the execution of the release and agreement, and the other at the expiration of twelve months. That on the 8th of June, 1844, an indenture of agreement and release was executed between the parties, by which the assignee and all the creditors of plaintiff who proved their debts under the commission, save one, and some of the creditors who had not proved, released all claims against the plaintiff, and executed a consent that said commission should be superseded. That plaintiff paid to his creditors one moiety of said composition, and executed his promissory notes for payment of the residue, which were duly paid. That only three creditors proved under said commission, and to one of them, being the firm of Powell, Brothers & Co., the sum of £130 was due, which was the only outstanding debt due by plaintiff to any of his creditors who had proved. That T. M. Waters, the assignee, by sale of plaintiff's property, received various sums of money, more than sufficient to pay all the creditors who proved under the commission, including the claim of the said Powell and Co. That the release of the said T. M. Waters from responsibility, on account of such receipts, was one of the considerations which induced him to sign the deed of June, 1844. That after the payment of every debt due and payable by plaintiff under the commission, a large surplus of his estate would legally and properly belong to him; that at the time of his mother's death, in 1842, there was on foot of plaintiff's annuity of £100 Irish, due to the plaintiff, or to his estate, or to his assignee, upwards of £646, which had not been paid by T. Wyse the younger, who, at the death of his father, entered into possession of the lands charged therewith, but which was then due to the plaintiff or to his estate,—or, at all events, to the residue thereof—over and above the sum of £130, which he was willing should be paid to said Powell and Co., plaintiff's sole remaining creditor. Plaintiff claimed as his own property the surplus of £516 and upwards. That plaintiff called upon said T. M. Waters, as his assignee under the commission of bankruptcy, which had not been superseded, to proceed for the recovery of the said sum. That about the 25th of August, 1848, having gone to London to urge the said T. M. Waters to adopt such proceedings, he explained to him the danger of delaying beyond the month of October then next, when the statute of limitations might bar such claim, and plaintiff offered to pay all costs of same, and to secure said T. M. Waters by such valid security as counsel should approve of. That the said T. M. Waters refused to comply with such applications, alleging that he possessed no possible personal interest in such proceeding, and that being on terms of special intimacy and friendship with the said Thomas Wyse, he would not undertake or aid in any such proceeding, which, on the part of the said T. M. Waters, would appear ungracious and unkind towards the said T. Wyse. That plaintiff solicited said T. M. Waters to institute such proceedings, as his assignee, as would prevent the operation of the statute of limitations, with which he refused to comply, whereupon he served notice in writing requiring him to proceed, and offering to indemnify him, but said T. M. Waters neglected to take such proceedings as were necessary to preserve the rights of plaintiff. That said T. M. Waters was acting in collusion with the said T. Wyse. That plaintiff presented a petition to the Lord Chancellor, who directed that he should be at liberty to surrender to the said commission, and that the commissioner should be at liberty to direct the said T. M. Waters, the assignee, to take proceedings to recover said demand, plaintiff indemnifying said assignee. That on the 24th of October, 1848, plaintiff surrendered to the said commission, and the security to be given to T. M. Waters was measured to £100, for which plaintiff was unable to procure sureties and give the indemnity required. The bill then prayed that the said sum of £646 might be decreed well charged on the lands subject thereto; that T. Wyse might be directed to pay same; that a receiver might be appointed, and that said sum might be paid to plaintiff after deducting therefrom what might appear due to plaintiff's only outstanding creditors, Powell & Co., and for an account. To this bill the defendant, T. M. Waters, demurred for want of equity, and that it appeared said plaintiff was a bankrupt, and that at the time of his becoming a bankrupt, and previously thereto, he was entitled to said annuity, and that said commission of bankruptcy never was superseded. That it did not appear that said plaintiff ever obtained a certificate, and that the subject matter of said suit was never divested from said assignees, but was then vested in them.

Mr. Hughes and Mr. C. Leach, for the demurrer. This is a bill by an uncertificated bankrupt, and cannot be sustained. There are but few cases in which a bankrupt can file a bill; he may for discovery, but not for relief, or for his own personal protection, or for the abatement of a nuisance. In Lowndes v. Taylor, (1 Mad. 423,) the bill was for a discovery in aid of defence to an action at law. By the 150th section of 6 W. 4, c. 14, a bankrupt is entitled to any surplus which remains after payment in full of all creditors; but in this bill there is no statement that all the creditors have been paid. In Hammond v. Atwood, (3 Mad. 158) it was held a bankrupt could not sue. Counsel also referred to Bailey v. Vincent, (5 Mad. 48); Yewens v. Robinson, (11 Sim. 105); Tarleton v. Hornby, (1 Y. & C. Ex. 162); Benfield v. Solomons, (9 Ves. 82); Spragg v. Bink, (5 Ves. 583; 1 Dan. Ch. Pr. 56; 1 Mit. E. P. 81, note, last ed.); Heath v. Chadwick, (2 Phil. 649); Ferguson v. Livingstone, (9 L. E. R. 212)

Jan. 19.—Mr. F. Fitzgerald, and Mr. Thomas O'Hagan, in support of the bill.—If there be a clear surplus, and collusion between the assignee and a third party, this bill can be maintained. In Hammond v. Atwood there was a statement that the commission was invalid, and the court could not determine that question; also in Kelly v. Dowling, (cited in the note to 2 Moll. 433,) it is stated that Hammond v. Atwood had been overruled. In Bailey v. Vincent, (5 Mad. 48,) the bill sought to impeach the commission. In Yewens v. Robinson, (11 Sim. 101,) the bill was objectionable, as requiring the assignees to account. Counsel also distinguished Spragg v. Binks, Benfield v. Solomons, Heath v. Chadwick, Latour v. Holcombe, (8 Sim. 76,) shews that under certain circumstances an uncertificated bankrupt can sue. In Barton v. Jayne, (7 Sim. 24,) a charge of collusion was held sufficient to maintain the bill. In Utterston v. Mair, (4 B. C. C.) it would appear there was no charge of collusion. Preston v. Wilson, (5 Hare 185, S. C. 11 Jur. 201). In the present case there is a clear statement of collusion by the assignee, and that there is a surplus; and, if relief is not granted, there will be a failure of justice. The statement in this bill is, that only three creditors proved under the commission; that two who signed the deed have been paid their compositions, and the sum due to the other is not to be ascertained by an account.

MASTER OF THE ROLLS.—In this case a bill has been filed to raise the arrears of an annuity, amounting to between £600 and £700, which determined on the 6th of October, 1842. On the 28th of October, 1848, this bill was filed, and the demand would seem to be barred by the statute of limitations, unless that objection is got rid of by something which does not as yet appear; however, it is not necessary to consider that point. The question now is, whether a bill filed by an uncertificated bankrupt can be sustained, and it has been admitted that the general rule is against the plaintiff. However, in various cases attempts have been made to take them out of this rule by the statement of particular circumstances, but these cases do not appear to apply to the question before the court, and the latest which have been referred to would seem to be those in which the commission of bankruptcy itself has been impeached, and such bills could not be sustained, for the validity of the commission is to be ascertained by petition to the Lord Chancellor to supersede it, or by action against the assignee. Therefore a bill will not lie to try that question, and those cases were decided on that plain ground. As a general rule, an uncertificated bankrupt cannot take any proceeding against his assignee; for instance, a bill for an account will not lie, for matters of this nature can be investigated in as satisfactory manner by means of the statutable jurisdiction of the Court of Bankruptcy, as in the Court of Chancery, and this jurisdiction is considered to be exclusive, as stated by V. C. Wigram in Preston v. Wilson, (5 Hare 185). The effect of the bankrupt law is to exclude the jurisdiction of this court, in cases to which it would otherwise extend. To take cases out of this rule, into some bills the statement has been introduced that there would be a surplus to which the bankrupt would be entitled, and in others the charge of collusion has been made against the assignee, but the effect of all the decisions taken together would seem to show that if the surplus is to be ascertained by an account, a court of Equity will not interfere; and it is well settled that the refusal of an assignee to sue will not, of itself, give this court jurisdiction. In the case of Kaye v. Fosbrooke, (8 Sim.,) both circumstances occurred; there was the allegation of a surplus, and a refusal by the assignee to sue, yet it was held insufficient. As to the case of Barton v. Jayne, (in 7 Sim.) referred to as an authority, I do not think I would be justified in acting upon it after the observations by Lord Cottenham in the case of Heath v. Chadwicks. He says:—" Barton v. Jayne, and the case under appeal are the only decisions I am aware of holding that such bills can be maintained." The authority of Barton v. Jayne I consider is much affected, if not overruled by that case. It is plain the fact of there being a surplus is not sufficient, and a refusal to sue will not take the case out of the rule. The present bill, however, is sought to be sustained on the ground that there are distinct charges to shew that there is a surplus ascertained, and also collusion on the part of the assignee, who refuses to sue. The bill also states that Thomas M. Waters (the assignee) being on terms of intimacy and friendship with the said Thos. Wyse would not undertake or aid in any proceeding such as was then proposed to him, and which would appear ungracious and unkind towards the said Thomas Wyse. Thus, there is a statement of an ascertained surplus, and specific collusion. The authorities on this point cannot be considered as well settled until the opinion expressed by Lord Cottenham in the case referred to, and from the great authority of his decisions I cannot easily be induced to decide against any opinion clearly expressed by him. It is to be remarked, however, that there is not a single case referred to by Lord Cottenham in his judgment which has decided this question. In Kaye v. Fosbrooke there was no charge of collusion, while in the case before Lord Cottenham there was such a charge, therefore it is not an authority on the point. In Spragg v. Binkes (5 Ves.) there was no charge of collusion. In Hammond v. Atwood, (3 Mad. 158,) the bill sought to impeach the commission, and could not be sustained on that ground. The most important case upon the subject was that of Tarleton v. Hornby, in the Court of Exchequer, and was not alluded to by Lord Cottenham in his judgment. In that case it was decided that an uncertificated bankrupt cannot file a bill for an account, and, if the bill is not maintainable independently of the collusion, such a charge is not sufficient to sustain it. The existence of a surplus, with a statement of collusion, is not sufficient to enable this court to assume jurisdiction, and take the case out of the Bankruptcy Court. It is said, however, that the effect of there being an ascertained surplus distinguishes this case, but I do not think the allegation of a surplus is sufficiently clear to distinguish this case from the one before Lord Cottenham. As to the fact of there being a specific surplus, it appears an arrangement was made by the plaintiff with his creditors who proved, and a composition entered into, save as to one person, who did not execute the deed, to whom the sum of £130 was due. Now, the bill contains no allegation that there were no other creditors, and, if there were, it is impossible to treat that surplus as ascertained by deducting this sum of £130 from the arrears, to recover which this suit is instituted. I cannot come to the conclusion that this allegation of a surplus, and a friendly feeling of the assignee to T. Wyse, will take this case out of the general rule. With the exception of the case of Barton v. Jayne, which must now be considered as almost overruled by the case of Heath v. Chadwicks, there is no authority to show that this bill is maintainable, and I do not think I can so decide consistently with the high authority of Lord Cottenham. I will therefore allow this demurrer without costs. In Preston v. Wilson, (11 Jur. 201, 5 Hare,) the assignee submitted to act as the court should direct, and the reasonable course in the present case would have been for the assignee to leave the matter to be settled between the plaintiff and the principal defendant, for the assignee has not the slightest personal interest in the matter. The amount of security for using his name has been settled, but the plaintiff is unable to give it, and has been driven to file this bill himself. If this suit had been instituted before Heath v. Chadwicks, there would be some ground for holding that the bill was maintainable. In Kaye v. Fosbrooke it appears that if collusion had been charged, the bill would have been sustained. The analogy suggested between the case of an executor and of an assignee does not exist; there is a special jurisdiction in the latter case. If an assignee refuse to discharge his duty, the course is not to file a bill against him, as it would be against an executor; the proper course is to apply to the Lord Chancellor sitting in bankruptcy, and obtain an order directing the assignee to sue, upon an offer to indemnify, the very course which has been taken in the present case. If the demand is not barred by the statute of limitations, there will be a sum of £516 to which the plaintiff will be entitled, there being only one debt of £130; and though, for the purpose of this demurrer, I may have considered it probable there may be other creditors, still, with a view to costs, I may reasonably infer there are none. The assignee should have submitted to the court, and not have endeavoured to assist his friend, as appears from the statements in the bill, and, as in the case of Preston v. Wilson, (5 Hare) should have submitted to the jurisdiction of the court, and have aided the plaintiff in the recovery of this sum.

Allow this demurrer without costs.

EX PARTE JOHNSON IN THE MATTER OF THE INCUMBERED ESTATES ACT.—Feb. 10.

In this case Mr. Lawson moved that the Master, on an undertaking being lodged in his office, might set the house and lands of Donnybrook. A petition had been presented for a sale, and a receiver appointed.

MASTER OF THE ROLLS.—It never was contemplated that proceedings under this act should be delayed; and in this case, it appears, there are only four incumbrances, and there is no reason why a sale cannot be had immediately. I will, therefore, say, no rule on this motion.

Feb. 12.—Mr. Lawson, on this day, having stated that the rental of the lands amounted to only £400 per annum, and there were incumbrances to the amount of £5,600, besides an annuity affecting them; and that, under those circumstances, it was matter of considerable importance not to press for a sale at present, the depreciation of landed property being so great.

MASTER OF THE ROLLS.—The object of the legislature, in passing this act, was to bring the proceedings to as speedy a conclusion as possible. In this case, however, there may be some reason for not proceeding to a sale, and the present depression in value of property may be sufficient to justify the delay. I will, therefore, make this order.

EQUITY EXCHEQUER.—HILARY TERM.

STAFFORD v. HENRY.

33 Geo. 2, c. 14—Incidental Trading—Banker.

A., being a stockbroker and notary public, received money on deposit and paid it out on cheques, like a banker, and in some other respects acted as a banker; he did not, however, hold himself out to the public as a banker, nor did it appear he was generally believed to be one; and in his books the alleged banking accounts were mixed with others, as a stockbroker and trader.

Held, he was not a banker within the provisions of 33 Geo. 2, c. 14, requiring the enrolling and registering of bankers' deeds.

Qu.—Does that act apply to banks not issuing notes?

This was a suit to raise the amount of a mortgage made in the year 1831, by Abel Labertouche. Shortly before the filing of the bill, Labertouche had become bankrupt, and the defendants, as his assignees, were entitled to the equity of redemption. The defendants, in answer to the plaintiff's claim, alleged that Labertouche, at the time of the execution of the mortgage, was a banker within the meaning of the 8 Geo. 1, c. 14, and 33 Geo. 2, c. 14, and that the deed of mortgage, not having been enrolled and registered in the manner required by those statutes (which was admitted), was void as against them, as creditors of Abel Labertouche. The whole question in the cause, therefore, was, whether or not Abel Labertouche, in 1831, was a banker within the meaning of the above acts. The evidence went to shew that Labertouche, at the time of the execution of the deed of mortgage, was a stockbroker and notary public; and it was shewn, to some extent, that he received deposits of money from his customers, which he paid out again to their order—that he occasionally discounted bills—that he also collected them—and that he was engaged extensively in trade. On the production of his books, they appeared to contain entries of transactions similar to those of a banker, mixed, in several instances, with others referring to his other callings as stockbroker and trader.

J. D. Fitzgerald, Q.C., for plaintiff, contended that Labertouche did not come within the scope of these acts. The 8 Geo. 1, c. 14, is entirely repealed by the 33 Geo. 2, c. 14; but the latter act expressly refers to "such" bankers as came within the former, and that was wholly directed against bankers issuing notes. Moreover, from the 16th section of 33 Geo. 2, c. 14, it would appear as if the legislature contemplated, all through, the issuing of notes by the "bankers" referred to by the acts. The 29 Geo. 2, c. 16, which imposes a penalty on bankers using any other trade, also appears to contemplate bankers issuing notes; but no where has the word "banker" been defined, although there are a good many statutes relating to them. In the old Bankrupt Acts, the word "scrivener" is used along with the word "banker;" and it is agreed that a scrivener was a person receiving a deposit of money, and paying it out on requisition; so that a banker was something different, or it would have been unnecessary to insert the word. It is settled that an army agent is not a banker, although he keeps money to be paid out in cheques. Moreover, it is not sufficient to prove that Labertouche was a banker in the popular sense; he must be shewn to be within the acts; and upon the face of those acts they appear to apply only to bankers issuing notes. His receiving and disbursing money may be referred to his trade as a stockbroker—it is the constant practice of stockbrokers. The case of the army agent is accurately in point. Moreover, on the act 33 Geo. 2, the defendant is not entitled to this defence; for the bankrupt has not been shewn to have failed as a banker, but as a stockbroker. No proceedings have been taken against him as a banker. Besides, this deed is valid, at any rate, against the bankrupt; and his assignees, who stand in his shoes, ought not be suffered to impeach it. (Pennefather, B.—Are they not trustees for his other creditors? Pigot, C.B.—It has been settled by Sir E. Sugden they are creditors.) They should, at any rate, have filed a cross bill impeaching the deed, and not have indirectly attacked it in this manner. Counsel referred to and commented on Hayden v. Rivers (3 Ridg. P. C. 545); Vincent v. Hackett (2 Law Rec. O. S. 258); Faucett v. Hodgins; Atkinson v. Hodgins (3 Ir. Eq. Rep.); Wilson's case (1 Atk. 218); Coot v. O'Reilly (7 Ir. Eq. 359).

Brewster, Q.C., for defendants—This deed is void against us, and we may make this defence without cross bill. For though this deed may have a prima facie validity between the parties, the act declares that, as against us who represent the creditors, it shall, if the party were a banker, be void. It is contended, at the other side, the acts only contemplated bankers who issued notes; but the court will hesitate before it agrees to such a construction. It appears on evidence that this man traded in every way in money. A banker is a person receiving money on deposit and paying it out to order, and discounting bills with it, as this man did. Certainly the 8 Geo. 1, c. 14, appears only to apply to bankers issuing notes; but the terms of the 33 Geo. 2 extend to all bankers; and there is, moreover, a clause in the first section expressly saying that nothing in the first act shall limit or confine the operation of the second—an express answer to the argument used here. As to the necessity of the question being raised by a creditor of the bank, that is disposed of by Lord Clare's judgment in Hayden v. Rivers (3 Ridgway, P. C. 590). The title of 33 Geo. 2, c. 14, shews it was not intended merely to apply to banks of issue. The statutes are remedial, and if there be any doubt, their application should be extended.

Major, Q. C., and Hamilton Smythe on the same side.

Hayes and Walsh for plaintiff.

PIGOT, C. B.—In this case of Stafford v. Henry two questions have arisen for the consideration of the court—one of them a question of fact, and the other a question of law; the first is, whether, supposing that the provisions of the Bankers' Acts (8 Geo. 1, c. 14, and 33 Geo. 2, c. 14) applied to bankers not issuing notes, the bankrupt, Labertouche, was a banker; and the second is, were those statutes intended to apply to bankers not issuing notes. Of course the second question need not be determined unless the first be affirmatively answered. It appeared, in evidence, that Labertouche was a stockbroker and notary public, and that he collected, and occasionally discounted bills. The collection of bills, of course, must have been part of his business as a notary. It appeared, further, that he received and retained lodgments of money belonging to persons with whom he dealt, and it was asserted on behalf of the defendants, that he did these several acts as a banker, and that he was thereby brought within the scope of the statutes to which I have referred. Now, in my opinion, if these acts were done incidentally to his capacity as a stockbroker, if they did not form the substantial part of his trade, they would not render him liable to the provisions of the Bankers' Acts. Those acts avoid all deeds of conveyance executed by a banker, and not registered within three months, and if it were held, that merely performing occasionally the functions of a banker, without openly and notoriously bearing that character, would constitute a banker, the greatest injustice might arise; for bonâ fide purchasers might be deprived of their estates, by their vendors happening to deal with their customers as a banker deals with his. In the present case, the injustice of such a supposition is very well illustrated. The first witness, whose depositions have been read for the defendant, was Mr. Read. He expressly says, that Labertouche did not, at the time of the execution of the mortgage in the present case, act as a banker, "unless keeping deposits and paying them out on cheques could be considered as doing so," while Labertouche himself distinctly swears he was not a banker at the time at all. So that it is proved, that at this time, neither the trader nor his customer looked upon the former as a banker. How, then, is the party to this deed to be dealt with? Ought he to be deprived of his security for not taking precautions which no one considered necessary? It appears, further, from the accounts of the bankrupt which have been produced, that their subject was principally the business of a stockbroker, and that the moneys, out of which Mr. Read's drafts were to be paid, were principally the proceeds of stock. Now, suppose a party has £10,000 worth of bills due to him, and desires a notary public to collect them for him, and (the notary, also, happening to be a stockbroker) to invest all but £3,000, which he requires for present use, in the funds; and, stating that he will from time to time, draw on him for portions of the £3,000, requests he will, from time to time, sell out, so as always to have that sum in his hands, and invest any money which the customer may happen to pay in to him beyond that, surely such a transaction will not constitute the notary a banker. A case was cited from 1 Atk. 128 (Richardson v. Bradshaw), which, although not a direct authority, (and no direct authority, as far as I can ascertain, exists), still bears, to some extent, upon the case; for, although, upon the issue directed in that case, it appeared that the defendant had received deposits and paid drafts much in the manner of a banker, still the counsel for the plaintiff laid no stress upon that fact at the trial, which plainly implies, that it was not then considered sufficient to make a man a banker. Upon these grounds alone, I should, perhaps, be inclined to hold the evidence in this case insufficient to prove the bankrupt a banker; but there is, further, a class of cases which has had considerable influence on my mind in the decision of this case, in which the question has arisen under the bankrupt law, how far acts of trading, done incidentally to another pursuit, constitute a man a trader in the way incidentally used. In all those cases, the question has been considered one of degree, and whether the act of trading was, in fact, incidental to another pursuit. In the case of Warren, a bankrupt, (2 Sch. and Lef. 422), Lord Redesdale takes the distinction very plainly; and on that point principally his judgment turns. [His lordship read the passages.] In the case of Adams v. Malkin (3 Camp.), the same doctrine was laid down and illustrated. [His lordship read from the judgment, p. 540.] So here if what was done was incidental to the bankrupt's calling as a stockbroker, it did not bring him within the scope of the Bankers' Acts; for the question is, whether merely acting as a banker, incidentally to his ordinary occupation, made him a banker? Whether, trading in a manner which, but for the nature of his regular business, would, perhaps, have constituted him a banker, did actually, under the existing circumstances, bring him within the scope of the Bankers' Acts? Upon this view of the case I have referred to, I should say not. I may have had some difficulty at first about this case; but, considering that the plaintiff has proved his case—which is, in every respect, a bonâ fide one—and that the burthen lies on the defendant to answer clearly that case so made, (in doing which, under the circumstances, the court ought to hold him to a strict proof,) I cannot say that I should feel justified here in refusing the plaintiff the relief he seeks. Having come to the conclusion that the acts given in evidence do not at all shew the bankrupt to have been a banker, it becomes unnecessary for me to express an opinion as to the applicability of the act of the 33 Geo. 2 to bankers not issuing notes. Upon that question, if we were obliged to decide it, we might, perhaps, feel considerable difficulty.

PENNEFATHER, B.—The bill in this cause has been filed by the plaintiff, as a mortgagee, claiming under a deed executed by Labertouche in 1831. On the face of that bill the plaintiff appears entitled to the usual decree; but then the defendants say, that the deed is void as against them and the creditors whom they represent, inasmuch as the mortgagor was a banker within the meaning of the 8 Geo. 1, c. 14, and 33 Geo. 2, c. 14, and the deed was not registered pursuant to those statutes. If that defence were made out, I consider that the defendant might rely thereon, without being driven to a cross bill, for such a defence goes to the very foundation of the plaintiff's title. It is insisted, then, that Labertouche was a banker, and subject to the provisions of these acts. It becomes necessary, therefore, to consider not only the evidence produced to us, but the statutes themselves. It appears to me quite clear, that the statute 8 Geo. 1, c. 14, only contemplated as bankers those persons who issued notes, and who, in the language of the statute, kept shop for the purpose of trading as bankers. If the case rested entirely on that statute, it is plain that the bankrupt, Labertouche, would not be within its provisions; but that act is repealed by the 33 Geo. 2, c. 14, and in it are omitted many of the expressions found in the former act, by which means a considerable doubt arises, as to whether the word "bankers" is to be considered confined to parties issuing notes or not. I do not think that we are in this case called upon to decide that question. If any person assumes openly, notoriously, and avowedly, the character of a banker, I should be very reluctant to hold that he was not within the meaning of that act. But still, to bring him within its scope, he ought to have been openly held out to the world as a banker, and a person carrying on that trade; and if no such character was given to him by himself or the public, it would be very dangerous to allow a bond fide creditor to be despoiled of his security, by an allegation subsequently made, that the party was a banker. In the present case the bankrupt, Labertouche, was not only a stockbroker and notary public, but also an extensive merchant; in which latter capacity he would have been liable to heavy penalties, if he were also a banker. This does not shew that he was not a banker; but it shews that neither by himself nor others was he considered to be one, and therefore, in my opinion, that he was not within the mischief or the meaning of the act. He certainly received and kept money for his customers, and paid it out again to them upon cheques; but that appears to have been done in a manner merely incidental to his business as a stockbroker. I consider this case as very like that of the army agent cited from Atkins; the acts of banking were incidental to his other occupation, and, as has been observed by my Lord Chief Baron, a trade used incidentally does not become a man's calling. In this case, Labertouche himself positively swears he never was a banker; while, on the other side, it is only shewn that he occasionally acted like a banker, and not that he ever held himself out to the public as being one. I, therefore, do not consider that he was a banker within the meaning of the act. Moreover, nearly every act of his is perfectly reconcilable with, and referable to his calling as a stockbroker; and therefore, in a case where the court should require the defendant strictly to prove his case, I do not think we should be satisfied with the evidence which has been here produced. The defendants themselves are so conscious of the weakness of their case, that they do not even ask for an issue; indeed the court is satisfied without it. On the whole, then, I must say, that it appears to me—and rather clearly—that the plaintiff is entitled to the prayer of his bill.

RICHARDS, B.—I was unable to be in court the first day on which this case was argued, but I heard it very fully debated the second day; and nothing was then brought forward which would render it necessary that I should add anything to the learned judgments that have been pronounced, further than to say that in them I fully agree.

LEFROY, B.—I agree with my three brethren, that the defendant in this case has not made out the defence which he set up; he has not proved enough to annul the solemn act of the parties. The principle referred to with regard to acts of trading done incidentally to another, and that the principal occupation, is well established; that is a very important principle, and bears materially on the case; but everything has been said upon it, and I shall pursue it no further. Now, as regards the Act of Parliament itself, I think it is not desirable, unless we are driven to it, to express an opinion upon the application of that act to other banks than banks of issue; but whatever opinion may be formed on that point, whether the act is to be extended to banks of deposit as well as banks of issue, or not, this much is plain, that it was against the acts of persons notoriously and manifestly acting as bankers that the legislature intended, in this manner, to protect the public. For the words of the 8th of Geo. 1 were, "Where any person shall follow the trade or calling of a banker, by keeping a public shop,"—the words "keeping a public shop" are dropped in the 33 Geo. 2; but it says, [the learned Baron read the preamble of the act,] which clearly shews, it was to this public banking the legislature meant to direct the act. It is clear, that unless a party has held himself out to the public as a banker, and the public has taken him to be one, he does not come within the scope of the act. No one witness here has shewn that either of these facts existed in this man's case. In the words of Gibbs, C. J., "it was not his known occupation," and it would be hard upon him to fix him with a trade which he never intended to carry on. Moreover, all his acts are referable to his other trades, which he could carry on without being a banker. If he were a banker, his pursuing some of those callings was clearly illegal. Why, then, are we to imply, when we can suppose him to be acting legally, that he was pursuing an occupation which made other acts of his illegal? There is no similarity between the accounts produced to us and the accounts of a banker. His books were kept as no banker ever kept them. One thing, indeed, he has done like a banker—he has had cheques drawn on him; but that was done merely incidentally to his other business, and if we were to hold that sufficient, nearly every private agent would be liable to be brought within the scope of these acts. Therefore, without giving any opinion on the Bankers' Act, I may say, that whether it applies more or less extensively, to banks of issue only, or to banks of deposit also, there has been no case to bring this party within it. I therefore concur in the judgment of my learned brethren, that the plaintiff is entitled to the prayer of his bill.

QUEEN'S BENCH.—HILARY TERM.

HORNER v. WILCOCKS.—Jan. 22.

Practice—Interpleader Act—9 & 10 Vict. c. 64.

Where a party has, by his own act, placed himself in a situation to be sued, he cannot call on the court for relief, under the Interpleader act, 9 & 10 Vict. c. 64.

This was an action of assumpsit brought by the plaintiff to recover from the defendant a sum of £86 5s 11d. The circumstances of the case, as disclosed in the affidavits, were as follows:—On the 20th August, 1844, the Rectory of Killeshill, in the Diocese of Armagh, became vacant by the death of the then Incumbent, and on the 14th of the October following, the plaintiff was inducted on the collation of his Grace the Lord Primate. On the 8th November in the same year, the said Rectory was placed under a sequestration, and the defendant appointed sequestrator. In the month of February, 1847, the sequestration was superseded, and a receiver appointed under the Court of Chancery. The defendant, while acting as such sequestrator, levied a rateable proportion of the rent-charge from the 20th August, 1844, to the 1st of November, in the same year. This sum amounted to £86 5s. 11d., and formed the subject of the present action. The defendant did not include this sum in any of the accounts which he passed as sequestrator, and assigned as a reason for not paying it over to the plaintiff, that on the 6th July, 1844, the plaintiff was discharged as an insolvent debtor, and one Henry Speer appointed his assignee; and that the attorney of the said Henry Speer had frequently cautioned the defendant not to make any payment to the plaintiff. It also appeared, that since this action was commenced, the defendant was served with a notice in writing, by the attorney of the assignee, directing him not to pay any sum of money to the plaintiff, and informing him that the assignee was the only person authorised to receive the produce of the estate of the plaintiff, and that he would hold the defendant accountable.

On a former day in this Term, Sterne B. Miller, on the part of the defendant, obtained an order nisi for relief, under the Interpleader Act (the 9th & 10th Vic. c. 64, s. 1), against which Brewster, Q.C., and J. Murphy, Q.C., for the plaintiff, now shewed cause. The rent-charge, for which this action is brought, accrued due before the sequestration issued, and ought not to have been demanded or received by the sequestrator, Waite v. Bishop (1 Cr. Mee. & R. 507); Egan v. Heenan (3 Ir. Eq. Rep. 50) He has, therefore, by his own act, placed himself in a situation to be sued, and cannot now call on the court to extricate him, Belcher v. Smith (9 Bing. 82, S.C. 2 Mo. & Sc. 184). The assignee of the plaintiff has no right to this money, as it was not payable until after the date of the vesting order.

Napier, Q.C., appeared for the assignee, and contended that it was incumbent on the plaintiff to produce the order for his final discharge, as the assignee would be entitled to the money, unless the vesting order was prior to the month of August, 1844.

Sterne B. Miller, for the defendant, was heard in support of his rule.

BLACKBURN, C. J.—The defendant in this case calls upon the court to interpose in his behalf, and to direct the plaintiff and his assignee to interplead. From his own admission, it appears that the defendant received the sum of £84 18s. 7d. four years ago, and retained it ever since, though he had no right whatever to it. He acted under colour of his authority as sequestrator, but did not include this money in any of his accounts. This is not the case of a person who has become an involuntary stakeholder, or of a public officer acting in the discharge of his duty, but of one who, after wrongfully receiving and retaining a sum of money, now says that he has been served with a notice cautioning him against paying it over. In my judgment, there is strong evidence of collusion between the person who served that notice and the defendant. If the facts of this case were made the subject of a bill in a Court of Equity, a demurrer would lie to it. The cause shewn must be allowed with costs.

The rest of the Court concurred.

Rule discharged.

COURT OF CHANCERY.

DOWNING v. HODDER.—Feb. 10.

Practice—General Orders.

The General Orders are binding on the court, but may be relieved against, in cases of fraud, or inevitable accident.

This case came before the court on appeal from an order of the Master of the Rolls refusing a motion to dismiss the bill for want of prosecution, and granting a cross motion for liberty to amend the bill. The facts sufficiently appear in the Lord Chancellor's judgment.

Jones for the defendants.

Deasy for the plaintiff.—There is no provision in the 4 & 5 W. 4, c. 78, under which the orders are made, that they shall be laid before parliament or have the force of statutes. The orders have invariably been considered subject to the discretion of the judge, O'Grady v. Bury (1 I. E. R. 13); Dyer v. Golding (2 I. E. R. 56); Smith v. Gould (7 I. E. R. 271); Millard v. Stevens (8 Sim. 160). Calvert v. Gandy (1 Phil. 518) was decided on the orders of 1841, made under the act 3 & 4 Vic. c. 94, which gave them the effect of statutory enactments; the 8 & 9 Vic. c. 105, was passed to remedy the inconvenience produced by this.

LORD CHANCELLOR.—This case comes before me on appeal from an order of the Master of the Rolls. The defendant appeals on the ground that by the 82nd General Order he was entitled ex debito justitiæ to have the plaintiff's bill dismissed, and that the particular exceptions specified in the General Order not having existed, the court has no jurisdiction to extend the time for filing a replication. The order is certainly very stringent; it is one of the orders made under the 4 & 5 Wm. 4, c. 78, entitled "An Act for the Amendment of the Proceedings and Practice of the High Court of Chancery in Ireland," under which, power was given to the Lord Chancellor, by and with the advice and assistance of the Master of the Rolls, to make general orders. One of the general orders made under this authority is, "that the defendant (if the plaintiff shall not proceed with the cause) shall be at liberty, after the expiration of two months from the time when the defendant's answer or plea has been deemed sufficient, to move upon notice that the bill be dismissed with costs, and the bill shall be accordingly dismissed with costs, unless the plaintiff, in the mean time, shall file and duly serve a replication in the cause, or lodge with the defendant's solicitor an undertaking signed by the solicitor for the plaintiff, to set down the cause to be heard against such defendant, upon bill and answer, in the following Term; or unless the plaintiff shall appear upon the motion, and satisfy the court that he is unable to proceed in the cause by reason of any other defendant, or defendants, not having answered, and that due diligence has been used by the plaintiff in proceeding to have the bill taken as confessed against such defendant, in which case the court shall allow the plaintiff such further time for proceeding with the cause as it shall deem reasonable." Now, in this case, no doubt, the time had elapsed. No replication was filed in the cause, it was not set down on bill and answer, nor was the plaintiff unable to proceed from any other defendant not having filed his answer, he having used due diligence. Prima facie the case is within the order. It appears that the answer of one defendant (the insurance company) was filed the 3rd April, 1848, subsequently to that of the defendant Hodder; and, further, that the question in this cause relates to a policy of insurance, and that documents bearing on that question appeared, for the first time, on the answer of the company, that the plaintiff here was accordingly entitled to an order against the company for their production, which he obtained on the 12th June, but which was not complied with till the 1st of August. Matters remained so till the 1st of November, when the defendant served notice to dismiss the bill for want of prosecution. On the 14th of November, the plaintiffs served a notice that they would ask leave to amend. I have to consider how to deal with respect to the facts of this case, and the rule to be adopted with respect to the orders. No doubt, there has been some fluctuation with regard to the proper mode of dealing with this and some other rules. On one hand, it has been contended that they bind the court as if they had been part of the Act of Parliament under which they were framed, and that the court cannot, under any circumstances, depart from the terms of a rule so drawn, that it is as if the act had incorporated it. On the other hand, it is contended that there exists a species of general discretion of dealing with these rules, and that they are more to guide the general practice than to govern the court, and that there exists a general power of relaxing them. These are two of the opinions which may be collected from the expressions of judges. A third is, that the orders are binding as to the ordinary practice, but are subject to the rules of Courts of Equity in all cases, and that where there is accident, fraud, or deception on the part of the opposite party, this court may dispense with the rule and give indulgence, as in many other transactions. In one case, relief was given on the ground of mistake; it must be conceded that it is not easy to define what is such mistake as to entitle to relief. These have been the three modes of viewing the orders. In considering the authorities on the point, the only clear way is to take them in the order of time. The first case is that of Stewart v. Service (L. & G. tem. Plun. 303). That case was decided on the orders of 1834, but they were under the same Act of Parliament; so there is no difference in that respect. It was heard first before Sir W. Mac Mahon, who adopted the middle course, although appearing to take the more stringent view. In his judgment he says, "My view of the system of orders of the 29th November, 1834, which were issued under the statute of 4 & 5 Wm. 4, c. 78, is, that they are to be considered as orders, while unrescinded, of the same nature as orders inserted in a statute; as, for example, the rules inserted in the statute 5 & 6 Wm. 4, c. 16, as to persons in custody under process, that all these orders are to be considered as the written and binding law of the court, unless when, upon the acknowledged principles of a Court of Equity, they ought to be relieved against,—viz., in cases of fraud or accident; but that the neglect or delay of the solicitor, in proceeding according to these orders of the court, does not constitute a case for relief upon these principles—that as to relieving upon an arbitrary principle of wide discretion, as against these orders, upon the ground of mere neglect, I do not see how it can be sustained. The grounds on which it was urged to the discretion of the court that, in this particular case, these orders ought to be relieved against, appear to me to be founded on the assumption, that it was to be treated as an irreparable mischief and failure of justice, that the party should not be privileged, by amendment, to prosecute the particular cause, whatever may be the neglect of the party, or his solicitor; but it appears to me that this proposition, thus assumed, cannot be at all sustained. It is true that it may be deemed an inconvenience to be avoided as far as practicable, consistently with the maintenance of these orders, which were framed for averting mischievous delays in Equity suits, to subject a party to file a new bill, but the costs of the suit which have been the subject of the neglect and delay will be the only loss imposed on the suitor, and his rights will remain unaffected.” That was the view taken by Sir W. Mac Mahon; and, though Lord Plunket reversed the order, there is nothing to shew what view he took of those observations. The question was not on the force of the orders, but on their construction, and that was the view taken. The next case is O’Grady v. Barry (1 I. E. R. 13). Sir M. O’Loghlen said, “I have the authority of the settled practice in England for saying that these general orders, being framed for the general administration of equity, must always give way when it appears to the court that the equity of any particular case requires it.” This is not very definite; and, if it means that the court is to put a construction on the orders with reference to the general merits of the case, I cannot agree with it. I cannot think that the orders are to be interpreted in different ways in different suits. I do not think that the general equity of the cause can be at all taken into consideration; but, if it means the mode of conducting the case, I can reconcile it with the words of Sir Wm. Mac Mahon. The next case is Res v. Lyons (1 Dr. & W. 327, vide p. 339). There Lord Plunket, speaking generally of the rules, seems to take the view that they are flexible, and says, “there is no ground for saying, nor can it be pretended, that these rules the creatures of the court are to become its masters, by assuming a nature so binding as to overrule and control the acts of that very court which gave to them existence.” The Vice-Chancellor seems to have taken a similar view in Burrell v. Nicholson (6 Sim. 212). The case of Dycer v. Goulding (2 Ir. E. R. 57), was also before Sir Michael O’Loghlen, and shews that, in his opinion, the case before the court gave a claim for indulgence, although the proper time had passed. He says, “It appears that there have been some communications between the plaintiffs’ solicitor and the defendant White, which induced the plaintiffs to delay the prosecution of their suit, and that the defendant, who now seeks to have the bill dismissed for want of prosecution, is represented by the same solicitor who is concerned in this cause for the defendant White. So that the defendant who is now applying may be supposed to have been apprised of the not unreasonable cause of delay. I have frequently had occasion to notice the evil effect of permitting vague and casual conversations pending a cause to interrupt the regularity of the proceedings in it. However, the court is always unwilling to dismiss a bill for want of prosecution, where there is a reasonable excuse for the delay; and, under the circumstances now disclosed to the court, I think the plaintiff should be at liberty to retain the bill, upon the usual terms of paying the costs of the motion to dismiss it.” So it would seem that Sir Michael O’Loghlen took a more favourable view than Sir W. Mac Mahon, of the power of the court over these orders. In Jeffereys v. Goodwin (3 I. E. R. 99), the court gave indulgence on the ground of mere accident. In Smith v. Goold (7 I. E. R. 271), leave was given to amend, long after the time had passed. M’Loughlin v. M’Loughlin (8 I. E. R. 109) came before the late Master of the Rolls (the present Chief Justice). In that case, he refused to admit any departure from the rule, and seems to have taken a strong view of them, stronger than that of Sir M. O’Loghlen, and nearer that of Sir Wm. Mac Mahon. He says that the only question is, whether the plaintiff has shewn due diligence; and, so far, he takes an indulgent view of the case, in not confining the diligence to enforcing an answer. He says, it is impossible to say that this is a case of diligence, and the necessity of amending the bill cannot take the case out of the rule. Besides, it is plain that the record must be, in fact, reconstructed in the amended bill; so that I feel the less difficulty in granting the application, as the plaintiff may as well file a new bill.” In Davies v. Davies (10 I. E. R. 614), I have stated my opinion on these rules to be in accordance with that of Sir Wm. Mac Mahon, though not going so fully into the cases. The view I took was, that unless there was something in the conduct of the party to put the plaintiff off his guard, I could not relax them. The cases in England do not very clearly raise the question. In Calvert v. Gandy (1 Phill. 519), Lord Lyndhurst says, “The orders of August, 1841, were made by the Lord Chancellor, with the advice and consent of the Master of the Rolls, in pursuance of the 4th Vict. c. 94, and 4 & 5 Vict. c. 52, which provides that all rules, orders, and regulations shall be laid before the Houses of Parliament, and that from and after the making thereof they should be binding and obligatory on the court, and be of like force and effect as if the provisions therein contained had been expressly enacted by Parliament, subject, however to the rights of either house of Parliament to annul them. Those orders have, therefore, the force and effect of an Act of Parliament. I have the power, with the concurrence of any two of the other judges of the court, to rescind them and substitute others; but, without going through the forms prescribed by the act, I have no power to vary them. I should be very glad if I could put a different construction upon the act, for this is certainly a very inconvenient one, but I do not see how I can—” In my own orders of 1828, the first intention was to have annexed them to an Act of Parliament, and I actually brought in a bill for that purpose; but afterwards I felt the very difficulty which has occurred, and accordingly did not carry through the bill, but issued the orders as the orders of the court only." It does not appear why he might not have brought in an act, like the Irish act, which does not contain those stringent clauses, if the omission of them would have lessened the inconvenience. It is said that a late act (8 & 9 Vic. c. 106) was passed to get rid of this difficulty in England, but there is some doubt whether that was the reason, and as to the effect of the act in that respect, Mathews v. Chichester (5 Hare, 202) was argued before the Vice-Chancellor, on an order made under the statute 8 & 9 Vic. when he restored the bill. It does not appear what view of the 8 & 9 Vic. the Lord Chancellor took, but he reversed the Vice-Chancellor's order. That case is also reported in 11 Jurist, p. 49. In this state of the authorities there cannot be said to be any definite rule. If so, the view taken by Sir Wm. MacMahon seems to me to answer all purposes. Before the act passed, the Chancellor had power to make rules; whether or not, to alter them is not now material; he certainly had not, under the act, any power to change them, save with the assent of the Master of the Rolls. As I said before, there has been much fluctuation of opinion as to the cases in which the rules could be relaxed; Sir Wm. MacMahon put it as high as fraud. It is not necessary to put it so high; inevitable accident would be sufficient. What degree of mistake would do, I will not now decide. The equity of the cause has nothing to do with it. Whatever is to be considered, must be in the conduct of the cause. Now, in the case before me, what are the facts? The plaintiff filed his bill 10th of February, 1848; so far as relates to this defendant, the case was complete, but by reason of the answer of the insurance Company, the case became incomplete; and though their answer was filed the 3rd of April, it was not, in fact, an answer till the 1st of August; for, having stated documents which were ordered to be produced on the 12th of June, it was not a complete answer till they were produced in August. We all know, that at that time there is not the same facility of considering a case. I do not say that the long vacation is to be left out in considering the rules; if it were to be, the orders should be amended. I do not think the plaintiff precluded from relief. Perhaps, if it had been in the first place before me, I might have taken a stronger view; but, considering the conduct of the cause, not only with reference to its own facts, but to orders made in other cases, I think I can come to no other conclusion than that the Master of the Rolls has taken a right view of the case. Some time elapsed between the answer and the order for the production, and a long time elapsed when the deeds were produced on the 1st of August, and then an amendment of the bill was necessary. I impute no fraud in the case, but there is enough to shew that the plaintiff might, to some extent, consider himself not liable to be stopped by this rule after the delay by the other defendant. I am not satisfied that there was any want of proper diligence. I will not give any costs, and the appellant must get back his deposit.

Chancery Motion Book, p. 212.

ROLLS COURT.

STEELE v. FRAZER.—Jan. 17.

Service deemed good—Subpoena—Power of Attorney.

In a suit for foreclosure and sale of certain lands vested in trustees, upon trust, to sell. R. F., one of the trustees, by power of attorney, authorized R. N. T. to sell these lands. Service of subpoena, to appear and answer, upon R. N. T. deemed good service of R. F.

Reilly, on behalf of the plaintiff, moved that service of the subpoena to appear and answer the bill in this cause, and of the notice pursuant to the 15th General Order, on the defendant, Robert Frazer, by serving same on R. N. Turnbull, the attorney of the said Robert Frazer, be deemed good service on the defendant, Robert Frazer. The bill in this case was filed to raise the amount of a mortgage, and prayed for a foreclosure and sale of certain lands in the county of Dublin. From the affidavit of the plaintiff's solicitor it appeared that by indenture bearing date the 21st of December, 1844, the said lands were conveyed to the said defendant and three other persons, upon trust, by sales or mortgage to raise such sum as should be necessary to pay off the debts therein mentioned, including said mortgage. That Robert Frazer, by a power of attorney, dated the 30th of October, 1848, reciting that there were charges affecting said lands, and that same should be sold for payment thereof, and that he was about to emigrate to Australia, appointed Robert N. Turnbull, his attorney, to grant and release said lands, with full power to convey same to a purchaser.

MASTER OF THE ROLLS.—I will make the order, that service upon Robert N. Turnbull be deemed good service of the defendant Robert Frazer.

NUGENT v. LEYDEN.—Feb. 1st.

Where a bill has been filed contrary to good faith, Sable, the court has, at the instance of a defendant, summary jurisdiction to take the bill off the file.

This was an application by a defendant that the bill might stand dismissed, with costs, on the grounds that same had been filed contrary to good faith, and the agreement of the parties, and without the knowledge of the plaintiff.

It appeared that the late Elizabeth Rumley gave her bond, dated the 14th day of May, 1846, to the plaintiff for the sum of £600, together with warrant of attorney to confess judgment thereon, and on which was endorsed the following defeasance—“Memorandum, that the within bond and warrant of attorney is given for securing the payment of the principal sum of £300, with interest, from the within named Elizabeth Rumley, to the within named James Nugent, by half-yearly instalments of £25, payable on every 1st day of November, and 1st day of May, the first payment of £25 to be made on the 1st of May next, and it is hereby declared that unless default shall be made in the payment of said instalments, or some or one of them, on the days and times above mentioned, no execution shall be sued out upon the judgment to be entered upon said warrant." The first instalment was paid on the 11th of July, 1847, for which the plaintiff gave the following receipt, "Received from Miss Elizabeth Rumley £25 sterling, amount of first instalment on her bond for £600, dated 14th May, 1846, and which should have been paid on the 1st of May, 1847; received same without prejudice to my right at any time hereafter to issue execution on said bond, notwithstanding the condition endorsed on the back thereof, such condition having been now broken by the said first instalment not having been paid on the 1st of May last." In order to secure the payment of the instalments, it appeared that Elizabeth Rumley had given the plaintiff a letter to a Mr. Thomas Carson, a tenant of her's authorizing him to pay his rent, £60 per annum, less taxes, to the plaintiff, who, it further appeared, was himself also her tenant, at a yearly rent of about £18, which paid his interest. Before the second instalment became due, Elizabeth Rumley died, and appointed the defendant her sole executrix. A caveat was entered to her obtaining probate of the will, and a litigation carried on in the Court of Prerogative, which was not decided until Nov. 1848, when a decree was made in favour of the defendant. Pending this litigation, no instalments were paid to the plaintiff, who threatened proceedings for the recovery of the judgment. In reply to his applications, the defendant had always expressed her willingness to carry out the arrangement made with Elizabeth Rumley, and it appeared that after the decree in the Prerogative Court had been obtained, and before probate was taken out, the son of the plaintiff met the son of the defendant by appointment at the office of the defendant's solicitor, when two receipts for rent, payable by Thomas Carson, the first for a year's rent, due the 25th of June, 1848, the second for a half year to fall due the 25th of December then next, were handed to the plaintiff's son, the defendant swearing that she was informed, and verily believed, such receipts were given to carry out the original agreement made with E. Rumley, and on the full understanding that no proceedings would be taken on the judgment. The plaintiff and his son denied there was any such understanding, and insisted that they took the receipts as payments generally, and that the son had no authority to make such an arrangement. It appeared that Carson paid the year's rent, due the 25th of June, less the taxes, but did not pay the rent due the 25th of December, but stated his readiness to pay in a short time. Without any further intimation to the defendant, or without being informed of Carson's asking further time, the bill was filed on the 3rd of January, 1849, and not until after it was filed was the receipt for the unpaid rent sent back. On being served with the subpoena, the defendant sent her servant to the plaintiff, who stated the proceedings were as great a surprise to him as the defendant. The plaintiff and his solicitor, by their affidavits, stated that instructions had been given to prepare the bill many months before, and that it had been delayed through the illness of the counsel before whom the instructions had been laid, and that those instructions never had been withdrawn.

Hughes, Q. C., and A. Hickey, in support of the motion, relied on the want of good faith exhibited in filing the bill, and that even if the condition of the defesance was broken by the non-payment of the instalments at the times appointed, that the subsequent acceptance of the receipts revived the agreement to accept payment by instalments Norton v. Wood (1 Russ. & Myles, 176), and that the court had jurisdiction to interfere summarily, Brangan v. Gorges (7 I. E. R. 227); Blake v. Smith (1 Yo. 594); that a court of law would, in a like case, exercise summary jurisdiction, Philpot v. Thompson (2 Dow. & Lownd. 18.)

J. D. Fitzgerald, Q. C., and T. W. White, contra.—This is a question for the hearing, the condition of the defesance has not been fulfilled, and there was no subsequent agreement to set it up again. The affidavits are contradictory; that made by the defendant was on mere hearsay.

MASTER OF THE ROLLS.—In this case, the defendant applies to dismiss the plaintiff's bill on two grounds; first, as having been filed contrary to good faith; secondly, without the sanction or knowledge of the plaintiff. I do not think I could summarily interfere on the second ground, because the plaintiff has adopted the act of his solicitor; and on the first, if I do not comply with the application in this instance, I wish it to be understood that I do not lay down the proposition, that I have not jurisdiction to do so. I have no doubt, although the affidavits of the plaintiff and his son have been framed with all the nicety of special pleading, that these receipts were accepted as payments on account of the instalments, and I should be glad to exercise summary jurisdiction, as this has been a most harsh proceeding; but, as this case is not quite clear on the affidavits, I think the safer way will be to draw up a special order, allowing the defendant to lodge money in court without prejudice to her insisting upon having the bill dismissed at the hearing. If an application to stay proceedings were not made until after bill filed, there being no breach of faith, I could only do so on payment by the defendant of all the plaintiff's demands, Field v. Robinson (7 Bea. 66); Damer v. Portarlington (2 Phi. 30); but here the objection goes to the plaintiff instituting the suit at all, and if the case were now at a hearing, there would not be much difficulty in disposing of it. I am happy to say I have jurisdiction over the costs of the motion, and I shall give none to the plaintiff. No rule on this motion, without prejudice to the defendant, Maria Leyden, insisting at the hearing that the plaintiff is not entitled to any costs of this suit, and it is ordered that the defendant, Maria Leyden be, and she is hereby at liberty to lodge in the Bank of Ireland, with the privity of the Accountant-general of this court, to the credit of this cause, such sum as she may be advised.

QUEEN'S BENCH.—HILARY TERM, 1849.

LESSEE DANKERT v. WILSON.—Jan. 17.

Ejectment—Notice to Quit—Married Woman.

Separate Estate.

Property had been devised to a wife, previous to her marriage, for her life, to her separate use. The marriage settlement did not affect the premises in question, but contained a covenant on the husband's part not to interfere with the management of the wife therein. The parties separated soon after the marriage. The defendant had never dealt with any other persons in respect of the premises, than the wife and her agent; she had paid rent on the wife's receipts. Held, that a notice to quit, signed by the wife, and describing the holding to be under herself, was sufficient.

This was an ejectment, on the title, to recover a certain dwelling house situate at Cove, in the county of Cork. The declaration contained three demises, one in the name of Mr. Dankert another in his wife's, and a third in his name jointly with his wife, whose property the premises in question had been prior to their marriage. The action had been tried at the Cork Summer Assizes of 1848, before Moore, J., on which occasion it appeared in evidence, that certain premises, including the house in question, had been demised on the 3rd of November, 1808, for a freehold term, which was still in case, and the interest in said lease had been vested in one Fitzgerald, the father of Mrs. Dankert. He died previous to the marriage of Mr. and Mrs. Dankert, having by his will devised the premises in question to his daughter, during her life, for her sole use and benefit. The devise was directly to herself, without the intervention of trustees. In the year 1836 she married the lessor of the plaintiff, and on that occasion a settlement was executed, which did not comprise the property now in dispute. It contained, however, a covenant by the husband not to interfere with the property conveyed to the uses of this settlement, and, likewise, to permit his wife to enjoy the property which she succeeded to under her father's will, according to the terms thereof. Soon after the marriage the parties separated, and from that period to the present, the wife had received the rent of the house now sought to be evicted through her own recognized agent, and on her own receipt. The defendant had become a tenant of the said house during Mrs. Dankert's management of the property, but simply as successor to her stepfather, whose possession was antecedent to Mrs. Dankert's tenure of the premises. The defendant had never known any other persons to be concerned with the premises but Mrs. Dankert and her agent. Mrs. Dankert had caused her to be served with a notice to quit, in her own name, dated August 18, 1846, and describing the holding to be from herself. An ejectment had been brought thereon, which was tried at the Cork Spring Assizes of 1845, but the lessors of the plaintiff omitted on that occasion the production of the will and settlement, and were accordingly nonsuited, as having failed to shew an authority from husband to wife to determine the tenancy. The present action was accordingly commenced, and the above documents having been proved, a verdict passed against the defendant, which she now sought to set aside, on the grounds that even granting the requisite authority, had been given to Mrs. Dankert, the notice to quit was invalid, by reason of its not having been given in the name of the party in whom the legal estate was vested. A conditional rule, to set aside the verdict, having been previously obtained, cause was this day shown by Henn, J., with him Herrick.—The joint effect of the will and settlement is to confer power on the wife to determine the tenancy. Doe. d. Earl Manners, v. Mison, (2 Moo. & R. 56.) It was quite unnecessary to state that it was signed on behalf of husband. Lessee Lord Sligo, v. Davitt, (3 Ir. L. R. 146.)

J. D. Fitzgerald, Q.C., and Chatterton for defendant.—The judgment of the court, in Lord Sligo's case, turned on the fact of a disclaimer by the tenant, and thus the necessity for a notice was removed. Here there was a misdescription of tenancy in the notice. A notice by an agent should be given in that character. (Blackburne, C. J.—This is a peculiar case, because the tenant here paid rent to the wife. There is actual evidence of her interest in the premises.) The tenancy, in a court of law, would be held to be under the husband, and the notice to quit ought to have been conformable. (Moore, J.—Would not the defendant be precluded from setting up a title in the husband.) It is admitted on the other side, that it is on the demise, in the name of the husband alone, that they can recover, and we have admitted tenancy under him. A feoffment by a wife, of her own lands, without the concurrence of her husband, is void, Perkins vs. Grants, 6-8. There can be no estoppel in the case of a married woman it must be mutual. The notice ought to be a safe one for the tenant. Doe dem Lyster v. Goldwin, (2 Q. B. 143, S. C.; 1 G. & Dav. 463.) (Blackburne, C. J.—Is it not the test, whether the defendant can act safely upon this notice?) That is not the only test, the notice must not merely be safe for the tenant, but give him the means of ascertaining its authority, and if it does not, the owner may still treat persons so served as tenants. (Moore, J.—Was it competent for the tenant to dispute the notice of the wife in this instance? It was proved that tenancy commenced after the separation.) Doe v. Biggs, (1 Taunton, 367,) is quite distinguishable from the present case. Here the notice actually rebuts on its face the presumption of agency. Lessee Freeman v. Ahearn, (Ir. Cir. Cas. 553.) The case of a receiver, under the courts, is by no means analogous. In Lord Sligo's case the notice did not negative the presumption of tenancy as it does here.

Herrick, in reply, was not called upon.

BLACKBURN, C. J.—This was an ejectment on the title, in which the lessees of the plaintiff are husband and wife; and the question is, whether, under the circumstances of the case, the tenancy of the defendant has been legally determined. It appears to me that it has, and that the lessees of the plaintiff are entitled to recover, whether on the demise of the husband and wife jointly, or of the wife alone. The husband covenanted not to interfere with his wife in the management of her estate, which was to be her's in every dealing respecting the property, and the defendant had been fixed with the notice of this arrangement, and acted accordingly. Could the defendant, therefore, be misled by a notice in the present form? It is quite clear that it could be acted on with perfect safety, notwithstanding the misdescription of tenancy. The husband could not repudiate the acts of his wife in this matter. Lord Denman's criterion in Doe v. Goldwin fully applies to the present case.

CRAMPTON, J., (after briefly stating the leading features of Doe v. Goldwin, which his lordship shewed to be distinguishable from the present case, and that the absence of authority, not the form of the notice, was there the ground of the decision).—Here the wife is agent for her husband. The covenant proves this fact, and the wife, at all events, was the party really interested. The case referred to is no authority against the lessors of the plaintiff.

MOORE, J.—Under the peculiar circumstances of this case, I am of opinion that the verdict ought to stand. There was a direct understanding between all parties that the wife should have the power to determine tenancies, and the tenant understood her to be so empowered; and the fact of the notice being in her own name, does not bring the case within the authorities referred to on behalf of the defendant.*

Rule discharged.

GUARDIANS OF CASTLEBAR UNION v. EARL OF LUCAN, GUARDIANS OF WESTPORT UNION v. SAME.—Michaelmas Term, 1848; Hilary Term, 1849.

Poor's Rate—Sect. 65 of 1 & 2 Vict. c. 56—Immediate Lessor—Rate Books not conclusive.

The 65th section of the 1 & 2 Vict. c. 56, enacts, "That the particulars of every rate made for relief of the poor shall be entered in a book, in the form given in the schedule to the act annexed, and the guardians shall, before the same is levied, sign the declaration at foot of the said form, and the said book shall, after the signature of the said declaration, be evidence of the truth of every particular so contained therein."

Actions of debt were brought by guardians of the poor, to recover from the defendant the amount of a rate made upon him, as "immediate lessor" of occupiers of hereditaments of less annual value than £4.

The guardians produced the rate-books at the trial, and relied on them as establishing conclusively the liability of defendant to the rate. Held, that the defendant was at liberty to rebut the statements contained in the rate-books, and to go into evidence for the purpose of showing he was not "immediate lessor" within the meaning of the 1st section of the 6 & 7 Vict. c. 92.

* Perria, J., was absent.

Each of these cases was an action of debt brought by the plaintiffs for the recovery of a poor rate made upon the defendant, under the 6 & 7 Vict. c. 92, s. 1, as "immediate lessor" of the occupiers of rateable hereditaments of less annual value than £4. At the trial before Mr. Baron Leffroy at the Mayo Summer Assizes, 1848, the plaintiffs gave in evidence the rate-books, by which it appeared, that in the Castlebar case, the defendant was rated by name as the "immediate lessor," while, in the Westport case he was rated simply as "immediate lessor," without any name. In the Castlebar case, the plaintiffs relied altogether upon the rate-book as establishing the liability of the defendant; but in the Westport case they went farther, and gave parol evidence to identify the defendant as the "immediate lessor" mentioned in the rate-book. To rebut the statements in the rate-books, the defendant went into evidence to shew that he was not "immediate lessor," proving, in one instance, that by a lease dated in 1825, the defendant had demised the premises in question to a lessee, who had sublet to the occupiers; and, in another, that in 1827, the defendant had let another portion to P. G., as tenant from year to year, at a rent of £6—that the annual value of the entire premises so let to P. G. exceeded £4, but that P. G. had divided the premises between himself and two other occupiers, thereby reducing the annual value of the portion held by each of the occupiers below £4. The plaintiffs objected to the admission of this evidence, upon the ground, that by the statute, the rate-book was made conclusive evidence of every particular contained therein; and, therefore, that no evidence could be given to rebut it. The learned Baron received the evidence, subject to the objection; and, finally, it was consented that a verdict should be given for the plaintiffs in each case, subject to be turned into a verdict for the defendant, in case the court above should be of opinion that the rate-book was not conclusive evidence of the statement therein contained, viz, that the defendant was "immediate lessor" of the occupiers of the hereditaments in respect of which the rate had been made.

Brewster, Q. C., with him Napier, Q. C., and O'Donel, for the plaintiffs.—Whether the rate books are conclusive evidence of the fact, that the defendant is immediate lessor, depends upon the proper construction to be given to the 65th section of the 1 & 2 Vict. c. 56.* If the word evidence in that section means conclusive evidence, the plaintiffs must succeed. It is not, however, necessary to import the word conclusive into the act, because the 107 section† provides, that the rate may be

* Which enacts "that the particulars of every such rate shall be entered in a book, which shall contain an account of every particular set forth at the head of the respective columns in the form given in the second schedule to this act annexed, and the guardians, and other officers, whose duty it may be to make the said rate, shall, before the same is levied, sign the declaration at the foot of the said form; and the said book shall, after the signature of the said declaration, be evidence of the truth of every particular so contained therein."

† "Be it enacted, that the Justices and Assistant Barrister before whom any appeal shall be brought, are hereby altered, the names of persons inserted or struck out; but we submit, if the defendant felt himself aggrieved, he ought to have appealed to the Quarter Sessions, the sole and only tribunal, appointed by the legislature, for the adjudication of the matter,* and that not having done so, he cannot now dispute his liability. The following cases were cited. R. v. Justices of Surrey, (2 T. R. 504); R. v. Skone, (8 East. 514); R. v. Barham, (8 B. & C. 99); Marshall v. Pitman, (2 M. & Sc. 745, S. C. 9 Bing. 595); Shingley v. Surridge, (11 M. & W. 508.)

Fitzgibbon, Q. C., Walker, and Carleton, for the defendant.—Some of the occupiers, held under leases, made prior to 1843, others of them held from year to year, and it is a conceded fact, that the defendant at the trial below, gave evidence to shew he was not immediate lessor within the meaning of the act of parliament. The sole question, therefore, in the case, is, are the rate-books conclusive evidence of the statements contained therein, and to make them so, that word must be imported into the 65th section of the act. No right of appeal is given to the landlord, as to his liability. The 106th section of the 1 & 2 Vict. c. 56, only enables him to appeal as to the amount of the rate, and this right to appeal must be construed strictly. The guardians are not now obliged to make a declaration as to the correctness of the rate. They referred to 43 Eliz. c. 2; s. 6, Eng. Milward v. Caffin, (3 Wm. Bl. 1380); Governors of Bristol Poor v. Wait, (1 Ad. & Ell. 264, S. C. 3 N. & M. 359); per Lord Tenterden, in Brandling v. Barrington, (6 B. & C. 475, per Patterson, J., Res. v. Burrell, (12 Ad. & Ell. 468.)

Napier, Q. C., in reply.—It was the policy of the legislature that all parties connected with the property to be rated should come forward, and give their assistance to have the law carried into effect; that they should be always watching the proceedings, and if names were omitted which ought to have been inserted in the rate-books, or, if the amount of the rate required to be altered, the legislature had appointed the Quarter Sessions as the tribunal for the adjudication of the matter empowered to hear, and finally determine, the matter of such appeal, and to make such order therein as to them shall seem meet; which order shall be final and conclusive upon all parties, and, in case of any appeal against any rate as aforesaid, to order the name of any person interested or concerned in the event of such appeal, and having had notice thereof, as is herein provided, to be inserted in such rate, and to be rated at such sum or sums of money, or to order the name of any such person to be struck out of such rate, or the sum or sums at which any such person is rated therein, to be altered as the said justices and Assistant Barrister shall think right, and such justices and Assistant Barrister, or some proper officer of the court, shall forthwith add to, or alter, the rate accordingly."

* The 106th section enacts, "that if any person shall find himself aggrieved by any rate made under this act, or shall have any material objection to any person being put in or left out of such rate, or to the sum charged on any person therein, it shall be lawful for such person to appeal to any Sessions of the Peace, to be held in the presence of the Assistant Barrister, in and for the county in which such rate shall have been made, within four calendar months next after the cause of complaint shall have arisen."

An ample opportunity was then afforded to the defendant, if there were any mistake, to have had it rectified, and, not having done so, he must now be held liable.

Cwr. adv. vult.

Jan. 30.—The court having this day expressed a wish to have the case further spoken to by one counsel on each side.

O'Donel was heard for the plaintiffs, and in the course of his argument cited the following authorities; Moss v. Lichfield, (8 Scott, N. R. 832); Clarke v. White, (2 Cr. & Dix. Cir. Cas.); Hutchins v. Chambers, (1 Bur. 580); Durrant v. Boys, (6 Term Rep. 880); Cootes v. the Kent Waterworks Company, (7 B. & C. 314); Bonnell v. Brighton, (5 Term R. 182); Reg. v. Justices of Middlesex, (9 Ad. & Ell. 540).

Carleton, for the defendant, was not called on.

BLACKBURNE, C. J.—We cannot find anything in the 1 & 2 Vict. c. 56, which precludes the defendant from disputing his liability to the rate; and are of opinion he was at liberty to rebut the statements contained in the rate-books, and to go into evidence to shew he was not immediate lessor within the meaning of the 6 & 7 Vic. c. 92, s. 1. There must therefore be Judgment for the defendant.

EXCHEQUER OF PLEAS.—MICHAELMAS TERM.

MITCHELL v. BULFIN.

Use and Occupation.—Tenancy under the Court.—Jameson v. Farrer (3 I. Eq. R. 513) considered.

The defendant was declared tenant under the court in a mortgage matter. In the month of December, 1846, on the receiver being discharged, the plaintiff (the mortgagor) distrained the defendant for rent, which the latter paid under the pressure of the distress. In the month of March following, the plaintiff put the defendant out of possession by an injunction, and brought an action for use and occupation for the period intervening between the preceding November and the time of executing the injunction. Held, that such an action was maintainable.

At the period of the letting, the following memorandum was entered in the Master's book:—
"Declare Edward Bulfin tenant to the lands, at £66 per annum, he paying the inheritor for his seed and labour, and getting, in return, compensation for the grass which has been consumed."
Held so conclusive of the nature of the agreement, that plaintiff could not sustain a count for the price and value of a crop bargained and sold.

Assumpsit. The first count of the declaration was for use and occupation of the plaintiff's land. The second count was for the price and value of a crop bargained and sold. The case was tried before the Lord Chief Baron at the sittings after last Trinity Term, when it appeared that a mortgage creditor of the plaintiff's presented a petition and obtained a receiver. The lands were advertised to be let in the matter, and the defendant was declared tenant. At the period when the letting took place, the plaintiff insisted that he was entitled to remuneration for the crop which he had sown. The defendant, on the other hand, contended that he was only entitled to the value of the seed and the labour of sowing it; and, the Master (Littou) being of this opinion, the following memorandum was made by the Master in his book:—"Declare Edward Bulfin tenant to the lands, at £66 per annum, he paying the inheritor for his seed and labour, and getting, in return, compensation for the grass which has been consumed." The defendant entered into possession of the lands in the month of July, 1846. In the month of December following, the receiver was discharged, and immediately afterwards the plaintiff distrained the defendant for a half-year's rent, which the defendant paid under pressure of the distress; and in the month of March following, the plaintiff put the defendant out of possession, by an injunction, and brought this action in use and occupation to recover the rent from the preceding November, and for the value of the crop. Martley, Q.C., with O'Driscoll, on the part of the defendant, asked his lordship for a non-suit on both counts of the declaration; first, because eviction by the landlord in the middle of a gale disentitled him to recover in use and occupation; and, secondly, because the evidence to sustain the second count, as for a crop bargained and sold, was contradicted by the memorandum in the Master's book, which shewed that the agreement was to pay for seed and labour. The Lord Chief Baron non-suited the plaintiff, reserving liberty to have the non-suit set aside, and a verdict entered for the plaintiff.

Fitzgibbon, Q.C., and Short now moved to have the non-suit set aside, and a verdict entered up for the plaintiff. This non-suit cannot stand. There was no tenancy established between these parties; the defendant was bound to surrender possession whenever the receiver was discharged, and the court, in such cases, will apportion the rent, Jameson v. Farrer (3 I. Eq. Rep. 513). The evidence offered upon the second count of the declaration would have entitled us to recover for the crop. We were prepared to prove that it was for the crop, and not for the price of the seed and labour, that the defendant agreed to pay; but the evidence was rejected by his lordship. The Master's book was not conclusive as to the terms; and, even if it were, it is not binding upon us. The custom of the county gives the crop to the outgoing tenant.

Martley, Q.C., and O'Driscoll, contra.—We are entitled to hold this non-suit on both counts of the declaration. Eviction by the landlord in the middle of a half-year, is a complete answer to an action for use and occupation, Smith v. Raleigh (3 Camp. 513). Jameson v. Farrer is clearly distinguishable from this. That was the case of a purchaser, between whom and the tenant there was no privity, and the court decided that the purchaser was entitled to an apportionment of the rent for a broken period. Creed v. Creed (8 I. E. R. 207) is more in point. The Master of the Rolls, in that case, refused to apportion the rent; and the learned Baron who delivered the judgment of the court in Jameson v. Farrer, says, "he is not to be understood as overruling Creed v. Creed." But, assuming the decision in Jameson v. Farrer to be a sound one, it only decides that the court, by force of its equitable jurisdiction, may deal with its own tenants by compelling them to pay rent for a broken period. If, then, the plaintiffs have any remedy in this case, it is extremely clear that an action at law is not the proper proceeding. The plaintiff, it is contended on the other side, stands in the position of the receiver, and is clothed with all the powers which the court gives its officer; but we submit that he has, by his own act, disentitled himself to any remedy which he might have had against the defendant as tenant of the court. It is well settled, that submitting to a distress acknowledges a tenancy, Panton v. Jones (3 Camp. 372). The plaintiff entered upon the defendant's land, and made a distress on the 21st of December, for the rent due on the preceding November. In the notice of distress the plaintiff designates himself as "landlord." As to the second count, the evidence by which the defendant sought to contradict the terms of the memorandum in the Master's book, was by producing a gentleman of the name of Byrne, who alleged that he had written a letter to the plaintiff six days after the letting took place, informing him that it was the crop the defendant was to pay for. That agreement was a binding one, and the evidence offered for the purpose of contradicting it was wholly inadmissible, and it was properly rejected, Clarke v. Royston (13 M. & W. 752).

Short, in reply, relied on Jameson v. Farrer, and insisted that the letter book which contained the copy of what had been written to the plaintiff by his attorney, ought to have been received in evidence.

PER CURIAM.—The plaintiff's fails on that part of his demand which relates to the value of the crop, but is entitled to hold his verdict for the rent. As to the former branch of the case, even if the evidence of Byrne could be received, yet the plaintiff would not be entitled to recover for goods bargained and sold. This was not a contract for the price of the crop, but a qualified letting of the land; and the true evidence of its character was the memorandum entered in the Master's book. As to the other question, the nature of the tenancy under the court is clearly laid down in Jameson v. Farrer. The receiver continues in possession during the continuance of the cause or matter. When the receiver is discharged, the parties are remitted to their original rights, and a letting for seven years pending the cause, means that if the matter terminates before the lapse of that time the tenancy determines, and that being so, the acceptance of the rent afterwards raised the implication that a new tenancy, from year to year, was created, and one inconsistent with the tenancy under the court. That being so, the defendant cannot be held to be a trespasser, but a party holding the land by the sufferance and permission of the plaintiff remitted to his original rights.

Judgment for plaintiff on the 1st count, and for the defendant on the 2nd count.

COURT OF CHANCERY.

BENNETT v. BERNARD, SARGENT v. BERNARD.—
Feb. 13, 1849.

Statute of Limitations—Pendency of Suit.

A judgment creditor cannot avail himself of the pendency of a foreclosure suit, as keeping his debt alive, when it is barred by the Statute of Limitations.

These causes came before the court on a petition of rehearing from the decree of the Lords Commissioners. (Reported, 10 I. E. R. 589.) The facts so far as material to the view taken of the case by the Lord Chancellor, were as follows:—In July, 1811, Samuel Harden filed his bill for an account, foreclosure, and sale of the lands of Derrinboy, against G. Clarke, against whom a judgment now vested in S. M'Gloin had been recovered in Easter Term, 1809, prior to the mortgage on which the suit of Harden v. Clarke was founded. George Clarke was discharged as an insolvent debtor, and subsequently died. After various deaths and changes of interest, the bill in Bennett v. Bernard was filed, praying the account usual in an administration suit, and that it might be taken as a bill supplemental to Harden v. Clarke. In February, 1842, the second bill was filed, praying nearly similar relief. In 1844, a decree was made in these causes, referring it to the Master to take an account of incumbrances and to report priorities. The Master reported J. M. Gloin's judgment a charge on the land. To this the plaintiff excepted, insisting that it had been barred by the Statute of Limitations. The Lords Commissioners having overruled the exception, the plaintiff presented a petition of rehearing.

Christian, Q.C., and Vincent Scully, for the plaintiff, contended that the judgment was barred by the Statute of Limitations, and that there was no such pendency of suit as could prevent its operation. They argued, first, that the suit of Harden v. Clarke, in 1811, and all proceedings in it were, by the events that happened, altogether annihilated; and, secondly, that even if that were not so, that suit was not of such a character as to bring the case within the doctrine of Sterndale v. Hankinson (1 Sim. 393). As to the first point, they said that in 1829 the judgment of 1809 was barred by the statute 8 Geo. 1, c. 4; or, at all events, by the 3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 27—that to take it out of that position, the judgment creditor must shew that the decree of 1844, under which he proved his charge, was a decree in the suit instituted before 1829. That there must be, in fact, a complete continuance of suit—the mere pendency of a suit is not enough. That if a bill is filed for a demand before the statute attaches, and that bill is given up and another filed after the statute attaches, the demand is not saved from the operation of the statute—that the bills filed subsequent to that of Harden v. Clarke were not, in fact, continuations of that suit, and they distinguished supplemental bills from original bills, in the nature of supplemental bills, and they cited Mitford on Pleading, 4th ed. 65, Daniel's Ch. Practice, 1402; Lloyd v. Jones (9 Ves. 37). As to the second point, they argued that the suit of Harden v. Clarke was not such as to give the judgment creditor the benefit of the doctrine laid down in Sterndale v. Hankinson. That Harden v. Clarke was a foreclosure suit, filed against the mortgagor in his lifetime; and although it prayed, of course, for an account of prior incumbrances, it never was a general creditors' suit. That Sterndale v. Hankinson was decided before the 3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 27, and it was most important that this should be borne in mind. The first case decided on the 3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 27, was Berrington v. Evans (1 Y. & C. Ex. Cases, 484), and every word of Lord Abinger's judgment was applicable to the case of the creditors here. They cited on this point Lord St. John v. Boughton (9 Sim. 219); Daniell's Chancery Practice, 2 vol. 1162; Watson v. Birch (15 Sim. 523).

William Smith appeared for a defendant in the same interest with the plaintiff, and cited Grenfell v. Girdleston (2 Y. & C. Ex. Cases, 662).

Maley, for the judgment creditor, contended that the plaintiff who sought the benefit of the suit of 1811, could not repudiate it, and that the judgment creditor was entitled to the benefit of that suit—that if the suit is one in which the creditors can get relief, that is sufficient, and the court will presume that he lies by, and does not institute a suit himself, because he can get such relief under that which is pending. He cited Birmingham v. Burke (9 Ir. Eq. 81); Barton v. Tattersall (1 Russ. & Mylne, 237).

LORD CHANCELLOR.—This case remains to be disposed of on one of the exceptions taken in respect of a judgment vested in a person named M'Gloin. That judgment appears by the report to have been obtained in Easter Term, 1809. It has never been revived or redocketed, and there is nothing to take it out of the Statute of Limitations if it be not supported by the pleadings in this cause. I say in this cause, because, although there was a good deal of argument before the Commissioners founded on the reasoning, that in truth the case then, and now at hearing is a recent one, and not connected with the original suit, in the case before me that point was not much pressed in argument; and I think it now admitted, that whatever was the original suit, it is now brought down before me. It appears that in 1811 that original suit commenced, but to it this judgment creditor was not a party. The bill was filed by a mortgagee for foreclosing the interest pledged in mortgage to him. At that time the connusor of the judgment was alive, and he lived many years afterwards, and that cause remained dormant till the deaths of the mortgagor and mortgagee. In the year 1841 proceedings were taken, under which it is contended that the original cause is restored, and the judgment creditor entitled to the benefit of that suit as against the Statute of Limitations. Such seems to have been the opinion of the Commissioners, who decided not only that the cause of 1811 was brought down to the present time, but that it gave the judgment creditor those rights for which he now contends. Those rights are, that he is entitled to consider that cause his own, for his benefit, and for the recovery of his demand.

Inasmuch as it is substantially necessary for the recovery of his demand to prevent the bar of the 40th section of the Statute of Limitations, on which there has been so much discussion, it is necessary to advert to that clause, in order to see what must be sustained to give the creditor the benefit of that suit. [His lordship here read the 3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 27, s. 40.] It has been established, that that relates to actions brought after the act was passed; but it has been a question whether it does where an action or suit was then pending. It is now decided, that an ordinary creditor's suit, instituted on behalf of the plaintiff and all others who shall come in and prove, has the effect, not only of keeping alive the plaintiff's own demands, but those of all the other creditors who come in under the decree. That is decided in the well known case of Sterndale v. Hankinson (1 Sim. 399); and it is important to see what view was taken by Sir Anthony Hart, and the principle on which he held that doctrine. That case was before the late statute, and is so far open to observation. The marginal note of that case is, "A bill filed by one creditor, on behalf of himself and all others, will prevent the Statute of Limitations from coming against any of the creditors who come in under the decree." The bill in that suit was filed on the 5th of May, 1812, on behalf of the plaintiffs and all other creditors of George Hankinson deceased, he having died the 27th June, 1810. On the 14th of April, 1818, the usual decree was made. The Master reported against several claims, on the ground that the testator having died in 1810, and the decree not being until eight years afterwards, the claimants were barred of any remedy. To this report three of the creditors excepted. In the course of the argument, the Vice-Chancellor observed, "This is not a bill filed simply by A., but by A. on behalf of himself and all other creditors. It is, in fact, a bill by all the creditors." In his judgment, he says, "The other fallacy is, that the statute bars the suit in Equity, which it does not; but as courts of Equity will not entertain stale demands, they have thought proper to adopt the limit of six years in analogy to the statute, and pleas of the statute are admitted in these courts on analogy only, but when the circumstances of a case are such as to make it against conscience to apply the rule founded on this analogy, the court will not enforce it. It has been said, that if a creditor files a bill on behalf of himself and others, and permits it to be dismissed before decree, the statute would apply. I dissent from this proposition; for I think the court would protect a creditor against an accident of that kind." "Suits have been instituted in which creditors, in consequence of the deaths of parties, and a variety of other circumstances, have been unable to procure a decree for two or three years, although every reasonable diligence may have been used; and if the schedules to most of the reports made in suits of this nature were looked through, it would be found, by comparison of dates, that two-thirds of the creditors might have been shut out by a strict application of the rule." I entertain no doubt that every creditor has, after the filing of the bill, an inchoate interest in the suit, to the extent of its being considered as a demand, and to prevent his being shut out because the plaintiff has not obtained a decree within the six years; and, therefore, I am clearly of opinion that this exception must be allowed." That case came under consideration in Berrington v. Evans, (1 Y. & C. 484, Ex.) where the court took a distinction in consequence of the party coming in stating his ignorance of the pendency of the proceedings, the court held that he could not be considered as lying by in consequence of their pendency. The Irish cases go on the same principle, and do not seem to carry it further. The first is O'Kelly v. Bodkin, (2 I. E. R. 361). That was a judgment creditor's bill, not filed by the plaintiff on behalf of himself and all others, and so distinguishable from Sterndale v. Hankinson, but the court held that the prayer of the bill being that of a bill on behalf of all creditors, was the same in effect. Woulfe, C. B., says—"But I am of opinion, and I believe the rest of the court concur with me, that the creditor coming in under the decree in this cause was entitled to the benefit of the suit as fully and effectually as if he were the party who had filed the bill in the first instance. He adopted the suit, it became his, and it is, therefore, so far as he is concerned, to be considered as having been commenced before the period to which the statute applies, being pending at the time it was passed." He then refers to Sterndale v. Hankinson, and to Berrington v. Evans, which he says, instead of shaking Sterndale v. Hankinson, rather corroborates it, and goes on—"The principle of that decision is, that where a bill is filed by one creditor on behalf of himself and other creditors, and the others come in under the decree, it is reasonable to presume that they were lying by, seeing that there was a suit in progress, in the course of which they would be enabled to come in and prove their demands, and it would be impolitic to lay down a rule which would make it necessary for each creditor to institute a separate suit, or commence a separate action for the recovery of his particular demand," and he then refers to, and dismisses, the distinction that that was not in form a bill on behalf of the other creditors. Birmingham v. Burke, (9 I. E. R. 86.) was also an administration suit. There Sir Edward Sugden, speaking of Berrington v. Evans, says, "It does not impeach the previous decision of Sterndale v. Hankinson, nor does it, I think, prevent a creditor from coming in under another creditor's bill, filed for the general benefit of creditors when his demand would not have been barred had he himself filed the bill, and he comes in according to the decree and course of the court." The only other case I shall mention at present is Joyce v. Joyce, (10 I. E. R. 129). It was there held that the bill in that cause was one on which a creditor might rely as being a party to it. In considering the case here, the one question is, What the bill filed in 1811 was? At that time the debtor was alive; no statute had been passed making judgments a charge upon land, and there was no direct relief for a judgment creditor in a court of Equity. If the debtor's estate were equitable, by that circumstance the converse was without remedy at law, and might therefore come into this court, but he had properly no direct relief here in the life time of the conusor. This bill is the bill of a mortgagee; it prays an account of what is due to him; it no doubt prays an account of incumbrances, and the conusee might come in to prove his debt, but he has no priority with the plaintiff. It was not till 1841 that a bill was filed which the judgment creditor might himself have filed. Now, the language of the cases demonstrate this principle, that though the words of the act do not refer to the proof of demands under a bill, it must be at least in the nature of a bill for the recovery of the demand in question. The mortgagee's suit was not for the recovery of the judgment creditor's demand; he could not have instituted that suit, nor could any one else have filed the bill on his behalf. No doubt the bill of 1841 was one of which he might have the benefit if he were in proper time; that was for general administration, but then the judgment had been long barred. The case of Brown v. Lynch (9 I. E. R. 316,) seems to go on this view of the case, and takes a distinction between a mortgage suit and an administration suit, and the same distinction is taken in the argument of O'Kelly v. Bodkin, where counsel says—"The bill, although not filed expressly on behalf of creditors generally, was to all intents and purposes a creditor's bill; the whole frame of the suit was essentially different from that of a mortgage suit, and the prayer was plainly that of a creditor's bill." That was in argument, but, as I said, the case of Brown v. Lynch (9 I. E. R. 316,) went on the same principle. The original bill in that cause was filed in 1815 for foreclosure and sale. Pending the suit the defendant died, and on the 3d November, 1829, a bill of revivor and supplement was filed against the real and personal representatives of the mortgagor, which prayed the usual accounts of his real freehold and personal estates, and of his debts. A decree to account was obtained, and on the 20th of January, 1837, the applicant filed a charge on foot of a judgment of 1810, and the court gave her the benefit of the suit, expressly taking that distinction, and proceeding on the principle that the bill of 1829 gave her her rights, and not the former suit. Baron Pennefather says—"The suit, so far as it is one of which the general creditors could take advantage, was instituted in 1829," and further, "I therefore am of opinion that this question must be considered as if the applicant had duly proceeded on the charge originally filed by her, as if the proofs originally made by her had been given in due time in support of her charge. That brings the matter to the consideration of what would have been the result of a charge filed by a judgment creditor in 1837, under a decree in a suit instituted in 1829, which charge had been duly proceeded upon, when the judgment upon which that charge had been founded, had not been barred by any statute in force in Ireland antecedently to the 3 & 4 W. 4, c. 27." That bill of 1829 was exactly analogous to the case now before me, but this judgment had been barred before 1842, when the second bill in this cause was filed. Whatever may be the ultimate decision on this doctrine, I am not required to carry it so far as this case, which is not even within the requirements of the decisions in this country. I am not quite sure, however, that Sterndale v. Hankinson, if re-considered by the House of Lords, would be departed from, and that the analogy of it would not be followed. In the case of Watson v. Birch, (15 Sim. 528,) the Vice-Chancellor, after remarking that Sterndale v. Hankinson was decided before the statute, says—"As I have expressed it to be my opinion that the statute prevents any proceeding being taken to enforce a judgment against either land or personal estate after the expiration of the time limited by it, it seems to me that the matter was concluded, unless there was something in the bill filed in 1817, or in the proceedings upon it, which prevented the statute from operating. I cannot, however, make out that there was anything that could have that effect." He then goes into the consideration of the question in that case, into which it is not necessary for me to follow him. I may consider the cases in this country not to be disturbed here, but by allowing this claim I should be carrying them beyond their principle, and introducing a new exception into the statute.

Chancery Hearing Book, CL, p. 125.

ROLLS COURT.—Jan. 29.

IN THE MATTER OF THE ACT TO FACILITATE THE SALE OF INCUMBERED ESTATES IN IRELAND, EX PARTE HUGH KENNEDY, Petitioner;

R. S. KENNEDY, Respondent.

Incumbered Estates Act—Primary Fund—Sale—Suppression of Material Facts.

H. K. being seized in fee of the lands of B., had charged same with certain incumbrances, and was also indebted by bond and simple contract debts. H. K. being also tenant for life of certain other lands, including the Burgage lands of C., and J. K. tenant in tail in remainder. By deed of 1828, providing that the lands of B. should not be sold, but should be preserved in the family, all the estates were conveyed to a trustee, upon trust as to the lands of B.—subject to a sum to be raised by mortgage—to pay the rents to H. K. for life, remainder to J. K. in fee, and as to the residue of the estates, upon trust to sell same for payment of H. K.'s debts and incumbrances. All said last mentioned lands were sold, except the Burgage lands of C. H. K., the tenant for life, presented a petition under the Incumbered Estates Act, praying for a sale of B. Held that the Burgage lands of C. being the primary fund, they remaining unsold, the lands of B. could not be sold in violation of the deed of 1828. Also H. K., the tenant for life, having by deed of 1844 parted with his life estate, and not being an owner within the act, was not entitled to present a petition as such.

This was a petition for the sale of lands under the Incumbered Estates Act, and from the verifying affidavit it appeared that by indenture of settlement bearing date the 12th day of Nov. 1799, and made upon the marriage of the petitioner, Hugh Kennedy, with Grace Dorothea Hughes, the lands of Ballybeen and Carrowreagh, situate in Dundonald, were conveyed to trustees to the use of John Kennedy, the father of petitioner, for life, with remainder to petitioner for his life, with remainder to his first and other sons in tail male, and also a trust term was thereby limited for raising £2,000 for younger children, and by said indenture the lands of Craigavad were also settled to the use of petitioner for life, with remainder to the first and other sons of said marriage, in tail male, also the lands of Cashel, in the county Tipperary, were limited to the use of Thomas Hughes (father of the said Grace Dorothea,) for life, remainder to the said Grace Dorothea for life, remainder to trustees for a term of 450 years, to raise £2,000 for the younger children of said marriage, with remainder to the first and other sons in tail male. That the marriage between the petitioner and said Grace Dorothea was shortly after solemnized, and there was issue thereof John Kennedy, the eldest son, and several other children. That previous to the 1st of October, 1828, Grace Dorothea died, having survived the said Thomas Hughes. That by indenture of the 25th of December, 1807, petitioner being seized in fee of the lands of Ballycultra, or Cultra, conveyed certain part of same to the use of himself for life, with remainder to the said John Kennedy, his son, in tail male, with like remainders to the other sons of petitioner. That said John Kennedy attained his age of 21 years in the year 1823, and that in 1824 recoveries were suffered of Ballybeen, Carrowreagh, (the Dundonald estate,) Craigavad, and the Burgage lands of Cashel, and same were settled subject to such uses as petitioner and John Kennedy should appoint. That upon the second marriage of petitioner in 1824, the lands of Ballybeen and Carrowreagh, (the Dundonald estate,) were conveyed to trustees upon trust that John Kennedy might receive an annuity of £400 during the joint lives of himself and his father, and subject thereto—after securing a jointure of £500 per annum to Sophia Jane, his said second wife—to such uses as said petitioner and John Kennedy should jointly appoint, and, in default of appointment, to petitioner for life, remainder to John Kennedy in fee, and the sum of £1,000 was thereby charged on said lands as a portion for the younger children of said second marriage. That by indenture of the 1st of October, 1828, reciting said several matters, and that petitioner was then seized in fee, amongst other estates, of part of the lands of Cultra, not comprised in the deed of 1807, and the Hollywood mill, and had charged same by mortgages and other incumbrances, and was indebted by bond and simple contract debts to a considerable amount, and had proposed to said John Kennedy to join him in selling Ballybeen and Carrowreagh (the Dundonald estate) and the Burgage lands of Cashel, and had also proposed to sell the Hollywood mill and other lands; and that the produce of such sales, and also a sum of money to be raised by mortgage, as hereinafter provided, should be applied towards the payment of said debts and incumbrances, and that petitioner proposed to settle the residue of the estates, of which he was then seized in fee, consisting of Cultra, and its various sub-denominations, upon said John Kennedy, subject to such of the debts and incumbrances affecting same as should remain unpaid by the produce of such sale; and that the said John Kennedy, considering it more advantageous to preserve Cultra, &c., in the family than to suffer same to be sold, had agreed to said proposal. Accordingly, by the said indenture, the Dundonald and Cashel estates, and the Hollywood mill, and other lands, were conveyed to a trustee, upon trust, to sell same, the produce of such sale and the rents in the meantime to be applied, in the first place, in payment of the expenses attending same, then in discharge of the incumbrances affecting the lands so sold, the residue in discharge of the incumbrances affecting the lands whereof petitioner was seized in fee, and his judgment, bond and specialty debts; and the lands of Cultra, &c., were conveyed to said trustee, subject to so much of the debts affecting same as should remain unpaid, upon trust, to pay certain annuities charged thereon and subject thereto, to raise a sum not exceeding £40,000, to be applied in payment of said charges and incumbrances, the residue of the rents to be paid to petitioner for life, with remainder to said John Kennedy, his heirs and assigns. After the execution of said indenture, the Dundonald estate and Hollywood mill were sold, and the proceeds applied according to the provisions thereof. In the month of December, 1839, John Kennedy died, having, by his will, devised all his estate in said lands to his brother, Robert Stewart Kennedy, the respondent. The affidavit of the petitioner then stated that frequent attempts had been made to sell the Burgage lands of Cashel, but without effect, no offer having been made for same. That petitioner, as owner under the Incumbered Estates Act, was desirous of selling the lands of Cultra. That a bill was filed by John Kennedy and James Barnett, as assignees of part of the sum of £2,000 charged on the Burgage lands of Cashel, but said parties consented that this petition should be presented.

Hughes, Q. C., and D. McCausland for the petitioner.

Martley, Q. C., and C. Dobbs for the respondent.—This petition is in violation of the deed of 1828, the object of which was to preserve Ballycultra in the family. The Cashel estate is the primary fund for payment of these incumbrances, and must be sold in the first instance. Also, it appears, that by a deed dated in 1844, Hugh Kennedy parted with his life estate; therefore, not being an owner within the meaning of the act, he is not entitled to present this petition.

Jan. 29.—MASTER OF THE ROLLS.—In this case a petition has been presented by Hugh Kennedy, under the second section of the Incumbered Estates Act, for a sale of the lands of Ballycultra, for payment of the incumbrances affecting same. The petitioner is a tenant for life under a settlement bearing date the 1st day of October, 1828, and made between the petitioner and Sophia Kennedy of the first part, John Kennedy, therein described as the son and heir apparent of the petitioner of the second part, and several other persons of the third and fourth parts. From the recitals contained in that deed, it appears that by the settlement made upon the marriage of the petitioner with his first wife, and dated the 12th of November, 1799, the lands of Ballybeen and Carrowreagh, called the Dundonald estate, and Craigavad, were settled upon petitioner for life, with remainder to his first and other sons in tail male. There were other limitations of the same lands, which are not now material to state. Other lands, the property of Thomas Hughes, were also settled under this deed of 1799. This property, called the Burgage lands of Cashel, was situate in the county Tipperary, and, as appears by the schedule annexed to the petition, is of the yearly value of £966. 18s. 10d. The petitioner also, upon the death of his father, became seized in fee of the lands of Ballygraney, Ballykeel, and other lands. The said deed of 1828, after reciting these matters, stated that the petitioner was indebted, by mortgage, bond and simple contract debts, to a large amount, and that it was expedient to make some provision for payment of such debts. That Hugh Kennedy applied to his son, John Kennedy, to join him in selling the Dundonald estate and the Burgage lands of Cashel, in Tipperary, and H. Kennedy proposed to sell part of the lands of which he was seized in fee, and that a sum to be raised by mortgage as thereby provided, should be applied in payment of these debts, and also in payment of bond and simple contract debts of Hugh Kennedy, and the petitioner proposed to settle the residue of the estates of which he was seized in fee, consisting of the lands of Ballycultra—except the house and demesne, which had been settled on the eldest son by a deed of £1807—subject only to such of the debts as should remain unpaid by the produce of such sale. The deed then recited that John Kennedy being desirous of preserving the lands of Bullycultra in the family, had agreed to the proposal so made. Accordingly the settled estates, and the Cashel property, were conveyed to a trustee and his heirs, upon trust to sell the same, and, in the meantime, to receive the rents; the proceeds of the sale and the rents to be applied in payment of the necessary expenses, and then to pay off the incumbrances affecting the lands so to be sold, and the residue to be applied in payment of the charges affecting the lands of which the petitioner was seized in fee at the time of the execution of the deed of 1828, and also of the other debts of the petitioner; then follows a conveyance, by the petitioner, of Bullycultra—subject to such debts as should remain unpaid—to the trustee and his heirs, upon trust, to raise by sale or mortgage a sum not exceeding £40,000, and to pay the surplus rents to petitioner for his life, and a jointure was thereby provided for his wife, then to the use of J. Kennedy, his heirs and assigns. The trustee under the deed of 1828 acted in performance of the trusts of it, and the lands of Ballykeel, Carrowreagh, and Holywood were sold accordingly. J. H. Kennedy died in 1839, and Robert Stewart Kennedy—who opposes this application—under the provisions of J. Kennedy's will, became entitled to the property so settled by the deed of 1828. The petition is to sell Ballycultra, the object of the deed of 1828 being that these lands should be preserved in the family. That arrangement was entered into for full and valuable consideration from J. Kennedy. In order to understand the amount of this consideration it is to be observed when J. Kennedy executed the deed of 1828, he was entitled in remainder to the settled estates, which were then only subject to the sum of £4,000. The portion of the settled estates sold after 1828 produced £38,000, the rental of the part unsold amounted to £966 per annum. The estates settled by the deed of 1799 on J. Kennedy were worth £3,000 per annum, subject only to £4,000, so that John Kennedy, as an equivalent for the lands of Ballycultra, and to prevent their alienation, gave up the lands which had been settled on him by the deed of 1799. This petition is now presented in direct violation of that deed of 1828, and the petitioner seeks to sell Ballycultra to pay his own debts, leaving unsold the lands of Cashel, which produce £966 per annum, and which, by the deed of 1828, were to be the primary fund for payment of those debts. The first question is, whether the act compels the court to assist the petitioner in so doing. I do not consider that the court is bound by anything in that act to do so. By the tenth section the court is at liberty to direct the Master to inquire "whether any such incumbrances or charges shall affect any land or estate other than the land or lease which shall have been contracted, or be desired to be sold, and whether such other land or estate shall be liable in priority, or in equal degree or in posteriority." And the 11th section directs that all the laws, rules, orders, &c., in force with respect to proceedings in suits for foreclosure and redemption, not inconsistent with the provisions of this act, shall apply to proceedings under it, so far as circumstances shall admit. It is plain if this were a plenary suit for a sale of the lands of Ballycultra, the court would direct those lands to be sold which were the primary fund, and the 11th section of the act shews that this court is not to take a different course upon this summary proceeding. I am of opinion that this petition is unsustainable, for it is framed with the intent of getting rid of this deed of 1828. It is also unsustainable on other grounds—It appears that by a deed of the 13th April, 1844, and which was registered on the 6th of July following, that the petitioner, in consideration of the sum of £1956, conveyed to one John Kennedy all his rights to the rents and profits of these lands, and appointed John Kennedy, his attorney, to receive these rents. Thus he is not an owner within the second section of the act, and has no right to present this petition. This objection appearing conclusive, it was suggested to the court that John Kennedy, to whom all the interest had been conveyed, was only a trustee, and that there was an unregistered contemporaneous deed of trust under the provisions of which the petitioner is interested, and is entitled to present this petition, being an owner within the act. I called for this deed which was not produced, and having postponed giving judgment upon the case, a copy of this deed was sent without any date, or the names of the witnesses annexed. It is endorsed as bearing date the 30th of April, 1844, and is not of equal date with the registered deed, and there is no affidavit verifying this deed of trust. By the 7th section of this act every petition must set forth the estate or interest of the petitioner in such land or lease, and the uses or limitations, and the trusts, if any, to which the land or lease stands limited or settled, notwithstanding which the petitioner has suppressed in his petition these two deeds of 1844, in violation of the terms of the statute, and only produced the deed of trust when the court was about to give judgment on the petition. I will dismiss this petition with costs, without prejudice, however, to the presenting of a new petition which shall not suppress material facts. It was contended that this court was bound to direct a reference under the 10th section of the act, and that if the Master so report, the court could direct a sale of the lands of Cashel. In answer to this, it would be sufficient to say that is not the case made by the petition, but the answer is conclusive, that the legal estate in Ballycultra, and the other lands, is vested in the trustees of the deed of 1828, and by the registered deed of 1844, the petitioner has parted with all the rest of his estate in the lands. I cannot enter into the inquiry as to the effect of the trust deed of equal date, which has been produced; that was not referred to in the petition, which was in direct violation of the 7th section of the act, and these facts have been improperly suppressed. I will not offer any opinion as to what the effect of this deed may be if a petition properly framed is presented, seeking to sell in accordance with the trusts of the deed of 1828, and if it sets forth the important provisions of the two deeds of 1844. If the General Orders had been published when this petition was presented, these deeds could not have been suppressed without a violation of the oath which is required upon the presentation of every petition, and this shews the necessity of that provision. I think there is matter upon the face of these documents sufficient to establish that this suppression was intentional, and the petitioner was not aware that the respondent's solicitor would have searched the registry. I will dismiss this petition with costs, without prejudice to the petitioner, if so advised, to present another petition.

BESSONET v. WALLER.—Feb. 12, 14.

Practice—Receiver—Costs of Accounting—Poundage.

Mr. J.F. Waller moved, that the Master in this cause might be at liberty to allow the receiver his fees and costs, the Master having disallowed same, the account not having been passed within the time limited by the General Order. (Master of the Rolls.—This is not a motion, of course.) There is a consent.

MASTER OF THE ROLLS.—I cannot act upon this consent, it is not regular; and, in consequence of the very many breaches of this General Order which have occurred, in future I shall adopt a course which, I hope, will have the effect of checking them. From the neglect of their solicitors, receivers are frequently placed in the embarrassing position of losing their poundage; and, although upon such applications I may give a receiver his poundage, if the Master thinks fit to allow it, I will uniformly disallow the costs.

Feb. 14.—On this day, Mr. Waller having again moved upon a consent signed by all the parties, the Master of the Rolls made the order in the terms of the consent.

EQUITY EXCHEQUER.

WHITELAW v. SANDYS.—Feb. 15.

Receiver—Distress—Injunction.

Where a tenant of the court, relying on a technical legal irregularity, has replevied goods distrained by a receiver, the court will restrain the replevin suit, even though the receiver has voluntarily taken steps in it, and direct an account of the rent due to be taken by its own officer.

In this case it appeared that a tenant of lands in the custody of the court had replevied goods distrained by the receiver, and it was admitted that the ground of replevin was an irregularity in the notice of distress. In the replevin suit the receiver had entered a rule to declare, and considering that he was irregular in so doing, had tendered the costs of the rule to the tenant, who refused to receive same. A conditional order had been obtained some time previous for staying the suit, and Tuthill now moved that it should be made absolute. He cited Perce v. Minors, (8 I. E. R. 111); Aston v. Heron, (2 Myl. & K. 390; and Smith on Receivers, 148,) and stated that Richards, B., who had previously heard the case, had some doubts as to the propriety of the court interfering.

O'Callaghan, contra.—The court should not interfere in a case of replevin. All the cases cited were cases of irregularity committed, or authority exceeded by the receiver, except the case in 8 I. E. R., there no one appeared for the tenants, and those cases were cited as if applicable to replevin. If the officer chooses to have recourse to a legal remedy, he should take the consequences, especially as he has himself taken the first step after the replevin. At any rate the sureties should be declared free from liability.

PENNEFATHER, B.—So I am inclined to think, and that is the only difficulty I have, for I have but little hesitation, on the other grounds, in directing the replevin suit to be stayed. At the same time, on reflection, I do not see what injury they would sustain, as their bond is only to answer the result of the replevin suit, and cannot be affected by the result of the reference. Let the replevin suit be stayed until further order, and let it be referred to the Remembrancer to report whether any, and what, rent was due at the time of the distress; this order to be without prejudice to any question as to the liability of the sureties in the replevin suit, or as to the costs of the said replevin suit, or the costs of this motion.

COMMON PLEAS.—HILARY TERM.

WILLDRIDGE v. CLARKE.—Jan. 30.

Practice—Action of Covenant—Bill of Particulars.

The court will compel the plaintiff to furnish a bill of particulars in an action of covenant, where the breaches alleged are numerous, and of a general character.

Action of covenant. The breaches of covenant alleged to have been committed by the defendant extended over a space of more than six years, and were set out in the declaration as follows:—"That the said defendant, to wit, on the 1st day of July, in the year of our Lord, 1842, and at divers other times from thence hitherto, did prevent and obstruct the plaintiff's tenant and tenants, or followers, from free ingress, egress, and regress into, out of, and through a certain passage," &c., in the words of the covenant.

O'Leary moved, "That the plaintiff do stop proceedings in this cause until she furnish the defendant with a bill of particulars, specifying the said alleged breaches, and the several times when they were committed, setting out the respective days, or, at least the respective weeks, on or in which they were committed, and the name and names of the plaintiff's tenant and tenants, or followers, who were prevented by the defendant from free ingress, &c., and also the means whereby the obstruction, or obstructions, complained of in the declaration were caused, and whether the same took place in the night time or in the day time." Scarlet v. the Corporation of Dublin (1 Law Rec. N. S. 205).

Hobart, contra.—This application cannot be granted. Scarlet v. the Corporation of Dublin was in assumpsit, a form of action in which a full bill of particulars is required. (Jackson, J.—Yes, and in covenant too.) The practice of the court is altered since Scarlet v. the Corporation of Dublin. (Ball, J.—The alteration has been, that the courts are now exceedingly liberal in granting applications of this nature.) We cannot furnish the defendant with all the particulars he seeks. (Doherty, C. J.—How is it possible for the defendant to go to trial upon the vague statement contained in your declaration? You must furnish him with the best information you can.) In Burke v. Gogarty (Batty's R. 218), the court says, "A vast deal of abuse might arise from obtaining bills of particulars in such cases, with a view to non-suiting the plaintiff at the trial." (Jackson, J.—There the declaration was very special, and was itself, in effect, a bill of particulars.) In Soutter v. Hitchcock (5 Dowl. P. C. 724), which was an action for breach of a covenant to repair, an application similar to the present was refused. (Doherty, C. J.—The defendant there had only to walk from room to room of the house for full particulars.) Burke v. Chitty (3 Chitty's Prac. 614, note b).

DOHERTY, C. J.—None of these cases touch the present. The distinction is abundantly plain.

Motion granted without costs.

EXCHEQUER OF PLEAS.—HILARY TERM.

JEFFREYS v. EVANS.

Agreement—Stamp.

A. had been allotted shares in a railway, which he had sold as scrip, but which had, nevertheless, been registered in his name in the books of the company. The real holder subsequently sold them to B., who sold them to C.; and B. then applied to A. to transfer them to C., by a deed according to the provisions of the act. A. executed a deed of transfer, which he delivered to B., receiving the following written undertaking:—"I have received the deed, on condition of having it executed by C., and registered." At this time, calls amounting to more than £20 had been made on the shares, which, by the provisions of 8 Vic. c. 16, s. 16, should be paid before registering the deed. An action having been brought for a breach of the undertaking.

Held, that it did not require a stamp.

This was an action of assumpsit, brought to recover damages for breach of an agreement to procure the execution of a deed. The case had been tried before J. Moore, at the Cork Spring Assizes, 1848; and on the trial it appeared that five shares in the Cork and Bandon Railway Company had been allotted to the plaintiff, who had sold them as scrip—that in consequence of the real holder's neglecting to claim them, they had been registered as the plaintiff's in the books of the company, and had subsequently come into the possession of the defendant, who sold them to one Greer. As the plaintiff still continued the registered owner of the shares, it became necessary for the defendant, in order to complete the transfer to Greer, to procure the plaintiff's execution of a regular deed of conveyance, according to the provisions of the 8 Vic. c. 16, s. 16. The defendant accordingly had a deed of transfer prepared, and presented it to the law agent of the plaintiff, who procured the execution of it by the plaintiff, but then, at first, refused to part with it until he should see it executed by Greer and registered. Subsequently, however, he gave it to the defendant, on receiving from him the following undertaking, indorsed on a copy of the deed:—"I have received the original deed of transfer from Mr. H., on condition of having it executed by Mr. Greer, and registered accordingly." At this time, calls amounting to more than £20 on the five shares, had been made, which, by 8 Vic. c. 16, s. 16,* must be paid previous to the registration of the deed. The defendant neither procured the execution of the

* "No shareholder shall be entitled to transfer any share after any call shall have been made in respect thereof, until he shall have paid such call, nor until he shall have paid all calls for the time being due on every share held by him."

deed by Greer, nor its registration; whereby the plaintiff remained liable to pay, and was actually compelled to pay calls amounting, in the whole, to £92, for which amount a verdict passed in his favour, on the third count of his declaration, which set out the above facts. At the trial, the defendant objected to the reception in evidence of the undertaking above mentioned, for want of a stamp, but the learned judge overruled the objection, reserving the point, however. There were other objections made to the verdict, which it is unnecessary to notice, the judgment of the court not turning on them. In April, 1848, a conditional order to set aside the verdict had been obtained, and now,

J. D. Fitzgerald, Q.C., moved that the order might be made absolute. This agreement plainly requires a stamp. A stamp is required on all agreements, the matter whereof shall be of the value of £20; the subject matter of the present contract is either the shares or the deed, and they are both of more value than £20; and we are at liberty to prove that by evidence, though it may not appear on the agreement itself. Moreover, this may be considered a contract to indemnify the plaintiff against the past and subsequent calls on the shares, and, as they amount to more than £20, a stamp would be necessary. Counsel cited Wrigley v. Smith (5 B. & Ad. 1117); Shepherd v. Whible (8 Car. & P. 534); Orford v. Cole (2 Stark. 351); Baldwin v. Alsager (13 M. & W. 365).

Lane in support of verdict.—This cannot be said to be a contract of indemnity: no doubt the execution of the deed by Greer, and its registration, would indemnify us against some of the calls; but the agreement with the defendant has nothing to do with the consequences of the execution of the deed: it was not from him but from Greer the indemnity was to come. The damage since accruing to us does not place a value on the subject matter of this contract, which consists of the delivery of a deed on one side, and an undertaking on the other to have it executed. See Morgan v. Amos, (2 Man. & Ry., 180); Latham v. Rutley, (1 Ry. & M. 13); Chadwick v. Sills, (1 Ry. & M. 15); see Lefroy v. Cox, (6 L. Rec. N. S., 25); Fetham v. Cartwright, (7 Scott, 695.)

Herrick, on same side, was not called on.

Jos. H. Reeves in reply.—Unless from this contract there was an obligation on us to pay the calls due on these shares the plaintiff had no right to recover; and if there was, then this must be considered clearly a contract to indemnify the plaintiff against the payment of so much money, and, therefore, to require a stamp. The plaintiff, at the time of the contract, was liable to pay the calls; and by the 16th section of the Companies' Clauses Consolidation Act, they must be paid before the deed was registered; if, therefore, this is considered an absolute contract by the defendant to procure registration, at all events it must be held to be an undertaking to pay so much money for the plaintiff, in other words to indemnify him to an amount exceeding £20. In this view the value of it is clearly measurable, and has been sufficiently shown in evidence.

Pigot, C.B.—In this case it has been urged on the part of the defendant that the agreement, which formed the substantial ground of action, should not have been received in evidence as it was not stamped. The Stamp Act provides that agreements in writing shall not be received in evidence unless stamped, "when the matter thereof shall be of the value of £20." What, then, is the matter of this agreement? It is not a contract to pay calls on shares, but simply an undertaking, in consideration of the delivery of a deed by one party that the other shall procure its execution. How can that be said to be a matter of the value of £20, or how can any value in money be set upon it? The damages resulting from the breach of the contract have nothing to do with its value. In the case of Orford v. Cole the jury assessed the damages resulting from the breach of contract at £7000; and yet the court held that the contract which was an agreement to marry, did not require a stamp, there being no value assignable to the subject matter, if it had been fulfilled. So, likewise, in the case of contracts, by carriers of goods, neither the value of the goods, nor the damage resulting from their delay or miscarriage, is taken into account in setting a value on the matter of the contract; the application of the stamp act is determined entirely by the amount of hire to be paid for the carriage of the goods. The same principles will apply in this case. Here, at the time of the contract, a sum of money was payable in respect of shares, of which the defendant was the owner, and which he wished to have transferred to Greer; the plaintiff, being a necessary party to such a transfer, was induced by the defendant to deliver a deed, on an undertaking from the defendant that Greer should execute it, an agreement which the defendant has failed to perform. Here is nothing on one side but a promise to take some trouble, and on the other the delivery of a deed; surely no value in money can be set on the matter of such a contract. All the cases shew that the damages subsequently inflicted on the parties by the non-performance of the contract, are not to be taken into account in determining on the application of the stamp act. We therefore consider this agreement does not come within its provisions, and that the ruling of the learned judge, and the consequent verdict, were correct.

LEWIS, B., concurred.

COURT OF CHANCERY.—Feb. 26.

BELL v. AHEARNE.

Collateral Security—Policy of Assurance.

A mortgagee is not bound to account for the sums paid to him on foot of a policy effected in Ireland, on the life of his debtor, when the premiums have been paid from his own moneys, and there is no contract between mortgagees and mortgagor on the subject.

This was a redemption bill. The plaintiff, by his bill and at the bar, sought for special directions with regard to sums paid by the Standard Assurance Company, on foot of a policy which had been effected in Cork by the defendant, the mortgagee, on the life of E. Bell, who had joined in the mortgage for the better securing the debt. The plaintiff stated that the premiums had been paid, according to a contract between mortgagees and mortgagor, out of the moneys of the mortgagor. This case not having been established in evidence, the question turned upon the general doctrine.

F. Fitzgerald, Q.C., for the plaintiff, (with him Collins and Maley).—The question is, whether, there being a policy on the life of the debtor, and the creditor effecting the policy being paid the sum insured, that payment must not be held part payment of the debt? The other side will rely on Humphrey v. Arabin (L. & G. Plunk. 318). That case has been shaken by the observations of the Vice-Chancellor in Henson v. Blackwell (4 Har. 434). This case is governed by ex parte Andrews (2 Rose, 410; S. C. 1 Mad. 573); Godsall v. Boldero (9 East. 72). In the case of such a policy as this, there is no difference between the law here and in England. The English statute is only against wagering policies. This is not a wagering policy, and is a contract of indemnity. It is not pretended that the defendant had any interest in the life of E. Bell, save in respect of this mortgage debt. Such a policy as this would be a good policy in England as a contract of indemnity; how can it be differently construed here? Phillips v. Eastwood (L. & G. Sug. 270). (Lord Chancellor—Could the insurance company refuse to pay the amount due on the policy because the debtor had discharged the debt?) That is the precise point decided in Godsall v. Boldero. (Lord Chancellor—But was not that decided on the effect of the English statute?) Armitage v. Winterbotham (1 M. & G. 130).

Brewster, Q.C., for defendant, (with him Wall and Atkins).—The plaintiff calls on your lordship to overrule Humphrey v. Arabin. The English cases are not applicable, British Insurance Company v. Magee (Cooke & A. 182); Mulliken v. Kidd (4 Dr. & Warr. 274).

Collins submitted that English cases did apply. Cited Staniforth v. Lyall (7 Bing. 169); Coote on Mortgages, 444.

LORD CHANCELLOR.—I do not feel warranted in this case, from anything that has been urged, in now overruling Humphrey v. Arabin. That was decided, in 1836, on very great consideration, and has not since been overruled by any case here or in England. It was contended that this case was distinguished from it, by saying that the defendant here is a trustee, as in ex parte Andrews, but that has not been sustained. It is important to observe that all the cases in England have been determined on the statute, on the ground of the party having been able to effect the insurance by reason of the interest he acquired by his debt. In the case of ex parte Andrews, the respondent, as a trustee, was taken out of the statute by his interest in the life of the bankrupt's wife, without which he could not have effected the insurance. The court held, that having, by his character of trustee, acquired a right to make the insurance, he could not have a benefit for himself from it. Sir Thomas Plumer in that case says, "It is clear that a trustee never can use, to his own benefit, the property committed to his trust. They had it subject to all the jealousy with which the court regards a trustee acting on the property for his own benefit. They never could have insured unless the property had been assigned to them. The means, therefore, of acquiring the sum received from the insurance office originate with the bankrupt and his wife; they divest themselves of all dominion over it by committing it to trustees. It is extremely difficult to maintain that they, as trustees, being allowed this payment, are not to account for it as an advantage made of fiduciary property, acquired partly by their own act, and partly by the act of the bankrupt. Having been thus enabled, by the act of the bankrupt, to obtain part of their debt, they cannot prove the whole, they must account." It is difficult to say on what Henson v. Blackwell turned; save this, that the creditor had only a right to effect an insurance against the risk of the husband not being able to reduce into possession the property, and that that risk having been determined by the death of the wife, there was an end of the contract altogether. Though the Vice-Chancellor observes on the case of Humphreys v. Arabin, it does not appear that his attention was called to the difference between the law in this country and in England. It would be hard to contend that any right could be founded on behalf of the creditor against his debtor. If the creditor choose to pay the premiums, how could he recover them against the debtor, if the insurance company failed, or they amounted to more than the debt? And it could never be said that the debtor should have the option, if the policy proved valuable, to claim it; if worthless, to reject it. However, Humphreys v. Arabin has decided the question. That is a binding decision; in principle there is nothing against it, and I am content to abide by it as the law of the court.

ROLLS COURT—Jan. 26.

O'GRADY, Petitioner, v. GLOVER, Respondent;

W. V. GREGG v. SAME;

JOHNS AND OTHERS v. SAME.

Judgment—Priority—Salvage—Advances.

A. having obtained a judgment in respect of a salvage advance, extended a receiver, already appointed by B., a prior judgment creditor. A. moved for payment in priority. Held, that on petition the court will not decide the question of priority, B. insisting on his right to be paid according to the priority of his judgment.

In the month of April, 1847, the petitioner in the first matter having presented a petition under the provisions of the 5 & 6 W. 4, c. 55, obtained an order for a receiver, who was appointed over the lands of the respondent previously to Michaelmas, 1847. The petitioner in the third matter presented a petition on a judgment of Hilary Term, 1848, stating that in January, 1848, an arrear of renewal fines became due by the respondent, amounting to more than £500. That the head landlord refused to renew, and threatened to eject the interest in said lands, unless the renewal fines were paid, and the petitioner, having a sub-interest in said lands, had agreed to advance the amount of said fines, upon having the repayment thereof, and interest, secured by the bond and warrant of attorney of the respondent, and it was also agreed that, in respect of such advances, petitioner should rank as a salvage creditor. The petitioner in the first matter was no party to this arrangement. The petition then prayed that the receiver appointed in said first matter might be extended to the third matter, and that he might be directed to apply the rents, after payment of the head rent, &c., in discharge of the sum due to petitioner in said third matter on foot of his judgment, in priority to the demands of the petitioner in the first matter.

Orpen for the petitioner in the third matter.—In this case it may be contended that under the 32d section of the 5 & 6 W. 4, c. 55, the rents must be applied according to the priority of the judgments, but the first clause of the section gives the court full control over the money received. Mackreth v. Simonds, (15 Ves. 348; Sug. Powers, 863); Kehoe v. Hales, (5 I.E.R. 597); Burroughs v. Molloy, (8 I.E.R. 482); Fetherstone v. Mitchell, (11 I.E.R. 35.)

Leech, contra.—Under the statute the funds should be applied according to the priority of the judgments. The remedy given by this act is substitutional for that formerly obtained by elegit.

MASTER OF THE ROLLS.—I do not think that, in point of law, I can direct the petitioner in the third matter to be paid in priority to the petitioner in the first matter; although, in justice, he ought to have that priority. When the receiver was appointed in 1847, the estate had determined by the dropping of all the lives in the lease. Mr. Orpen's client then advanced the sum of £544, the effect of which was to render the interest secure. I do not offer any opinion as to the effect of taking a judgment for the salvage advance, or whether, by so doing, the petitioner in the third matter has lost his priority; but I am of opinion that this is not a question I can decide on petition.

Jan. 31.—The order, so far as material to this part of the motion, was as follows:—

“And the petitioner in the first matter now insisting that although said sum of £544 Os. 7d. was paid as salvage money by the petitioner in the third matter, yet that by taking the judgment in the third matter for a sum including said sum of £544 Os. 7d., the petitioners in the third matter have lost their priority, and that the petitioner in the first matter, having the earliest judgment, is entitled under the 5 & 6 Wm. 4, c. 55, to be paid his demand in priority to such salvage claim. No rule on that part of the motion which seeks that said receiver should pay said sum of £544 Os. 7d. in priority to the claim of the petitioner in the first matter; and let this order be without prejudice to any proceedings which the petitioner in the third matter may be advised to take, by bill or otherwise, to have said sum paid in priority, and to fix the petitioner in the first matter with the costs of said proceedings so rendered necessary by his disputing the jurisdiction of the court to decide the question in a summary way, without a bill being filed,” &c.

Liber 280, fo. 17d.

ANDERSON AND OTHERS v. MULVANY.—Jan. 30. Practice—Vacation—Meaning of 93rd General Order—Publication—Passing of.

Under the 93rd General Order, the term “vacation” is referable to the period when the court is not sitting.

The bill in this case was filed by the plaintiff, who formed a joint-stock company for the improvement of Lough Corrib, against the Commissioners of Public Works. There were certain documents lodged in the Castle, necessary for the support of the plaintiff's case, to which they had not been able to get access, although several applications had been made for that purpose, pending which the rule for publication was entered on the 12th December, 1848, and publication passed on the 4th of January following. The solicitor of the plaintiffs stated that he was not apprised of the intention to pass publication, as on the 18th of December notice had been served by the defendant of their intention to examine a witness.

Mr. Molynous now moved that the plaintiffs might be at liberty to examine further, notwithstanding publication passed, same having been passed irregularly, and contrary to the rule of the court. Under the terms of the 93rd General Order, if the time for which publication is respited expires in vacation, publication shall not pass thereunder until the second day of the following Term. As the rule was not entered in Term, it must be considered as entered in vacation, which word has the same meaning in the courts of Equity and common law; and the division of time into Terms and vacations is recognised by the courts of Equity (Gilbert's Chancery Pr. 38). The word “vacation” is taken in its ordinary sense. Beav. Chancery Orders, page 33; 7th Order of 21st December, 1843; ibid. 44, where the distinction is taken between Term and vacation; also in the 15th Order of 15th May, 1837 (England, ibid. 118). In the former orders of this court, the same distinction is taken in the first of Sir R.

Bolton's rules (Smith, Suppt. 93); and in the first of Primate Boyle's Orders (ibid. 96); vide also Rule 54, ibid. 101.

Mr. Colles, contra.—The defendant has been perfectly regular. The practice in the office is not to consider it vacation while the court is sitting. In Jessop v. Jessop (3 L. Rec. O. S. 91) the Master of the Rolls decided, that while the court sat for dispatch of business after any term, the equitable term should be considered as continuing.

MASTER OF THE ROLLS.—I will not overrule the settled practice of the office. The effect of the construction which the plaintiff's counsel puts on the rule would be, that under the 3rd General Order, after the last day of Term, the offices would be open from twelve to three o'clock each day only. From the year 1843 to the present time, a period of six years, the word "vacation" has always been considered to mean the period during which the court is not sitting; and, having been informed by the officer that such is the uniform practice, I will follow it, unless clearly of opinion that it is wrong. The notice in this case is not regular, for it does not state what the documents are, an inspection of which is required. Every notice should be framed in such a manner that the court can turn it into an order; it should also specify the irregularity complained of, and the application should have been to set aside the order, publication having passed contrary to the provisions of the 93rd General Order. In accordance with the view taken by the late Master of the Rolls, I consider the word "vacation" is referable to the period when the court is not sitting. I shall obtain a certificate to shew what is the established practice which ought to be invariably observed.

"Declare that publication passed regularly according to the course and practice of the court, and refuse the motion with costs, without prejudice to the plaintiff serving a notice of motion for the present sittings, and specifying in his notice the evidence which he seeks to be at liberty to give, and the witnesses he desires to examine."

Lib. 282, fo. 50.

ABBOTT v. ABBOTT.—Feb. 9.

The Attorney-General having been made a party in respect of a recognizance entered into by a receiver, as if within the terms of the 15th and 23rd General Orders, where he should have been an answering defendant, counsel for the Attorney-General appearing at the hearing and consenting to be bound by the proceedings, the court made a decree.

W. Smith, for the plaintiff, sought the usual decree on taking the bill as confessed against the defendants for want of their answers. This was an ordinary foreclosure suit, and the bill having been filed prior to the publication of the case of Christopher v. Cleghorn (8 Beav. 314); it prayed that the Attorney-General, upon being waited on with a copy of the bill and notice under the 15th General Order, might be bound by the proceedings in respect of a recognizance the crown acknowledged by the mortgagor, as security for a receiver in a civil suit after the execution of the mortgage. In the case of Fawcett v. Biggs (Chancery, Jan. 25, 1849) the Lord Chancellor decided, that in the case of a recognizance of this description, the crown was a royal trustee, and that the Attorney-General fully represented the rights of all the parties interested in the recognizance, and that he should be properly an answering party, as not being within the 15th and 23rd General Orders, which contemplate parties who otherwise should have been served with a subpoena to appear and answer, and because they do not specially refer to the crown. The cause having been set down for a decree pro confesso, the Attorney-General, by his counsel, now appears and consents to be bound by the proceedings, which will set matters right, Dyson v. Morris (1 Hare, 413). The Attorney-General is, in fact, a defendant on the record, though not required to answer; and this course is less expensive than going through the form of putting in an answer.

C. Kelly, for the Attorney-General, consented accordingly.

MASTER OF THE ROLLS.—I will make the decree, reciting that the Attorney-General appeared by his counsel, and consented to be bound by the proceedings.

GRAVES v. GRAVES.—Feb. 14.

Practice—Notice.

A notice of motion, served for a particular day, should state that the motion will be moved at the sitting of the court.

Hobart moved for the discharge of a receiver, he not having perfected his recognizance. The notice had been served for this day.

MASTER OF THE ROLLS.—This notice is not regular. Every notice of this nature which is served for a particular day, should state that the motion will be moved at the sitting of the court. You must, therefore, serve a new notice.

EQUITY EXCHEQUER.—Feb. 9.

IN THE MATTER OF THE IRISH SOUTH-EASTERN RAILWAY COMPANY AND THE LANDS CLAUSES CONSOLIDATION ACT, EX PARTE KELLY.

CORAM PENNEFATHER AND RICHARDS, B.B.

Railway Company—Payment out of Court—Costs—Willful Refusal.

K., the occupier of premises taken by the company, had agreed to give up the possession for £23, but when a clerk of the company afterwards came to demand possession accordingly, and stated that he had the money agreed on in his pocket, K. refused to surrender, on the ground that his sister had an equal interest in the premises with himself, and required compensation. The company thereupon lodged the money in court, to K.'s separate credit, on the ground of a refusal by K. to accept it, but the warrant did not set forth the peculiar circumstances of the case. Upon K. presenting a petition for payment of the sum out of court—Held, first, that the money, having been lodged to his separate credit, it was an admission of his title, and he was entitled to be paid without a reference. Secondly, that the tender was insufficient and the warrant defective, and therefore that the company were not entitled to their costs; nor was petitioner, as his dealings were tainted with mala fides.

The petition of Samuel Kelly—after setting forth his title as tenant at will of the premises of which possession had been taken by the company, and the service upon him of the several preliminary notices required by the act—stated that an agreement had been entered into between petitioner and the railway company, by which he was to give up the land for the sum of £23,—that on the 9th of February, 1848, a solicitor's clerk, in the employment of the company, went, along with the sub-sheriff, to the premises in question, and, without payment or tender of the purchase money, or any sum whatever, took forcible possession of them, on the ground that the company had lodged the purchase money in court,—that petitioner had not been tendered or shewn the purchase money by the clerk, who, when he came to demand possession in the first instance, alleged that he (the clerk) had the money in his pocket. The petition prayed the payment of the money out of court, in the usual form, with the costs of the petition. The company opposed the application, and an affidavit sworn by the solicitor's clerk stated that the deponent had repeatedly told the petitioner that he was ready to pay him the £23 on getting possession of the premises, and had repeatedly requested him to accept the money, but that petitioner, in reply, had stated, in the presence of his sister, that she (his sister) was equally entitled to the premises as petitioner, and refused to give up possession until she was satisfied. The question turned on the right of a party to money lodged by a company to his separate credit, and on the construction of the 76th and 80th sections of the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act.

Bond Case for petitioner.—The money having been lodged to the separate credit of petitioner, is a prima facie admission of his title. Even where money is lodged to the credit of the petitioner and all other parties interested, the petitioner, on an affidavit of his title, is entitled to have the money paid to him, (Ex parte Grange, 3 Y. & C. 68). By the 79th section, the party in possession is to be deemed the owner and entitled to the money. (Richards, B.—On this branch of the case there is no difficulty; the petitioner is clearly entitled to the purchase money. The only question is as to the costs.)

Wall, Q.C., contra.—The exceptional clause of the 8th section precludes a party from costs if, by his own act, he brings himself within it. Possession was the only title which petitioner here had to shew the company, and they could not pay him until they had obtained that possession. The attempt on the part of petitioner to set up the title of his sister was such an adverse claim as to entitle the company to lodge the money in court.

Case, in reply.—Authority to lodge the money in court is only given by the 79th section, after a tender and refusal. There was no legal tender, Thomas v. Evans (10 East. 104); Dickinson v. Shee (4 Esp. 67); Peacock v. Dickman (2 C. & P. 51, Note). The power of lodging money is a compulsory one; and if there is any doubt on the construction of the section, the landowner should have the benefit of it, Barker v. the Great Western Railway Company, 563 S.C. 589; Barker v. North Staffordshire Railway Company (12 Jur. 325). There must be a legal tender and wilful refusal to authorise a lodgment of the money under the act, ex parte Bradshaw (12 Jur. 888). When the petitioner set up his sister's claim, the company, instead of lodging the money, should have called upon him to make title. The money having been improperly lodged, petitioner is clearly entitled to the costs of drawing it out, as this case is not within the exceptions of the 80th section.

PER CURIAM.—There is a difficulty in this case, arising from the circumstance that the warrant under which the company lodged the money sets forth the petitioner's refusal to accept it to be the sole ground for the lodgment. Now, there was another and a more proper ground on which they should have lodged the money, and that was the adverse claim put forward by the petitioner's sister. The tender strictly was not a legal one; and the company's warrant has been very loosely framed, and should have set forth all the special facts of the case. On the other hand, an attempt has been made by the petitioner to extort more money than he had originally agreed for. We shall, therefore—as there has been default on both sides—direct the petitioner to be paid the amount in court, and pronounce no rule as to the costs of the petition.

COURT OF EXCHEQUER CHAMBER.

ROCHE v. O'BRIEN.—Feb. 1, 2

CORAM BLACKBURN, C.J., DOHERTY, C.J., PIGOTT C.B., PENNEFATHER, B., TORRENS, J., CRAMP-TON, J., FERRIN, J., RICHARDS, B., BALL, J., JACKSON, J. Absente—LEFROY, B., AND MOORE, J.

Will—Construction—Estate Tail.

A., seized of the reversion in fee, devised it to B., his nephew, "in as full a manner as he could convey it," to be enjoyed by him and his lawful begotten heirs male for ever.

Held, that B. took an estate in tail male.

This was error from the judgment of the Court of Queen's Bench. The action was in covenant by the heir-at-law of John Roche the lessor, claiming the reversion in fee against the assignee of William Roche, the lessee, who claimed as devisee of the reversion in fee after the estate tail created by the will of the lessor. The remaining facts appear sufficiently in the judgment of the court. The whole question turned upon the construction of the will and codicil of John Roche, which were as follows:—

"Whenever it happens that the Aghada estate, by want of male heirs, to wit, of the said James Joseph Roche, or by any other contingency reverts back to me, I hereby leave it in as full a manner as I can convey it to my nephew, William Roche, to be enjoyed by him and his lawful begotten heirs male for ever; and, as I have perfected leases to him, in trust, of the demesne and two adjoining farms of Aghada, subject to a yearly rent according to a valuation made, I leave him my interest, if any I had, in those leases; and in case of his not coming into possession of the estate by the means above-mentioned, I leave him £8,000 of my £4 per cent. stock, to be held by trustees, the interest of which is to pay the rent of the demesne and two farms above mentioned; to my eldest grandson, James J. R. O'Brien I leave £10,000 £4 per cent. stock; to my grand-daughter, Jane O'Brien, I leave £4,000 £4 per cent. stock; to my daughter, Mary O'Brien, I leave the £4,000 £4 per cent. which I settled on her as a marriage portion on her marriage, for her use and that of her younger children; to my niece, Ellen Verling, I leave £1,000 £4 per cent. stock, with £30 a-year profit rent I leave on her brother Bartholomew Verling's stores; to my grandson, J. Roche O'Brien, I leave also my interest in White Point, after his mother's death; I leave £100 to my sister, Ellen Verling; to my sister, Julia Enery, £100; to my nephew, Doctor Verling, and his sister, Catherine Ellis, £100 each, and I desire the stock on the farm to be sold to pay these legacies; to my nephew, William Roche, and my grand-daughter, Jane O'Brien, I leave my household furniture, plate, &c., and it is my wish, if the rules of our church allow it, that they should be married and live in Aghada house; God bless and prosper them and their offspring. To the parish of Aghada, I leave the school-house, and £20 a-year for its support, and also the chapel and priest's house I leave to the parish rent-free for ever, as long as they shall be used for such specified purposes; the five slate houses I built in the village, I leave to five of the poorest families rent-free; to David Coughlan I leave the house he now lives in during his life; to my servant, James Tracy, I leave the house his wife now lives in; and to my wife's servant, Mary Ahearne, otherwise Finne, her house rent-free during their lives; and to each of those three, viz., David Coughlan, James Tracy, and Mary Ahearne, otherwise Finne, I leave £10 a-year during their lives: having had unbounded confidence in my unhappy nephew, James Roche, I did not take legal means under the settlement I made to secure those last bequests out of the Aghada estate; I trust, and hope, and desire that whosoever is in possession of the estate will confirm these my wishes and intents. I appoint my trusty friend, Henry Bennett, (my present law agent) William Roche, and my daughter, Mary O'Brien, as executors of this my last will."

The codicil to the will was as follows:—

"By my will dated the 5th day of January, 1826, I appointed my friend Henry Bennett, my nephew, William Roche, and my daughter, Mary O'Brien, executors to that will; now, by this codicil, I annul that appointment, and appoint John Gibson, barrister-at-law, Bartholomew Hackett, of Middleton, distiller, and my nephew, William Roche, as my executors to that will, and do hereby empower them to name and appoint two trustees for the purpose of managing the sums I left to my nephew, William Roche, my grand-daughter, Jane O'Brien, and my grandson, J. O'Brien, as it is my intent and will that they should only receive the interest, and the principal to remain untouched during their lives, to go to their children; out of William Roche's interest the rent of Aghada which I have leased him is to be paid; and I desire that he and my grand-daughter Jane, who are shortly to be married, will reside there. I leave William Roche all the stock, &c., on the farm, and to him and his wife all my household furniture, plate, and china, and make them my residuary legatees; it is my will that my grandson, James R. O'Brien, shall live with them at Aghada until he is of age, which is to be at the age of twenty-five, and not before; and the trustees are to pay him until that period £100 a-year to complete his education, and another £100 a-year during that period to his mother, and the remainder of the interest of his £10,000 to be paid William Roche to assist him in keeping up Aghada during that period, and I trust by that time he will have a profession by which he will add to his income; I request and desire that nothing shall prevent his following his profession; it is my intention that William Roche and his wife shall step into possession of Aghada house, demesne, and farms, which are leased to him in the same way that I leave it when it shall please God to take me; in case of the death of William Roche before his wife, she is to be paid the interest of her £4,000, to be made up £200 a-year as her jointure; and if she dies before him, he is to have the £10,000, provided she has no issue; but if she leaves issue, it is to go to them after William Roche's death, as before directed."

✓ Sir C. O'Laghlin for the plaintiff in error, the defendant below.—The question is, whether William Roche took an estate tail alone, or an estate tail with an expectant or reversionary fee. First, it is clear that the testator did not mean to die intestate, and, that nothing might be undisposed of, made William Roche and his wife residuary legatees. Secondly, that the testator having a contingent reversion in fee in the property, he devised it from his heir at law, and gave it to another, charging it in such a manner as to shew that whoever should have the property should take under the will. These charges cannot be enforced against the heir at law, as he takes by title paramount. Thirdly, that, having his heir at law in contemplation, he took from him that he would otherwise be clearly entitled to. He had most fully provided for him, and designedly gave the property to William Roche, for the purpose of founding a family of the name of Roche, who were to dwell in Aghada house. If the construction contended for by the plaintiff below be the true one, the manifest intention of the testator is wholly defeated. The reversion would not be disposed of; his heir would take at law, and not under the will; and the estate would go to the very person he intended to deprive of it. The first portion of the sentence, "I hereby leave it (the Aghada estate) in as full a manner as I can convey it," conveyed the fee simple, and the subsequent words, "lawful begotten male heirs for ever," reduce it to an estate tail, with a reversion in fee. Chyck's case, (Dy. 357, Pasch. 19, El.) That case, as reported in Dyer, is still law, and the case reported in Benloe, 300, and Anderson, 51, by the name of Baker v. Raymond, is not the same. In Abraham v. Twig, (Moore 425, 11 Jac.); Roberts v. Roberts, (2 Bul. 127, 13 Jac.); Blanford v. Blanford, (1 Rol. 320, 21 Jac.); Sergeant's case, (2 Rol. 425); Herbert v. Thomas, (Har. and Wol. 434—per Littledale, J.); Doe d. Herbert v. Thomas, (3 Ad. & El. 128, Sheph. Touch. 445). All these authorities rely on Chyck's case, as cited in Dyer. Daniel v. Uply, (Latch. 43,) is a decision to the same effect, by Doderidge, J., who was either at the bar or on the bench at the time of the decision of Chyck's case. The following cases and authorities were also relied upon, and commented on during the argument—Turnman v. Cooper, (Cro. Jac. 476, S. C. Rol. Rep. 19, 23, S. C. Poph. 138; 1 Thomas's Co. Litt. 518, 21 a.); Altham's case, (8 Coke 154, b.) denied to be law in Turnman v. Cooper, (Pop. 138; Year Book, 21 Hen. 6, 723, b.). (Blackburne, C. J.)—That was the case of a deed where the whole estate passed from the grantor.) (Anon. Brownl. 45); Holland v. Fisher, (O'Bridg. 212; 1 Steph. Black. Com. 460); Melish v. Melish, (2 B. & C. 520); Barker v. Giles, (3 P. W. 279, S. C., affirmed on appeal; 3 Bro. P. C. 297); Littleton & Ux v. Green, (4 M. & W. 229); Nanfan v. Legh, (7 Taun. 85, S. C. 2 Marsh. 107); Doe d. Ellis v. Ellis, (9 East. 382); Davis v. Stevens, (1 Doug. 321); Doe d. Murch v. Marchant, (6 Man. & Gr. 813).

Chatterton, with him R. W. Greene, Q. C., and F. Fitzgerald, Q. C., contended—That, according to the true construction of the will, William Roche took only an estate tail. That the construction contended for by the defendant below would tend further to defeat the testator's intention to found a family, than that sought to be put upon the will by the plaintiff, as the fee would be more easily alienated. That the devise shewed no intention of the testator to dispose of his whole property; the words were, not my estate, but "the Aghada estate," words of description only. The charges made by the testator upon the devised estate would take place on the reversion, whether the estate be taken by descent, or under the will. That the reversion was disposed of, and that there was no general intention expressed in the will inconsistent with an estate tail. The learned counsel distinguished Chyck's case, and Turnman v. Cooper, and cited and referred to Altham's case, (8 Coke, 154, b.); Ossulton's case, (3 Salk. 336); Baker v. Wall, (1 Lord Ray. 185); Doe d. Lord Lindsay v. Colyear, (11 East. 548); Slater v. Slater, (5 T. R. 335); Nanfan v. Legh, (2 Marsh. 107, S. C.; 7 Taun. 85); Davis v. Stevens, (Doug. 321; Co. Litt. 27, a.); Church v. Wyatt, (F. Moore, 637); Wood v.

Ingersole, (1 Bul. 63); Doe d. Eustace v. Easley, (1 Cr. M. & Ros. 823); Winter v. Perrall, (9 Cl. & Fin. 613); Angell v. Angell, (9 Q. B. 353); Odde v. Woodford, (3 My. & Cr. 584); Doe d. Ellis v. Ellis, (9 East. 382); Trenke v. Frencham, (2 Dy. 171); Chilton v. Cooper, (2 B. & Ald. 610).

Napier, Q. C., in reply.—The court will effectuate the intention expressed on the face of the will. It is clear from the whole testament, the testator thought he was devising the property out and out. There is first a general expression conveying the fee, and the subsequent words cannot narrow it. By the "Aghada estate," he intended his whole interest, and to convey it "in as full a manner as he could," when he should become possessed of the reversion in fee, and the charges evidence that intention to deal with the whole. He referred to Randall v. Tuckin, (6 Taun. 418—per Chambre, J.); Moffet v. Catherwood, (Al. & Nap. 472); Cotton v. Stenlake, (12 East. 515).

Feb. 2.—BLACKBURNE, C. J., now delivered the judgment of the court.—This is an action of covenant brought by the plaintiff below as heir at law of John Roche, the testator, claiming the rent reserved in a lease executed by John Roche to Wm. Roche, whose assigns the defendants are, and the plaintiff below insists he is entitled to the reversion, as heir at law of John Roche. The declaration states a settlement executed on the marriage of the testator's nephew, James J. Roche, limiting the estate to John Roche for life, remainder to James Joseph Roche for life, remainder to him in tail male, with the reversion in fee to John Roche, the settlor. It then states the will of John Roche, devising his reversion to William Roche in tail male, and the death of William and James without issue male, and traces the descent of the reversion to the plaintiff. The plea of the defendant sets out the will and the codicil of the testator, John Roche, in hac verba, on the construction of which the question in this case wholly depends. The plaintiff below alleges that Wm. Roche took only an estate tail, which has now determined. (The learned Chief Justice then read the words of the will.) It is not denied that the words in the devise give an estate tail. Lord Ossulton's case, (3 Salk. 336,) puts this question beyond doubt. The addition of the word "for ever," makes no difference. Baker v. Wall, (1 Ld. Raymond 185). Davis v. Stevens, (1 Doug. 320,) was a devise to A. of the "fee simple and inheritance of Lower Shelstone, to him and his child, or children, for ever." The language of Lord Mansfield is, every word, applicable to this case. Nanfan v. Legh, (7 Taun. 85,) is a leading authority, and has a strong resemblance to this case, and there the devise was held to confer an estate tail, and no more, and for this position there will be found a large body of authority. The defendant below contends that there is a devise to Wm. Roche of two distinct estates, first, an estate in tail male; and secondly, of an estate in fee expectant on the reversion. To maintain this view the sentence is divided in two, and the order of it inverted, for the purpose of avoiding the absurdity that would follow. I know of no authority for so altering the plain language of a will. The context requires no such construction, but rather the contrary. I shall only say, that in all the reasons given in the cases for this construction, it never occurred that in a devise a sentence could be stopped in the middle. The judgment of my brother Crampton in the court below contains so able a review of Chycke's case, that I shall not further refer to it. The judgment of Lord Ellenborough in Doe d. Ellis v. Ellis, (9 East. 382) which is now impugned by the defendant below contains a clear exposition of the law. No one can read that case without seeing that it militates against the whole argument of the defendant's counsel. Considering the whole will, we think the inference to be drawn from it is, that the testator intended W. Roche to take an estate tail only.

Judgment affirmed.

EXCHEQUER OF PLEAS.—HILARY TERM.

STEVENS, Appellant.

STRANOMARE, Respondent.

A. and Co., being brewers at W., and having two licences—one authorizing them to brew for sale, and another to brew and retail beer to be consumed elsewhere than on their premises—sent a van to C. in charge of a servant, who from it on their behalf sold beer by retail, to any person who offered to buy.

Held, that no other licence for doing so was required by the 6 Geo. 4, c. 81.

Quære—Was any licence necessary for such a sale?

Semble—That in cases of serious doubt as to the true construction of statutes, and licenses thereunder, the court will be slow to inflict penalties for their infringement.

This was a case stated for the opinion of the court, pursuant to the 84th section of 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 53, by the justices of the peace, at the Quarter Sessions for the city of Waterford. It stated that the respondents carried on the trade of brewers, at premises in the city of Waterford—that they had also a bottling establishment in the same premises, from which beer in bottles was sent to their customers—that they had two licences, one for brewing, and the other a brewer's licence for retailing beer to be consumed elsewhere than on their premises; and that a servant of the respondent's had taken a van, with bottles of beer in it, and sold the beer publicly by retail, from the van, in the street of Clogheen, several miles distant from Waterford. The appellant had lodged an information against the respondents, for selling without the license required by the 6 Geo. 4, c. 81, which came on to be heard before three justices of the peace for the city of Waterford, by whom it was dismissed; whereupon he appealed to the general Quarter Sessions of the same city, who stated the case for the opinion of this court; and the question for the consideration of the court now was, were the respondents liable to the penalties imposed by the 6 Geo. 4, c. 81, s. 26, on persons selling without the licenses required by that act? The material words of the second license (which alone could be supposed to legalise the sale) were, "We, &c., do license, &c., being a brewer of beer for sale, and having taken out and paid for a license to brew, &c., to retail strong beer, which he or they shall brew, and be charged with duty thereon, to be consumed elsewhere than on their premises; that is to say, to retail the same at and from their premises in the city of Waterford, being part of the entered brewing premises of the said, &c., but not elsewhere, and not to sell any beer to be drunk or consumed upon the premises where sold," &c.

Jebb, for the appellant, stated the case, and referred to sections 2, 7, 10, 26 of 6 Geo. 4, c. 81, but was stopped by the court calling on Fitzgibbon, Q. C., for the respondents.—The respondents are not restricted to retailing the beer on their own premises alone; the license is inconsistent with any such supposition, and no restriction of the kind appears in the act. The words of the license enables them to retail beer "at and from" their premises in Waterford; and unless the word "from" be struck out, the present sale is within the license; for surely the purchaser would say he had the beer "from the respondents' premises." The 10th section certainly says, that no one license shall authorize a person to carry on his trade in more than one separate set of premises. But the respondents did not "carry on their trade," as mentioned in their license, which was for brewing and selling, by a mere act of selling like the present; nor could a van be considered a "set of premises," within the meaning of this section.

Harris, on same side.—The charge in the information is, that the respondents sold without taking out the license required by the statute. If any license were necessary for such an act, it must have been mentioned in the statute; but the statute contains no license whatever appropriate to such a sale as this. The respondents could not, as brewers, have got any other licenses than the two they have. The retailer's license mentioned in the act, and which it is pretended they might have had, is expressly confined to fixed premises. They shew which of the licenses mentioned in the statute the respondents should have had; and when they attempt to do so, this will be found to be a casus omissus in the act. Hubbard v. Johnson (3 Taunt. 219) shews how stringently these acts should be construed.

Smyly, in reply.—We rely on the 10th section of the statute, which says a party shall not trade, on one license, in more than one set of premises; that is a prohibition of any act of trading, not carried on in premises for which a license has been taken out.

PIGOT, C.B.—This case need not stand over. The court does not think it so clear as to warrant them in giving judgment against the respondents. There are several matters to be considered before we should inflict a penalty on them. First, is it plain that there has been a sale not within the terms of the license which the respondents had? By that license, they are permitted to retail beer "at and from" the premises which they hold in the city of Waterford. Now, the word "from" will bear two constructions; it may refer to a sale, at any place, of beer to be subsequently delivered from the premises, or it may mean a sale, in any place, of beer already taken from the premises. If the first construction be the true one, then the respondent has gone beyond the terms of his license; but if the second be correct, he is as clearly within it. How, then, can we say—when the words of the license are so equivocal—that there has been so clear a violation of the act as will subject the respondents to penalties so heavy? And subjects are not to be punished except for breaking through the clear and plain intention of the legislature. The form of license is not any where set out in the act; but even that granted by the officers of excise themselves has not been plainly departed from. It is not necessary for us to decide what is the precise meaning of the license; it is enough for us to say, that it has not been clearly violated. But, even supposing that this sale did not fall within the terms of the license, there remains a question as to whether such a sale, without license, would be a violation of the act. The 26th section imposes a penalty on a person selling without license, where a license is required; but is there any license required for, or applicable to, a sale like this? There are four licenses for the sale of beer, the descriptions of which, in the second section of the act, contain, each of them, a reference to "premises." Moreover, the 7th section provides, that each license shall mention the place where the trade or business is to be carried on, which, coupled with the expressions in the 2nd section, would seem to shew that the act only contemplated trading in a fixed place—a view of its enactments corroborated by the expressions of the 10th and other sections. If that be so, then a moveable depository, like a van, is not within its provisions, and we should consider the present a casus omissus. I do not say that such is the right interpretation of the act, but I think the respondents are not clearly liable to the penalty it imposes. I shall, therefore, not inflict them. Some inconveniences may arise from our decision, in consequence of persons like the respondents interfering with the trade of licensed retailers; but we cannot help that, the respondents are entitled to the benefit of our doubt.

RICHARDS, B.—As my Lord Chief Baron entertains a doubt on the question, I am satisfied there ought not to be a conviction. Otherwise, I should have been disposed to hold, that an offence had been committed against the act. On the general view of the statute, I think it would lead to perpetual evasions of its meaning, if the respondents could say that their's was a casus omissus. Upon the license, I am inclined to think, that the word "from," instead of being intended to extend its operation, as has been urged for the respondents, was, on the contrary, intended to limit it. If this word were not inserted, a sale might, perhaps, be made "at" the premises, of liquor to be delivered from other premises; but by the license, as it now stands, it is provided that not only shall the sale be "at," but the goods shall be delivered "from" the premises named in the license. However, as the rest of the court differ from me, I am, as I before said, satisfied that there should be no conviction in this case.

LEFROY, B.—This case, as my Lord Chief Baron and my brother Richards have remarked, is not free from doubt. The words of the license are ambiguous, and must be construed by a reference to the act; and certainly it contains words which appear to shew that the legislature intended that the trading under a license should be only at one place. But I think we shall be assisted materially in our decision by examining what was the object of the enactment in the 7th section of the act, which declares that every license shall contain a description of the place where the business is to be carried on. If it were intended thereby to limit the entire trading carried on under the license to the place named in it, of course the present act of trading, not having taken place on those premises, cannot be within the meaning of the license. But if the place were inserted with another view, for the purpose of securing that malt should only be consumed in known premises (as I think appears from the latter part of the 10th section), then, the terms of the license being capable of being made to include this act of trading, we must look for some other cause of restriction before we can hold the respondents liable to the penalties of the act. Now, I do not think that it was meant by the legislature that the naming in the license of the place where the trade was to be carried on, should, in itself, be a limitation of every act of trading to those particular premises; for, if that were the case, the subsequent enactment in the 10th section would be superfluous and unnecessary. That being so, what other portion of the act restricts the operation of this license? It is alleged that the 10th section prohibits a party from trading from more than one set of premises, on the same license; but surely a van cannot be said to be a set of premises within the meaning of this act. The 11th section refers to the case of premises being burnt down, or becoming uninhabitable; shewing that the premises meant in it were to be habitable. They could not, therefore, be a van, which was never inhabited; and we may fairly suppose, therefore, that the premises mentioned in the 10th section are of the same character as those in the 11th, and that, therefore, a van does not come within its meaning. As the 10th section is the only one restraining the words of the license, I see no reason for saying that they are not sufficient to cover such a sale as this. Considering, therefore, the nature of the act, and the stringency with which it should be construed, I do not think the respondents in this case should be convicted.

COURT OF CHANCERY.

HUTCHINS V. O'SULLIVAN.—Feb. 3.

Practice—Allocation of Rents under the Court.

A purchaser is not entitled to arrears of rent due before the lodgment of his purchase-money, but not received till afterwards. Hargrave v. Holland (5 I. E. R. 167) overruled.

This case came before the court on appeal from an order of the Master of the Rolls. A half-year's rent had become due on the purchased lands, between the lodging of the purchase money and the completion of the conveyance, and the receiver had received a half-year's rent in the same time. There were considerable arrears on the estate, and the Master allocated the sums received to those arrears. The purchaser excepted to that report, and the Master of the Rolls overruled the exception. From that order the purchaser appealed.

F. Fitzgerald, Q.C., for the appeal, relied on Hargrave v. Holland (5 I. E. R. 149), as having overruled Lee v. Moorhead (2 Moll. 509), and pressed on the court the hardship to the purchaser of leaving his purchase money for the benefit of the parties to the cause while rents were received for him; and that the practice of the receivers of the court being to give receipts on account, and not for specific gales of rent, the rent received after the purchase money lodged might be allocated to any gale. (During this argument, the Lord Chancellor observed, "I have always thought the receivers of this court bound to give receipts for the special gales of rent, and I think a general order on the subject should be made; for it is most improper for any agent to give a receipt for rent on account. We must test this application on general principles. Suppose the tenant, on paying, had obtained a receipt for a particular gale, if that were due before the lodgment of the money, how could you contend that you were entitled to that rent. We should have the country in a sad condition; every estate under the courts would be disturbed, if tenants were to be informed that their payments were to be placed to the account of the last rent due. As far as I can see at present, my mind is inclined against the authority of Hargrave v. Holland. The purchaser seems to say the receiver has obtained nothing for me, but I want to come against another fund which he has received for another party.")

Rogers, J., in support of the report.—Hargrave v. Holland is the only case in support of the purchaser. Lee v. Moorhead is settled law. Doorley v. Power (not yet reported) was decided since Hargrave v. Holland, and is opposed to the principles of that case; and the Masters there certified that Lee v. Moorhead governed their practice, save in certain excepted cases.

Lawson with Rogers.

R. B. Warren, in reply, contended that Doorley v. Power supported Hargrave v. Holland. That rents differed from other debts, as the land was then the primary fund instead of the person.

LORD CHANCELLOR.—On this point, the practice of the offices, and the authorities concurred down to the case of Hargrave v. Holland. The practice has since continued, notwithstanding that case, and the opinion of the present Master of the Rolls in Doorley v. Power and in this case, has been against that decision. The present Chief Justice, while Master of the Rolls, in Hargrave v. Holland, took a different view; but so far as authority goes, we have against him two judges and the course of practice. The balance, therefore, of authority is against the purchaser. However, as the present case has come before me, it is right to advert to principle, apart from all special circumstances either in favour of, or against the purchaser. What is the question? An estate is sold, paying, say £100 a-year; an arrear of £100 is due; from some reason the sale is not completed till a tenant pays the receiver a sum of £100, and gets a receipt for a gale due before the contract, and then it is contended that the purchaser is entitled to that sum. It is quite clear that as to the tenant it must be allocated as he has appointed. The purchaser completes the contract, and insists that it should be paid him, not because he is entitled to that sum, but because another gale is due to him. That is not justice. The tenant has paid the rent, and the court has it for those to whom it became due. The purchaser goes into possession with all the rights of a landlord, and if he cannot recover in his own name, he can use the name of his vendors. The tenant stands, as to him, as he ought to stand, and can be compelled to pay the gale of rent which he owes. What would be the consequence if the court took the other course? The receiver could not go back on the tenant; he has discharged him—he must have discharged him, unless he had only given him a receipt on account, on which no tenant should pay rent. The only remedy would be, to hold the purchaser a trustee on account of the arrears, which would be much more inconvenient. If he cannot recover his rents, he must be a loser; the court can give him no redress if it occur merely by casualty, though if it were by the fault of the receiver, he would have a remedy. In Blennerhasset v. M'Namara, (1 Moll. 81,) the deficiency of rents arising while the receiver was in default, was ordered to be made good out of the purchase money in court. And in Campbell v. Hay, (2 Mol. 102,) the same rule was followed as in that case. The purchaser under a decree having paid his entire purchase money was held not to be entitled to compensation out of the fund, for the difference between the amount of rent received by the receiver in the interim before possession given, and the amount which ought to have been received according to the rental which was erroneous, it appearing that he was aware when he purchased, of the discrepancy between the rental and the true rent payable, but otherwise, if rents had been lost, and the claim had been for compensation for loss accrued after he paid his purchase money, and before he could get possession. Thus the purchaser has a remedy if he has lost by the default of parties in the cause, or of the receiver, for the rents, which, if admitted to the possession of the estate, he would himself have recovered, and is entitled to compensation for such loss, but he must make out a case for that special purpose. I decide this case on the general principle; I do not touch the case of a purchaser being a plaintiff; that might be a material element, but the question is, whether money paid by the tenant on account of prior arrears, can be transferred to another account by one receiving the gales of rent in usum jus habentis. If the purchaser has a case for compensation, let him make it. I must, with all respect for the late Master of the Rolls, follow Lee v. Moorhead, which is in accordance with the current of authority.

Motion Book 4, p. 211.

REG. v. BROWN.—Feb. 10.

Practice—Substitution of Service.

One, of three consors of a recognizance had, while out of the jurisdiction of the court, filed a bill against one of the others, and obtained a receiver. In a sci. fa. on that recognizance, service of the writ on the attorney of the plaintiff in the suit, ordered to be deemed good service on the plaintiff, a copy being sent through the Post Office.

John F. Walker moved, that in proceeding on the scire facias which had issued in this suit on foot of a recognizance acknowledged by W. Kelly, H. Comerford, and Bernard Brown, service on Robert Power, the solicitor of the defendant, Andrew Brown, might be deemed good service on the said Andrew Brown. Notice of the application was given to Robert Power, and the motion was founded on an affidavit that the Master of the Rolls, in the cause of Handcock v. Handcock, had ordered proceedings on the recognizance unless, within ten days after the service of the order on Comerford, and Kelly, and on Andrew Brown, devisees and administrator of Bernard Brown, cause should be shewn to the contrary, and that service on Power of that order should be deemed good service on Andrew Brown. That order had been made absolute, no cause having been shewn. That Andrew Brown was then, and had been for some time then past, resident in Malta with his regiment. That Robert Power was then the solicitor of the said Andrew Brown, and in such capacity had on or about the 9th day of April, 1848, filed a bill in Chancery against William Kelly, and in the course of the last year had obtained an order in the said cause for the appointment of a receiver over the estate of the said William Kelly.

LORD CHANCELLOR—Let the service on Robert Power, the solicitor of the defendant, Andrew Brown, be deemed good service on the latter, and let the plaintiff's attorney transmit a copy of the said writ through the post-office.

BAKER v. M'DERMOTT.—March 3.

Practice—Setting down cause after order for liberty to amend—Order to amend without prejudice to order taking bill pro confesso.

Where the plaintiff, at the hearing, has obtained leave to amend, he cannot again set down the cause without discharging that order, or amending the bill.

An order to amend, without prejudice to the order taking the bill pro confesso against a defendant, will not be granted where the amendment might prejudice that defendant.

This cause had been ordered to stand over, with liberty to amend the bill, by making the heir-at-law of E. M'Dermott a party. It subsequently appeared that the defendant, C. J. M'Dermott, against whom the bill had been taken pro confesso, was the heir-at-law, and thereupon the plaintiff set down the cause for hearing without making any amendment.

Martley, Q.C., for the plaintiff.

Mr. Synan for infant defendants—This case has been brought on irregularly. The plaintiff ought either to have discharged the order for liberty to amend, or to have amended his bill according to the order. Davies v. Chanter, (15 Sim. 193; see also same case, 2 Phil. 545.)

Martley, Q.C.—It is not necessary to bring the heir before the court; he is before the court in another capacity. The order is only for liberty to amend; and we may disregard it if we think proper.

Mr. Synan—That objection was overruled in Davies v. Chanter.

LORD CHANCELLOR—On the face of the record as it stands this objection is apparent.

Martley then applied for leave to amend the bill without prejudice to the order for taking the bill pro confesso against the defendant, C. J. M'Dermott, who would then be before the court in the other capacity. Orders for leave to amend, without prejudice to the order for taking the bill pro confesso, are constantly made at the Rolls.

LORD CHANCELLOR—But not where the interest of the party, against whom the bill has been taken pro confesso, is affected by the amendment, it is done only where the amendment is against other parties. Such an order would often work the grossest injustice.

ROLLS COURT.

TANGNEY v. HOLMES AND OTHERS.

O'KEEFE v. HOLMES AND OTHERS.

GOOD v. HOLMES AND OTHERS.

HACKETT v. HOLMES AND OTHERS.

AND IN THE MATTER OF FRANCIS HOLMES, A MINOR.—Feb. 9.

Where a creditor's suit has been stayed by reason of a prior decree obtained in another similar suit, and the plaintiff ordered to pay the costs of the defendants in the stayed cause, he will be entitled to be repaid them only in the same priority as his own demand.

Semble—Except those of prior incumbrancers, as to which he may make out a case to entitle him to be paid in the same priority as the incumbrancers themselves. Loftie v. Forbes (2 I. E. R. 445) reviewed and qualified.

Francis Fitzgerald, Q.C., (M'Oboy with him) moved, on behalf of the plaintiff in the first cause, that the costs of the several defendants in that cause, which the plaintiff in the first cause had been ordered to pay, under a stay order made in the four causes, bearing date the 23rd June, 1848, should be paid to the plaintiff by the receiver appointed in the matter and causes out of the funds then in his hands. The plaintiff Tangney had, on the 23rd day of August, 1847, instituted a suit as a simple contract creditor of Robert Holmes, deceased, for the administration of his assets. Holmes had died on the 3rd of July, in that year, in embarrassed circumstances, leaving little or no personal estate. On the 30th October, 1847, the third suit, and on the 4th November, 1847, the fourth suit were instituted, both for the same purpose as the first. On the 15th November, 1847, the suit of O'Keeffe v. Holmes was instituted, which was also a creditor's suit; and though the last instituted, the plaintiff therein contrived to get the first decree, which was pronounced on the 9th June, 1848. On the 23rd June, 1848, the plaintiff in O'Keeffe v. Holmes applied for an order to stay the proceedings in the other three causes, and such an order was accordingly pronounced on that day. On Tangney's suit being thus stayed, the several defendants proceeded to tax their costs, and applied to the court for an order that Tangney should forthwith pay them, on the authority of Lofthouse v. Forbes (2 I. E. R. 443). Several orders of this kind had been obtained; one of them was appealed from to the Lord Chancellor, Tangney v. Holmes (1 Ir. Jur. 125), but his lordship had confirmed the order of the Master of the Rolls, concurring in the decision in Lofthouse v. Forbes. The present application was founded on the second branch of that case, Sir Michael O'Loughlen having made such an order there as the plaintiff Tangney was now seeking. The parties who opposed the application were the first and second incumbrancers, who insisted that the money should not be paid to Tangney, on two grounds; first, because it was their money of right; and, secondly, because Tangney's bill was improperly filed. As to the latter ground, they wholly failed to make out any case. (Master of the Rolls.—If Tangney had been the first incumbrancer, I would, without hesitation, follow the decision in Lofthouse v. Forbes, and grant his application; but he is merely a simple contract creditor. I shall send for the affidavits which were used in the case of Lofthouse v. Forbes, to see under what circumstances the order there was made. From the case, as reported, it was impossible to know what they were. I would venture to say, that the order in that case was made in consequence of the fund having been superabundant to satisfy all demands. Is there any doubt here as to the estate being sufficient to reach Tangney's demand?) The estate is £1400 a-year, and the debts only £10,000.

Mr. Berkeley and Mr. Escham, for the first incumbrancer, O'Keeffe (who was the plaintiff in the second cause) submitted that the application was a most unreasonable one. Their client was a mortgagee of 1776, and also a specialty creditor of Robert Holmes, and there was due to her about £2000, besides a large arrear of interest. It was sworn that she was greatly inconvenienced, and almost in distress, by reason of the non-payment. Could it be contended that her money was to be paid away to Tangney, who had instituted this unnecessary suit? He had filed his bill in less than two months, after the death of Robert Holmes, and before a personal representative was raised. He could not have made even the usual searches, for he was obliged to amend his bill four times. Mr. Fitzgerald had referred his application to no principle. If the fund were not sufficient to reach Tangney, he should lose those costs. Moreover, he had not, as yet, paid their client's costs, or proved his demand under the decree in her cause.

Mr. Collins appeared for the second incumbrancer.

Mr. M'Obry.—The question is, what is to be the practice in such cases in future? Whether a plaintiff in a stayed cause, who, in pursuance of the order of the court, had paid the costs of defendants, as here, was to get them back only in the same priority as his own demand, or whether such costs were entitled to any, and what, special preference? Treating the question as one purely of law, he submitted that the plaintiff Tangney was entitled to carry the motion, at least as to the costs of the first incumbrancers, and of title parties. As to those of other defendants, he was entitled to carry it in a qualified manner. The best mode of determining what the practice ought to be where a suit was stayed, was to consider what it was where a suit was prosecuted; for the prior incumbrancers ought not to be put in a better situation, nor the plaintiff in a worse, in the one case than in the other. What, then, was the practice as to the first incumbrancer where a suit was prosecuted? He was paid his costs in the same priority as his demand. That was laid down as the practice by Sir Edward Sugden in Hall v. Hill (5 I. E. R. 12), overruling Jackson v. Curtis (2 Molloy, 463). That being so, was it not just that when a plaintiff in a stayed cause paid the costs of such an incumbrancer, he should be allowed to stand in his place, and get back those costs, not merely in the priority of his own demand, but in that of the demand of the first incumbrancer? The costs of Mary O'Keeffe and Menus O'Keeffe were thus circumstanced. Menus O'Keeffe was the heir-at-law of a mortgagee of 1776, having in him the legal estate, and Mary O'Keeffe was the owner of the money secured by that mortgage, and the first incumbrancer. The case of Menus O'Keeffe was identical with that of Hall v. Hill. It was not sought to deprive any one of a shilling which would have been his had the cause been prosecuted. The only favour asked was an acceleration of payment, in consideration of the hardship of the case. He submitted that Tangney was also entitled to the costs of title parties, i. e., persons brought before the court "ex necessitate;" as, for example, the costs of Francis Walker, who was one of the trustees of Robert Holmes's will. The settled practice of this court was, that when a party instituted a creditor's suit, he lost his own costs, unless the fund reached his demand, Peyton v. McDermott (1 D. & W. 234); Nelson v. Brady (4 I. E. R. 359); but it did not appear from those cases that, in such an event, the costs of the defendants would be also lost. These he ought not to lose, unless the suit had been instituted without any reasonable prospect that the fund would reach his demand. But he ought not to lose these costs, unless where his suit was manifestly fruitlessly instituted "ab initio." (Master of the Rolls.—That is not the practice of this court. The costs of defendants are always added to the plaintiff's demand, and he can recover them only in the same priority. So that if the fund be insufficient, he loses all.) If that be the settled practice of this court, it must be admitted that the same rule ought to prevail in a case like this; but as to the costs of prior incumbrancers, it is obvious the rule cannot be so; for the plaintiff is entitled to be refunded these in the priority of the incumbrances themselves, even though the fund does not reach his own demand, unless in the case put of an improperly instituted suit. (Master of the Rolls.—Considering the rule laid down in Hall v. Hill, I think the plaintiff may make a case to entitle him to be so reported as to prior incumbrancers, though the practice has not been so. He might then apply to have the payment accelerated. But the notice of motion here is not framed with that object; and, moreover, O'Keeffe's costs have not, as yet, been paid by Tangney.) The party applying in Loftie v. Forbes had not paid the costs. The object of the application in that case, as here, was to put himself in funds to do so. (Master of the Rolls.—That case depended upon very peculiar circumstances.) Whatever view the court may take of the case, the plaintiff Tangney ought not to be visited with the costs of the application, since there is an express decision of the court. If Tangney can have no relief on an application like the present, it would amount to a prohibition to institute such a suit in any case, however urgent or necessary.

MASTER OF THE ROLLS.—I have perused the documents used in Loftie v. Forbes. The estate there was superabundant. A minute calculation as to the value of the estate and the amount of the incumbrances was made in the affidavits used, shewing that the fund was ample. This is purely a question of law. This is a case in which a simple contract creditor for £226 7s., due in respect of bills of exchange and a book debt, has filed a bill to administer the assets of his debtor, within two months after his decease. Having regard to the sound policy of discouraging unnecessary suits, certainly (if I had any discretion) I would take into consideration the conduct of the plaintiff in instituting this suit, as influencing my judgment in this case. But, regarding the matter as a mere question of law, I consider this motion cannot be sustained. If this had been the case of a first incumbrancer, I would have no hesitation in following Loftie v. Forbes, in which case there was a large surplus, as appears from the original affidavit. Nothing could be more just than this order made by Sir M. O'Loughlen, which I am prepared to follow in a similar case; but a plaintiff circumstanced as Tangney is here, is not entitled to have the payment of costs so due by him accelerated, and before he looked for that, he should shew that he was entitled to receive them. Here the plaintiff Tangney had not himself paid the costs which he was seeking from the receiver; and some of those costs he would not, in any event, be entitled to be repaid, except in the same priority as his own demand. As to the costs of the first incumbrancer, the plaintiff Tangney may make out a case to entitle him to carry a motion for repayment of them; for Hall v. Hill certainly lays down a rule which would justify a plaintiff in seeking to have the costs of prior incumbrancers reported to him, not merely in the priority of his own demand, but of the prior incumbrances themselves. But the plaintiff's notice is not here framed in such a way as to entitle him to carry his motion as to these; and I will, therefore, refuse the application, as to all, with costs. I will, however, insert in the order that it is without prejudice to the plaintiff's applying for the costs of prior incumbrancers hereafter. But the plaintiff must serve a different notice, and shew that he has paid their costs, and that the estate is sufficient to reach such incumbrancers.

Motion refused with costs.

HELSHAM v. BURTON.—Feb. 23.

Practice—Service out of the Jurisdiction.

Mr. F. Meagher moved for liberty to enter a parliamentary appearance for defendants, Henry Bennett and wife, and to take the bill pro confesso against the defendants, Henry Bennett and his wife, who were served at Genoa, under the following circumstances. The bill was filed to raise a jointure of £500 per annum vested in Anne Hesham, one of the plaintiffs, and prayed a sale of the lands charged therewith; and the defendants Bennett and his wife, were made defendants, as being entitled to part of a sum of £4,000 provided for younger children by the same settlement which created the jointure. Pursuant to an order giving liberty to serve these defendants out of the jurisdiction, the plaintiff, P. G. Hesham, proceeded to Genoa, and, being unable to find any Englishman to serve the subpoena, applied to the British Consul, who refused to give any assistance. Hesham then repaired to the residence of the defendant, with an Italian named Guffioni, who, not being permitted to see the defendants, left a copy of the order giving liberty to serve them, and also of the prayer of the bill, subpoena, and notice to answer, in the hall, in presence of the servant of the defendants. This service was verified by the affidavit of Guffioni and Hesham.

MASTER OF THE ROLLS.—You can introduce a charge into your bill that these parties are out of the jurisdiction. I consider this service irregular, and will not make an order to take this bill pro confesso. I do not approve of a party acting as his own process-server. There are gentlemen who go abroad regularly every year for the purpose—one of them, I believe, connected with this court; and that is the best mode of serving parties out of the jurisdiction.

LORD CORK v. BLENNEHASSETT.—March 2.

Practice—Second Amendment after Demurrer has been allowed.

Mr. Franks moved for liberty to amend, under the following circumstances. A demurrer had been taken to the whole bill on the 2nd of February; on the 16th it was allowed by notice, and within the ten days allowed by the 64th General Order, an amendment was made by filing an affidavit that a certain deed mentioned in the bill had been lost, the want of which affidavit was one of the grounds of demurrer. On the 26th, the plaintiff's solicitor went to the office for the purpose of making amendments in the bill, but was not allowed to do so, the officer being of opinion that an amendment had been already made. On the 27th, the notice was served by permission.

Mr. Sherlock, contra.—The cause is out of court. There are several grounds of demurrer; the affidavit has only rectified one. If it alone were necessary, why apply now for liberty to amend? The application proves that the demurrer has been allowed on other grounds which have not been amended within the time specified, and the facts sought to be introduced were either known previously to the plaintiff, or are statements to avoid a demurrer, such as the insertion of a statement of the confusion of boundaries.

MASTER OF THE ROLLS.—The 64th General Order is very precise. Where a demurrer is taken to the whole bill, there are two courses for the plaintiff to pursue—either to set the demurrer down for argument, or to allow it by notice; and if allowed, the plaintiff has ten days to amend. Now, in this case there was a clear amendment, within the ten days, by the filing of the affidavit; its absence was a ground of demurrer, the reason why a Court of Equity requires it, being that the jurisdiction shall not be transferred from a court of law to this court, on a bare suggestion of the loss of the deed. The affidavit is an essential part of the plaintiff's title, and the filing of it was an amendment, and a compliance with the rule. I shall permit the amendments to be made.

Motion granted.

DONOVAN v. SWEENEY.—March 9.

Head Landlord—Right to Arrears out of Fund in Court, after Interest evicted.

Dwyer, Q.C., on behalf of the head landlord, moved that the receiver should, out of the balance appearing on his account then in course of being passed, pay to the head landlord the sum of £161 19s. 9d., being the amount received by him out of the lands in the notice specified, in part discharge of the arrears of head rent, or that, if necessary, it should be referred to the Master to ascertain what amount had been received out of the lands since the passing of the last account, properly applicable to the payment of head rent.

Mr. Collins, contra, resisted the motion, on the ground that the landlord had evicted the tenant's interest, and that his remedy was either at law, or by filing a bill. The point has never been decided, but the cases of Haynes v. Colthurst (1 Hog. 377), and O'Keefe v. Dennehy (Fla. & Ksl. 404), are analogous. Where a landlord obtains liberty to bring an ejectment, his remedy, so far as this court is concerned, is at an end, and he does not obtain the costs of the motion. (Master of the Rolls.) That is a misapprehension; although where he brings his ejectment he does not get them in this court, they are taxed at law, and he receives them in that way; and if he be paid by the receiver, or out of a fund in court, he then gets them here.)

The motion is premature. The account has not yet been passed. The court will not make an order in anticipation. The receiver may not have a balance in hands.

Mr. M'Obay appeared for the receiver, and stated that the balance would not amount to the sum stated in the notice, as the receiver was entitled to large deductions for costs, but was ready to pay whatever would be the balance, as the court should direct.

MASTER OF THE ROLLS.—The practice of the court is not unsettled. It is the common course of the court, if no ejectment has been brought, to direct the receiver to pay the head landlord. Has the landlord lost his right, by bringing his ejectment, to recover those rents which it was impossible for him to have received, the property being under the control of the court, and which he cannot recover from the tenants who have already paid. It would be extremely unjust to hold that he had, and contrary to the statute law of this country, which, after judgment in ejectment, gives him the same remedies for recovery of arrears as he had previously to the ejectment being brought. I shall therefore declare that the Master be at liberty to direct payment to the head landlord of the balance on the receiver's account after all just credits.

EQUITY EXCHEQUER.—MICHAELMAS TERM.

ELLIOTT v. ELLIOTT.

When the interest in lands over which a receiver has been appointed, is evicted for non-payment of rent, if there be a fund in court received out of those lands, the landlord is entitled to have them applied in payment of the arrears of rent.

In this case, one year's head rent became due in November, 1846, and on the 10th of February, 1847, an order was made, giving liberty to the head landlord to proceed at law. In Easter Term, 1847, an ejectment was brought, and on the 19th of November following, judgment was marked, and the habere subsequently executed, and the period for redemption expired in May, 1847. The head landlord now applied that the accountant-general might, out of the fund in court to the credit of the cause, pay the costs of the order giving liberty to proceed at law, and that the balance might be applied in discharge of the arrears of rent due on the 1st November, 1847.

Battersby, and Forbes Johnson, for the motion, contended that the funds in court being the produce of the lands would have been paid to the landlord but for the appointment of the receiver, and should now be applied in part discharge of the arrears.

Ormsby and Concannon contra.—On behalf of the reported creditors, resisted the motion, on the ground that the landlord had evicted the tenant's interest, and the time for redemption had expired, and the court having given liberty to bring the ejectment and recover possession, would not interfere further. The case of O'Keefe v. Dennehy, (Fl. & K. 404,) was referred to, in which a tenant who was plaintiff in a redemption suit, having dismissed his own bill with costs, was allowed, after payment of the defendant's costs, to draw out of court the rent which had been lodged by him.

The Court made the order sought, declaring that the landlord was entitled to the money in court as of right, the rents being paid to the receiver in usum jus habentis, and they distinguished the case from that of O'Keefe v. Dennehy, because the landlord's remedy for the recovery of the rent still subsisted; but, in the case before the court, the tenant having paid his rent to the receiver, was not liable to pay it over again.

Motion granted.

COURT OF EXCHEQUER CHAMBER.

NEVINS v. PHELAN.—Feb. 1.

CORAM BLACKBURNE, C.J., DOHERTY, C.J., PIGOT, C.B., PENNEFATHER, B., TORRENS, J., CRAMPTON, J., PERRIN, J., RICHARDS, B., BALL, J., JACKSON, J., MOORE, J.

Pleading—Immaterial Issue—Verdict—Venire de Novo.

The defendant avowed for rent due on a particular day. The plaintiff pleaded in bar "riens in arrear" and the jury found no rent due on the particular day named in the avowry. Held, that such finding of the jury did not dispose of the actual issue knit between the parties, the precise day specified by the avowry not constituting a parcel of the issue; and in such case the time is immaterial.

This was error from a judgment of the Court of Queen's Bench. The postea not having been returned to the court below, the question was not argued there.

The action was replevin for goods distrained on the 17th of April, 1845. There were three avowries, and one cognizance; it was upon the third avowry that the question arose; the judgment was entered generally upon the avowries and cognizance. The third avowry, after deducing title to the defendant, (the plaintiff in error) shewed an entry by the plaintiff in replevin under a demise by defendant on the 29th of July, 1840. That before the 25th of March, 1844, plaintiff gave notice in writing that he would quit the demised lands on the 29th of September, 1844; that plaintiff did not quit, but held until the said time, when, &c. That plaintiff thereby became liable to pay double rent; that because it was not paid on the 25th of March, 1844, defendant avowed the taking, &c. Plea—Riens in arrear. Verdict for plaintiff below. It did not appear on the record that the judge refused to leave it to the jury whether the double rent was due on the 25th of March, 1845.

Foley—The defect was cured by pleading over. The rent became due under statute 15 Geo. 2, c. 8, s. 9. The allegation of time is immaterial in an avowry. Forty v. Imber, (6 East. 434); Smith v. Nangle, (7 Cl. & Fin. 405). (Crampton, J.—This is clearly an immaterial issue. A court of error cannot award a repleader.) (Pigot, C.B.—There is a distinct averment that the plaintiff became liable to pay the rent, and then comes the statement of the rent not being due in 1844.) (Blackburne, C.J.—It is quite clear that the real question between the parties was not tried.) (Jackson, J.—You argue that a material question has been joined, but not tried, and, in place of it, an immaterial issue has been tried.)

J. B. Walsh, with him Harrie, contra.—No ruling of the judge appears on the record on the subject. They contended—1st. That the plea was bad, repugnant, and insensible, and that the parties might fall back on the plea, and have judgment on the whole record, although the defect had been passed over. 2dly. That the issue joined was immaterial, and a repleader could not be awarded. 1st. The date is not immaterial in every sense, for it may make the pleading bad. Ring v. Rotherborough, (2 Cr. & Jer. 418). (Crampton, J.—That was on special demurrer.) The court will presume that the pleader mistook the effect of the statute, and that he supposed the half year's rent became due immediately after the service of the notice to quit. Also, it will not presume against the verdict, but rather that the real intention of the parties has been found by the jury. (Doherty, C.J.—It is plain that 1845 was meant.) They might as well argue that the dates in 1844 should mean 1843, and thus support the allegation of the non-payment of the rent in 1844. (Moore, J.—The real question is, whether the double rent was due.) (Blackburne, C.J.—We are bound to reverse the judgment, and the matter will go down to trial, and there will then be a finding upon the real question.) (Pigot, C.B.—The jury have found a question which confessedly does not touch the merits of the case.) (Perrin, J.—It is not denied that the holding existed, it is only denied that the rent was in arrear.) 2dly. There is only a hiatus in the record, and therefore a mere discontinuance. (Pigot, C.B.—There cannot be a discontinuance, if it appear on the record that there is a substantial material issue not tried.) (Pennefather, B.—Can it be said that an imperfect record can bind the parties for ever.) The statements preceding the averment of the plaintiff's having become liable to pay the double rent, are merely by way of inducement. There is no positive averment that the rent was actually due. An immaterial issue is defined in Bennett v. Holbeck, (3 Wm. Saund. 319); Thomas v. Willoughby, (Cro. Jac. 585). (Perrin, J.—The statements were not inducements, for they are the very foundation of the avowry.) (Pigot, C.B.—If it were a case for a repleader, when it comes to this court the course is to reverse the judgment simpliciter.) R. v. Phillips, (1 Burr. 294.) No venire de novo could issue, for the question would be the same as already tried.

Napier, Q.C., in reply.—The avowry is for the double rent. The plea denies the rent alleged in the avowry to be due; being due, it was impossible to go for anything else than the double rent in this avowry. Marks v. Lahee, (4 Scott, 187).

BLACKBURNE, C.J.—I consider the finding of the jury to be absolutely immaterial. The avowry was repugnant, so far as it stated the day of the rent being due. The dates are plain, and shew that the right to the double rent accrued on the 25th of March, 1845, i. e. at the expiration of the six months after the notice of surrender, and the whole of the avowry is pointed to that fact. It would have been ground for special demurrer. The plea in bar traverses the right to the double rent, and, notwithstanding the parties have taken issue on the false date, and have vitiated the finding which would have settled the rights of the parties; the judgment must be reversed.

PERRIN, J.—I feel some difficulty in the case. The avowry states grounds for claiming double rent. I think that if there had been a general demurrer to that avowry, it would have been held bad. The party, instead of demurring, joins issue, and he either joins issue upon the particular day, or not: if it were on the particular day, the finding was right. I feel great difficulty in reversing the judgment on the ground of a wrong finding.

Judgment reversed. Venire de novo.

COMMISSION OF OYER AND TERMINER.

QUEEN v. DUFFY.—Jan. 13, 18.

CORAM PERRIN, J. AND RICHARDS, B.

Felony not Capital—Demurrer—Final Judgment.

The court will not pronounce final judgment on an indictment for a not capital felony, a demurrer thereto being disallowed.

The Attorney-General, on behalf of the crown, having called on the court to pronounce their final judgment on those portions of the indictment decided to be valid, (see ante, 81) it was directed to stand for argument on this day.

The Solicitor-General.—The crown is now entitled to have sentence passed upon the prisoner in the same manner as if he had been found guilty by a jury. It may be contended, on the other side, that the prisoner is entitled to a respondens oster, but that is not the case; for, by taking this general demurrer, the facts have been admitted as set out in the indictment, 2 Hale, P. C. 258, cap. 33. According to the older authorities, even in capital cases where there is a general demurrer to an indictment, the prisoner is not entitled to plead over, and if any exception is made to this rule, it is only made in favorem vite, and does not apply to the present case, which is not capital. Also where a party is permitted to plead over, it is in the case of a plea, and not a demurrer. (The Year Book, 14 Ed. 4; Coke, 2 Inst. 178). If a party demurs in law, and it be adjudged against him, he shall have judgment to be hanged (P. C. lib. 2, cap. 34, fol. 98); and the same distinction is taken between a plea and a demurrer to the indictment. Hawkins 2, P. C. cap. 31, s. 7, says, "But it seems that in criminal cases not capital, if the defendant demur to an indictment, whether in abatement or otherwise, the court will not give judgment against him to answer over, but final judgment. The present not being a capital case that is a direct opinion in favour of this position. In King v. Taylor (3 B. & Cr. 502), it is laid down—"The reason of the rule is in favour of life; but as the reason of the rule does not apply to misdemeanour cases, the rule ought not to be extended, &c.; therefore, the judgment ought to be final." In the case of the Queen v. Phelps (1 C. & M. 180), which was an indictment for murder, Colman, J., says, "the prisoners may demur and plead over to the felony at the same time; or they may demur, and if the demurrer should be decided against them they may plead over to the felony." That, however, was an indictment for a capital offence. The next case was Queen v. Adams and others (1 C. & M. 299); an indictment for assembling to destroy a house, which offence had been capital until a short time previous to the trial, and the prisoner was allowed to demur and plead over to the felony, and the authority of the Queen v. Phelps, which was a capital case, was relied on. The next authority was the Queen v. Purchase (1 C. & M. 617), an indictment for embezzlement, and Patteson, J., says—"I think there is no doubt the prisoner may demur and plead over to the felony." These cases were overruled by Queen v. Ogers (2 M. & Rob. 479), which was an indictment for cutting and maiming; and Crosswell, J., says—"It is admitted that the only mode of the prisoner's taking advantage of the objection would be by demurrer; and it is said, that in felonies he might demur and plead over at the same time. I am decidedly of opinion the prisoner has no such right; and Mr. Justice Patteson and myself, after consultation on the Oxford circuit, agreed that it ought not be allowed. If a prisoner demurs, he must abide the consequences." In the Queen v. Bowen (C. & K. 501), which was an indictment for destroying a registry of baptism, the prisoner being called on to plead, Tindal, C. J., says—"This is not a capital case; you may, therefore, be bound by your demurrer, and may not be allowed to plead over." "It is a very doubtful point. I give no judgment; I only forewarn counsel that he may be concluded by the demurrer."

Napier, Q. C. with Butt, Q. C.—The court is now called on to make a decision, in its nature prejudicial to the administration of justice. It is the duty of the counsel on behalf of every prisoner to see that the indictment is properly framed, and if he should consider its frame likely to embarrass the prisoner in his defence, and the consideration of that question is submitted to the court, shall it be at the peril of the prisoner, and is he to be liable to transportation for an error of his counsel? In 2 Hale, 225, it is laid down, that "if a confession be extrajudicial, though it be in court, as where the prisoner freely tells the fact, and demands the opinion of the court whether it be a felony—though upon the fact thus shewn it appears to be a felony—the court will not record his confession, but will admit him to plead to the felony not guilty." The confession is made, not for the purpose of admitting guilt in the abstract, but to know from the court whether the offence charged constitutes guilt or not. And in 4 Bl. Com. 334, it is said "some have held that if, on demurrer, the point of law be adjudged against the prisoner, he shall have judgment of execution, &c." But this is denied by others, who hold that in such case he shall be directed, and received to plead the general issue, not guilty, after a demurrer determined against him. All the authorities upon this point are to be found in 2 Gab. Cr. Law. 325-6. The distinction attempted to be made between capital cases and others no longer exists. Gray's case, (11 Cl. & F. 482,) establishes that where there was any privilege, in favorem vitæ, granted to a prisoner, it is now extended to all cases of felonies. There is certainly some obscurity concerning the ancient rule as laid down in the year books, but that may be cleared up by considering that when a party demurred he could not be considered as mute, and the penance of pein forte et dure could not be applied, which was only to compel a party to plead, and, in such a case judgment was final, not because he demurred, and was afterwards willing to put himself on the country, but because he rested on his demurrer, and would not go to trial at all. In the Year Book 14 Ed. 4, p. 7, pl. 10, the words are, s'il demur sur un plea, that is, if he rests on a plea, and goes no further, if he does not put himself on the country. Brook. Pl. 86, where he says "peremptory plea," but that does not now seem to be law, for in King v. Gibson, (8 E. 110,) Le Blanc, J. says, "The general rule is against the defendant, and the current of authorities shew that pleading over is only allowed in case of felony in favorem vitæ, and in the case of the King v. Taylor, (3 B. & Cr. 502,) Ld. Tenterden says, on a plea which confesses a fact, if the decision is against the prisoner, it must be final, (2 Hale, 257; 2 Coke, Inst. 178.)" In favour of life a man may plead a double plea, Sir H. Vane's case, (6 St. Tr. 143.) There is no distinction between appeals (Com. Dig. tit. Appeal). After demurrer overruled, a party may plead, Gavan v. Hussey, (1 Dyer, 39, B. Pl. 65); Hume v. Ogle, (Cr. El. 196); Wilson v. Law, (1 Ld. Ray. 20); Reg. v. Bowen, (1 C. & K. 503); Reg. v. Houston, (J. & B. 103). In Reg. v. B. R. Co., (1 G. & Dav. 459, Sc. 3 Q. B. R. 224,) judgment was given for the crown, and the parties had liberty to plead over. The 11 & 12 Vic. c. 12, under which this indictment is framed, plainly contemplates a conviction by verdict. The fourth and seventh sections relate only to convictions in open court. A demurrer cannot be considered such. In Rastall, (Ent. 584,) after a plea of sanctuary, the prisoner is told if he wished he might plead over, he did so, and was acquitted. Bacon, Ab. (tit. demurrer,) states that the judgment in demurrer is respondent ouster. A demurrer to an indictment is the same as a plea in abatement, (2 Hale, c. 30, p. 236.) The sense in which a demurrer can be said to confess, is only because it does not deny the facts. It is only an implied admission of what is well pleaded, but here the prisoner says nothing is well pleaded. (2 Hale, c. 29, p. 225.) Blackstone's Com. 239, does not agree with the opinion that the prisoner was not to be permitted to plead over. In Reg. v. Houston, (2 Cr. & Dix. C.C. 349, Justice Burton expressed his opinion that in such a case as the present the judgment should be respondent ouster.

Attorney-General in reply.—In this case, the court has no discretion, but is bound to give final judgment; and although there may not be any precedent of a case in which final judgment has been given, there is no instance of a case such as the present in which judgment of respondent ouster was given. I understand the meaning of a demurrer to be, that a party puts himself upon trial by the court, instead of by the country; and the case referred to by Hale, in 2 P. C. 315, reported in the Year Book 14, Ed. 4, was where a party put in an imperfect plea. If an indictment is insufficient, the prisoner can move to quash it; but that is different from the course taken. Hawk. book 2, c. 23, s. 137, has been relied on, but the distinction should be borne in mind between an appeal and an indictment. An appeal was not at the suit of the crown, and was allowed to be heard after an indictment. All the precedents of appeals are after indictments for the same offence. One of the most recent cases is Ashford v. Thornton (1 B. & Ald. 404; see 2 Hawk. c. 31, s. 5, ed. 1824; Stanford, lib. 3, 150; and 3 Ld. R. 70); where the pleadings in Wilson v. Law are set out. Gaven v. Hussey (Dyer, 38), was an appeal, and no opinion was founded on the question now before the court. In Hume v. Ogle (Cro. Eliz. 196) there was no decision on the subject. In Com. Dig. Tit. Justices, W. 2 & 3, the case of Queen v. Gray does not go so far as has been stated; it only decides that in a trial for felony, the prisoner has a right to a peremptory challenge, but not that any privilege granted in favorem vitæ extends to all felonies.

Jan. 18, PERRIN, J.—In this case the court has already pronounced judgment upon the demurrer to the indictment, the effect of which is, that as to the first and third counts, the demurrer has been overruled, and as to the overt acts in all the other counts, except the first, the demurrer has been allowed. The Crown now calls for final judgment, but the prisoner's counsel insists that he is entitled to plead. In the course of the argument several cases have been cited on both sides, and we have looked into them all, but my brother Richards has furnished me with a case which was not mentioned, and it is not only the most modern, but was decided so lately as the year 1845, and since this question was under the consideration of the English judges in Gray's case; I allude to the case of Queen v. Serva, (2 Car. & K. 53), in which, after a demurrer to the indictment was overruled, the prisoner was permitted to plead over to the felony. We consider it right to follow that decision, and, as was done in the precedent referred to by Mr. Butt in Rastall after judgment upon the demurrer, at the desire of the prisoner we will allow him to plead to the felony.

ROLLS COURT.—Feb. 17.

REEVES v. COX.

IRWIN, Petitioner.—COX, Respondent.

Sequestration—Judgment Creditor.

A bill filed and a decree pronounced in 1848, directing the defendant to perform a certain agreement, and to pay a sum of money; and a sequestration granted to compel performance of same; upon the application of a creditor by judgment of 1839, the court refused to interfere with the possession of the sequestrators.

In this case it appeared that in Easter Term 1839, Henry Irwin the petitioner, obtained a judgment in the Court of Queen's Bench, against the respondent, for the penal sum of £2000, which was duly revived on the 5th of December, 1848. A petition was presented for a receiver on foot of said judgment, and the usual notice order obtained, which on the 30th of December, 1848, was duly served on the respondent. On the 3rd day of March, 1848, the bill in the cause of Reeves v. Cox, was filed to compel the specific performance of an agreement to grant an annuity, and for the payment of the amount of certain judgments. The defendant having neglected to answer; on the 17th of June, 1848, a decree pro confesso was pronounced, by which it was ordered, that the said agreement should be performed, and that the defendant William Cox, should within one month from the date thereof, grant an annuity, and pay to the plaintiff the amount of the judgments, and the interest due thereon, and the costs of the cause. The defendant having neglected to perform this decree; on the 20th of December, 1848, a sequestration was granted against his goods, chattels, and estates, directed to Kennedy Ryan and Michael Ryan, in order to compel performance of same.

D. R. Kane, Q.C. now moved in behalf of the petitioner, for the removal of the sequestrators and the appointment of a receiver, and relied on the cases of Burns and wife, v. Robinson and others, (7 I.E.R. 188). White v. Bishop of Peterborough. (3 Swanst. 109.)

Hughes, Q.C. contra.

Mr. Hayes in reply cited Brooke v. Horner. (10 L.E. Rep. 305.)

MASTER OF THE ROLLS.—In this case, the petitioner on the 9th of December, obtained liberty to serve notice of the conditional order for the appointment of a receiver; that is not, however, to be considered as affecting either the lands or rents, as it is the second order which has that effect. Under these circumstances, the question arises whether the petitioner is entitled to sue out an elegit. I am of opinion he is not so entitled, and that if he attempted to do so, he would be guilty of a contempt. The case of Angell v. Smith, (9 Ves. 336), decides that it is a contempt of court to disturb sequestrators in possession, and Lord Eldon lays it down "That a party cannot claim though by adverse title in any other way than by coming to be examined pro interesse suo," he goes on to say, "consider the consequence; how are sequestrators to defend their possessions against an ejectment? the Court of King's Bench have decided that where a sequestration is awarded to collect money to pay a demand in equity, if it is not executed, that is, if the sequestrators do not take possession, and a judgment creditor takes out execution notwithstanding the sequestration awarded, there may be a levy under the execution, intimating that if the sequestration is executed, the other though prior must come here, how can any of these parties defend as landlord; after the tenants have attorned to the receiver, the court is the landlord." And in the case of Brooks v. Greathead, (1 Jac. & W. 178); the Master of the Rolls speaking of a trial at law, says, "This, however, cannot be done without the leave of the court. It was so settled in Angell v. Smith, where the rule was laid down, both with respect to receivers and sequestrators, that their possession is not to be disturbed without leave. But when a party is prejudiced by having a receiver put in his way, the course has either been to give him leave to bring an ejectment, or to permit him to be examined pro interesse suo, which may perhaps often be the most convenient mode." The court is the landlord, and if the petitioner proceeded by elegit, he would be liable to an attachment. The only question is, whether under the sheriff's act, the receiver being substituted for proceedings by elegit, can I appoint a receiver and disturb the possession of the sequestrators; the proceedings under this act are in the nature of an equitable elegit, and I do not think the possession of the court as landlord, can be disturbed on the application of a person who is not entitled to sue out an elegit. There is some difficulty in the present case, the proceedings by sequestration being not to bring a sum of money alone, but also to enforce the performance of a decree, and according to the case of Goldsmith v. Goldsmith, (5 Hare 123), a sale cannot be had except for payments of costs.

Feb. 20.—MASTER OF THE ROLLS.—No rule on this motion, the sequestrators undertaking to enter into security by recognizance, to account for the rents and profits of the lands in the writ of sequestration mentioned; this order to be without prejudice to any application which the petitioner might make, to be paid the amount of his demand out of the rents and profits to be received by the sequestrators.

QUEEN'S BENCH.

O'BRIEN v. QUEEN IN ERROR.—Nov. 22, 1848, Jan. 16, 1849.*

Form of Caption—Joint and Several Commission—Treason compassing the Queen's Death—Delivery of list of Witnesses to Prisoner ten days previous to Trial—Challenges—Form of

* At the conclusion of the argument in this case an application was made on behalf of T. F. Meagher, T. M'Manus, and Donohoe, who had been tried and convicted for a similar offence, and had assigned similar errors, that they should be heard by their counsel before the Court proceeded to give judgment, and Frost's case, (9 Car. & P. 129), was referred to. The Court arranged that one counsel should be heard on behalf of each, with liberty to the Attorney General to reply.

Allocutus—Statutes 36 Geo. 3, c. 7; 57 Geo. 3, c. 6; 11 & 12 Vic. c. 12.

Held, Crampton, J. dissentiente, that the prisoner claiming the benefit of a certain statute, not compelled with, was entitled to raise that question by a plea of a declinatory nature.

Where the caption stated, that "by virtue of a commission under letters patent, bearing date, &c., and directed to A. B., C. D., and E. F., and others, in said letters named, &c." Held that the commission was not a joint one, and that the three persons named had full power to act without the others.

Held, that the 10 Hen. 7, c. 2, extended the provisions of the 25 Edw. 3 to Ireland, and made it treason to levy war there.

Held, that the first and fourth sections of the 57 Geo. 3 do not extend to Ireland, and that as the prisoners were not indicted under the 11 & 12 Vic. c. 12, they were not entitled to the benefit of that act.

Held, that the word "treason," without any other word or qualification attached to it, meant high treason, and the prisoner, therefore, was entitled to but twenty peremptory challenges (9 Geo. 4, c. 54).

Held, that the allocutus was sufficient where the prisoner was asked why the said, &c., "should not proceed to judgment."

This was a writ of error from the judgment of the Court of Special Commission, held for the county Tipperary, before the Lord Chief Justice of the Queen's Bench, the Lord Chief Justice of the Common Pleas, and Mr. Justice Moore, in Clonmel, on the 21st of September, 1848. The indictment was for high treason, and contained six counts. The five first were for levying war, and the sixth for compassing the Queen's death. The prisoner pleaded a declinatory plea, as follows:—

"He, the said William Smith O'Brien, says that he ought not to be compelled now to answer the same, because he saith that by the indictment aforesaid, he, the said William Smith O'Brien, is charged and indicted for, amongst other offences, compassing, imagining, and intending to put our lady the Queen to death, and that by the statutable enactments in that case made and provided, and now in force in this realm, every person indicted for compassing, imagining, or intending death or destruction to our lady the Queen, is entitled to have delivered to him, ten days before his trial, and in presence of two or more credible witnesses, a copy of the indictment, and, at the same time, a list of the witnesses to be produced on the trial for proving the said indictment, mentioning the names, professions, and places of abode of the said witnesses. And the said William Smith O'Brien says that the indictment aforesaid was found a true bill of the jurors aforesaid, on Thursday, the 21st day of September, instant, and that on the said Thursday, the 21st day of September, instant, a copy of the said indictment was delivered to him, the said William Smith O'Brien, in open court, but that no list of the witnesses, or of any witnesses or witness, to be produced on the trial for proving the said indictment, was then, or at any time since, delivered to him, the said William Smith O'Brien. And the said William Smith O'Brien says, that ten days have not elapsed since the delivery to him, the said William Smith O'Brien, of the indictment aforesaid, and this he, the said William Smith O'Brien, is ready to verify. Wherefore he prays judgment, and that he may not be compelled now to answer the said indictment, and soforth."

Demurrer and joinder therein. The demurrer being allowed, the prisoner pleaded Not Guilty. There was a verdict of guilty, and judgment thereon, on which the prisoner now brought his writ of error. The remaining portions of the record on which questions were raised were, first, on the form of the letters patent, as set out in the caption. Be it remembered, &c., at, &c., before the Right Hon. F. Blackburne, &c., Right Hon. J. Doherty, &c., and the Right Hon. R. Moore, &c., nominated and appointed to inquire, &c., "and also nominated and appointed, from time to time, to deliver, &c., under letters patent of, &c., bearing date, &c., our said lady the Queen, to them, the said Francis Blackburne, John Doherty, and Richard Moore, and others in the said letters named, directed by the oaths of," &c. And, secondly, as to the form of the allocutus, which was as follows:—"Upon which it is demanded of the said W. S. O'Brien, whether he now hath anything to say for himself, wherefore the said justices and commissioners ought not, upon the premises and verdict aforesaid, to proceed to judgment against him, the said W. S. O'Brien."

The errors assigned were as follows:—"That in the record and proceedings aforesaid, and also in the giving the judgment aforesaid, there is manifest error in this, to wit, that by the record aforesaid, it appears that judgment was given upon the record aforesaid, for our said lady the Queen, whereas, by the laws of this realm, judgment ought to have been given thereupon for the said W. S. O'Brien, and against our said lady the Queen; and, therefore, in that there is manifest error. There is error also in this, to wit, that it does not appear by the record aforesaid, that the justices aforesaid, by whom said indictment was taken, and before whom the same was tried, were duly authorized in that behalf to take or try the same; and, therefore, in that there is manifest error. There is error also in this, to wit, that by the record aforesaid, it appears that the letters patent in said record mentioned, appointing and nominating Justices and Commissioners of Oyer and Terminer, and gaol delivery, for the said county of Tipperary, were directed to the justices by whom the said indictment was taken, and others in said letters patent named, but it does not appear in or by said record, that any power or jurisdiction was given to any number of the justices and commissioners to whom the said letters patent were directed, less than the whole number of such justices and commissioners, to take indictments, or to hear and determine the offences in said indictment charged; and yet by the record aforesaid, it appears that said indictment was taken by, and tried before three only of the justices and commissioners to whom the said letters patent were directed; and, therefore, in that there is manifest error. There is error also in this, to wit, that judgment was given for our said lady the Queen, upon the demurrer put in by her Majesty's Attorney-General to the plea pleaded by said W. S. O'Brien, on the 28th day of September, aforesaid, whereby he, the said W. S. O'Brien, prayed judgment, whether he should be compelled then to answer the said indictment whereas, by the law of this realm, judgment should have been given upon said demurrer for the said W. S. O'Brien; and, therefore, in that there is manifest error. There is error also in this, that by the record aforesaid, it appears that a copy of the indictment aforesaid was not delivered to him, the said W. S. O'Brien, ten days before his trial upon said indictment, pursuant to the statutable enactments in that behalf made and provided; and, therefore, in that there is manifest error. There is error also in this, to wit, that by the record aforesaid, it appears that no list of the witnesses, or of any witnesses or witness to be produced on the trial for proving the said indictment, was delivered to him, the said W. S. O'Brien, ten days before his trial upon the indictment aforesaid, pursuant to the statutable enactments in such case made and provided; and, therefore, in that there is manifest error. There is error also in this, to wit, that by the record aforesaid, it appears that the challenge of him, the said W. S. O'Brien, to Southcote Mansergh, one of the jurors aforesaid, who passed upon him, the said W. S. O'Brien, on the indictment aforesaid, was disallowed by the said justices and commissioners, whereas, by the laws of this realm, said last-mentioned challenge ought to have been allowed; and, therefore, in that there is manifest error. There is error also in this, to wit, that it does not appear by the record aforesaid, that it was demanded of him, the said W. S. O'Brien, in manner in like cases used and accustomed, and by law required, what he had to say why execution should not be awarded against him; and, therefore, in that there is manifest error.

Whiteside, Q. C., Butt, Q. C., Napier, Q. C., F. Fitzgerald, and Sir Colman O'Loughlin, for the prisoners.—The caption of the indictment is defective in not showing, with sufficient certainty, that the three judges before whom the indictment was taken had jurisdiction. The authority appears on the face of the caption to have been given to them and others, and there is nothing from which the court can infer that these three judges had of themselves authority to hold the sessions. (Bac. Abr. Title Authority, Letter D.; 2 Hawk. 25, s. 119; 2 Hale, P. C. 166, 167); Regina v. Hewins, (9 Car. & P. 786; 2 Hawk. 499; Chit. Prac. Cr. L. 180, 191); Hardy's case (24 St. Tr. 230); Frost's case (9 C. & P. 129); Rex v. Royce (4 Burr. 2073); Faulkner's case, 1 Saund. 248, note a). A caption is open to a demurrer, Rex v. Fearnley (1 Term Rep. 316). The precedent is a novel one, and unlike any to be found in England (2 Gabbett's Cr. L. 279.) [Blackburne, C.J.—Have you any authority that the caption in treason is not as amendable as in other cases?] Secondly, The offence of levying war, stated in the first five counts of the indictment, is not an offence in Ireland. The 25 Edw. 3 created that treason, and that statute, when passed, did not apply to Ireland; the words "in his realm" signified England only. Ireland, though a part of the dominions of England, formed no part of the realm of England (1 Hale, P. C. 155). The 10 Hen. 7, c. 2, which extended the English statutes to Ireland, made a careful distinction between "the realm of England" and "the land of Ireland;" and recites, "that divers good and profitable statutes having been made within the realm of England, whereby the said realm had greatly prospered, and in all likelihood so would this land, if the same statutes were used within it, wherefore be it ordered that all statutes made in the realm of England be decreed good and effectual in the law, and be accepted and used in this land of Ireland." The 10 Hen. 7 had not the effect of extending the 25th Edw. 3 to Ireland. It was not competent for an Irish Parliament to extend an English act to this country. The only effect of the 10 Hen. 7 would be to enact a statute in Ireland in precisely the words of the 25th Edw. 3. The words "in the realm," could not be substituted for "in his realm," there was no authority for the use of the words "this realm," which meant the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, and there was no law which made the levying of war in "this realm" treason. [Perrin, J.—Co. Litt. 141, b, shews that Poyning's law was extended to the REALM of Ireland.] By one statute, the levying of war in the land of Ireland was made treason; by another statute, the levying of war in England was made treason; but no statute had made the levying of war in the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland to be treason. The crown will contend that the indictment is good at common law, but we submit there can be no treason now by the common law (3 Coke, Inst. 21; 1 Hale, P. C. 86). The 25 Edw. 3 declares what shall be treason, and what not, King v. Speke (1 Salk. 358; 1 Saund. 121 a; 1 Hale, P. C. 76, 77, 85); Whits v. Jones (2 Gale & D. 822); Battersby v. Kirk (3 Scott, 11). The next objection which formed the substance of the plea put in by the prisoners is, that a copy of the indictment and a list of the witnesses to be produced against the prisoners was not delivered to them, at the same time, and ten days before the trial. This is the most important of our objections. We submit that the 57th Geo. 3, c. 6, when originally enacted, extended to Ireland, and gave to every person indicted for the treason of compassing or imagining the death of the sovereign, the benefit of the provisions of the 7 & 8 W. 3, c. 3, and the 7 Anne, c. 11. The 7 & 8 Wm. 3, gave the prisoner a copy of the indictment five days before trial, and by the 7 Anne the party accused was entitled to a list of the witnesses to be produced on the trial, and of the jury, to be delivered to him ten days before the trial. There was nothing in the 57 Geo. 3, c. 6, to shew that Ireland was to be excluded from its provisions. The treason of compassing the death of the sovereign was originally defined by the 25 Edw. 3. The 36 Geo. 3, c. 7, was, with respect to treason, both a declaratory and an enacting statute; there were three classes of treason provided for in it, and unquestionably the treason of compassing the death of the King, as framed by the 25th Edw. 3, was in terms comprised in the 36 Geo. 3. The 5th section of the 36 Geo. 3 gave the benefits of the acts of William and Anne to every person accused of any offence made or declared to be high treason by that act. The provisions of the 36 Geo. 3 were subsequently made perpetual by the 57 Geo. 3; the 2nd section of this latter act provided for a treason committed against the person of the sovereign, and no grounds existed for the supposition that the legislature of that day did not intend to extend that portion of the act to Ireland. According to the provisions of the 36th and 57th Geo. 3, a party tried for high treason, where the overt act charged was not one directed against the person of the sovereign, became entitled to the benefits conferred by the acts of William and Anne. The 11th Vic. c. 12, after reciting that doubts were entertained whether the provisions of the 36 Geo. 3 extended to Ireland, enacts that such of the provisions of the 36 Geo. 3 as were not thereby repealed, should extend to Ireland. All the provisions relating to attempts against the person of the monarch were repealed by the 11th Vict. Unless the overt act laid in the indictment came within the 4th section of the 57 Geo. 3, a party indicted for having levied war against the Queen was entitled to the benefit of the provisions of the statutes of William and Anne. None of the overt acts charged amounted to a direct attempt upon the life of the sovereign, as indicated in the 4th section of the 57 Geo. 3, and therefore, under the terms of the act itself, the prisoners are entitled to the benefits arising from it. The plea is good in form, and comes within the class of those specified in Bac. Ab. Title, Pleading, as a plea that the indictment should not then be proceeded with; it is a plea in suspension of the proceedings, and was put in at the right time, for the objection could not be taken until arraignment of the prisoners, as it was not until then that it could be known whether they would be furnished with the list ten days before the trial. The objection in Frost's case was of a more formal kind, and yet all the judges were of opinion that, had it been taken in due time, the effect would have been to postpone the trial to give due time for the delivery of the lists. Upon this objection the following authorities were referred to—Thistlewood's case (33 St. Tr. 683, 919); 1 Hale, 108; 7 Co. Rep. 10, b; Story's case (3 Dyer, 298, a); Wright v. Murphy (Jebb & B. 53); Russell v. Ledson (14 M. & W. 574). The peremptory challenge to the twenty-first juror ought to have been allowed. At common law, in the case of treason, a prisoner was entitled to thirty-five peremptory challenges; and the part of the 7 & 8 Wm. 3, which was extended to Ireland by the 1 & 2 Geo. 4, c. 24, recognized the right of peremptory challenge. The crown will contend that this right has been taken away by the 9 Geo. 4, c. 54, but we submit that the treason spoken of in that statute was petty treason, an offence then in existence, and not high treason. The prisoners should have been asked the specific question, why sentence of death should not be passed on them. This was an essential part of the record. Rex v. Geary

(1 Shower, 132), and the precedents are uniform upon the subject, King v. Garride (4 N. & M. 33); Anon. (3 Mod. 265); Rex v. Rogers and others (3 Burr, 1909). [Perrin, J., referred to the Duchess of Kingston's case (20 St. Tr. 625) where the words used were "what have you to allege against judgment being pronounced upon you?"]

Attorney-General (with him D. Lynch) for the crown.—The caption is the same as in S. Gray's case, (11 Cl. & F. 427), in Shea and Dwyer's case, in Hagen and Rice in error v. the Queen, decided in 1846, in Fogarty in Error v. the Queen, decided in the same year, and no question was raised in any of those cases as to its validity. The caption is mere matter of description, and the one now under consideration contains every necessary averment (2 Hawk. c. 25, s. 23); Rex v. Royce (4 Burr. 2073). The form of the commissions in England differs from those in Ireland, and the English precedents cannot apply. The commission in Ireland is to deliver the gaol generally, and is several as well as joint. Before "A. B. and others," in the common form, is sufficient, Leicester v. Hayden (Plowd. 384). The next objection amounts to this, that no count can now be framed in Ireland on which a prisoner can be tried for high treason. The treasons contemplated in this indictment were not created by the 25th Edw. 3, but were treasons at common law (3 Inst. 69). The 25th Edward 3 merely declared what the common law was, and did not create any new treason (2 Hale, P. C. 189). The indictment could be framed without the words contra formam, &c. (1 Hale, P. C. 147); Lord Stafford's case (7 St. Tr. 1217). The 10 Hen. 7 extends the 25 Edw. 3 to Ireland, and no foundation exists for the distinction between the words "the realm," as applicable to England, and "this land," used in reference to Ireland; for the 33 Hen. 8, in speaking of Ireland, uses the words "this realm" and "this land" indiscriminately. Ireland, by this statute, became "the realm" of Ireland. The words "within this realm," or "his realm," are mere venue, and the offence is committed within Ireland. The third objection is founded on the assumption, that the 36 Geo. 3 was co-extensive with the 25 Edw. 3, but the former statute had only reference to such treason as from the then condition of the times it became necessary to prevent and repress; namely, immediate personal attacks upon the sovereign. A person could not be charged, under the 25th Edw. 3, with treason for personal injury to the sovereign. The overt act in this indictment could not be supported under the 36 Geo. 3; indeed it is not pretended that that statute ever applied to Ireland. The 57 Geo. 3 makes perpetual the operation of the 36 Geo. 3, but we deny that if an act makes perpetual a temporary act, it thereby extends the operation of the first act. It is conceded that the only portion of the 36 Geo. 3 which was made perpetual by the 57 Geo. 3 was the first section, and can it be said that the 11 Vic. c. 12, when extending the said recited provisions of the 57 Geo. 3 to Ireland, repealed the 36 Geo. 3, c. 31, Ir., and the 1 & 2 Geo. 4, c. 24, Ir.? We next submit that this matter is not properly the subject of a plea, and should have been left to the discretion of the court. No merits existed in the case, nor was there any ground of hardship. It is not pretended that the plea, or objection, applies to the five counts upon which the prisoners were convicted; this is, in fact, a writ of error, brought to reverse the judgment of acquittal upon the only count upon which there was an acquittal. The argument for the prisoners, as to the non-allowance of the peremptory challenge, is grounded on the assumption, that the statute which expressly took away the right of peremptory challenge to more than twenty in Ireland, was confined to cases of petty treason; that is a fallacy, for the 10 & 11 Car. 1, c. 9, shows that twenty challenges only were allowed in cases both of high and petty treason. No difficulty exists as to the allocutus; the words "judgment" and "sentence" are used synonymously in the 54 Geo. 3, c. 54, which prescribes the judgment, and the word "execution" is not used; the details are comprised in the word "judgment."

Jan. 16.—BLACKBURN, C. J., now delivered judgment.—In these several cases writs of error have been brought to reverse the judgment pronounced at a special sessions under a Commission of Oyer and Terminer for the county of Tipperary. The errors which have been argued are the same in all the cases, and I shall consider them in the order in which they have been argued. The first error assigned is, that the caption of the indictment does not shew with sufficient certainty that the Commissioners before whom the Commission was held had authority to hold it. The caption states that at a Special Sessions of Oyer and Terminer and general gaol delivery, before the two Chief Justices and Mr. Justice Moore, nominated and appointed to hear and determine all treasons, felonies, &c., and from time to time to deliver the gaols of the county Tipperary, by virtue of a Commission of Oyer and Terminer and general gaol delivery directed to them and others, it was found and presented, &c. The plaintiffs in error contend that this commission conferred only a joint authority upon the three justices named, and others, and if this were so the objection would be well founded; but, in my opinion, that is not the import of the caption. It contains two averments, each distinct from and independent of the other; one averment is, that the three judges named were nominated and appointed to hear and determine the cases; and the other is, that the Commission was directed to them and others. Each of these averments refers to a different matter; one, the direction to all the commissioners; the other, the operative part of the instrument; and so distinct are they, that the address contains not the least intimation of the contents of the patent or of the authority it confers. Both the averments being matter of record, the facts averred must be taken to be true, nor is there any reason why a Commission may not be directed to many, with an authority to act severally as well as jointly. The argument of the plaintiffs in error assumed that because a commission was directed to others, the statement that the three judges were nominated and appointed was necessarily false, but there was no contradiction between the two statements put forward, and it was against all right and reason that one should disprove the other, both standing upon the same authority, and being therefore entitled to the same credit. Nor were the consequences of the assumption to be lightly regarded. It amounted to no less than an imputation of the officer's making a false entry, and the three judges acting illegally in assuming an authority not conferred upon them by virtue of the commission. There was no authority to warrant any such assumption, and it also conflicted with the rule of law which maintained the regularity of judicial proceedings. English precedents had been referred to, to show that the caption in question differed from them in form. It should, however, be remembered, that the caption was only the minute or record of the proceedings under the commission; and as the contents of such commissions varied in many particulars, according to circumstances, so must the form of the caption. The precedents in England shew that the form of the commissions there differ from those in Ireland, and we have judicial knowledge that the commissions for the circuits in Ireland are joint and several. I have had a search made for commissions in the Hanaper Office, and except in commissions for counties of cities and towns, in which there is a quorum clause, all the commissions of Oyer and Terminer are joint and several, and embrace their execution by one, two, or any number of the judges. I have also had a search made in this court for captions of indictments returned by writs of error and certiorari; and though in a great many cases the objection assigned here does not exist, yet there are sixteen precedents in certiorari returns, and within a very short time eight exactly similar captions of indictments have been returned upon writs of error, and in none of them was this objection ever alleged. For these reasons, I am of opinion, that these captions are not erroneous. As I am the legal depository of this commission, I think it not improbable, that if I were silent on this point, it might be supposed that these captions were not upheld by reason and argument. I think it right to say, that any one or more of the judges are expressly authorized to execute the commission, and that there is no foundation, in fact, for the objection that the court below had no jurisdiction. The second objection is, that it is not, and never was, high treason to levy war against the sovereign of these realms in Ireland. As I entirely dissent from this position, and the grounds upon which it is rested, I shall not dwell on the answer suggested by the numerous precedents of indictments in Ireland, in which convictions have been had, and which contained counts for levying war; nor shall I do more than express my concurrence in the position, that this was treason at common law, of which the 25 Ed. 3 was only declaratory. I come, therefore, at once to consider the proposition, whether the 25 Ed. 3 became the law of Ireland by the 10 Hen. 7. That, Poyning's act made the 25 Ed. 3 the law of Ireland, in respect to the treason of compassing the death of the sovereign, is admitted; but it is denied that the offence of levying war became treason in Ireland, because it is said we must read the words "in this realm," as they were used in Poyning's

Act, as meaning England, then the only realm of the King. But what would be the use or meaning of enacting by an Irish statute that that should be treason in England which was and had been always so by the common law, or at all events from the reign of Ed. 3. If these words cannot, therefore, be understood to mean England, without leading to the most absurd conclusion, I can see no reason why they should not be understood to mean Ireland, as the king's realm or territory. That such is the effect of Poyning's Act, is established by the authority referred to by my brother Perrin in Coke Lit. 141 b.; and to the same effect is a passage from 1 Hale, 147, which refers to the statute of Edw. 3 as one of the affirmative acts introduced into Ireland. That this is the meaning and effect of the statute is obvious, from its language. After reciting that there are divers good and profitable statutes made within the realm of England, &c., it enacts that all the statutes made within the said realm shall from henceforth be deemed good and effectual in law, and be used and executed in this land of Ireland in all points, and at all times, according to the tenor and effect of the same. This language makes it impossible to doubt that the same offences which would be treason in England would be treason if committed in Ireland. But if any doubt remained, it was removed by the 5 Geo. 3, c. 21, which enacts that any person indicted in Ireland under 25 Ed. 3, should have a copy of the indictment and counsel assigned to him. This recognises and acts upon the liability of any party to be indicted in Ireland for any of the offences committed here, which were made treason by that act, and must include the levying of war. For these reasons, the second ground of error is utterly insupportable. The next ground of error is the disallowance of the plea. This indictment contains six counts. The first five are for levying war against the Queen; and the 6th for compassing the death of her Majesty, and sets forth various overt acts, all of levying war, or conspiring to levy war; and the first two averments are, that the purpose was to put our lady the Queen to death. The plea of William Smith O'Brien to this count alleges that the prisoner should not be compelled to answer the indictment, because he is thereby indicted for compassing, imagining, and intending to put our lady the Queen to death, and that by the statutable enactment, every person indicted for compassing death or destruction to our lady the Queen is entitled to have delivered to him, ten days before his trial, a copy of the indictment, and at the same time a list of the witnesses to be produced upon the trial, mentioning their names, professions, and places of abode. The plea then avers that the indictment was found on the 21st of September, and on that day a copy of the indictment was delivered to him in open court, but that no list of witnesses was delivered to him, and that ten days had not elapsed since the indictment was so delivered. It concludes with a verification, and prays judgment that he may not now be compelled to answer the indictment. The plea is the same in the case of Meagher in error v. the Queen, with the addition of an allegation that he ought to have been given, and was not given, a copy of the panel of the jury. The pleas in the other cases are, that by an Act of Parliament passed in the seventh year of Queen Anne, it was enacted, that when any one should be indicted for high treason, a list of witnesses and of the jury panel should be delivered to him, together with a copy of the indictment, ten days before he was called on to plead, and that no such lists were furnished to them. The commencement and conclusion of all the pleas are the same. The Attorney General demurred to all, and that demurrer was allowed. On the form of these pleas there has been much controversy; the crown counsel have strongly insisted that the matter of them was a ground of motion and not of plea. I feel myself bound to consider what are the real merits of the case made by the plea—that is, whether the prisoners were entitled to be furnished with a copy of the indictment and a list of the witnesses ten days before being called on to plead, or whether they were entitled to the benefits which parties indicted for high treason have under the 7 & 8 W. 3, cap. 7. The counsel for the plaintiffs in error contend that by the 57th Geo. 3, cap. 6, sec. 7, they are entitled to these benefits, this act being unrepealed, and in force in Ireland. On the part of the Crown it is insisted that this section of the act does not extend to Ireland. The counsel for the plaintiffs in error in the second place contend that even though this section of the act of 57th Geo. 3, did not originally extend to Ireland, yet that under the provisions of the 11th Vic. cap. 12, it is now become the law. The counsel for the Crown insist that were the effect of the 11th Vic. c. 12, such as is contended, the present indictments are not so framed as that the plaintiffs in error can take any advantage from it. These are the three propositions which I now proceed to consider. It becomes necessary to refer to the state of the law both in England and Ireland when these different statutes were passed. The 25th Edw. 3, declared it to be treason to compass the death of the sovereign, and it was always held to include not only direct attempts against the person of the monarch, but also designs to subvert his power and authority, the accomplishment of which would naturally place his life in peril; both were equally designs against the person, and equally treason. The English act, the 7th and 8th Wm. 3, cap. 3, made it necessary to prove the overt act by two witnesses, and entitled the accused to a copy of the indictment five days before trial, and to have counsel assigned for his defence. The statute of 7 Anne, c. 11, Eng. entitled persons charged with treason to a copy of the indictment and lists of the witnesses and jurors ten days before trial. This latter act was not adopted by any act of the Irish parliament, and in fact, the only act passed in Ireland before the Union in reference to treasons was the 5th Geo. 3, cap. 21, entitled, "an act for the better regulating of trials in cases of high treason," and by which every person charged with that offence was entitled to a copy of the indictment five days before trial, and to have counsel assigned him. The next statute is the English act of the 36 Geo. 3, cap. 7, entitled "an act for the safety and protection of his Majesty's person and government against treasonable practices and attempts." The provisions of the first section of this act have not been particularly referred to, and I will therefore only observe that they were, as to some treasons, declaratory, and as to others, enactive; that the treasons it deals with are divisible into two distinct classes, one relating to treasons against the person of Geo. 3, and of his heirs, the other to attempts against his government. The act was only temporary, to continue for the life of the king, and until the end of the session of parliament next after his decease; and though the offences thereby made treason would have that character, whether committed within the realm or without, yet the persons charged with them were only triable by courts of competent jurisdiction in England. The 5th section provided that every person accused of offences which were declared to be treasons by its provisions, should be entitled to the benefit of the acts of William and Anne. The 39th and 40th Geo. 3, cap. 93, enacted, that when the overt act was the assassination of the monarch or a direct attempt against his person, the party charged should be tried as in a case of murder. Then came the 57th Geo. 3, cap. 6, entitled, "an act to make perpetual certain provisions of the 36th Geo. 3, and to provide for the safety and preservation of his royal highness the Prince Regent against treasonable practices and attempts." The 4th sect. of this act provided that persons charged with treasons, not directed against the life of the sovereign, should be entitled to the benefit of the provisions of the statutes of William and Anne. Now it was obvious that this 4th section had reference to persons who might be indicted after its provisions should commence to operate, namely, at the end of the session of parliament next after the demise of the then George the Third. The question, therefore, is could an indictment, after the passing of this act, be maintained in Ireland for any of the offences that were made treason by the 36th Geo. 3. It is contended that Ireland is included, because it is not expressly excluded by the enactment in the first section of the act. However general the words of an act may be, the object and nature of its enactments may make it necessary to construe them in a restricted sense, and to hold that it could not have been intended that the act should operate according to its very letter. We must therefore see whether it was or could have been intended to include Ireland within the operation of the first section. Whatever be the value of the omission of words of express exclusion, it is certain that the statute does not contain any indication of an intention to extend it to this country, or to confer any power, which the 36th Geo. 3 would not have conferred, had it been perpetual ab initio. Indeed, I cannot reconcile with the plain meaning of the words, "continue and perpetuate," any other idea than that the law as it then stood should so continue. Until the expiration of the 36 Geo. 3, the 57 Geo. 3 could have no practical effect in England. Was it, then, to have practical effect in Ireland? There was nothing in the act to warrant the assumption that it was to have a different period for its commencement in Ireland than it had in England. If, then, its effect was to take place in both countries at one and the same time—that was, at the end of the session of Parliament next after the decease of the then king—the postponement was utterly inconsistent with the alleged intention to assimilate the law and practice in the two countries, for they would remain in the meantime as dissimilar as they had always been. Indeed, if any such assimilation was intended, I cannot conceive any rational object for deferring in Ireland the operation of the provisions already in force in England for the preservation of the person of the king, for the period during which the postponement must necessarily take place. The construction sought to be put on this statute is opposed by the fact, that the provisions of the 36th Geo. 3 are penal in the highest degree, and cannot be extended by construction, for a penal law must be construed strictly both as to its spirit and letter. Fletcher v. Lord Sandes, (3 Bing. 580.) Great stress was laid by counsel for the prisoners upon the recital in the 11th sect., which shewed that doubts were entertained whether the provisions of the 36 Geo. 3, made perpetual by the 57 Geo. 3, extended to Ireland. Those doubts do not relate to the 4th section of that act, or as to whether a person indicted in Ireland was entitled to the benefit of the statutes of William and Anne; it is argued that the expression of those doubts as to the 1st section, and the omission as to the 4th section shew there is no doubt that the latter section extended to Ireland. This assumption is perfectly arbitrary, and might, with equal reason, be met by the crown with as positive an assertion, that there was no doubt on the subject, and that the 4th section did not extend to Ireland; but we have what is decisive of the matter. The 1 & 2 George 4, c. 24, an act conversant with trials for high treason in Ireland, commences by reciting two of the provisions of the 7th Wm. 3, c. 3, the first requiring two witnesses to prove each overt act of treason; and the other, that no person should be indicted unless the indictment was found within three years after the treason was committed. It then recites that these provisions had not previously extended to Ireland, and that it was expedient that they should. This was a direct contradiction to the assertion that the statute of William had been extended to Ireland by the 57th Geo. 3, c. 6. These various reasons have induced me to come to the conclusion, that the 1st and 4th sections of the 57th Geo. 3, c. 8, do not extend to Ireland. I now proceed to consider the argument raised in support of the plea founded on the provisions of the act of the 11th Vic. c. 12. The first section of this act repeals all the provisions of the 36 Geo. 3, and of the 57th Geo. 3, save those which it enumerates, and which were all before set forth in the recital of the 36th Geo. 3. What the recited provisions of the 36th Geo. 3 not thereby repealed were, there is not the least difficulty in ascertaining; for it is plain that they were those which related to the compassing or intending the death or destruction, or any bodily harm tending thereunto, the maiming, wounding, imprisonment, or restraint of the heirs or successors of King George 3. These were the recited provisions, and the only recited provisions of the act of the 36th Geo. 3, which that of the 57th Geo. 3, c. 6, made perpetual, and of necessity they were the only provisions which, by the second section, were to be made law in Ireland. But it has been argued, that though the second section did not in terms refer to the fourth section of the 57th Geo. 3, c. 6, yet that that section was not repealed by the 11th Vic. c. 12, but was included in the exceptions, and was therefore still in force, and available to persons who might be indicted in England, and hence it was inferred that it was also in force in Ireland. Now, assuming that the 4th section of the 57th Geo. 3, c. 6, was included in the exceptions, the consequence was not that it was to be in force in Ireland, but only that the law in that respect was to remain unchanged, and that the 4th section should continue, as it had previously been, the law of England; any other construction would be repugnant to the language and intention of the legislature. It has been argued, on the part of the plaintiffs in error, that if this 4th section of the 57th Geo. 3, c. 6, did not extend to Ireland, persons indicted under the 11th Vic. c. 12, for any of the treasons against the person of the sovereign, could not have the benefit of the Irish statutes, and must be sentenced, on conviction, to undergo the barbarous punishment of treason under the common law. I cannot adopt this view of the case as affording ground for questioning the conclusion to which I have arrived, as the just result arising from a great number of considerations. But though, from the terms of the 5th Geo. 3, c. 31, there might be some question whether a person so indicted should have the benefit of its provisions, I still think he would be entitled to the benefit of the 1 & 2 Geo. 4, c. 54, I now come to consider the position contended for by the crown—and, I think, successfully—that even though persons indicted under the 11th Vic. c. 12, would be entitled to the benefit of the English statutes, the plaintiffs in error here could not be so, the indictments not containing any overt acts of personal violence. I have already stated that the 36 Geo. 3, c. 7, appears to me to refer to two distinct classes of treason, the one having for its object the protection of the person of the sovereign, the other the preservation of his authority and government; and I think these two classes are unequivocally recognised and distinguished by the 11th Vic. c. 12, which, after a full recital of all the treasons made or declared by the 36th Geo. 3, c. 7, sets out in the preamble that its object was to repeal such of the provisions so recited as did not relate to offences against the person of the sovereign. This is a plain declaration that some of them do, and some do not, relate to offences against the person of the sovereign. The enactments are in exact conformity with the preamble; I have, therefore, come to the conclusion, that though now, as before the act, the charge of compassing the death of the sovereign might be sustained under the 25th Edw. 3, by any overt act against her imperial authority, as well as against her person, yet that the 11th Vic. c. 12, was confined to the latter species of treason, and that, as this indictment is framed, it cannot be considered as founded on its provisions. For these reasons, I consider the demurrer to these pleas to have been properly allowed. The next error assigned is for the rejection of the prisoners' peremptory challenge after having challenged twenty. Counsel for the crown insist that by the 9 Geo. 4, c. 54, the right of challenge is limited to twenty; and, upon the other hand, counsel for the prisoner insist that under the words "or any other felony," the right of challenge is not so limited. If that were the intention of the legislature, the use of the word "treason" would have been superfluous; for, according to this argument, petty treason, as a felony, would be included among other felonies. I have looked over a great number of statutes in order to ascertain the sense in which the word "treason" is used and understood, and I find that the word, standing by itself, has invariably been used to signify high treason. I have not discovered one where it meant petty treason where the word "high" was not added to it; but I have met many cases where the words "treason" and "high treason" were convertible terms. The very act before us, the 11th Vic. c. 12, in the seventh section uses the word "treason" as describing high treason no less than three times; and the 6th section quotes the statute of Edw. 3, and uses the same word. But if a certain test of the exposition of the word was required, the 8th and 11th sections of this act use the word "treason" in its strongest sense. I have only further to remark, that the act 9 Geo. 4, c. 54, did not introduce for the first time this restriction of peremptory challenge. It had existed from the time of Charles 1. So far, therefore, as regards that objection, I think there is no ground of error. The last error assigned is the allocutus. It is objected that it was demanded of the prisoner whether he had anything to say why judgment should not be pronounced against him; and it is contended that it should have been added judgment "of death," or judgment "and execution." Several precedents have been cited where these terms are used, but none where judgment in the present form was held to be void. It is said the prisoner must have an opportunity afforded him of moving in arrest of judgment; when he is called upon to state why judgment should not be passed upon him, that opportunity is certainly afforded him. The judgment here is that prescribed by the 54 Geo. 3, c. 146, which does not use the word "execution" and uses the word "sentence" as synonymous with judgment. In the word "judgment" are comprised all the details which are to constitute the sentence. If, however, precedents and authorities are required to warrant the present form, they are abundant. In 4th Blackstone, c. 29, it is said, "When verdict is found, the prisoner shall be asked why judgment should not be awarded against him." In the case of the King v. Royce (4th Burr. 2073), the prisoner was asked why judgment should not be pronounced and sentence awarded against him. The cases cited from 3 Mod. 265 were cases in which there was no allocutus at all; in the former cases, the error assigned was, that the prisoner was not asked what he had to say why judgment should not be given against him. For these several reasons I think these causes of error should be disallowed.

CRAMPTON, J., expressed his full concurrence in the judgment of the court, except as to the reception of the plea, being of opinion that the subject matter of it should have been disposed of on motion, and not received as a plea to the indictment.

PERRIN and MOORE, JJ., expressed their concurrent concurrence. Errors overruled.

ROLLS COURT.

O'CONNOR v. MALONE.—Feb. 12.

Practice—Receiver—Security.

Where the rental of lands, over which a receiver has been appointed is considerable, he will be permitted to divide his security amongst several, and the entire sum in which the sureties qualify, need not exceed double the rental.

This was an application on behalf of the receiver in this cause, that he might give security to the amount of £22,000—being more than two years gross rental of the lands over which he had been appointed—in the following manner; himself in the sum of £22,000, Sir H. C. Coote, in the sum of £11,000, Colonel F. P. Dunne, in the sum of £5,500, and H. P. Pigott, in the sum of £5,500, making together, £22,000.

Mr. Berkely, for the motion—where the rental is small, it is the practice to require each of the sureties to qualify in double the amount of the yearly rent; but when the rental is considerable, as in the present case, the receiver is permitted to give security by several persons, and the gross amount of all taken together need not exceed double the yearly rental; Houlditch v. Marquis of Donegal, (3 L. Rec. N. S. 65), and the case of Lord Kingston, mentioned in the argument in that case. Since the new general orders, a receiver cannot have more than one year's rent in his hands, therefore the parties would be perfectly secure.

Mr. Lefroy, contra—Mr. Lestrangle, the other candidate for the situation of receiver in this cause, is prepared to give security according to the usual practice of the court, which should not be departed from to his prejudice, for if the receiver appointed is not prepared to give security, Mr. Lestrangle would be appointed in his place. The security should be by two persons, each bound in every portion of the entire sum.

MASTER OF THE ROLLS.—The authority which has been cited is an express decision on the point, I will therefore make the order in the terms of the notice.

SHERLOCK v. ROE.—March 3.

Fund in Court—Title of Landlord to, after Recovery by him in Ejectment.

Ormsby moved that the fund in court to the credit of the cause might be applied in payment of the arrears of rent due to the head landlord. The interest in the lands has been evicted for non-payment of rent, and the fund in court being the produce of these lands, the landlord is entitled to have same applied in payment of the arrears. In the case of Elliott v. Elliott, (1 Ir. Jur. 165), in the Exchequer, an order was made similar to that which is now sought.

MASTER OF THE ROLLS.—I think the practice, as established by the case in the Court of Exchequer, is correct; besides, the landlord is entitled to sue the tenant for all arrears due after the date of the demise.

Motion granted.

March 6.

THE ATTORNEY-GENERAL AT THE RELATION OF F. JACKSON AND OTHERS v. THE CORPORATION OF DUBLIN.

Injunction—Corporation of Dublin—Pipe-water Rate.

In the year 1837, the Corporation of the City of Dublin issued debentures, charged upon the surplus pipe-water revenue, and which recited, that by a decree pronounced in 1831, it had been declared, that the surplus pipe-water revenue was the property of the corporation. In 1849, an information was filed, and upon motion for an injunction to restrain the corporation from applying the pipe-water rate in payment of the interest upon said debentures—Held, that in the absence of the majority of debenture holders this application must be refused; for, even though such payment was a misapplication of the fund, the injunction ought not be granted till the hearing of the cause, when the court could do justice to the debenture holders, by directing payment of their demands out of the private funds of the corporation.

Upon applications for injunctions, the court will take into consideration the balance of inconvenience; and, even though the act sought to be restrained is one which should not be done, if the granting of the injunction would be attended with inconvenience or injustice to third parties, the motion will be refused.

Seemle—That the entire pipe-water rate, levied under the 15th and 16th Geo. 3, c. 24, is held by the Corporation of the City of Dublin upon trust, and no part thereof is the private property of the corporation.

In this case, the information stated, that previous to the passing of the 15th and 16th Geo. 3, the corporation was in the habit of supplying water to the inhabitants of the city of Dublin; it then stated the provisions of that act, by which the corporation was empowered to borrow money upon the security of the rates, and which are sufficiently set forth in the judgment of the court; also the 43rd Geo. 3, called the Metal Main Act, which enabled the corporation to raise further sums, and which recited the debt created under the provisions of the first-mentioned act, and that the corporation were bound to apply a sum of £2,000 annually in discharge of same. The information then stated that the funds had been applied to other purposes, in violation of the trusts upon which they were held, and various facts connected with proceedings taken against the corporation on account of this misapplication were then set forth, and the Master's report made in the year 1830, by which it appeared that up to the year 1825, the sum of £74,500 had been misapplied. That in the year 1831, a decree was pronounced, by which the corporation was directed, within six months, to pay off this sum of £74,500, and cause the debentures, upon the security of which said sum had been raised, to be discharged, and that no further sums should be levied under the last-mentioned act. That this decree was confirmed on appeal—that new debentures were issued by the corporation, under the 15th and 16th Geo. 3, to the amount of £74,500, and which the holders of the debentures issued under the Metal Main Act (43 Geo. 3) accepted in exchange for those which they held. The information then charged, that such was not a proper application of the pipe-water tax, for that the sum directed to be paid by the decree should be discharged out of the private funds of the corporation, and not out of the rate, and that said decree had not been complied with. It then stated, that the supply of water to the citizens of Dublin was insufficient—that the corporation had, without sufficient grounds, discharged several officers connected with the pipe-water establishment, whose compensation was paid out of the rate, and that such was also a misapplication of the fund. It then stated, that a considerable number of the new, or substituted debentures were lodged in the Hibernian Bank, as security for certain sums which had been borrowed by the corporation.

Brewster, Q.C., now moved for an injunction to restrain the defendants from applying any portion of the pipe-water rate in discharge of the interest on any debenture or mortgage issued or exchanged in discharge of the sum of £74,500, or of the interest upon any mortgage or incumbrance created by the corporation, over and above the said sum of £74,500, or in payment of the compensation of dismissed officers; and after stating the facts set forth in the information, and the affidavit in support of it, relied upon the cases of Attorney-General v. Corporation of Limerick (6 Dow. 136), Attorney-General v. Corporation of Carlisle, (2 Sim. 437), Attorney-General v. Corporation of Galway (Beat. 298), Attorney-General v. Mayor of Liverpool (1 M. & C. 171), Attorney-General v. Wilson (Cr. & Ph. 1), Attorney-General v. Corporation of Litchfield (13 Sim. 547), Attorney-General v. Mayor of Norwich (12 Jur. 424), Attorney-General v. Corporation of Dublin, (1 Bligh, 312), to shew that the pipe-water rate was a fund held by the corporation for charitable purposes, and could not be applied to any other use except to provide a supply of water to the inhabitants of the city of Dublin.

Christian, Q.C., contra, on behalf of the corporation, contended, that if the present application was granted, the rights of the debenture holders, which had been recognised and acted on for twelve years, would be most injuriously affected. Also, if the interest upon the sum borrowed from the Hibernian Bank was not paid within the time agreed on, it would be raised from £4 to £6 per cent.—that by the decree pronounced by Sir Wm. M'Mahon, the right of the corporation to the surplus funds produced by the pipe-water rate was admitted, and the debentures issued in substitution for the metal main debentures, were charged upon that fund, to which they were so entitled—that by the arrangement with the Hibernian Bank, the fund was considerably benefitted, as the interest payable on the sum borrowed was only at the rate of £4 per cent., while the pipe-water debentures bore a higher rate; and relied upon the cases of Spottiswood v. Clarke (2 Ph. 154);

Skinner's Company v. Irish Society (1 M. & Cr. 162); Attorney-General v. Mayor of Liverpool (1 M. & Cr. 171).

March 7.—Hughes, Q.C., for the Hibernian Bank, contended that the court could not, in the absence of the other creditors, grant an injunction against payment of the interest upon the sum advanced by the Bank, as absent parties should not be affected by the proceedings, and an injunction could not be granted against the Bank without being granted against the other debenture holders also. Besides, the questions now raised were more properly for the hearing of the cause, and ought not to be decided on motion.

Baldwin, Q.C., in reply, contended that the corporation had not properly discharged the trust reposed in them by the statutes for the supply of water to the inhabitants of the city of Dublin was totally insufficient; and even assuming that the corporation was entitled to the surplus pipe-water fund, if the trust was not properly discharged there could not be any surplus. By granting this application, less injury would be done than by refusing it, as the rights of the claimants to the fund would be only postponed till answer or decree, but if the money was paid, irreparable injury would be done.

MASTER OF THE ROLLS.—In this case a motion has been made on the part of the relators, that the defendants be restrained by injunction from applying any portion of the pipe-water rates, or rents, in discharge of the interest payable on any of the debentures for £74,500 in the informations mentioned, or on any debentures or securities issued or substituted in lieu of said sum of £74,500. 2ndly—That the defendants may, in like manner, be restrained from applying any portion of the said pipe-water rates, or rents, in payment of interest upon any mortgage or other security created by the defendants over and above the said sum of £74,500. 3rdly—That the defendants may further be restrained from applying any portion of the said pipe-water rates, or rents, in payment of compensation to dismissed officers. The information in this case was filed upon the 25th of January, 1849; it was amended in some material particulars on the 21st of February, and on the 23rd of February notice of this motion was served. No fact has been stated to the court which did not lie within the knowledge of the relators and of the citizens of Dublin for the last eleven or twelve years. The first question is, whether I should restrain the defendants, by injunction, from applying any portion of the pipe water rates, or rents, in discharge of the interest payable on any of the debentures for £74,500 in the information mentioned, or in discharge of interest payable on any debentures or securities issued or substituted in lieu of said sum of £74,500. The earliest statute which relates to the supply of the city of Dublin with water, is the 6th Geo. 1, c. 16. That statute recited that the city of Dublin had, for many ages past, been seised and possessed of a water course taken out of the River Dodder, which was the chief supply of water, not only for the inhabitants of the said city, but also for his Majesty's Castle of Dublin, and which without it would suffer exceeding great prejudice. It further recited the manner in which the water was corrupted, to the endangering the health of the inhabitants of the said city, and it enacted that the Lord Mayor, Sheriff, Commons, and citizens of Dublin, should and might peaceably and quietly have, hold, possess, and enjoy the aforesaid ancient watercourse, and have free liberty, from time to time, without being liable to any trespass or other action for the same, to enter upon any land through which the watercourse did pass, and various powers were given to the corporation to secure the supply of pure and wholesome water to the citizens of Dublin. The 15th and 16th Geo. 3, c. 24, after reciting that the inhabitants of the city of Dublin had not of late been sufficiently supplied with water, which had been occasioned by the great increase of the inhabitants of the said city, and the insufficiency of the works formerly constructed to supply such a number; and further reciting that the Lord Mayor, Sheriff, Commons, and citizens of the city of Dublin had, for many ages past, been seized and possessed of a water-course from the River Dodder, and, at a great expense, had made a basin, or reservoir, for water and other works; and reciting that the corporation to promote, as much as in it lay, a supply of water adequate to the inhabitants of the city of Dublin, had entered into a contract with the Grand Canal Company for an ample supply of pure water, at an expense of ten per cent. on the gross produce of the revenue which would arise to the said corporation of the city of Dublin from the sale of said water. It was enacted, "That the owners of every house should, and they were thereby required to provide for the use of each house a branch pipe, to convey the water from the several main pipes which then were, or thereafter should be laid in the several streets, alleys, yards, courts, squares, lanes, or on the quays in the said city, into the said house or houses in the said city. By the second section of that act it was enacted, that the owner or occupier of every house in the city of Dublin should pay to the corporation of said city certain rates specified in that section, varying according to the amount of ministers' money charged on each house. The 11th section of the said act empowered the Corporation of the City of Dublin to borrow, at interest upon the credit of said rates and rents, such sum as they should find necessary for the purposes of the act, and to demise or mortgage, by writing under the seal of the corporation, the said rates and rents as a security to any person or persons who should advance such sum or sums. The form of the mortgage or debenture is then given, by which the corporation, in consideration of the sum borrowed, grant, bargain, sell, and demise to the mortgagee, his executors, administrators, and assigns, such proportion of the whole rents arising by virtue of the said act as the sum, so borrowed, should bear to the whole sum advanced, or to be advanced on the credit thereof, to have and to hold from the day of the date of the mortgage for and during the continuance of the act, unless the said sum, with interest at the rate in the mortgage specified, should be sooner repaid and satisfied. The 12th section authorised the transfer of this mortgage or debenture by the mortgagee, by indorsement in the form thereby directed. The 14th section provided that persons to whom these mortgages should be made should be creditors on such rates and rents in equal degree, and that there should be no preference in respect of the prior advance of money, or prior date of the mortgage or debenture. The act of the 15th and 16th Geo. 3 was amended by subsequent acts, but the amendments do not appear material to the question to be decided upon this motion. The 49th Geo. 3, c. 80 (commonly called the Metal Main Act), after reciting the 15th and 16th Geo. 3, and some of the statutes amending that act—and after reciting that it had become expedient, to secure a more ample and permanent supply of water to the inhabitants of the city of Dublin, and to prevent the frequent breaking up of the pavement of the streets of the said city, for the purpose of repairing the pipe-water works thereof, that considerable expensive and permanent alterations and improvements should be made in the said works, by making additional reservoirs therein, and by substituting cast iron or metal main service pipes instead of the timber pipes then in use—and reciting that the rates then payable for the sale of water in the city were wholly insufficient to defray the expense of such new and necessary work, the said statute enacted, that it should be lawful for the corporation of Dublin to demand and take from every owner or occupier of every house within the city of Dublin, and the liberties thereof, in the act mentioned, for the purposes of the said act, the annual rates or rents in the said act mentioned, "over and above all rates or rents then payable by them for a supply of pipe water under or by virtue of the said recited acts, or any of them." By the 11th section of the said act it was further enacted, that the Corporation of the City of Dublin might, and they were thereby empowered to borrow, at interest upon the credit of the rates and rents granted by the said act of the 15th and 16th Geo. 3, c. 24, (the Pipe Water Act), and by the said statute of the 49th Geo. 3, c. 80, (the Metal Main Act), such sum or sums as they should from time to time find necessary for the purpose of making the said reservoirs, and laying cast iron or metal main and service pipes, and to demise or mortgage the said rents, or any part thereof, as a security to any person or persons who should advance such sum or sums. The form of the mortgage or debenture is then given in the act, and it is to the same effect as the form of security set forth in the act of the 15th and 16th Geo. 3, except that the pipe water rates and rents, which the corporation are empowered to levy by the 15th and 16th Geo. 3, and the metal main rates or rents which they were empowered to levy by the 49th Geo. 3, c. 80, are both charged with the money borrowed. By the 12th section, the sum to be borrowed, under the provisions and for the purposes of the 49th Geo. 3, c. 80, was limited to the sum of £32,000. The 13th section, after reciting that there was then a debt of £67,800, secured by the rates granted by the 15th and 16th Geo. 3, c. 24, and that it was expedient to provide a fund for redeeming and discharging the same, and all such further sums of money as should be borrowed under the 49th Geo. 3, it was enacted that it should be lawful for the treasurer of the Corporation of the City of Dublin, and his successors, treasurers for the time being, and he and they were thereby required annually to retain, out of the rates or rents granted by the 49th Geo. 3, the sum of £2,000, together with such sums of money as should be equal to the interest on the sums borrowed under the provisions of the said act, which sums were to be applied as a sinking fund, to pay off and discharge said sum of £67,800, and all such other sums as should be borrowed under the 49th Geo. 3; and the treasurer was thereby directed to apply said sinking fund from time to time in purchasing in the securities passed for such debt or debts; and the interest of the securities so purchased in, was to be applied in further aid of said sinking fund. By the 14th section, the treasurer was directed to keep separate accounts of the rates received under the Metal Main Act (49th Geo. 3), and to apply the balance of the rates levied under said act, after retaining the annual amount of such sinking fund, in payment of the interest payable on the money then due, and which should thereafter be borrowed, and in laying down metal pipes, &c., and in increasing the sinking fund. And by the 16th section it was enacted, that if there should be any surplus of the sums so received by the corporation, or on their account, under the said act of the 49th Geo. 3, or under the 15th and 16th Geo. 3, c. 24, more than should be duly expended by them under said acts, then, and as often as said surplus should exceed the sum of £500, "such excess should, from time to time, be added to the sinking fund by said act created, and be, from time to time, paid and applied in the like and same manner as the said annual sum of £2000 is by the said act directed to be applied, until the whole of the said sum or sums of money then due (i. e. the £67,800) and thereafter to be borrowed should be fully paid and discharged." By the 22nd section it was enacted that the 49th Geo. 3 should continue until the said sum of £67,800, and the several sums thereafter to be borrowed under the provisions of the said act should, by the means of the sinking fund, be fully paid off, and no longer. In the year 1823, an information was filed on behalf of the inhabitants of Dublin paying water-rates against the corporation, which stated various acts of mismanagement and misappropriation in respect of the rates, and submitted that the corporation were trustees, under the act of the 49th Geo. 3, of the rates thereby given, for uses which were charitable in their nature, and that the conduct of the corporation amounted to a breach of trust, and prayed (amongst other things) a declaration and execution of the trust, and that accounts might be taken of the rates received by the corporation and the application thereof; also of the moneys borrowed and due on the credit of the rates; also an account of the sums annually applied to the sinking fund, and amount thereof applied in payment of the debt.

Lord Manners dismissed that information, but the decision was reversed by the House of Lords; and by the decree of the lords (1 Bligh. P. C., N. S. 361) it was declared, that by the terms of the act of the 49th Geo. 3, the corporation were bound to account for and apply the several rates and rents in the said act mentioned in the manner expressed in the said act; and it was, amongst other matters, referred to the Master to take an account of all sums received by the corporation, or for their use in respect of the said rates and rents, and of the application thereof; also an account of all sums of money borrowed by the corporation on the credit of the rate granted by the said act, and by the 15th and 16th Geo. 3; and also an account of the mortgages of said rates and rents, and to whom made, or for what sums. And the Master was also directed to inquire and report the nature and particulars of the said debt of £67,800 borrowed under the provisions of the 15th and 16th Geo. 3, and whether the sinking fund had been annually retained, according to the directions of the 49th Geo. 3, for the purpose of redeeming and discharging the said sum of £67,800, and all such further sums as should be borrowed under the 49th Geo. 3; and whether all the sums so retained as a sinking fund were appropriated and applied to pay off the said sum of £67,800, and the sums borrowed under the 49th Geo. 3; and several other directions were given by the said decree, which, for the purposes of this motion, it is not necessary to advert to. [A copy of the decree is given in 1 Bligh's P. C., N. S. 361.] By the Master's report, made in pursuance of said decree, it appeared that a sum of £32,000 had been borrowed by the corporation under the provisions of the Metal Main Act (49th Geo. 3), making, with the sum of £67,800 borrowed under the pipe-water acts (15th and 16th Geo. 3, &c.), nearly the sum of £100,000; and the Master found, amongst other matters, that the sinking fund, created by the 49th Geo. 3, was not applied by the corporation in pursuance of the provisions of the said act and the trusts vested in the corporation; and that only the sum of £25,500 had been redeemed of the said sum of £100,000, and that a balance of £74,500 (which is the sum to which the first part of the present notice of motion refers) remained outstanding and unpaid; and the Master further found that if the sinking fund had been retained and duly applied as directed by the 49th Geo. 3, the entire of the £100,000 would have been paid off on the 20th of May, 1825. The cause having come on to be heard on the 24th of May, 1831, before Sir William M'Mahon, then Master of the Rolls, a decree was pronounced by him on the 7th of July, 1831, whereby, after reciting the principal facts found by the report, it was, amongst other matters, ordered, adjudged, and decreed, that the relators and the owners and occupiers of the houses subject to the pipe-water rent should be exempt from liability to the Metal Main Tax, and ought to be exonerated by the corporation from such liability; and it was further ordered, that the said corporation should, within six months from the date of the said decree, pay off and discharge the said sum of £74,500 to the different persons who were holders of the said securities or debentures for the said sum of £74,500, and thereupon to procure the holders to acquit and discharge the said securities and debentures; and it was further ordered, that an injunction should issue to restrain the corporation from further collecting or levying said Metal Main Tax until further order. The reason, I presume, why the injunction was only until further order was, that the debenture holders who had advanced their money under the 49th Geo. 3, upon the security of the metal main rates as well as of the pipe-water rates, ought not to have been in any manner affected by the breach of trust on the part of the corporation, in misapplying the sinking fund; and if the property of the corporation had been insufficient to pay the £74,500, and if the persons to whom debentures had been issued under the 49th Geo. 3, had retained those debentures, I apprehend they would have been entitled to have had the metal main tax again collected, if the pipe-water rents, which were also pledged to them, were insufficient to make good the deficiency, if any, in the property of the corporation to discharge the £74,500. The observations of Lord Redesdale (1 Bligh, p. 349) appear to me to shew that such was his lordship's opinion. It was, in fact, the continued liability of the householders to pay rates to discharge the £74,500, notwithstanding that a sum sufficient to pay same had been levied by the corporation, which entitled the electors to file the informations upon which the decree of 1831 was founded, in order to compel the corporation to exonerate the householders. Sir Wm. M'Mahon, in giving judgment in May, 1831, after stating the provisions of the 15th and 16th Geo. 3, is reported to have said, that "the object of that statute was to prevent extortion, on the one hand, by the corporation, by fixing the rents and rates, and by creating a corporate monopoly, on the other hand, in favour of the corporation, without divesting the private property and ownership of the corporation beyond the establishment of a public duty (whether to be denominated a public trust or a charitable use), to provide for water-works that should secure a sufficient supply of water to the inhabitants, leaving the surplus profits to continue, as before the act, the private property of the corporation." The judgment is reported 4th Law Recorder, 1st series, 289. The corporation having appealed from Sir Wm. M'Mahon's decree, it was affirmed by the House of Lords, and the case on the appeal is reported in 9th Bligh, 395. The effect of that affirmation was only to establish that the corporation was bound to pay off the £74,500, and to exonerate the householders of the city of Dublin from the payment of that sum. The judgment, however, of Lord Brougham, in stating his own opinion and that of Lord Wynford, does not confirm the observations of Sir Wm. M'Mahon—that the surplus pipe-water rents, if any, are the private property of the corporation. After the decree of 1831, the corporation, purporting to act in conformity to such decree, issued in 1832 new debentures, in the form of the debenture set out in the 15th and 16th Geo. 3, and prevailed on the holders of the debentures for £74,500 to accept these new debentures in lieu of the former. This proceeding was altogether illegal. The decree of 1831 had directed the corporation to pay off the £74,500, and declared that they were bound to exonerate the inhabitants from the payment of that sum; and the corporation, instead of paying the demand, or substituting securities charged upon their private property, pledged by those new debentures the pipe-water rates, and made the £74,500 not a charge upon the surplus of those rates (if any) but a primary charge upon the rates. In consequence of this illegal proceeding, another information was filed against the corporation in 1832, or 1833, to compel them to obey the decree of 1831; and the information having been heard before Sir Wm. M'Mahon, on the 2nd of June, 1836, it was declared, that the debentures issued in 1832 were issued contrary to the duty of the corporation, and that the corporation was bound to pay off and cancel the debentures so issued since the decree of 1831; but it was by said decree of 1836 declared, that the decree did not extend to restrain or affect the right of the corporation to proceed as they might be advised to charge, according to their estate and interest, the surplus income of the corporation arising from the pipe-water rates or rents, after providing for the purposes specified in the said statutes, and subject to the prior rights of the owners and occupiers of houses in the city of Dublin which were subject to such pipe-water rates. This decree of the 21st of June, 1836, not having been complied with, an application was made on the 28th of June, 1837, to Sir Michael O'Loughlen, then Master of the Rolls, that a sequestration should issue against the corporation to compel performance of the said decree. An affidavit was made on that occasion by Sir J. K. James, the treasurer of the corporation, which, amongst other matters, contained the following statement:—"Deponent saith, that immediately after the confirmation of said Master's report of the 9th Nov., 1836, the Corporation of Dublin and this deponent proceeded with the utmost diligence and anxiety to comply with the said decree of the 2nd of June, 1836, and for that purpose immediately caused a case to be laid before eminent counsel as to the powers so declared by the said decree to be vested in said corporation, over the surplus income of said pipe-water rates, as well as to their right to charge same under the act of the 6th and 7th of his late Majesty King William the Fourth's reign, and to advise the form of debenture or mortgage by which the same could be legally and effectually charged: saith, that a form of said debenture for these purposes having been approved of by said counsel, he this deponent, as treasurer of said corporation, entered into a negotiation with several persons who held the securities directed by the said decree to be called in and cancelled, which persons were numerous, and were, in the first instance, to be satisfied of the validity of the proposed new security for those outstanding in their hands; from which circumstance, deponent humbly conceives it will be apparent to this honourable court, as the fact truly is, that much of the time granted by said decree for the fulfilment thereof was unavoidably consumed, and that any delay which may have occurred in the complete performance of said decree arose from this cause, and not through any default, or neglect, or want of exertion on the part of the corporation to which he is treasurer, but solely and unavoidably from the peculiar circumstances of the case: saith, that after many and repeated negotiations and explanations on the part of the corporation, by deponent, with such of the holders of said debentures as were known to this deponent, it was agreed that in case the said corporation would grant unto the holders of the debentures (so ordered to be paid off) in lieu thereof, the said new debentures or mortgages, in the form approved of by counsel, and chargeable on the surplus income of said pipe-water rates, made under the powers vested in said corporation by the said decree of the 2nd June, 1836, that they, the said bondholders, would accept same in place thereof, and deliver up to be cancelled the debentures then in their possession, and ordered to be taken up by the said decree, and accordingly this deponent, with the sanction, and under the seal of the said corporation, did give unto the holders thereof new debentures, in the form of mortgages, and according to the powers vested in them for that purpose, chargeable on the surplus income of the pipe-water rents, and did take up and cancel of the debentures so ordered to be paid off (as deponent submits he was fully entitled so to do), debentures to the amount of £38,300, and which are now in his possession: saith that there now remains a balance of £26,700 sterling of said debentures still to be paid off and cancelled, and which debentures this deponent is still making every exertion to have taken up, so that said decrees may be fulfilled by the said corporation and this deponent as their treasurer." An order was made on the 26th of June, 1837, by Sir M. O'Loughlen, on said motion, whereby it was ordered that the corporation should, within one week from the date of said order, lodge in the Master's office the cancelled debentures mentioned in Sir J. K. James's affidavit; and it was further ordered, that the corporation should, within one week, furnish to Mr. Staines, the relator's solicitor, a copy of the new debentures mentioned in said affidavit; and it was further ordered, that a sequestration should issue, but not be acted on before the 26th of November then next (1837). The corporation accordingly issued new debentures in substitution of those issued in 1832, by which debentures the surplus pipe-water revenue was charged in accordance with the opinion expressed by Sir Wm. M'Mahon, in 1831, and with the decree of the 2nd of June, 1836. Those debentures recite, that by the decree of 1831, the corporation was directed to discharge and satisfy the debt therein mentioned (i. e. the 74,500), and recite that the corporation was desirous of raising such sums of money as might be necessary for that purpose, on the credit and security of their surplus pipe-water revenue thereafter particularly mentioned, "and which had been by the said decree recognised and declared to be the property of the said corporation, and subject to their disposal;" and, after such recitals, the corporation, by such debentures, charged the surplus pipe-water revenue with the sums advanced by the holders of each respectively. It will be recollected that a copy of this debenture was directed to be forwarded to Mr. Staines, the solicitor for the relators, by the order of Sir Michael O'Loughlen, of the 26th of June, 1837, and there can be no doubt that such order was complied with, and that the relators in the information upon which the decree of 1836 was founded, had full notice of the form of such debentures. On the 26th of January, 1838, counsel on behalf of the corporation moved, that the writ of sequestration, awarded by the order of the 26th of June, 1837, should be discharged, on the ground that the corporation had fully performed the decree of 1836, and an order was made by Sir Michael O'Loughlen, which recites that notice of the motion had been served on Mr. Staines, the solicitor for the relators, and it was thereby ordered, that the writ of sequestration which issued under the order of the 26th of June, 1837, should be discharged, "the defendants having fully performed the decree of the 2nd of June, 1836." The debenture holders for £74,500, who were in no default whatever, having given up their original securities which they held prior to the decree of 1831, and which original securities were, in my opinion, the primary charge on the pipe-water rates, and having taken the debentures in lieu thereof, which latter debentures were cancelled under the decree of 1836, then accepted the present debentures on the faith of the opinion expressed by Sir Wm. M'Mahon, in 1831, and on the faith of the decrees of 1836, and with the knowledge and acquiescence of the relators in said proceedings, as appears by the orders made by Sir Michael O'Loughlen; and I am now called upon, in the absence of the majority of those debenture holders, who are not represented in this suit, to restrain the present corporation from applying the surplus pipe-water rates, as they have been applied since the decree of 1836, in payment of the interest payable to those debenture holders, the court having no authority or jurisdiction upon this motion to compel the corporation to pay such interest out of their other property. The grounds upon which it is contended I should grant the injunction are—"1st. That Sir Wm. M'Mahon was mistaken in holding that the surplus pipe-water rates (if any) after providing water works which should secure a sufficient supply of water to the inhabitants of Dublin, were the private property of the corporation—and it was insisted on the part of the present relators, that the whole of the pipe-water rates are vested in the corporation as trustees, and for what in law is called a charitable use—and that therefore, if there be a surplus, the rates should be reduced, or the surplus applied to the extension of the mains and water works &c. It is contended that there is, in fact, no surplus, there being, as is alleged, seventy streets, lanes, and alleys in Dublin, in which water mains have not been laid down. With respect to the first question, I entertain considerable doubt, as to the opinion of Sir Wm. M'Mahon, but I shall abstain from deciding the question on this motion, because I am clearly of opinion, that if the entire of the pipe-water rates are held by the corporation upon trust for the inhabitants of Dublin, and as a charitable use, and that, therefore, it is a misapplication of those rates to apply the alleged surplus in payment of the £74,500, which should be paid out of the private property of the corporation, the injunction should not be granted until the cause shall be at hearing, when the court can do justice to the debenture holders by obliging the corporation to pay the interest and principal out of their other property. With respect to the second point—that there is properly no surplus of the pipe-water rates, there being many streets, lanes, and alleys in Dublin not supplied with water, which ought to be supplied—this allegation is denied; and, although the explanation of the corporation is not satisfactory to me, I am clearly of opinion that this is also a matter for the hearing, and not to be decided on a summary application for an injunction; and, whatever may be the result of an inquiry, if such should be directed at the hearing of the cause, the debenture holders, in my opinion, ought, under any circumstances, to be relieved at the hearing, either by remitting them to the original rights which they had on foot of the debentures which had been issued to them prior to the decree of 1831, they having advanced their money upon the faith of the act of parliament, and the security of the pipe-water rates—or the property of the corporation should be sequestered to enforce performance of the decree of 1831, and to compel the payment and discharge of the £74,500, and the interest thereon, as directed by such decree. I have already stated I have no authority on this motion to direct payment to the debenture holders out of any other fund. Lord Cottenham, in the case of Spottiswood v. Clarke, (P. Cooper's Reports, 262), stated that “he always took into his consideration the extent of inconvenience on the one side, and on the other side, as the injunction should be granted or withheld, on which side did the balance of harm preponderate.” On that principle I feel no difficulty in deciding the first question; and I am of opinion that it would be an act of the greatest injustice to the debenture holders to grant an injunction to restrain the corporation from applying any portion of the surplus of the pipe water rate or rents in discharge of the interest, payable on the debentures for £74,500 in the information mentioned, or on any debentures or securities issued or substituted in lieu of said sum of £74,500, the court having no power on this motion to direct the corporation to pay the interest out of their other property. The second branch of the motion, which is comparatively unimportant, is, that this corporation may be restrained by injunction, from applying any portion of the pipe water rates or rents in payment of interest upon any mortgage or other security created by them, over and above the said sum of £74,500. The only security over and above the £74,500 is a certain mortgage for £4862, vested in the Hibernian Bank.—

The facts relating to this part of the application, I understand to be as follows:—In or about the year 1845, the Hibernian Bank became the holders of pipe water debentures, (part of the £74,500), amounting to £27,600. The Hibernian Bank agreed to lend the corporation a sum of £4862, a considerable portion of which sum was charged on the security of the pipe water rent; and the Hibernian Bank agreed to reduce the interest payable on the debentures for £27,600, to £4 per cent.; the effect of which was a saving of upwards of £500 a-year, upon the interest on such debentures; and which interest I have decided, in considering, the first question, I am not justified in granting an injunction on this motion to prevent the payment of. If the interest on those debentures, and on the £4862, be not paid within a certain period after the half-yearly day of payment, the interest on the £27,600, and on the £4,862, will be raised to £6 per cent. under the deed of 1845, which was executed between the bank and the corporation. There is no doubt, that it is a misapplication of the pipe water rate, to apply it in payment of the interest of the £4,862. But the interest payable on that sum is considerably less than the saving effected by the reduction of the interest on the debentures for £27,600; and if I were to grant the injunction in relation to the interest payable on the £4,862, I should make an order which would increase the annual charge on the surplus of the pipe-water rates, as such order would have the effect of raising the interest on the £27,600, from £4 per cent.; to £6 per cent. It appears to me, that such an order would be of no advantage whatever to the relators and to the inhabitants of Dublin, who pay pipe-water rates; and I think it will be more proper, that this question also, should be decided at the hearing; and that, at all events, it should not be decided before the Hibernian Bank, and the Corporation have filed their answers to the information. The third branch of the motion is, that the corporation may be restrained from applying any portion of the pipe-water rates or rents in payment of compensation to dismissed officers. It is quite clear, that those dismissed officers are entitled, under the Municipal Corporation Act, to be paid their compensation out of the corporation property, and it would be very unjust to them, to make any order in relation to the annual payments which they receive, until the hearing of the cause; when the court can order the compensation to be paid out of the other property of the corporation; if it should appear that the pipe-water rate are not properly applicable thereto. I have no authority on motion to make any such order. The only remaining question, is the question of costs. I think it is clear, that the Hibernian Bank is entitled to the costs of appearing on this motion, as they are the holders of debentures to the extent of £27,600, and the application to restrain the payment of interest on those debentures, at this stage of the proceedings, and before the hearing of the cause, is, in my opinion, entirely unsustainable for the reasons I have stated. With respect to the costs of the corporation, I think they should not, under any circumstances, pay the costs of an application made before answer, founded in the greater part, upon a state of facts known to, and acquiesced in, by the relators and the citizens of Dublin for eleven or twelve years, which the present corporation were no parties to, they having only followed the course adopted by their predecessors, and which appears to have been sanctioned by Sir William M'Mahon.—But as I entertain considerable doubt, as to the legality of applying the pipe-water rates, as they have been applied, I shall not give the costs of this motion to the corporation, unless they succeed in this suit. I shall make a declaration in the order, as to the costs, in accordance with what I have stated. The motion must be refused. I think those parties whose claim for compensation is in question are entitled to their costs. I must say, I never knew an injunction motion, to be brought forward under circumstances like the present, where the ground of complaint was known and acquiesced in by the relators, for a period of ten or twelve years. I do not entertain the least doubt, that the question involved, ought to be decided on the hearing of the cause; and are such as I should not be justified in deciding on a motion like the present.

COMMON PLEAS.—Feb. 30.

REYNOLDS v. FAULKNER.
SAME v. SAME.

Scire Facies—Judgment Debt—Evidence—Estoppel.

In this case, the plaintiffs brought two actions of scire facies upon two judgments—the first of Trinity Term, 1829, and the second of Trinity Term, 1830—to which the defendant pleaded payment, and at the trial before Mr. Justice Torrens, at the sittings after last Trinity Term, gave in evidence a series of receipts by the plaintiff to the mother of the defendant, who was a co-obligor with him on three bonds, and warrants of attorney, to enter judgment, and on which separate judgments had been obtained, two of which formed the subject of the present actions, and which payments exceeded the penalty of the three judgments; and also gave in evidence a bill in the Court of Chancery, filed by the plaintiff to recover the amount of a fourth judgment against the defendant, and the charge of the plaintiff under the decree to account in the cause, in neither of which did the plaintiff make any claim for the judgments the subject of the actions at law. To rebut this case, the plaintiff gave in evidence a bill filed in the Court of Equity

Exchequer, against the mother, various proceedings had there-under, and, amongst others, a report of the Chief Remembrancer, bearing date the 10th of May, 1842, whereby he found the entire sum due on the judgments, the subject of the actions, having appropriated the previous payments to the discharge of the third judgment, and the costs of the suit; and also gave in evidence subsequent orders, whereby the plaintiff was awarded costs of two motions against the mother, and the certificate of taxation of those costs the day before the trial, the taxation being ex parte, and the mother being dead at the time. Counsel for the plaintiff asked the learned judge to direct the jury that the report of the Chief Remembrancer was conclusive down to the date of it, and that the jury were bound thereby. The payments subsequent to the report were insufficient to pay the two judgments. The learned judge, however, left the case generally to the jury, who found, in both actions, for the defendant.

Battersby, Q. C., and O'Moore had obtained a conditional order in Michaelmas Term for a new trial, on the ground of misdirection, and that because the verdict was against the weight of evidence.

Against this order, Rollstone and Hickey shewed cause, and the case was fully argued last Term.

O'Moore for the plaintiffs.—It is plain that the defendant, claiming the benefit of payments through the mother, must be bound by an account which bound her. It was not open to the defendant to give payments in evidence further back than the remembrancers, the jury had no right to disallow the costs included in that report, that would be in fact, to constitute them taxing masters.

Mr. Hickey having been called on by the court for an authority, having cited Co. Litt. 227 a, Estoppel is there quaintly defined to be stopping of men's mouth from speaking the truth; Estoppel may be pleaded or given in evidence, a jury however, is not bound by Estoppel arising by act in pais, or by matter of writing, when given in evidence; but they may find such Estoppels, and if they will find, the court is bound to give judgment accordingly. (Smith, L. C., 440).

DOHERTY, C. J.—We are of opinion, that there was no misdirection, and that the whole case was properly left to the jury. The Remembrancer's report was no doubt evidence, and very high evidence but did not conclude the jury, and if on the face of that document, they found items manifestly improper, they were not bound by it, allow the cause shewn with costs.

ROLLS COURT.

RUSKELL v. CHURCH.—Jan. 12.

Exceptions to Report—Devise to Trustees—24th General Order.

A. B. devised his property to his wife, for life; and, after charging same with several legacies, and, amongst others, to T. V., he directed the residue, after his wife's decease, to be divided amongst the legatees in the same proportion as the legacies. The testator also authorized his wife to appoint trustees to carry the trusts of his will into execution. The widow having, by her will, appointed trustees for that purpose, after her death, a suit was instituted to carry the will of A. B. into execution, and a decree for a sale pronounced. Held, that the trustees did not sufficiently represent T. V. to bring the case within the 24th General Order, and in his absence a good title could not be made to a purchaser.

The bill in this case was filed to carry the will of Thomas Dawson into execution. It appeared that Thomas Dawson, being seized and possessed of the lands and premises, for the sale of which a decree had been pronounced, died in the month of May, 1828, having, by his will, devised to his wife, Anne Dawson, for her natural life, all his real and personal property of every kind; and, after several specific legacies to other parties, he gave to Thomas Vance the sum of £10, and by the residuary devise he directed that all the rest, residue, and remainder of his property—real, freehold, and personal—after the death of his said wife, should go to and amongst, and be divided between the several legatees thereinbefore named, rateably according to their respective legacies; and he thereby authorized his wife, by any deed, or by will, to appoint trustees to carry the trusts of his will into execution. In November, 1841, Anne Dawson died, having made her will and appointed the plaintiff, Anne Ruskell, and the defendant, M. Church, executrix and executor thereof, and she nominated them trustees to carry into execution the trusts of Thomas Dawson's will. A decree having been pronounced, and a sale had, there was a reference to the Master to report as to the title; and by his report, made the 9th of November, 1848, the Master found, "that Thomas Vance was a necessary party to the cause, and as he was not such party, that all proper parties to be bound by the proceedings in this cause were not before the court when a decree for a sale of the said lands and premises was pronounced, and a good title could not be made to the purchaser."

To this report, exceptions were taken, on the ground that the Master should not have found that the said Thomas Vance had any estate or interest in the lands to be sold, or that he was a necessary party to the cause.

Mr. Wall, in support of the objections.—By Thomas Dawson's will, the legal estate in the lands was vested in his widow, for a power of mortgaging was given to her, and she was also authorized to nominate trustees of her husband's will. This power having been exercised by her; in order to carry the trusts of the will into execution, it is necessary that the legal estate should be vested in these trustees, who are parties to the suit. Trent v. Hanning, (7 East T. Rep. 96).

Hughes, Q. C., and Mr. Maley for the report.—The rule only provides for cases in which there is an existing trust for sale; this suit is not by creditors, but is instituted by a legatee to carry out the trusts of Thomas Dawson's will, and not to carry into execution the will of Anne Dawson also, Anne Dawson had only an estate for life, the legal estate in remainder is given to the residuary devisees, and even if the legal estate was in Mrs. Dawson for the purpose of the trust, it did not pass to her devisees, but remains in her heir at law, it does not appear that the will of Anne Dawson was proved.

Mr. F. Fitzgerald, in reply.—Upon the true construction of both wills, the legal estate is vested in the trustees, both of whom are before the court, and a decree for a sale has been pronounced, with a full knowledge of T. Vance's absence, by which the court has assumed jurisdiction, part of the property consisted of chattels real, the legal estate in which vested in Anne Dawson, as executrix. This case comes within the 24th general order; and where the rights of a party are incidental to that of parties before the court, a complete decree can be made in his absence. Mit. E. P., 31. Mally v. Whally, (1 Ves. 487.); Rogers v. Linton, (Bunb. 200); Fell v. Brown, (2 B. l. C. 276).

MASTER OF THE ROLLS—My present impression is, that the Master's report is right; but I will consider this question further, it is inconvenient that the court should be called upon to decide a matter which was not before the Master, for the exceptions do not properly raise the question, the first objection is, that the Master found that T. Vance was not a party to the cause; the second, that the Master found T. Vance had an estate in the lands; the third, that he found that T. Vance was a necessary party to the cause, and that all proper parties were not before the court, when the decree for a sale was pronounced. This does not raise the question which has been argued before me, the Master's attention should have been called to the fact, that T. Vance was not a necessary party, for that by the general order of the court, the trustees fully represented the estate of their cestui que trust. However, I can dispose of this question, though not properly raised before the Master.

MARCH 1.—MASTER OF THE ROLLS—The bill in this case, was filed to carry into execution, the trusts of the will of Thomas Dawson, and a sale was made under the decree in the cause, to pay off the legacies given by the will; and an objection has been taken to the title, that a person named Thomas Vance, was not a party to the suit; and the Master came to the conclusion, that the objection was fatal. By the will there is a bequest to Thomas Vance, and several others of £10 each; so far as that legacy is concerned, I am disposed to think, the objection could be got rid of, by investing to the separate credit of Thomas Vance, that sum and interest, and the sum of £5 for costs. That course could be taken if there was nothing more in question; but after giving a life estate to the widow, the testator declared that his will was, "that all the rest residue, &c., of his property, real, freehold and personal, after the death of his said wife, should go to and amongst, and be divided between the several legatees, thereinbefore named, rateably, according to their, and each of their respective bequests and legacies, thereinbefore mentioned." The effect of which is, that Thomas Vance, takes an estate in the residue in the same proportion that his legacy of £10 bears to the other legacies. The objection taken is, that Thomas Vance is not before the court, or bound by the proceedings, and that is sought to be got rid of by the argument, that a power was given by Thomas Dawson to his wife, by her last will, to appoint trustees, to carry the trusts of his will into execution—that the widow made her will, appointing trustees for that purpose, and the estate being thus vested in trustees, who are parties to the suit, the 24th general order of the court, applied to this case, in answer to which, the difficulty arises, that the will of Thomas Dawson's widow has not been proved, and I am called on to say, that these trustees are properly appointed; which if I was at liberty to look at the will, I might come to the conclusion, that the legal estate was not vested in them. If this case came within the general order, the trustees may represent the persons where the legacies are given; but it does not make them represent the persons who have the estate in the residue, and Thomas Vance is a necessary party to the suit; not on account of the legacy, but in respect of his interest in the lands; and I do not see how this objection can be got rid of. On the whole, although anxious to come to a different conclusion, I cannot allow the exceptions, and must therefore, overrule them with costs.

QUEEN'S BENCH.—HILARY TERM.

CARMICHAEL v. WATERFORD AND LIMERICK RAILWAY COMPANY.—Jan. 25.

Action on the Case—Arrest—Malice—Gross Neglect—New Trial—Misdirection.

In case for maliciously and injuriously over-marking a writ of ca. sa., and causing the plaintiff to be arrested thereon, the judge having stated, that, in his opinion, proof of actual malice in fact was not necessary, but that malice might be inferred from gross neglect, told the jury, that if, in their opinion, the injury done to the plaintiff was occasioned by the gross neglect of the defendants, they were at liberty to infer malice—Held, a misdirection.

The declaration contained four counts. The first count stated, that before committing the grievances thereinbefore mentioned, to wit, in Easter Term, in the tenth year of the reign of our lady the now Queen, in, &c., before, &c., the Waterford and Limerick Railway Company, &c., recovered against the plaintiff a certain debt of £1160, as also the sum of £11 1s. 3d. for, &c., by said court adjudged to said Waterford and Limerick Railway Company, and whereof the now plaintiff was convicted, as, &c. That after the recovery of said judgment, and before the suing out of the writ thereinafter next mentioned, to wit, on the 18th of May, 1847, at Cork, aforesaid, the plaintiff paid and satisfied to the defendants all the moneys receivable or due to them on said judgment, except the sum of £274 0s. 4d.; and that at the respective times of the suing out of the writ of ca. sa., and of the delivery of the same to the sheriff, and of committing the several grievances thereinbefore mentioned, the said sum of £274 0s. 4d., together with the sum of £6 15s. 8d. for interest thereon, at, &c., making together the sum of £280 16s., and no more, was due to the defendants on said judgment; and no further or greater sum than the said sum of £280 16s. was payable by the plaintiff to the defendants, or receivable by the defendants upon or in respect of the said judgment, of all which the defendants, at the respective times of the suing out and delivering of the writ thereinbefore mentioned, and of committing the grievances thereinbefore mentioned, had due notice, to wit, at Cork, in, &c., aforesaid. Nevertheless, the defendants, well knowing the premises, but wilfully and maliciously intending to oppress, harass, and injure the plaintiff in that behalf, and cause him to be imprisoned, and extort from him a greater sum than was due on said judgment, afterwards, to wit, on the 16th November, 1847, to wit, at the Queen's Courts, Dublin, under colour of obtaining satisfaction of the said judgment, and execution thereof, and under colour of pretence that the sum of £585 0s. 2d., with interest thereon, at, &c., from, &c., was due thereon to the defendants, wrongfully, maliciously, and unjustly sued and prosecuted out of the said court of, &c., at, &c., upon said judgment, a certain writ of, &c., called a writ of ca. sa., directed to the Sheriff of the county of the city of Cork, whereby our said lady the Queen commanded, &c. And the defendants contriving and intending as aforesaid, afterwards, and before the return of said writ, to wit, on the said 16th of November, 1847, to wit, at the Queen's Courts aforesaid, fulsely, maliciously, and injuriously, caused and procured the said writ to be mated at foot with the sum of £585 0s. 2d., as the sum due to the defendants by the plaintiff on foot of said judgment, and for which, with interest thereon as aforesaid, the sheriff was to take and arrest the plaintiff, although, in truth and in fact, the said sum of £585 0s. 2d. was not due to the defendants on foot of, or in respect of said judgment, and no further or greater sum than said sum of £280 16s. was then due or payable by the plaintiff to the defendants, or receivable or recoverable by the defendants from the plaintiff on foot of, or in respect of, said judgment. And the plaintiff further saith, that the defendants, further contriving and intending as aforesaid, afterwards, and before the return of said writ, to wit, on the day and year last aforesaid, wrongfully, maliciously, and unjustly delivered the said writ so marked as aforesaid, to the sheriff, to be executed in due form of law. And the plaintiff further saith, that the defendants, further contriving and intending as aforesaid, wrongfully, maliciously, and unjustly caused and procured the said sheriff afterwards, and before the return of said writ, on the 17th of December, 1847, to wit, at Cork, in, &c., by virtue of the said writ, to take and arrest the plaintiff by his body, and keep and detain him in his custody under the said writ, to satisfy the said sum of £585 Os. 2d., marked at foot of said writ as aforesaid, with interest thereon, at, &c., to wit, at, &c., and caused and procured the said sheriff to detain and keep in prison the now plaintiff, for a long time, to wit, for the space of three hours then next following, under and by virtue of said writ, and until the now plaintiff, in order to procure his release and discharge from the said imprisonment, was forced and obliged to, and did then pay to the sheriff the said sum of £585 Os. 2d. so marked, &c., and the sum of £12 10s. for interest thereon, and also the further sum of £17 8s. 11d., as and for fees and poundage of the sheriff upon the said writ; said three sums, making together the sum of £614 18s. 11d., although, in fact and in truth, the said sum of £280 16s., and no more, was then due and receivable upon or in respect of said judgment, whereby the plaintiff hath not only been injured in his credit, and reputation, and circumstances, and put to great pain of mind, but also that the plaintiff hath lost and been deprived of the sum of £334 2s. 11d., being the difference between the said sum of £614 18s. 11d. aforesaid, and £280 16s., the sum really due on foot of said judgment. The second count only differed from the first in the statement of the amount paid by the plaintiff on the judgment, and the third and fourth counts omitted the words willfully and maliciously, and substituted the words wrongfully and injuriously. Damages were laid at £2,000. The defendants pleaded the general issue, and paid into court a sum of money, composed of over-levy and interest, and £50. At the trial before Moore, J., at the last Summer Assizes for Cork, it appeared that the action was brought against the company for arresting the plaintiff, under the following circumstances. In Easter Term, 1847, the company recovered a judgment against the plaintiff for £585, and on the 18th May in the same year, the plaintiff paid on account of this judgment, into the bank at Cork, to the credit of the company, a sum of £311 15s. 6d., leaving a balance of £273 4s. 6d. still due. The secretary of the company knew of this payment having been made, and communicated the fact to Mr. Tandy, the solicitor of the company. Mr. Tandy resided in Waterford; and, when informed upon the subject, wrote to Dublin to his partner, Mr. Newman, to advise him of the payment, but this letter miscarried. On the 16th of November following, Mr. Newman issued a writ of ca. sa. for the entire sum of £585, and on the 17th of December the plaintiff was arrested in Cork, and, after being detained in custody for about two hours, was discharged, upon paying the entire amount marked on the writ, besides interest and sheriff's poundage. Mr. Newman was examined on behalf of the company, and deposed to the fact of his not having received the letter written by his partner in Waterford, and stated that the over-marking the writ was purely accidental, and arose solely from his not having heard of the payment having been made by the plaintiff. The learned judge was of opinion that proof of actual malice in fact was not necessary, but that it might be inferred from gross neglect; and he told the jury, that if, in their opinion, the company had been guilty of gross neglect, in not communicating to their agent the fact of the payment having been made, they were at liberty to infer malice. Verdict for the plaintiff with £500 damages. A conditional rule having been obtained, in Michaelmas Term last, for a new trial on the ground of misdirection, Henn, Q.C., and Martley, Q.C., were now heard in support of the rule.—Malice cannot be inferred from mere neglect, however gross. To support this action at common law, it should have been alleged in the declaration, and proved, that the party acted maliciously, and without probable cause. De Medina v. Grove (10 Q. B. Rep. 152); affirmed on error (ibid. 172). These counts can only be maintained under the statute (6 Anne, Ir. c. 7), and proof of actual malice is necessary when proceeding under that statute, Mills v. Nerney (C. & Al. 81). The jury were told that proof of actual malice was not necessary, but that it might be inferred from gross neglect, whereas the true question for the jury was, whether the defendants were influenced by actual malice. When the learned judge told the jury there was no proof of express malice, he ought to have directed a verdict for the defendant. [Moore, J.—There being no proof of actual malice, the question is, whether legal malice can be inferred.] [Blackburne, C.J.—The act here being lawful, malice must be shewn.] Scheibel v. Fairham, (1 Bos. & P. 388); Gibson v. Chaters, (2 Bos. & P. 129); Goslin v. Wilcock, (3 Wils. 202); Moore v. Gardner, (16 M. & W. 595); Haunsfield v. Drury (11 Ad. & El. 98; 1 Saund. 130, note) were cited and commented on.

Bennett, Q.C., and J. D. Fitzgerald, Q.C., contra.—It is not necessary, in point of law, to prove express malice, but a jury may infer it from neglect. [Blackburne, C.J.—The word means actual malice. Have you any case where a jury were told to presume malice from mere neglect alone, without proof of want of probable cause?] The declaration states in terms, that there was not probable cause; and this distinguishes the case now before the court from those which have been cited at the other side. Want of probable cause, is a question for the jury; and from the absence of probable cause, the law allows a jury to infer actual malice. When once you shew the absence of probable cause, as was done in this case, it may be left to the jury to say if there was malice in fact. [Perrin, J.—What is the evidence of gross neglect which was left to the jury? Tell me the facts which shew that there was malice.] The secretary of the company had promised the plaintiff that no proceedings should be taken on the judgment without giving him previous notice. [Blackburne, C.J.—The company is bound by the act of its officer in this transaction; but there must exist, in the mind of some one, a criminal intention, and where is the evidence from which you draw this intention?] We rely on the promise that no execution should issue without notice. The main objection relied on below was, that malice could not be inferred in a corporation. There are no counts on the 6th Anne, Ir. c. 7; we did not intend to proceed under that statute. They cited Crozer v. Pilling (4 B. & C. 26; S. C., 6 Dowl. & Ry. 12); Ravenga v. McIntosh (2 B. & C. 693); Sinclair v. Eldred (4 Taunt. 7); Austin v. Dobnam, (3 B. & C. 139); Hardwick v. Heslop, (26 Law Jour. 313).

PER CURIAM.—We are all of opinion, that this action was maintainable only on the ground of proof of actual malice in fact—malice being the gist of the action. We cannot, therefore, regard the present verdict as a satisfactory one, and think the rule for a new trial ought to be made absolute, upon payment of the costs of the former one. No costs upon this motion.

*Rule accordingly.

COMMISSION OF OYER AND TERMINER.

QUEEN v. DUFFY.—Feb. 7 to 21.

CORAM BALL, J., AND LEFROY, B.†

Practice—Proceeding on Second Indictment—Pleading—Challenge to the Array—Evidence.

Where separate indictments have been found, the court has no jurisdiction to restrain proceedings on one until the other be disposed of, unless there be some allegation of illegality or injustice, or violation of duty on the part of the prosecutor.

Held, that the borough boundaries, as defined by the 3rd & 4th Vic. c. 108, are extended for the purposes as well of criminal as of civil jurisdiction.

Held, that publications were overt acts, and that the word "publication," as laid in the indictment, might be taken to mean a compassing on one day, and the expression of it on subsequent days.

Held, on a challenge to the array, that the disproportion of members of different religious persuasions was not admissible in evidence to the triers.

Held, that parting with the control of printings or writings, so that they might be read, was a publication.

Held, that speeches delivered prior to the commission of the offence charged, might be given in evidence, for the purpose of explaining the meaning of the publications alleged to be felonious.

Bills of indictment in this case having been found by the grand jury at this Commission, when the prisoner was about to be arraigned, his counsel moved, "That no proceeding be taken on this indictment until either a trial be had on the indictment preferred and found at the preceding Commission, or that it be otherwise disposed of."

BUTT, Q. C., (with whom was Sir Colman O'Loughlen) for the motion.—We fully admit that the prisoner is bound to answer, if arraigned, Sir W. Withipole's case (Cro. Car. 147); Res v. Swan and Jefferys (Fost. Cr. L. 106; 18 St. Tr. 1198); Queen v. Mitchell (1 Ir. Jar. 5). The court has clearly the power of suspending the arraignment of the prisoner, if a proper case be made. It is the court, and not the crown, that arraigns the prisoner. There is a discretionary power in the court, (2 Hawk. c. 25, s. 15; Res v. Bowman 6 Car. & P. 101). These proceedings are vexatious and harrassing to the prisoner. The law does not permit an amendment of the record, and by the adjournment of the trial, the crown has had an opportunity of doing that they could not have otherwise done; and, secondly, we are not to be deprived of the opportunity of objecting to the course the Attorney-General may take. If he enters a nolle prosequi, we contend it will operate as a release of all charges, upon the record, against the prisoner. The question now is not, whether that point be a good one or otherwise, but whether we shall be deprived of the benefit of raising it. [The following cases were referred to, and commented on:—King v. Webb (3 Burr. 1466, S. C., 19 St. Tr. 1174); King v. Frith (1 Leach Cr. C. 10; 2 Hal. P. C. 95).]

The Attorney-General (with him J. Perria), contra.—It is contended, that the court should not deprive the prisoner of the right he has of raising any question he may be advised, as to the effect of a nolle prosequi; but the court will not now be ancillary to any course that will deprive the crown of a trial upon the merits. The crown has been guilty of no delay. [They referred to Queen v. Goddard (2 L. Ray. 922); Res v. Dr. Wynn (2 East. 226).]

BALL, J.—This is professedly an application to the discretion of the court. Treating it so, our opinion has been fully disclosed during the progress of the argument. The court is called upon by reason of the many delays, as well as other causes, to say that because the case has been disposed of by the grand jury on four different occasions, that the Attorney-General, on behalf of the crown, is not to proceed to have a trial upon the merits. Is the court to forget, that if the prisoner has his rights, the court has its duty to the public to perform? Are the rights of the crown to be put an end to without any grounds being laid for the exercise of the discretion of the court? There is no statement that the Attorney-General, on the part of the crown, has done anything unjustifiable. That hardships will sometimes occur to a prisoner, is an incident necessary to all prosecutions; but unless the Attorney-General does something illegal, unjust, or in violation of his duty, the court cannot interfere. The Attorney-General is of opinion, that it is not safe or prudent to go to trial on the former indictment, and is the court to say, he shall not exercise that discretion? I have come to the conclusion, that the court ought not to acquiesce in this part of the application. With respect to the other portion, that the court should not deprive the prisoner of an objection depending on the contingency of a nolle prosequi being entered by the Attorney-General, which, it is said, may afford him an opportunity of setting aside the whole proceeding. Was any court ever seriously called upon to stop the crown in an undoubted legal course, on the ground of a possibility? What is the right claimed? It is to raise a technical objection to defeat a trial. The court has been shewn nothing to warrant it in acceding to such an application.

* See Gibbons v. Allison (3 C. B. Rep. 181).

† Reported by J. Blackham, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

LEFROY, B.—I have arrived at the same conclusion with my brother Ball, and for the same reasons. My observations are not made because I can add anything, but to corroborate what he has stated to be our line of duty, and that which has been acted upon in other cases of the highest authority. Rex v. Swan and Jefferys (Fost. C. C. 106) is a clear authority on this question. Every hardship urged in that case, as injurious to the prisoner, is applicable to the present; the language of that case is precisely similar to that of my brother Ball. If we were trenching in the remotest degree on the rights of the prisoner, we would yield. Are we subjecting the accused party to two trials? We could not do so. But it is an equally constitutional principle, that no man can evade answering the demands of justice. It is not suggested that there is any intention to subject the accused to two trials; we are guarding him against such, and we will protect him against any undue use of the law. I have no doubt on the authority of the cases referred to, that the prisoner is bound to plead to this indictment, and that we have, in this case, no discretion. The authorities pressed upon us do not apply, and it is our duty to the crown and to the public that justice shall not be defeated.

The prisoner then pleaded in abatement, that Mr. Majoribanks, one of the grand jury, at the time of his being sworn on the grand jury, and of their finding the bills, did not reside within the county of the city of Dublin, though he did reside within the present borough boundaries.

Feb. 10.—The Attorney-General, for the crown, handed in a replication, to which the prisoner demurred.

J. O'Hagan, for the demurrer, contended that the residence of the grand juror was not, for the purposes of this court, within the county of the city of Dublin. That the 3 & 4 Vic. c. 108, s. 21, had not altered the borough boundaries in this respect; that the 22nd sec., in connection with the previous one, must be taken to mean courts belonging to the borough, and not courts sitting within it. That this was not a borough court, but a Court of Commission for the county of the city of Dublin, the jurisdiction of which, by the proviso to the 21st section, remained as it existed before the act. The title of the 3 & 4 Vic. c. 109, relates only to adding certain portions of counties to cities; and the first section enacted these portions should be a barony of itself till provision be otherwise made, and be a portion of the adjoining county for criminal purposes, but the boundaries were not to be altered for purposes of parliamentary representation. That the construction of these two statutes shewed clearly that the residence of the juror was in the county for criminal, and in the city for borough purposes. [He cited, on the exposition of statutes in general, Powdler's case (11 Rep. 34, a); King v. Burrell (12 Ad. & El. 468); Queen v. Silversides (3 Q. B. 410); and, on these statutes, Delahunt's case (Arm. & Mac. 257); Reg. v. Inhabitants of Parish of St. George (8 Ir. L. Rep. 23); Barber v. Evans (10 Ir. L. Rep. 480).]

The Attorney-General, contra, relied on the inconvenience that would accrue if this construction were adopted—that, though the construction of the 3 & 4 Vic. c. 108, might admit of the construction contended for, that, taken in connection with the 3 & 4 Vic. c. 109, it was clear the exclusion was for parliamentary purposes alone, and that the cases of Barber v. Evans and Reg. v. Inhabitants of St. George were not distinguishable, and ruled this case.

The court called on Butt, Q.C., who contended, in addition to the arguments of Mr. O'Hagan, that the court was sitting under a commission of 1 Vic., that there was no commission of adjunct, it being directed to the Lord Mayor and judges for the time being—that a juror residing in the place where this juror resided, could not have been then allowed to be sworn upon the jury, and that the 3 & 4 Vic. c. 108, and the subsequent act, had not altered the boundaries with respect to the commission. [Ball, J.—This objection is not open to you upon the record; the plea does not advert to it. Lefroy, B.—The plea merely states, that at the time of swearing, and of finding the bills, the juror did not reside in the county of the city.]

BALL, J.—The court feels no difficulty upon this question. The law is clearly settled in the cases of Reg. v. Inhabitants of St. George and Barber v. Evans, and it would require strong authority to satisfy me that the court was wrong in that decision.

LEFROY, B.—The decisions referred to are decided on the plain and settled rules of construction. Even if there was any doubt, it would be quite too much to set up our judgment against that of two other courts.

The demurrer being overruled, the prisoner's counsel then handed in a plea, by which he pleaded not guilty to the first overt act of each count, and to the charge of writing the letter to W. S. O'Brien, and demurred to the remainder, concluding that the part demurred to might be quashed.

The Attorney-General objected to the reception of this plea, for being bad in form.

The prisoner's counsel contended that a party might demur to part of an indictment, Queen v. Parker (Car. & Mar. 629). That if the demurrer was too large, it would be overruled, Hinde v. Gray (1 Man. & Gr. 201); Briscoe v. Hill, (10 M. & W. 735; 2 W. Saund. 285). We admit a portion of this indictment to be good. It was decided by Perrin, J., on the argument of the demurrer to the former indictment, that the demurrer was divisible, and the prisoner could be called upon to answer only the good parts (1 Ir. Jur. 102); and the judgment of Richards, B., (ib. 106).

The court declined to receive the plea.

The prisoner then demurred generally to each count.

The first count of the indictment stated, that Charles Gavan Duffy, &c., did, on the third day of June, in the eleventh year of the reign, &c., feloniously compass, imagine, invent, devise, and intend to deprive and depose our said lady the Queen, &c., and the said felonious compassing, imagination, invention, device, and intention, he, the said Charles Gavan Duffy, then and there feloniously did express, utter, and declare, by then and there feloniously publishing a certain printing in a certain number of a certain public newspaper, called the Nation, which said printing is entitled, "The Business of To-day," in certain parts of which there were and are contained certain felonious matters, &c., expressive of the felonious intention, "according to the tenor and effect following," &c., and the said felonious compassing, &c., he, the said Charles Gavan Duffy, &c., did, on the seventeenth of June, &c., further feloniously express, utter, and declare, by then and there feloniously publishing a certain other printing in one other number, &c., as before, and so through each of the articles.

The second count stated the charges as in the first, with the exception that the intent was charged to levy war against the Queen.

The third count charged the prisoner with divers overt acts of publication and writing on the same days, and with the same intent as in the first count, but did not set out the printings or writing, and stated a printing on the 29th of July, with intent to publish.

The fourth count was the same as the third, stating the intent as in the second.

Butt, Q.C., (with him Sir Colman O'Loughlin) for the demurrer.

The questions argued are so fully discussed in the judgment of the court, and having been discussed on argument of the demurrer to the previous indictment, it will be sufficient here to refer to the cases relied upon. [As to generality in indictments, Fost. C. L. 194; 1 Hale, P. C. 169; East. P. C. 121; the cases of Colman (7 St. Tr. 7), Sidney (9 St. Tr. 817), Thistlewood (33 St. Tr. 684), and Francia (15 St. Tr. 898); King v. Gibbons (2 Stran. 499; 3 Coke Inst. 41; reading stat. Hen. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 25, s. 74). As to printing with intent to publish, 1 Hale, P. C. 118; Fost. C. L. 102; Anderson's case (12 St. Tr. 1245); Baldwin v. Elphinstone (W. Bl. Rep. 1037); Queen v. Martin (Hodges' Rep. 477-480). As to repugnancy, 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 25, p. 324. Time should be laid with a continuando; Despard's case (28 St. Tr. 345); Watson's case (32 St. Tr. 1); Frost's case (9 Car. & P. 129); Brandreth's case (32 St. Tr. 755); in these, all the overt acts were laid on the same day. As to quashing any portion of the indictment that might be bad, 11 Coke, 45, b; Com. Dig. Pl. C. 32; 2 V. 3; Pinkney v. Inhabitants of Rutland (2 Saund. 379); Hinde v. Gray (1 M. & G. 195); Briscoe v. Hill (10 M. & W. 735); Watson's case (32 St. Tr., charge of Bayley, J., to grand jury).

The Attorney-General (with him the Solicitor-General), contra.

Butt, Q.C., in reply.

The Solicitor-General in general reply.

Feb. 14.—BALL, J.—The objections raised to the form and substance of this indictment are six:—The first three for uncertainty, duplicity and repugnancy, are applicable to portions of the four counts. The others apply only to the third and fourth counts; and it is alleged that they are bad for want of a statement of any overt act, publications not being such, within the true construction of the 11th & 12th Vic., cap. 12. That the third overt act in each of these counts states a printing without any publication of it; and lastly, that there is no averment of any contemplated rebellion or treasonable design. As to the objection of uncertainty, it is first insisted in reference to the first overt act in the 1st and 2nd counts, that the expression of the publication is uncertain and insufficient. 2dly, that a sufficient compassing to satisfy the requirements of the statute is not shewn. 3dly, there is no averment of any treasonable design in the mind, either existing or contemplated. The last objection on this head applies to the 3rd & 4th counts, which it is said are bad, for not specifying the particular publication relied upon. The first objection under this head, applies to the 1st and 2nd counts, and the substance of it is, that the averment of the publication of "a certain printing, in a certain number of the Nation Newspaper; in a certain part of which said printing, there were contained certain felonious matters, &c.," does not aver that the prisoner published that portion of the printing which contained the felonious expressions. The fallacy is, that the objection assumes, that when it is averred that he expressed the felonious compassing by the guilty part, that he expressed it by the innocent also. It cannot be said that the prisoner published a felonious design by a publication containing no such crime. The second head of this class pervades all the overt acts in the four counts, except the first. The objection is, that it is not averred that the compassing on the 3rd of June—that is the first overt act, was present to the prisoner's mind at the time of the expression of each subsequent act. The objection arises from supposing the term "expression" in the statute to have a different meaning from that it really has, it does not mean a statement or indication of what the act declares must be expressed, but a narrative of what took place in his mind. I have come to the conclusion that the compassing on the 3rd of June, was present to the mind of the prisoner on the transaction of the subsequent acts. If, as was said, there should be a distinct averment of compassing to each overt act, the indictment would be objectionable for duplicity. The 5th section of the 11th & 12th Vic., c. 12, gives the prosecutor the power of stating as many overt acts as he pleases, and it would be extraordinary if this right should be conferred by the legislature, and that, at the same time, it should be so difficult to state them. As to the third head of this class, it is urged for the prisoner, that in order to make printing an overt act, there must be a publication, a treasonable design in the mind, or some reference to a treasonable design on foot. This argument is applicable to words, but not to printing, and the rule will be found fully stated in Fost (C. L., 198, 200, 204). I am therefore of opinion, that there is no necessity for any such averment. The last head of this class is applicable to the 3rd & 4th counts, and is, that the charge of publishing "divers other printings, in divers other numbers of a certain public newspaper," is bad, for not marking the particular publications or papers by dates or otherwise. It appears to me that the precedents Thistlewood's case, (33 St. Tr.

684); Frost's case, (9 C. & P. 129), being all the one way, and there being no authority cited to the contrary, we are bound to follow them. It is said, that the prisoner cannot know against what he is to defend himself; but the answer is, that he may apply for a bill of particulars; it was also urged that should he have occasion to plead extra fœs acqrit, he would be unable to shew what were the publications on which he was acquitted. King v. Sheen, (2 Car. & P. 634), answers that objection. The next class is that of duplicity and is substantially the converse of the second branch of the preceding class, and is, that the words "further expressed," make each act a distinct felony. By the 3rd sec., of the 11th & 12th Vic., cap., 12, two things are necessary to constitute the crime, the compassing, and the expression of it; the 5th section allows any number of acts to be charged. There is one compassing on the 3rd of June, the subsequent acts are merely expressions of it, and not distinct felonies; and with the exception of Thistlewood's case, the precedents are all so. The next objection is that of repugnancy, this objection, the force of which on a former occasion, I can understand, is removed in the present indictment. The next objection is solely applicable to the 3rd & 4th counts, and if sustained, the effect will be to blot those counts from the indictment, except the part which charges the writing the letter to W. S. O'Brien, and is, that there is no averment of any overt act, publications not being such within the meaning of the statute—it occurred to me, that in legal construction, it by no means follows, that the same act may not range under more than one of the three modes of expression, given by the 3rd section of the statute; that though these printings may be only publications under the first, they may be a mode of expression under the third—there is a strong distinction between evidence of an intention, and the means made use of to effectuate it. I think that these publications, under the first branch of the 3rd section, are evidence of the intention; and are acts to effectuate the intention under the third. Frost (C. L., 202, 203, 204).—The next objection is to that portion of the count which states, a printing with the intent to publish, which, it is said, is not a publication. This objection, appears to me, to be unsustainable on the ground upon which I have ruled the preceding one. On these grounds, I am of opinion, this demurrer must be overruled.

LEFROY, B., expressed his entire concurrence.

The prisoner then pleaded not guilty.

Sir C. O'Loughlin, applied for a bill of particulars of the printings and writings to be given in evidence under the general counts—which was given him by the Attorney-General.

The prisoner challenged the array; and the Attorney-General joined issue.

Butt Q. C., addressed the triers appointed to try the issue; and told them he would prove that having regard to property and other qualifications, the number of Roman Catholics returned upon the panel was quite dis-proportionate to those of the Protestants. [Butt, J.—Was not the question of the proportions of religions decided on a former occasion. Lefroy, B.—Are we to go into an examination of the religious persuasion of the jury, when the question of proportion is not a legal one?] At the Maryborough special commission, Bushe, C. J., allowed this question to be put, and Moore, J., in the case of Mitchell, did not dissent from that authority—and at the late commission at Clonmel, the same course was allowed.

Witnesses having been examined, and the evidence being, that the panel was arrayed in conformity with the 3rd & 4th Wm. 4, c., 91. The triers found against the challenge.

Feb. 15.—LEFROY, B.—Before we go into this case, I think it right, in order to prevent any mistake or misconception, as to the question under discussion to state the rule stated in Mitchell's case, where I had the concurrence of Moore, J., that the doctrine of proportion, was not a test of the fairness, nor a criterion of the validity of the challenge to be disposed of. My brother Ball and I were led to suppose, that Pennefather, B., had taken a different view of the question; and we did not wish to set our opinion against the statement of counsel, that a ruling had been adopted at Clonmel, contrary to that in Mitchell's case, and that there the religion of several jurors had been enquired into.—With the weight of so much authority, whatever my opinion might be, I should be sorry to act upon it, and we felt it due to that authority, to acquiesce in an enquiry as to the proportion of Roman Catholics. (The learned Baron here read the opinion of Mr. Baron Pennefather, from the trial of O'Doherty, reported by Mr. Hodges, p. 523). No man should be put off or left on account of his religion; the impartiality of the panel is not to be tested by the proportion of religions; a doctrine, which if acted upon, is calculated to create most mischievous consequences, by leading to a strife we all should endeavour to repress. We were told that the Judges at the late commission at Clonmel, had acted on the rule of proportion, and admitted the enquiry, I have seen my Lord C. J., Blackburne, and I have his authority for contradicting that assertion, in the strongest terms; he said, the court had been informed, that certain jurors had been left off, on account of their religion; and that the question had been allowed on the understanding, that it would be followed by evidence to shew that the sheriff had acted illegally. On my interview with Mr. Baron Pennefather, he said, the question of religion cannot be enquired into; there must be a discretion in the sheriff, to select the persons from their intelligence best calculated to do their duty; if the sheriff is to make a panel by any proportion, his discretion is at an end. Now that we have ascertained the true ground of the decision of those Judges; I must say, that to allow this enquiry, would be a libel on every class of religions.

The prisoner then challenged as they came to the book, every person summoned on the panel aged sixty-one, and upwards, or who were non-resident within the borough, or had found bills against him at any of the commissions; which challenges were allowed. During the trial the following points arose in the evidence:—

The Attorney-General offered in evidence a letter to W. Smith O'Brien, proved to be in the hand-writing of the prisoner, and found in the portmanteau of the former. The letter had no date.

Butt, Q.C., objected to its reception, not being connected with any charge in the indictment, and that it did not appear it was written since the passing of the 11th & 12th Vic. c. 12.

The Attorney-General then gave in evidence the Nation newspaper, of the 17th June, 1848, the statutable declaration of proprietorship, and of the place of publication of the newspaper, under the provisions of the 6th & 7th Wm. 4, c. 76; and then proposed to read a letter dated the 12th June, 1848, and in the newspaper of the 17th, to T. M. Halpin, Secretary to the Confederation, and signed "W. S. O'Brien," to which the letter of the prisoner referred.

Butt, Q.C., objected that the statute 6 & 7 W. 4, c. 76, did not entitle him to read the contents of the papers as facts—that the declaration was only evidence of the prisoner being the printer, proprietor, and publisher.

BALL, J.—Independently of the statute, I think that your objection is valid; but supposing it were proved that Mr. Duffy was sole conductor, the question would be, whether the contents were not prima facie evidence against Mr. Duffy, and the onus of shewing the contrary be not thrown upon him. You contend it is now sought, for the first time, to make a statement in a newspaper as evidence of a fact.

The letter was admitted in evidence de bene esse, subject to objections in fact; one of which was, that there was no evidence of its being written since the passing of the act.

The Attorney-General then proposed to read the Nation of the 29th July, 1848, and two manuscripts in the hand-writing of the prisoner, printed in it. The paper had been seized at the printing office before any copies had been circulated; a copy had been also found at the publishing office, with corrections on the margin. He contended that it was clearly admissible as a publication, and that the manuscripts were merely ancillary—that under the 6th & 7th Wm. 4. c. 74, the mere production of the newspaper made it evidence—that this paper corresponded in the heading and conclusion with the previous publications. Printing, or causing to be printed, was a publication, Baldwin v. Elphinstone (Sir W. Bl. 1037.) [Ball, J.—The decision in that case was, that "caused to be printed" shewed the employment of others.] [Lefroy, B.—Is this evidence admissible under the counts charging publication, or those charging that he "caused to be printed, with intent to publish?" If printing be a publication, it may be charged as a publication. There is evidence that the prisoner printed through the instrumentality of other persons. [Ball, J.—On the authority of Baldwin v. Elphinstone, the handing to others to print is a publication. In this case, we have in evidence that which there was only presumed.] The same view is adopted in Watts v. Fraser (7 Ad. & El. 223). [Ball, J., cited King v. Burdett (4 B. & Al. 161).]

Butt, Q.C., contra.—King v. Burdett arose on a question of venue. There has been no publication of these manuscripts. [Lefroy, B.—There is no doubt that the evidence shews a publication of the writings; they are in the prisoner's hand-writing, and are found out of his possession. The question is, whether there has been a publication of the printing.]

BALL, J.—I think these documents are admissible in evidence. The question is, whether the publication of the printing has been proved sufficiently to admit it in evidence. It was shewn that a number of persons were engaged in printing, and a large number of the papers were struck off. The principle stated in King v. Burdett is, that wherever third parties had an opportunity of reading, whether the matter be read or not, that is a publication as perfectly as if ten thousand read it. There is no distinction in civil and criminal cases between the rules of law; as to publication, the rule of evidence is the same.

LEFROY, B.—If there were evidence to shew that it could not have left the prisoner's control, it would make a different question. Here there is evidence of an intention to put the paper in a position to be out of his control, and to place it in that position as would bring it within the rule in civil cases. I think the facts of this case amount to a publication.

Butt, Q.C., in his address to the jury on behalf of the prisoner, proposed to read some passages from speeches of the prisoner delivered some years previously.

The Attorney-General having objected, on the ground of irrelevancy, after some discussion, BALL, J., said, that on full consideration of the question, the court had come to the conclusion, that the speeches proposed to be read, strictly speaking, were not relevant, and could not, therefore, be properly admitted to the jury; but as it appeared from the cases referred to, that a large discretion had, in modern times, been given to counsel defending a prisoner, and that the practice had been adopted at the late Special Commission at Clonmel, the court did not feel itself justified in refusing the prisoner's counsel the same latitude in the present instance, though they were quite of opinion they were wholly irrelevant.

The Rev. Mr. Matthew was asked by Butt, Q.C., whether a printed document in his hand was a correct copy of a speech delivered by the prisoner at Newry, in 1841.

Objected to by the Attorney-General.

Butt, Q.C.—The object is to shew that at that period the prisoner had a legitimate purpose then in view, and that it was continued down to the formation of the clubs in 1847, and that they were created with the same object. The same course had been allowed in Horne Took's case. In the case of the Queen v. O'Connell, in 1846, speeches delivered in 1810 were given in evidence, and the same course was adopted in the Queen v. Martin.

BALL, J.—If evidence to give a construction to his writings were admitted in Horne Took's case, I think it is here admissible to shew the meaning of the publications.

LEFROY, B.—The cases seem to be anomalous; but they have settled a rule of law contrary to the general rule of evidence.

The jury, not being able to agree to a verdict, were discharged.

COURT OF CHANCERY.

REEVES v. COX.—March 6.

IRWIN, Petitioner—COX, Respondent.

Sequestration—Judgment.

The court, on the petition of a prior judgment creditor, on the creditor proving his interest, will oust sequestrators appointed under a decree.

This was an appeal from the order of his Honour, the Master of the Rolls. The facts of this case, so far as they are material, are sufficiently stated, supra, p. 169.

Kane, Q.C. (with him Mr. Norman), appeared for the appellant, the petitioner in the matter, Simmonds v. Ld. Kinnaird, (4 Ves. 739; 2 How. Ex. 784); Walker v. Bell (2 Mod. 31).

Hughes, Q.C., and Mr. J. F. Walker, for the plaintiff, in support of the Rolls order, cited Angell v. Smith (9 Ves. 336); Burne v. Robinson (7 L. E. R. 188); Burdett v. Rockey (1 Vern. 58).

LORD CHANCELLOR.—The only question before me is, whether I am to give the creditor his remedy, or oblige him to sue out an elegit. I apprehend the court will not force a party to file an elegit bill to get rid of a sequestration. It occurs to me that the best course might be, that the judgment creditor should be examined in the office, pro interesse suo, and that if he appeared to have an interest, he should be let into possession by a receiver. The order, then, must follow that in Hamblyn v. Ley (3 Swan. 301, n; S.C. 1 Dick. 94.) I will not remove the sequestration till the receiver be appointed.

“Refer it to the Master of this court in rotation to appoint a fit and proper person to be receiver over the lands and real estate in the petition mentioned and described, situate, &c., on his entering into security, &c.; and, upon the receiver being so appointed, let the sequestrators be discharged from such lands, and let the deposit made by the petitioner, with the registrar, be returned to him.”

Lib. 4. fo. 227.

ROLLS COURT.—Jan. 20.

THE LIMERICK AND WATERFORD RAILWAY COMPANY, Petitioners—O'FERRALL, Respondent.

Solicitors' Lien on Documents.

Though a solicitor discharge himself, the court will not direct him to deliver up to his former client documents on which he claims a lien, unless a case of pressing necessity, or danger of loss, be made out. A Court of Equity will order a taxation of costs, though all the costs be for conveyancing.

This was an application to have the bills of costs of the respondent referred to one of the Taxing Masters, and that the respondent might be restrained from proceeding in an action at law for the recovery of same, and that he should be directed to furnish, on oath, a list of all credits to which the petitioners were entitled, and that it should be referred to the Master to take an account of all moneys received by the respondent on account of said costs, and that he should be directed to lodge in the office of the said Master all the title deeds, papers, and other documents belonging to the petitioner.

The petition stated, that John O'Ferrall had been the solicitor of the company—that in the month of October last, he declined to act any longer as such—that he had furnished, on the 5th of October last, his costs, consisting of more than 750 separate bills, amounting to the sum of £26,022 14s. 8d.—that the respondent had received large sums of money, amounting to £7,000, and upwards—that he had also received money from adverse claimants, against whom costs had been awarded, in favour of the company—that, until the costs had been furnished, the company believed that the several sums so paid had nearly discharged the costs due to the respondent—that there were gross over-charges in said bills of costs—that the respondent had applied to his own use, moneys intrusted to him to pay claimants—that, in consequence, some of the claimants had taken law proceedings against the company—that the respondent was in possession of all the deeds, agreements, contracts, receipts, and vouchers, relating to the portion of the line extending from Limerick to Tipperary, and that he had refused to hand over, or permit the company to have any access to the same, until paid his demand—that the taxation of said costs must, of necessity, take much time, and that the company would be subject to much inconvenience, if not positive loss, by reason of the withholding of their deeds and papers.

The respondent, by his answering affidavit, stated, that he had not dismissed himself; but the company, by reason of their not supplying him with money to pay costs out of pocket, had obliged him to decline to act. It also denied the charge of misapplying the funds intrusted to him.

Hughes, Q.C., for the petitioners, contended that a solicitor who discharges himself cannot retain documents in his possession; and cited Rutledge v. Rutledge (2 L. E. R. 290). The court has jurisdiction to make the order, though there is no cause in court, in re Usbridge (6 Ves. 425); in re Murray (1 Russ. 519); Heslop v. Metcalf (3 M. and Cr. 183).

J. D. Fitzgerald, Sir Colman O'Loughlin, and Mr. Michael O'Ferrall, for the respondent, contended, that to deprive a solicitor of his lien, it was necessary to make a special case, and that no such case had been made on this motion. Heslop v. Metcalf shows this necessity, and Colgrave v. Manly (1 Tur. & Russ. 400) shews that it is only in a case that such an order will be made, Boxon v. Bolland (4 M. & Cr. 354). As to the nature of the solicitor's lien, Richards v. Platel (Cr. & Phil. 79), and as to the order the court makes on such applications, Cano v. Martin (2 Beav. 584), and in re Smith (4 Bea. 309), only shews that such an order will be made in a case of gross misconduct; and a passage in the judgment in that case (page 316) shews that a deed not appearing to be required in any cause, was directed to be retained by the solicitor. If the order be made in a cause, the solicitor has a lien on the funds realized in the cause, but in this case the lien will be destroyed if the order give the company liberty to inspect the documents. There is a distinction between a solicitor discharging himself and being obliged to discharge himself.

Mr. Lawson in reply.—It is clear that the respondent has discharged himself, within the meaning of the cases of Rutledge v. Rutledge and Heslop v. Metcalf. The principle on which all the cases have been decided is the inconvenience and loss that would result from the court not making the order; and the principle is well established, that a solicitor who discharges himself cannot preserve his lien on documents, when his so doing must cause loss to his former client.

MASTER OF THE ROLLS.—In this case there is no difficulty as to the first part of the order which is sought. I have absolute jurisdiction, on decided cases, to make an order for taxation, even though there be no taxable item from the beginning to the end of the bills of costs. In re Rice (2 Keen. 181) is an authority for such a reference. Though the courts of law in England have felt some difficulty in respect to jurisdiction, the Court of Common Pleas deciding in one case that there was no jurisdiction for such an order, yet Courts of Equity have always directed even the costs of conveyancing to be taxed. There being no doubt that I have jurisdiction to make that part of the order which relates to taxation, the question arises, on the other branch of the motion, what is the general right of a solicitor to retain documents, on the ground of his lien upon them, when the claim of the former client arises out of a pressing necessity for the documents retained? The case of Hutton v. Harden (1 Turner & Russ. 304) decided, that on lodging the money in court the order will be made. There is another instance in which this order will be made, and that is where the withholding of the documents must occasion loss; this instance has been illustrated by the example of a policy of insurance; and, in such a case, the court will order the solicitor to hand over the policy, but, at the same time, will direct the company to preserve his lien. Now, in this case, neither a pressing necessity, or a danger of loss, has been shewn to exist. But cases have been cited for the purpose of shewing that where a solicitor discharges himself he cannot retain documents. [His Honour referred to the early decisions on this point, and to the case of Heslop v. Metcalf, as having first extended the principle laid down in the earlier cases.] I do not think there is any distinction between inspection and production. I think, on the affidavit in this case, I am bound to hold that the solicitor has discharged himself; but I think there is a distinction between this case and the case of Heslop v. Metcalf, for here no pressing necessity has been made out. A question may arise between a client and a solicitor who has acted for a great number of years, and then declines to act without advances; and I think it would be pressing the principle of the case of Heslop v. Metcalf too far to say, that an order to deliver up documents would be made, without there was a case of very pressing necessity shewn. I do not think, on the case which has been made, I ought to exercise the jurisdiction the court possesses; but I shall make an order which will meet the justice of the case, directing the taxation and a list of the documents to be furnished, but refusing that part of the motion which seeks for the production or inspection of the documents, without prejudice to the company making an application for their production, on shewing a pressing necessity, or danger of loss.

Jan. 25.—“Refer it to one of the Taxing Masters of this court to tax the several bills of costs furnished by the said J. O’Ferrall to the said Waterford and Limerick Railway Company, and let the said J. O’Ferrall furnish, on oath, to the solicitor for said company, a list of all credits to which petitioners are entitled against the said costs, petitioners undertaking to pay the amount, if any, which shall appear due on such taxation, after all credits; and let the said Taxing Master, on taxing and ascertaining said costs, take an account of all such credits, and strike a balance; and let a plea of confession be lodged with the Registrar of this court, to be filled up with the balance, if any, certified to be due; and, upon payment of what will be found due upon such taxation, let the said J. O’Ferrall deliver up to the petitioners all deeds, documents, and papers in his possession, or power, belonging to the petitioners; and no rule on said petition, so far as it seeks that said Mr. J. O’Ferrall should lodge the papers, deeds, and documents in the Taxing Masters’ office, or that petitioners should be at liberty to inspect said papers, deeds, and documents, without prejudice to any application which may be made by petitioners, in respect of any particular documents, &c., if it should appear that there is a pressing necessity that same should be inspected by, or delivered over to, the petitioners; and let the said Mr. J. O’Ferrall furnish a list, verified on oath, of all deeds, &c., in his custody, power, or possession, the property of the petitioners, and the said Mr. J. O’Ferrall’s bills of costs, amounting to £26,022 14s. 8d., and Mr. J. O’Ferrall insisting that the entire credit to which the petitioners are entitled amount to but £8,160, and no more, reserve the question of costs of said petition and the proceedings on this order until the costs shall have been taxed, and the said accounts shall have been taken, and balance struck.”

Lib. 27, fo. 125.

DARLEY, Petitioner—HUNTER, Respondent—
March 1.

Practice—Receiver.

The court will not make an order permitting a receiver to account but once every five years, although the property over which he is appointed produces but £10 per annum.

This was a petition for the appointment of a receiver, on foot of a judgment, over a property which amounted to only £10 per annum, and the petition prayed that the receiver might not be bound to account more than once in every five years, paying over the surplus rents to the petitioner, and that said receiver might be at liberty, without further order, to manage and let, with the approbation of the Master, all the lands and premises over which he should be appointed.

Mr. Johns for the petitioner.—The property is so very small, that if the receiver accounts every year, the costs will amount to the entire profit rent, and there will not be anything for the discharge of the debt.

MASTER OF THE ROLLS.—I will make the order in the usual form. Refer it to the Master to appoint a receiver, who shall enter into recognizance for the due performance of his duties, and also to account once in every year.

SHERLOCK v. DISNEY.—March 7.

Practice—Demurrer—Amendment.

Where a demurrer not having been set down for argument, was allowed under the 64th General Order, the court will not permit the record to be amended, by re-introducing upon it the defendants against whom the bill was dismissed, a new defence having arisen since the filing of the original bill.

In this case, the facts of which are stated, ante, page 127, a demurrer had been taken to the bill, and same not having been set down for argument within the usual time, was deemed allowed, pursuant to the 64th General Order. On the 22nd of last December, the plaintiff moved for liberty to amend, and serve new subpoenas against the demurring parties, and the costs of the demurrer not having been paid, the motion was refused with costs.

Mr. F. Fitzgerald now moved, that the bill might be restored, notwithstanding the order dismissing same, and that the defendants against whom the bill had been dismissed, might be considered parties to the cause. The defendants have been guilty of irregularity; for the demurrer was taken without an attested copy of the bill having been taken out. Also, if the amendment is not allowed, the Statute of Limitations will prevent the filing of a new bill. When the former application was made, the costs of the defendants were not paid, but that objection is now removed.

Hughes, Q.C., and Mr. Robert Warren, contra.—This is an application to the discretion of the court. If this motion is necessary to get rid of the Statute of Limitations, the court should not interfere to destroy that defence, but should leave the plaintiff to his legal remedies. In the case of Knight v. Majoribanks (14 Sim. 198), it did not appear that any new defence arose out of the transaction. By the rule of the court, this bill stands dismissed. In the case of Downing v. Hodder,* the Lord Chancellor laid down the principles on which this court should act, in relaxing the General Orders, and this case does not come within them. If the Statute of Limitations applies, the order to amend will not save the plaintiff's rights, as the amendments would be of the day upon which the order is made.

* Reported, ante, p. 137.

Mr. Fitzgerald, in reply, cited Walkins v. Bush (2 Dick. 701, Dan. C. P. 559), and contended that if the plaintiff was compelled to file a new bill, the original defendants would be then enabled to take advantage of the Statute of Limitations as well as those who had demurred.

MASTER OF THE ROLLS.—So far as this motion seeks to restore the bill as to the defendants against whom it has been dismissed, that is calling on me to set aside the 64th General Order, and the case of Knight v. Majoribanks (14 Sim. 198) is an express authority against so doing; and it is plain the application is so far unsustainable. By the second part of the notice, I am called on to permit an amendment by re-introducing defendants against whom the bill stands dismissed, thus enabling the plaintiff to get rid of the Statute of Limitations, by making the bill bear date from the year 1847 instead of the present day. If the amendments are properly made, the order which is sought could not be of any advantage, as the amendments must set forth the circumstances under which they are made, that the bill standing dismissed, with costs, liberty was given to re-introduce the defendants upon the record, and that would have the same effect as if a new bill was filed. In the case of Hornebrooke v. Weir,† following the authority of Cornwall v. Sperring, before Sir M. O'Loughlen,‡ under the particular circumstances of the case, after a demurrer allowed under the 64th General Order, I permitted the bill to be taken pro confesso against the defendant who demurred, and I am inclined to grant such an order as is now sought, where it cannot be any advantage to the defendant to insist upon a new record; but that does not apply to a case like the present, where a defence has arisen which did not exist to the original bill. If I were to make this order, I should be depriving the party of his defence, for the only advantage to be derived from permitting this amendment would be, that the plaintiff might insist that his bill bore date of the year 1847, new rights have been acquired by the negligence with which the plaintiff's case has been conducted; and I must refuse this motion, with costs.

ROWLAND v. M'DONNELL.—March 12.

Practice—Replication, Amendment of.

Hughes, Q.C., moved, that the plaintiff's replication, filed on the 16th of February, be taken off the file and set aside for irregularity, on the ground that the plaintiff thereby purports to join issue with one Thomas V. Clendenning, as a defendant in the cause, there being no person of that name a defendant therein; and also that the bill stand dismissed, with costs, for want of prosecution. In this case on the day of an application had been made to set aside a former replication, as purporting to join issue with a defendant who had not appeared, and the plaintiff obtained liberty to amend, upon payment of costs; accordingly, the present replication was filed, by which issue was joined with T. V. Clendenning, who was not a party to the cause, having died in the year 1847.

† Reported, ante, p. 117.

‡ Vid. ante, p. 117, note.

Mr. Maley, contra, moved a cross notice for liberty to amend the replication, by striking out the name of T. V. Clendenning. From the affidavit of Mr. Wetherell, a solicitor, it appeared that the name of Clendenning was inserted by mistake, and was a mere clerical error.

MASTER OF THE ROLLS.—This appears to be a mistake, and I will give liberty to amend; and let the plaintiff pay the defendant, M'Donnell, £5 costs of this motion.

QUEEN'S BENCH.—HILARY TERM.

DALY v. ROONEY.—Jan. 23.

Right of Allottee of Shares in Railway Company to Recover back Deposit.

An allottee of shares in a railway company, provisionally registered, paid a deposit of £2 2s per share, and signed the subscriber's agreement, which gave the provisional directors power to carry on the undertaking, or any part of it, or to abandon the whole, or any part of it; and out of the money which should come to their hands, by way of deposit or otherwise, to make such deposits or investments as might be required by the Standing Orders of Parliament, and also to pay salaries, &c., and the costs of obtaining Acts of Parliament, &c., and generally to apply such moneys in paying and satisfying all other costs, expenses, or liabilities which they might incur, in relation to the undertaking. The project proved abortive; and, in an action of assumpsit to recover back the deposit, Held, that the plaintiff could not, in such action, impeach the validity of the subscribers' agreement, and that, by executing that deed, he had authorized the directors to dispose of the money, and therefore could not recover back any part of the deposit.

Assumpsit for money had and received for the use of the plaintiff, and for money due on an account stated. Plea, non assumpsit.

At a trial before Richards, B., at the Spring Assizes for the County Wicklow, 1848, it appeared that the defendant was one of the provisional directors, and a member of the managing committee, of a company provisionally registered under the 7 & 8 Vic. c. 110, called the Dublin and Sandymount Atmospheric Railway Company, and that the action was brought to recover the sum of £31 10s., being the amount of a deposit of £2 2s. per share, paid by the plaintiff on the allotment to him of fifteen shares in the undertaking. The plaintiff received scrip certificates for his shares, and, on the 4th of November, 1845, executed the parliamentary contract and also the subscribers' agreement. The latter deed was made between the shareholders, of the one part, and two trustees, of the other; and, by it, the shareholders nominated certain persons, including the defendant, to be the managing committee, or directors of the undertaking, and conferred on them very extensive powers. Amongst others, this deed gave to the directors "full power to take such measures as they might deem expedient to carry the undertaking into effect; and, for that purpose, to cause such surveys and estimates to be made as they might think advisable, besides such as had already been made, and to abandon the undertaking, or any part thereof, and to make application to Parliament at the then ensuing session, for an Act of Parliament for all or any of the purposes therein mentioned," &c. The directors were also to have "full power to determine how far, and to what extent, the undertaking was to be carried into effect, deferred, or abandoned, and generally to enter into and carry on all such negotiations, covenants, and agreements, and to do and execute all such acts, deeds, matters, and things, in relation to the said undertaking, and to the application to be made to Parliament, and for winding up the undertaking, and the affairs and concerns thereof, in case such Acts of Parliament should not be obtained, as they (the directors) should, from time to time, consider expedient." They were also to have "full power out of the money which should come to their hands, or be placed to their credit, by way of deposit or payment of calls, or otherwise, in relation to the same undertaking, to make such deposits or investments as might be required by the Standing Orders of Parliament; and also to pay and allow all such fees, salaries, and recompense to counsel and solicitors, clerks, servants, and other persons who might be employed in relation to the said undertaking, as they should think right, and generally to apply such moneys in and towards the fulfilment of any bargains, engagements, contracts, arrangements, or agreements, into which they might have entered, or into which they were, by that deed, empowered to, and should or might enter for the purposes aforesaid; and towards the costs of any works or proceedings connected therewith, and in and towards the soliciting, supporting, or opposing a bill or bills in Parliament, as therein mentioned, and in obtaining the necessary act, or acts, for carrying out the said undertaking, or any part or parts thereof, and generally in paying and satisfying all other costs, charges, expenses, and liabilities, which they might sustain or incur, or which might already have been sustained or incurred, in relation to the said undertaking, or otherwise, under and by virtue of these presents." It appeared from the evidence, that a bill for the incorporation of the company had been introduced into Parliament, and that, after having passed the House of Lords, it was rejected, on merits, in the House of Commons. It further appeared, that the provisional registration of the company was not renewed, and it was admitted by the defendant, that it was not intended that the project should be further prosecuted. He also admitted that the stock of the company, according to the last prospectus issued, was to have consisted of 6,000 shares of £20 each, on which a deposit of £2 2s. per share was to have been paid up, and that deposits were only paid on 3,200 shares. The solicitor for the company was called for the plaintiff, and he proved that, according to the original prospectus issued by the promoters of the undertaking, the capital was to consist of only £54,000, in 3,600 shares of £15 each, deposit £1 5s. per share, and that the alteration in the capital of the company was made by the directors on the 23rd of October, 1845, after the applications for shares, but before any were allotted. The plaintiff was then proceeding to give in evidence the particulars of a meeting of the company held on the 5th of January, 1846, when, on the part of the defendant, it was objected that any evidence should be received of the conduct or management of the company after the time of the execution of the deeds by the plaintiff. The learned Judge, however, overruled the objection, and admitted the evidence. It appeared that the meeting of the 5th of January was called in consequence of some of the shareholders being dissatisfied with the manner in which the affairs of the company were managed by the directors. The causes of disapprobation were, that some of the directors had not paid the deposit on their shares—that others of them, though named in the prospectus, had never acted—that one of them had never executed the deed—and that three of them had not taken any shares in the undertaking. Another cause of disapprobation was, that the son of one of the directors had been substituted in his father's place, as director, and that the substitution was not authorized by any act of the directors. It further appeared from the evidence, that previous to going before Parliament, a considerable reduction was made, by the engineer of the company, in the estimate of the probable expense of the undertaking, and that the capital was thereupon reduced from £120,000 to £88,382.

At the close of the plaintiff's case, counsel for the defendant called for a non-suit, upon the following grounds:—1st. Because the contract upon which the sum of £31 10s. was paid by the plaintiff, was a contract under seal, and that money so paid could not be recovered in an action for money had and received. 2ndly. Because there was a partnership created by said deeds, existing between the plaintiff and defendant, and that by reason of such partnership, the present action was not sustainable. 3rdly. Because there was no evidence of fraud to vitiate the deeds, or to discharge the plaintiff from his contract; and, lastly, because there was no evidence of any money having been received by the defendant for the use of the plaintiff. The learned Judge refused to non-suit, and the defendant then went into evidence to show the bona fide character of the proceedings; that the conduct of the directors was approved at a meeting of shareholders held on the 11th of May, 1846, at which meeting plaintiff's scrip was presented, and that the full number of 6,000 shares were allotted in the said undertaking. At the close of the defendant's case, counsel for the plaintiff submitted that the plaintiff executed the deeds upon the understanding, that the capital of the proposed company was to consist of £120,000, to be subscribed in 6,000 shares of £20 each, whereas no more than 3,000 shares were actually subscribed for, and called upon the learned Judge to direct the jury to find a verdict for the plaintiff, inasmuch as the undertaking for the purpose of which the plaintiff had subscribed, and paid his deposit, was altogether abandoned before the present action was commenced, and it was not shewn that any of the money paid by the subscribers on their shares was expended in any manner authorized by the subscribers' agreement, which the learned Judge refused to do, whereupon counsel for the plaintiff excepted. The defendant's counsel then called on the Judge to direct the jury—1st, that if they believed the proposed undertaking was entertained and carried out, bona fide, up to the time when the plaintiff executed the subscribers' agreement, they should find for the defendant; 2ndly, that unless they believed the plaintiff was induced to execute the said deed by fraud or misrepresentation practised by the defendant, or some person in his behalf, they should find for the defendant, which the learned Judge refused to do, whereupon counsel for the defendant excepted. The learned Judge left two questions to the jury—1st, whether the project or undertaking was up to, and at time of the plaintiff's joining therein, and executing the said deeds, and payment of his deposit, a bona fide project and undertaking; and 2ndly—whether the plaintiff was induced by any untrue or fraudulent representation of the committee of management, to take part in the undertaking, and execute the deeds. Upon this second question, the learned Judge told the jury, that in considering the question of fraud, or misrepresentation, they should take into their consideration, as evidence on the said question, the facts, that four of the persons named as directors, in the prospectus of the said company, did not afterwards act therein; or execute the deed thereof, and that three of the directors did not take any shares therein; whereupon defendant's counsel objected, and insisted that the said facts and matters were not admissible upon any issue in the present action against the defendant; and that the jury should have been directed to exclude them, and all facts and circumstances occurring after the time of the execution of the said deed by the plaintiff, from their consideration, but the learned Judge ruled that all such facts and circumstances were so admissible in evidence, and thereupon the defendant's counsel excepted. The jury found in the affirmative upon both issues, and the defendant's counsel then called for a direction, in favour of the defendant, but the learned Judge directed the jury to find a verdict for the plaintiff—whereupon counsel for the defendant excepted.

Lynch and Lawless were now heard in support of the exceptions.—This money was never had and received by the defendant for the use of the plaintiff. The defendant was not one of the trustees in whom the money was vested, and there is no evidence, that it ever came to his hands. The shareholders committed the management of the affairs of the company to the provisional directors, and the "subscribers' agreement," gave them power to apply the deposits, in payment of any charges and expenses. The plaintiff, by executing the deed, became associated with the defendant in a common adventure, a partnership was created between them. The present case is distinguishable from Walstab v. Spottiswoode, (15 M. & W. 501), for there, the plaintiff, not having executed any deed, was never jointly interested with the defendant in the undertaking, and the purpose for which the money was paid, wholly failed. The proceedings, in the case now before the court, were carried on bona fide up to the time when the

